having strength, or being able: and so that here it ought to be rendred, is the more general opinion of Interpreters; and that those, that interpret the words otherwise, as some other e ancient versions likewise do, interpret them wrong.

2. And they covet fields, and take them by violence; and houses, and take them away: so they oppress a man and his house, even a man and his heritage.

They covet fields, &c.] What they covet in their mind, f they strive to possess themselves of, by the force of their hands, whether g their poorer neighbour's lands, or houses, that lye convenient for them; which if they will not part with to them on their own terms, they spare not to use toward them all h fraudulent or violent courses, till they have gotten, what they have a mind to, from them: according i to the dealing of Abab towards Naboth for his vineyard.

3. Therefore thus saith the Lord, behold, against this family do I devise an evil, from which ye shall not remove your necks, neither shall ye go haughtily: for this time is evil.

Against this family, &c.] i. e. This whole nation, the family, or posterity of Jacob, this wicked people, do I devise or intend an evil of punishment, for the evil of sin which they plot or devise; from which you shall not remove your necks, nor be able, by any means, to free your selves, but shall be pressed down with it, so that you shall not henceforward carry your selves proudly and haughtily with heads lifted up: for the time shall be so evil and calamitous, that you shall have no occasion, no heart, or power so to do.

4. In that day shall one take up a parable against you, and lament with a doleful lamentation, and say, We be utterly spoiled: he hath changed the portion of my people: how hath he removed it from me? turning away he hath divided our fields.

In that day shall one take up a parable against you.] One is here supplied, as in such manner of speech elsewhere. So Gen. xlviii. 1. one told Joseph, and ver. 2. and one told Jacob. So that it may be rendred to the same sense, as the Vulgar Latin hath it, There shall be taken up a parable, or, Men shall take up a parable, a doleful song with parabolical and figurative expressions.

And lament with a doleful lamentation.] The margin saith, that in the Hebrew it is, with a lamentation of lamentations. There are here three words in the Hebrew eloquently joined of much like sound, or agreement between themselves, viz. נָהָה Nabah, נָהִי Nebi, נִהְיָ Nikjab. Of the rendring the two former of which a Bochart. de Animal, part 2. lib. 2. cap. 1.

f Kamus in أَنُوق and رَجَع. Heb. רָחַם and רָחַם Levit. xi. 18.

g Psalm xxxvi. 4.

h Psalm iv. 4.

i R. Tanchum.

j Abarb.

k Syriac. Greek.

l R. D. Kimchi.

m Abarbi.

n Aben Ezra.

o Kings xxi.

which, there is no doubt but the first, as a verb, signifies shall lament, the second, as a noun, lamentation; but concerning the third doubt is made, Some taking it as a noun substantive, to signify the same with the second, viz. lamentation; and so the same signification repeated ^k will be but as much as to say a great, or doleful lamentation. ^l Others take it for an epithet added to the second, from another root of something different signification, which ours, Dan. viii. 27. renders, I fainted. Others was broken; and so 'twill be as much as broken, or grievous, and will still very well agree with that in the text of our English Bibles, a doleful lamentation. ^m Others take it as signifying, He that is then present or remaining, from the word הַיָּה Hajab, that signifies, to be; and then 'twill express who it is that shall take up that parable and make that lamentation, viz. he that shall then be, or remain: or ⁿ may it not as so be taken for an epithet, and rendered a being lamentation, a lamentation that is, i. e. that hath being, or, is durable, or, is taken up in the world. Others from the same root and signification render it, It is so, ^o or it is done, and come to pass, shall be say, we be utterly spoiled, &c. or ^p as Others, shall lament with a lamentation for what is done, and say, &c. These then being the significations, which the word as here written is capable of, whereas the Latin renders A song shall be sung with sweetness, 'tis manifest it ought to be understood no otherwise, than ^q that it should be a mournful song, or ditty, elegantly or musically compos'd, and sung in an artificial tune: not that it should be pleasant, as to the matter, which was a doleful lamentation: sweet it might be to the enemy, and pleasing, but to the sufferers no further, than as thereby by venting the grief of their hearts ^r they might something allay, and assuage it. 'Tis disputed who it is that is said, shall take up this parable and make this lamentation, or mournful song. ^s Some say the false prophets, seeing their promises of good to come to nothing, or to be turned clean contrary; ^t Others, those that were oppressed by the more potent, and spoiled, spoken of in the foregoing words; ^u Others, the insulting enemy; Others, every one, or all of them, on whom these calamities should come. But the words being in the original text put indefinitely, 'twill be convenient so to take them, as that they, or, any that shall look on what they suffer'd, shall have occasion thus to say, as in their person, (for the words are spoken as in their person,) or according to Some, as we said, whosoever shall be then present, and with any concern look on, what hath befallen them.

We are utterly spoiled, &c.] ^x Some will have it sound, we are utterly spoiled of, or by our selves.

He hath changed the portion of my people.] i. e. Their land; i. e. God hath taken it from them, and given it to others, changed the owners thereof: which to express the Latin renders The part, or portion, of my people is changed, rather than as the Dorway translation hath it more obscurely, part of my people is changed. ^y Some will have this to be read with an interrogation, as the following words are by way of admiration! How doth, (or, shall) he change the portion of my people? Or else, by the portion of my people, to be meant God, who is call'd the portion of Jacob, Jer. x. 16. and the meaning to be, shall the portion of my people change them, for another people, whom he shall cause to prevail over them?

How hath he removed it from me!] That is, the portion of my people. Turning away he hath divided our fields, viz. ^a God, or the enemy by his permission, or, as in the margin, instead of restoring, he hath divided (or, divideth) our fields. The words in the original being in this verse very concise, are for that reason obscure; the latter words as to a verbal translation lie thus, how shall, or how doth he remove to me, to turn, or to return, our fields be divideth: which words though then, when they were spoken, and when the Hebrew language was in common use, and the things spoken of before their eyes, known to all, they were doubtless well understood, yet now that they may be put into another language, and in it made plain and intelligible, will require some change of order, or a supply of something understood. In that rendering which is in the text ^b of our Bibles, there is not much alteration, only to turn or return it expresseth by turning away, i. e. in or by turning away, and the sense is plain; except it be made a doubt, whether it be meant, turning away our fields, or turning away himself from us. As to that in the margin, there is intimated, and briefly expressed in the word instead a supply of what ^c is by some in more words given, thus, when I expected, that he should have restored our fields, he hath divided them (to the enemy, or given them to the enemy that divideth them,) or, How is it, that he, (that is, the enemy) taketh away that which is mine? Instead of restoring our fields, as we hoped, he divideth them among his own soldiers or people. Others yet something otherwise make their supplies, ^d Some making this their meaning, how doth he take away me, that is, my people spoken of, or that he may turn over, or give up to the enemy our fields, that they may divide them, or he divideth them to others, or to the enemy; thinking it necessary to understand either to the enemy, or to strangers, or some such word. This is the interpretation and opinion of a learned Jew. ^e Another more ancient, and of great repute among among them, give this as the sense of this whole lamentation; we are utterly spoiled, so that the enemy taketh away the fields [or lands] of my people from them. Ah and alas, how shamefully or grievously hath he remov'd us by driving us out, and divided our fields violently taking them from us! He notes that the word לשובב Lesbobe (which Ours interpret in the text, turning away, and in the margin, instead of restoring, and he renders by removing, or driving out,) is to be joined to the foregoing words, and the following to be taken by themselves apart, and then the word ימיר Yamir, which Ours render, he hath changed, (though he saith it properly signifies so,) he taketh here to be in the same sense with the following word ימיש Yamish, which Ours render removed it, (because changing is nothing but removing a thing from its place;) the note of exclamation, how, he looks on, as an expression of the grievousness, shamefulness, or disgracefulness of a thing, with admiration at the strangeness of it, here as in other^f places. Of such translations as are in the hands of Christians, some ancient ones depart farther from the words in the original, so that they cannot be easily reconcil'd; as the Greek which renders, we are made very miserable, the part or lot of my people hath been divided by cord, or measuring line, and there was none that hinder'd him, that he might turn away, or, that he might restore, as the Arabic: and the Syriack as wide, the robber shall spoil us, and shall, with a measuring line, divide the part of my people, neither is there any that restoreth our part by a measuring line. Those that are in Latin, and more modern languages, keep closer to the words, yet is there no small variety among them. The ancientest Latin renders, ^g part, or, the part, of my people is changed. How shall he depart from me, whereas he returneth, that will divide our regions! Others differ from it, and among themselves, yet all so as to look on the words to have in their root the same significations. But then in rendring them as here placed actively or passively, or applying them to different subjects, or making their pauses or distinctions diversly, make some difference in the sense. When the reader shall have viewed them all, he will probably find good reason to like those rendrings in our English Bibles given, as well as any, and acquiesce in them, having his liberty given him of chusing either that in the text, or that in the margin. But it may be farther observ'd, that whereas the word שובב Shobeb, which is by Ours rendred in the text, turning away, and in the margin restoring, and by most in one of these significations, hath also, in the same manner, written another signification in the scripture, viz. ^h of rebellious, perverse, or refractory. Some other learned Jews will have it here to be taken in that sense, and to be an epithet of the spoiler, or enemy. ⁱ So one of them, taking these as the words of such as were oppressed and had their fields and houses by violence taken from them (as ver. 2.) gives the meaning thus (and is therein followed by a learned ^k Christian) the great ones of the land spoil us of our inheritance, and so are we spoiled by our selves; and for the iniquity of this violent oppression, my people shall change their portion, going captives into another land. How, that is, to what profit, doth he take away mine inheritance, seeing within few days the perverse rebellious one, viz. the enemy, the King of Assyria, that blasphemeth God, shall divide our fields, and give them all to his servants? This Interpreter would have the particle or letter, ל L. prefixed to שובב Shobeb, and usually signifying to, or for, here to signify nothing, but to supply only the place of the article of the nominative case to wit ה H. ^l Another embracing the same signification of the word, שובב Shobeb, but taking the lamentation to be utter'd by some false prophet, who saw all things succeed contrary to what he promised, thus expounds the words, Shall we be utterly spoiled by our enemies? Will he change the portion of my people? How can it be that he should put and remove me from mine inheritance, seeing I am his people and inheritance, to give it to a perverse rebellious one, a people that blasphemeth God, which shall divide our fields? But if the words be taken indefinitely, and not particularly applied either to the poor oppressed, or to the false prophets, but to any that shall take up this lamentation as in the person of the people, which seems better, then that word, שובב Shobeb, being taken in this last sense, all things will be regular without addition or alteration, and the plain meaning this, He divideth (or hath divided) our fields to a rebellious or obstinate one, i. e. the idolatrous enemy, the Assyrian: Or with an interrogation, Will he divide our fields to a rebellious one? And so ^m Some of them also, who take the word in another signification, put an interrogation at the end, Doth he divide our fields to restore them? Or, that they should be restored? i. e. Shall our fields which are divided to, or by the enemy, return or be restored to us again? ⁿ Others without an interrogation, in returning, or when he, (i. e. the enemy) returneth, he shall divide our fields. And so in those interpretations that our translators give, and others.

^k Rab. Tanch. ^l So some Jews. ^m See R. Tanch. ⁿ See R. Solomon & Paræus. ^o De Dieu.
^p Abarb. R. Tanch. ^q Menochius. ^r Tirinus. See Greek Transl. ^s Chr. à Castro. ^t R. D. Kimchi.
^u Abarban. Montanus, Ch. à Castro. ^v Diodat. Occolamp. Ribera. Tarnov. ^w R. Judah. Itin. Kimchi in Radic. שָׁרַף. ^x Sa. Rib. Menoch. ^y R. Tanch. ^z R. Tanch. ^a And so Jun. Trem. ^b R. D. Kimchi. Vatablus & Michlal Yophi. ^c R. Tanchum. ^d Abu. Walid. in the root שָׁבַב.

5. Therefore thou shalt have none that shall cast a cord by lot in the congregation of the Lord.

Therefore, &c.] Here is not much difference about the signification of the words, but only about the person to whom they were spoken: ^o Some looking on them, as directed to the false prophets, who were the cause of error, and mischief to the people, that this should be for a punishment to them, that when the Lord should restore his people to their country, they should have none of their posterity left to challenge any lot or part in the land, by cord or measuring line again to be divided among them. ^p Others, as directed to the oppressors spoken of, ver. 2. as a threat to them, or a curse of the oppressed on them, that it should be for a just punishment to them, and so it will be ^q continued with the word therefore going before, ver. 3. ^r Others take it as a curse denounced against the whole family before mentioned, ver. 3. or the whole kingdom of Israel, that they should have no more any tribe return thither into that land, ^s which should by their judges have it by lot and line divided to them, as it was of old in the ^t time of Joshua. ^u Some think this spoken of the Assyrians: but that seems not to accord so well with the context. The plainest way seems to look on it, as spoken to the whole people, denouncing to them the irrecoverable loss of their country, and that they should no more return to it to be therein the congregation of the Lord, which should divide it among themselves. A cord by lot, or a line and lot, or, a line with a lot, or for a lot, whereby to measure out a lot: ^v the same word that signifies a cord, is itself used for a lot or portion.

VOL. I.

H

^f Psalm lxxiii. 18. Isaiah x. 4. 13. ^g Doway Bible. ^h Isaiah lvii. 17. Jer. iii. 14. and 22. ⁱ Abarb. ^k Arias Mont. ^l Aben Dana. ^m De Dieu. ⁿ Stokes. ^o R. D. Kimchi.

6. Prophecy ye not, say they to them that prophecy: they shall not prophecy to them, that they shall not take shame.

Prophecy ye not, say they to them that prophecy, &c.] There is in expounding this verse also great variety among Interpreters, the ground of which will be seen by considering the order and import of the words in the Hebrew: in that there is one word thrice repeated with little difference in the form, as אל תנבא אל תנבא אל תנבא Al Tattipbu Yattipbun Lo Yattipbu, the prime signification of which word according to its root, is to drop, or distil and flow, and to cause to drop or flow; and, from fluid things translated to speech, it signifies to instil words, to speak to, and particularly to prophecy to, as much as to say, to drop words one after another to, and in this sense ^w 'tis manifestly here, as elsewhere, oft used. In the first place 'tis put in the second person as a command given to some, do not ye speak, or prophecy; in the second place in the third person, as spoken of what some did, or would, or, should do: and so in the last place also with a negative put before it, as shewing what they did not, or would not, or should not do: and signify, put together, barely thus much, do not, or ye shall not, speak, or prophecy; they do, will or shall, say, or prophecy; they shall not, or do not, speak, or prophecy, without mentioning by whom these words are utter'd, or to whom directed. Concerning the signification therefore of the words, there is not much dispute amongst Interpreters, but in applying them to the persons by whom they should be utter'd, and to whom directed, and of whom spoken, and for what reason, is much difference; and so the supplies, which they add to make the sense clear according to their mind, divers. Some take them to be partly the words of the people, partly the words of God, or the prophet from God, but then differing in the parting them. Ours, as it appears by their adding say they to them that, make the first words to be the words of the people, loath to hear God's judgments denounced against them for their sins, and therefore forbidding them that prophesied, that is, the prophets of God, to speak or prophecy to them such things as they did; and the next words they seem to take for God's saying, by way of concession, to what they would have, they shall not prophecy to them: but then the latter words rendred, that they shall not take shame, are somewhat obscure, whether do they mean, they shall not say to them, as their false prophets did, that shame and confusion should not come upon them, though they continued in their evil ways; or that they may not take shame, and so repent of their wicked courses, and prevent that confusion which shall fall upon them; or, that they themselves, viz. the prophets may not take shame, i. e. be shamefully or contumeliously used: for this sense some ^x Interpreters give. In the margin we have another reading, prophecy not as they, viz. the false prophets, prophecy, and then the words will be to be looked on as God's words, and the following to be understood in the first sense with a change of the person, as if God forbid his prophets to sooth them up in their sins. A ^y much approv'd Latin translation takes them all as the words of the people, and thus renders them, Instil not, say they, i. e. the people to the true prophets, Let these, viz. the false prophets, instil, they do not instil or prophecy according to them, i. e. as our prophets, the false prophets, who say, that shame shall not cleave to the people, i. e. that they shall not be put to that shame, which God's prophets threaten to them. In which translation are many things supplied which make it somewhat harsh; from which ^z a late very learned man so far differs, as to take them all for the words of God, or his prophet, and those directed either to the false prophets, to this sense, prophecy not; should they prophecy? they shall not prophecy to these, shame shall not depart from them, i. e. they shall not prophecy, for shame is decreed to them, which shall not depart or be remov'd from them; or else to the true prophets, to this purpose, prophecy not my prophets to this rebellious people; should they prophecy to them? They shall not prophecy to them, lest shame should be removed or depart from them, which ought not to be removed. He gives both these expositions, but prefers the former. But it may be consider'd that as yet no mention hath been made of false prophets. This learned man also differs from the former, in that he takes the word יִסַּף Yissag, not to have the signification of apprehending, taking bold on, or overtaking; but of departing from, as ^a Some others also do, as, particularly, Drusus, and

^p Aben Ezra. Abarb. ^q R. Tanch. ^r Abarb. ^s Grot. ^t Josh. xiii, &c. ^u Drusus. ^v R. Tanch. ^w R. D. Kimchi. ^x Jun. Trem. ^y De Dieu. ^z Dru. and the Arab. Version.

and an ancient Arabick translation out of Hebrew, which hath, prophecy not as they prophecy; they shall not prophecy to these: shame shall not depart from them: and, indeed, it hath both those significations; but the most, both of Christians and Jews, take it in the former: so the ancient Latin Interpreter which to this sense renders the words, according to the Doway English Translation, speak not speaking, which is of doubtful sense, whether they mean speaking, i. e. saying speak not, or speak not by, or in speaking, as ^b Some, and according to ^c Others should rather be rendred, speak not ye that speak, i. e. ye prophets, it shall not drop upon these, confusion shall not apprehend them. It, that is, say Some, the wrath by you denounced shall not fall on them (as if spoken by some that did not believe the prophets) nor any such confusion. Others, your prophesying shall not prevail on them, shall not work any shame in them: as if spoken by God or some man counselling the prophets. This variety there is in the translations which are in the hands of Christians; and much more yet, for some interpret the word, לאֵלֶּה Laellel, which is rendred to them or these, as not to belong to persons but to things, thus, prophecy not, or if they prophecy, let them not prophecy ^d such things, lest they take shame. ^e Others, prophecy not ye prophets of the Lord, they shall prophecy, viz. Isaiab, Osee, Joel, Micah, &c. they shall not prophecy, i. e. there shall come a time when the prophets shall cease to prophecy to you. What other modern translations or expositions any shall meet with, he may examine and judge, by comparing them with these mention'd, and by what hath been said of the signification of the words. The Jews also in their expositions differ among themselves. ^f One of them and he one of the ancientest, thus gives his sense of these words, he saith, that they take in ill part, or detest the admonitions of the prophets; and bid them to desist from speaking to them, and to leave off their admonitions by way of reproof from God of them for their rebellions, as elsewhere he saith, Amos v. 10. they hate him that rebuketh in the gate: this is that which he saith of them, prophecy ye not, i. e. that they forbid the prophets to admonish and instruct them; which is like to what they, with whom Isaiab had to do, said to him, Get you out of the way, turn aside out of the path, cause the holy one of Israel to cease from before us, Isaiab xxx. 11. But the prophets did not hearken to them, nor leave to warn, admonish, and rebuke them, that is it which he saith of them, they do or will speak, or prophecy, i. e. they say to them prophecy, or speak not, but they do prophecy, or speak; then of what he saith לא יטיפו לאֵלֶּה Lo Yattipbu Laellel, they do not prophecy to these, the meaning is; but it is all one as if they did not prophecy to these, nor direct their admonitions to them, for they do not incline their ear to them. Then afterward he saith, ver. 11. If a man walking in the spirit and falsehood, do lye saying, I will prophecy to thee of wine, &c. he shall be the prophet of this people, i. e. to him will they hearken and give ear, to what he saith. The last words, shame shall not, or doth not, apprehend them, according to him import, that no reproofs of the prophet work on them, else for shame they would cease from their rebellions. ^g Others of them take יִטִּיפוּ Yattipbu, in the second place, in something a different sense, viz. a more general, for speaking or saying: and then ^h One, taking what is spoken as the words of the poor oppressed, gives this meaning, Prophecy ye not, say they, i. e. those oppressed ones to the prophets, they shall, or should, not prophecy to these (oppressors) for they will not take shame, not be mov'd to shame by any thing that the prophets say to them. This he prefers before that of Others, who ⁱ interpret them as if the wicked of the people should say to the prophets, Prophecy ye not: Let them not prophecy to these (wicked people,) that they be not put to shame (for their labour.) ^k Another of them thus renders the words, taking them as a farther description of those wicked ones, of which 'tis said, ver. 2. they covet fields, &c. that they also did say this to the prophets, thus, prophecy ye not, say they; they shall not, or, let them not prophecy (with change of the person repeating again their prohibition of them, as if they instantly and continually said it both to the prophets and amongst themselves) shall not shame overtake these? i. e. will not they be ashamed of such doings? or ought not shame to be brought on such as these? This Interpretation keeps close to the words, but distinguisheth them otherwise than Others do, who think the accent requires that לאֵלֶּה Laellel, rendred, to these, be joined to the foregoing words, not to the following; but he thinks that not necessary always to be observed, but if the accent be observed, then he saith the meaning will be, They that prophecy not to these shall not take shame, that is, shall be free from that shame and contumely which they would put on them. In this multitude of opinions and judgments, the reader will see it necessary to use his own, and that without danger of great error, none of these expositions being contrary to the analogy of faith or sound doctrine. It may, seeing we are forced to be tedious, be farther observed, that some ancient versions take the word, which all these render speaking, or prophecy, in another sense, viz. to signify weeping. So the Greek, Weep not with tears, neither let him weep over these: for he shall not put away shame. And so the Syriack and Arabick, as to that word. And, indeed, weeping is not far from that notion of dropping, or flowing, which we said the root of the word hath. But no modern Interpreters think it meet to follow them in this place.

The Syriack joins the last words to the following verse, Let that shame overtake you which is spoken or denounced to the house of Jacob.

7. O

^a Pelican: ^c Menoc. Tirinus. Ribera. Sa. Men. ^d Castalio. ^e Grot. ^f Ab. Walid, in root יִטִּיפוּ.
^g Aben Ezra, R. D. Kimchi. ^h Abarb. ⁱ R. Solomon, R. D. Kimchi. ^k R. Tanchum.

7. O thou that art named the house of Jacob, Is the Spirit of the Lord straitned? are these his doings? do not my words do good to him that walketh uprightly?

O thou that art named the house of Jacob, &c.] The meaning of these words as consequent on the former will be in a brief paraphrase thus, O thou that art named the house of Jacob, but dost not in thy doings make good that name, Is the Spirit of the Lord straitned? Is his mercy, his will or power of promising by his prophets good things, and effecting them, now restrained more than formerly, when he did both, that now thou receivest only threatening messages by his prophets? Are these his doings? was he wont thus to deal? or, Are these punishments and judgments that he denounceth, his constant works, or those that he delighteth to do? Do not my words do good to him that walketh uprightly? Doth he not promise good things, and give them to him that is upright and walketh in good ways? Do ye not perceive by his different dealings, in that he wrought wonderful things for you while you walked in obedience to him, and now forsaketh you and giveth you up to evil, now that ye forsake him and rebel against him, that the cause of this change is from your selves, and that he always doth good, but to them that strive to do good, and walk in his right ways? And even now if ye would by these menaces of the prophets be wrought on to amend your ways, for which they are intended, would not these also be for good to you, and a means of saving you from that destruction which you for that end are warned of by them? The words so understood, are plainly infer'd from the foregoing words, as an answer to them who forbade the prophets to speak to them such harsh things as they did, as if either they deliver'd not to them rightly God's message, or had not receiv'd a full measure of his Spirit, or that 'twere in their power to speak otherwise than God had them speak: and so their folly is discover'd, in that they laid it not to heart, that the cause why such severe things were by God's prophets denounced to them contrary to such gracious promises, which had been made formerly to the true house of Jacob, was not from any ill mind in the prophets, nor any change in God, who still continued to do good to them that continued to walk uprightly in his ways; but from themselves, who were so changed, that they retain'd nothing of Jacob but the bare name, and by their wickedness made themselves incapable of receiving better messages, or that God should deal better with them. And this seems the plainest meaning of the words. Others differently interpret them, as Some, who in rendering the words agree, but then give the meaning thus, ¹ Is the Spirit of the Lord straitned, so as that you should silence his prophets? as if he were not able to direct them what to say, or should not have liberty to cause them to prophesy and denounce what he pleaseth? or should not have power by them to pronounce against you evil things, and to bring them to pass? ^m Are these his works? These things which you do such works as he requires from you, or is pleased with; or, Are these such works as become the house of Jacob? and do my words no good with him that walketh aright? are they not pleasing to him, promising to him good, and instructing and correcting him for his good? That they are not such to you is through your own fault. ⁿ Others, Is the Spirit of the Lord straitned, that he cannot now send prophets as well as formerly, tho' you enjoin silence to them? ^o Others differ in rendering the first words. Some thus, Is this said among you, O house of Jacob? Or, as Some, Is it thus said? Ought it thus to be said? or, What is this that is said, O house of Jacob? or, What is the saying of the house of Jacob? and then go on in the expounding the following words, ^p Is the Spirit of the Lord straitned, as that, if you silence these prophets, he cannot send others with as severe messages? Are these evils denounced the works of God, or, are they not the effects of your sins? But ^q a learned Jew will not have the words so read interrogatively, because then the following should be without an interrogation, as expressing what he wonders to hear them say, viz. The Spirit of the Lord is shortned: yet the Chaldee paraphrast seems so to take it, rendering, Is it right which the house of Jacob say? And the author of the Vulgar Latin seems to take it as founding, (as the Tigurine version hath it) Is it not said by the house of Jacob? Or, without an interrogation, That which is said by the house of Jacob, is, &c. While he renders ^r the house of Jacob hath said: and then the following words are looked on as the words of the house of Jacob, and expounded to this sense, Why do ye, O prophets, threaten such hard things to us? Is the Spirit of the Lord straitned, his mercy restrained, that he will not do good to us? ^s Are these his thoughts and works? viz. to prosecute revenge so as to destroy us his people, and forget to be good to us? and then the next words, as the words of God in answer to them, That he is good, and his promises good, and he will do good, but to those that are good, not to such wicked ones as they are. ^t A later learned divine differeth from these foregoing, in the rendering of the last words, instead of, Do not my words do good to him that walketh uprightly? reading it, Are not my words good? viz. these words that I the prophet speak, that he walketh with the upright: or, Shall not my words please you? they would please you if you were upright, for he, that is God, walketh with the upright. The cause of this difference he taketh from a Grammatical nicety, because, saith he, if those words הַיִּשָּׁר הוֹלֵךְ Hayashar Holec were to be rendered rendred him that walketh uprightly, the article or note of emphasis ה Ha should be joined with the participle הולך Holec, and that put before the other noun thus, יהולך Habolec Yafbar. But the first exposition is not liable to this exception, for in that ישר Yafbar is not taken as a noun, but a verb, and ה Ha put before it signifieth which; as manifestly elsewhere it is put with a verb in that sense, * as, Josh. x. 24. ההלכו Hebalecu, which went with him, and, 1 Chron. xxvi. 28. הוקדש Habidish, rendred which Samuel the seer had dedicated, and so Ezek. xxvi. 17. And so the literal rendring will be, he that is upright walking, or, going on in the ways of God, the plain sense of which is, him that walketh uprightly: or, if it be taken as a noun, it is salved by understanding דרך Derec, way, i. e. that walketh in the right way: so Aben Ezra, and R. David Kimchi. — The ancient MS. Arab version, which we cited, renders the whole thus, It is said among the house of Jacob, Is the power of the Lord shortned? Were these his properties? Do not my words do good to him that is upright, walking after obedience to God? Abarbinel and Arias Montanus following him, take them to be the words of God to the people, who wondred that the prophet should cease from reproving the oppressors. The first exposition seemeth the plainest.

¹ Dutch Notes, Diodat. ^m Jun. Trem. Paræ. ⁿ Vat. ^o Arab. MS. R. Tanchum. ^p But he approves it not. Christ. à Castro. ^q R. Tanchum. ^r See Abarb. ^s Christ. à Castro. Sa. Menochius, Tirinus, Ribera, Pelicanus. ^t Lud. de Dieu.

8. Even of late my people is risen up as an enemy: ye pull off the robe with the garment, from them that pass by securely, as men averse from war.

Even of late, Marg. Yesterday.] The ancient Latin translator makes of ואתמול Veethmul the word so translated two words, or one compounded of two, and renders it And on the contrary. Nor is he alone in this, * An ancient and learned Jew so also takes it to be, tho' they differ in their applying it to the following words: The Latin rendring the whole verse thus (according to the Doway English translation thereof) And on the contrary my people is risen up as an adversary: from above the coat you have taken away the cloke, and them that passed simply you turned into battle, or war: but that learned Jew to this sense, And against my people be, that is, the potent oppressor before spoken of, or, every one of you, bath set up * an enemy. It is, saith he, in sense all one as if he had said, ye have set up an enemy, one person being put for another, as sometimes elsewhere, i. e. ye cause to have power over them, and you set in wait for them such who shall evil intreat them, and spoil them, according to what is elsewhere said, chap. iii. 3. Who eat the flesh of my people, and flay their skin from them, and Psal. xxii. 18. They part my garments among them. Then, he saith, over-against you (i. e. wherever ye go, whoever ye come towards, or whomsoever ye meet with) ye strip or spoil of his garment and robe, so that of them that pass by securely, there are those who are like men returning from war, viz. in as bad a condition, by your ill dealing spoiled and robbed. This exposition is given by that ancient Grammarian, of great note among them, upon particular examination of the words, and it gives a good meaning, viz. Against my people ye set an enemy: whoever ye meet with ye strip of his garment and covering, so that of them who pass on securely there are those who are become as * men turning from war. Yet is he not, that I find, followed by others, who generally take אתמול Ethmul for one word, and to signify Yesterday, or, of late, or, before now; and then in expounding the other words they differ among themselves. One exposition given by some learned Jews, runs thus, * But Yesterday, or before now, my people, i. e. Israel behaving themselves as my people, stood up against the enemy, were able to resist and prevail against him, but now having forsaken God, you are so far from this, that at the sight of a garment at a distance, taking it for the enemies colours or ensign, or for an enemy coming to set on you, you strip off your clothes, and cast from you your garments, that you may fly the lighter. And if you espy any but passing securely and quietly on the way, you presently flee for fear of them with all speed, as men that return flying from war, or the battle, for fear of the enemy pursuing them. And so may it be compared with what is said, Lev. xxvi. 36. The sound of a shaking leaf shall chase them, and they shall flee as fleeing from a sword, and they shall fall where none pursueth; * or, you taking them for such as return from war, take fear and flee before them. † A learned Christian also embraceth this interpretation; only that the latter words he expounds, that those that pass on quietly in their way, seem such as return from war, i. e. You for fear casting away your garments, the traveller that mindeth no such thing, finding them in the way, cometh home with them as if he returned laden with spoils from the war. To this also may our translators seem to point in their marginal reading, viz. over-against a garment. † Another exposition is this, That God having before declared that his words do good, that he promiseth and giveth good things to him that walketh uprightly, sheweth now how incapable they are of hearing or receiving good from him, by describing their ways contrary to his: as if he should say, But not to you (whom yet he termeth my people) who are become as enemies to me, resisting or setting your selves against my commandments both before and till now; viz. in that you do wrong and violence for a robe or garment, which injuriously ye take away from them that pass on in the ways, thinking themselves secure, as if they fled in the time of war, and were gotten out of the reach of the enemy; or, who are glad when they are escaped out of your hands alive, after you have taken those goods they had, as they use to do who are fled out of wars. And this exposition is confirmed firm'd by what follows after in verse 9. The women of my people ye cast out, &c. as if he said, These injuries ye do abroad in the ways; but within the cities ye do them in another way, destroying houses through whoredom. To the same scope tend generally the modern translations, as taking the words for a description of the perverseness, violence and rapine of that people, though among themselves they something differ in expounding and applying them.

* See R. Tanch. and R. Kimchi. † Abu Walid. See Abarb. * He takes Lamed for a note of the accusative case. † Rashi. † R. Tanchum. Abarb. † Abarb. † Ar. Mont. † R. Tanch.

^d Some, They that were Yesterday, or heretofore, my people, now rise up in hostile manner against me: ye take away the mantle from above their coat, i. e. ye strip the poor both of their upper and under garment; they that pass by peaceably are to you as those that return from war, i. e. are taken in war and brought captives, whom ye may use as you please. Others, Yesterday of late, or, before now, my people is risen up as an enemy; against me, say Some, ^e Others among themselves and against one another, referring it to the quarrels of one of the two kingdoms, Judab and Israel, against the other, and the injuries and violences done in each of them, by the oppression and rapine of the rich and potent, against the poor and weaker:

^f Others, before now, a good while since, my people hath raised up, or made, me their God, an enemy unto them, by those their doings, the mention of which follows. Ye pull off the robe with the garment. ^g Others, differently distinguish the words, He that was before my people, as if he were an enemy, riseth up against a garment; ye pull off the robe from them that pass confidently, or securely, i. e. if ye see any in a garment that likes you, ye rise up in an hostile manner to take it away;

^h Others, when there is a robe ye pull off the garment, i. e. tho' ye have a garment of your own, not for need, but through meer injuriousness, you pull off the robe or clothes from them that pass by securely, as ⁱ men averse from war, not intending to enter into contention, or meaning to wrong any; Others, not much differently, being quiet from war, thinking now all things quiet and safe; Others, whereas ye are removed from wars; Others, returning from the battle or war, having escaped thence, and so now no farther fearing any enemy; ^k Others, as men returning (i. e. you being as soldiers returning) from war bloody and insolent. ^l A modern learned Divine thinks the words may thus be rendred, But of late he, i. e. God, hath given up my people to the enemy. Together with the mantle take away the robe from those that pass on securely and return from war; cast out the women of my people, &c. as if they were God's commission and command unto the enemy. But this seems harsh. Diodati renders thus, Moreover, heretofore, my people lifted themselves up against the enemy, but now ye laying wait against, or, for garments, spoil of their mantle passengers, which were in security, being in quiet from war. To some of these forementioned, I suppose, will be reducea-

ble what other modern translations any shall meet with. Some more ancient, as the Greek, Syriack, and printed Arabick, are so wide from them, that they will not easily be adjusted either with any of them or with the original Hebrew. The Chaldee useth his liberty as a Paraphrast. Among all none seems to give to the words their force better than that first of the Jewish Grammarian. It will not be needful nicely to enquire into the difference between the two words, one of which is rendred robe, the other garment. The first, ^m שלמה Sal-mah, seems to denote a looser garment cast over the rest, the second, ⁿ עדר Eder, a closer, more fitted to the body. If we compare these words with those of our Saviour, ^o Mat. v. 40. where is first named coat the under, and after cloak the upper garment, and, Luke vi. 29. where, on the contrary, first, cloak, then coat, this will look much like a proverbial speech, and the naming of them both, whether one or the other, first or last, will signify the greedy violence of the enemy stripping the poor man not in part, but of all that he hath, A manuscript Arab translation thus renders, Yesterday my people resisted their enemy, but now over-against a garment, or, at sight of a garment, ye pull off (the garment) from (perhaps, he means their clothes, because of, or, for fear of) those that pass by securely, being turned back from war. Or otherwise, perhaps, his meaning may be, Heretofore, they made war with their enemies, but now at sight of a garment they fall to stripping those that pass by, &c. they from being valiant soldiers in war, are turned only thieves and robbers in time of peace.

9. The women of my people have ye cast out from their pleasant houses, from their children have ye taken away my glory for ever.

The women of my people have ye cast out from their pleasant houses, &c.] The different expositions given of these words are reduceable to these two, ^p First, that they did by violence cast out the wives or widows of those poor men whom they oppressed and spoiled of their possessions and inheritance, or had slain, or driven away from their houses, wherein they had lived with their husbands and children with comfort and content: and likewise by the same means took away from their children the glory of God for ever, i. e. ^q those rights and privileges which God in his law had given them, or that glorious inheritance which God had given them for a perpetual possession, and brought them to so low and contemptible a condition, that the honour of being God's children and people did no more appear in them: or, as Others, by depriving them of their substance and patrimony, by enjoying of which they should have had occasion to give praise and glory to me perpetually, you cause them, being deprived thereof, to curse you, and murmur against me. Others, by hin-

^d Calv. Gro. ^e Jun. Trem. Tar. Aben Ez. R. D. Kim. ^f De Dieu. R. Sal. J1r. ^g Pagn. edit. Tig. Christ. à Castro. Vatab. Dutch Notes. ^h Jun. Trem. Tar. ⁱ Dutch Notes. ^k Vatablus. ^l Lud. De Dieu. ^m Sec De Dieu. ⁿ Sec Grotius. ^o Abarb. Sec Vatab. ^p Jun. Trem. Tarnov. Deodat.

hindring them, being robbed and spoiled from such honourable marriages, whereby they might have left a ^q posterity to my glory: Others, by seducing them to idolatry, and causing them to follow it, ye have caused my glory to cease among them for ever, ^r that glory which I should have had from them, so that they think no more of worshipping me. My glory, saith one, i. e. ^s my temple, which by your sins, ye have caused to be destroyed. But what had those of the ten tribes to do with the temple? The same hath another exposition, ye have caused that no children be left to praise me. Or may it not be? My glory from them, the glory that I should receive from them, or the glory that they should receive from me. ^t Some render the last words, and that for ever, i. e. this ye continually do. ^u A learned Jew interpreting the former part of the verse, as we have said, distinguisheth the words differently, and otherwise reads the latter part, thus, The women of my people have ye cast out from their pleasant houses together with their children, (that ye might take and possess their houses and their inheritance:) shall ye take (possess, or retain) my glory for ever? i. e. with such your evil doings shall ye continue in my chosen land my glory the glory of all lands? No: as ye have cast out others from their pleasant houses, so will I cast you out from my land, Arise ye and depart, &c. The second way, which other expositors follow, is by interpreting what is said, the women of my people have ye cast out, &c. ^x concerning divorce and parting betwixt man and wife, which some expound of the causeless divorces by which those lawless men spoken of did cast their own wives out of their houses in which they had lived long with content, and those wives not strangers or captives, but of their own kindred and nation, which God called his own people, and so took from them his glory, the glory of his covenant between man and wife, which redounded ^y to the children born in lawful wedlock, and was taken away by the rescinding and breaking that covenant: or in that they lost those privileges, which from the good agreement of their parents would have redounded to them. ^z Others, of such divorces which they caused between other men and their wives, by committing lewdness and adultery with them, or by ^a giving their husbands occasion to suspect them, while without their leave they violently went into the houses of the poor (who are called by God his people) where their wives were, to rob and spoil them, so that the husbands there finding them, suspected their wives of lewdness with them, and so they caus'd them to divorce them and put them away out of their houses, in which they took delight, and so from their little children, whom by this means they deprived of his glory, ^b i. e. that grace, and that sanctity, which resided among them while they lived in obedience to God, to which condition they should never again be restored by reason of that their separation and dispersion, which these wicked men were cause of. Or, by glory, ^c Some will have meant that conjunction between man and wife by God instituted for those ends, which rightly observed are, as all his works and ordinances, his glory for which and by which men praise him. The Greek version of this verse, and printed Arabick, are far different from all other, and from the words in the Hebrew. A manuscript Arabick translation (I suppose Rab. Saadias) the women of my people ye thrust out of the houses of their delightfulness (or wherein they shewed themselves delightful and pleasing to their husbands;) from their children ye take my glory for ever.

10 Arise ye and depart, for this is not your rest, because it is polluted, it shall destroy you even with a sore destruction.

Arise ye and depart, &c.] According to this rendering the sense is plain, ^d Prepare you for departure and removal from this land, for it may not be, or, is not convenient that it should be a resting place to you after such wickednesses committed by you in it, but it shall destroy you, because it is polluted by you, and that with a sore destruction: and the words will bear this rendering. It is, perhaps, ^e the best: yet do some differently render, especially the latter words. The ancient Vulgar Latin hath to this sense, Arise and go, because you have no rest here; for the uncleanness thereof it shall be corrupted with a sore putrefaction; so the Doway version hath it. The greatest difference in this from Ours is, that the word טמא Tameab, which Ours renders as a verb is polluted, is in it taken for a noun, ^f as it is by Others also, and rendred uncleanness; and the verb תחבל Techabbel, which Ours render actively, shall destroy you, in it is rendred intransitively or passively, as ^g Some think it ought here to be taken, shall be corrupted or destroyed: which they might be the more induced to do, because otherwise you is to be understood, for there is nothing to signify it expressed in the original. And for that reason may it be also, that ^h Others render, Because pollution corrupteth, or, as another, because of pollution, which corrupteth even with a great corruption; otherwise the meaning in both is much one, and respect is had to the same signification of the root or verb חבל Cbabal, which hath, beside this of destruction or corruption, other significations also, which Some chuse to follow: as, namely, חבל Chebel, signifieth a cord, and the author of that well approved Tigurin Latin translation following this, renders, because it is polluted and corrupted, and the cord too much stretched: but he might have done well farther to have explained his

^q Christ. à Castro. Tirinus. ^r Grot. ^s Stokes. ^t Peli. ^u Jun. Trem. Tig. ^w Abarb. ^x Tar.
^y See Christ. à Castro. ^z R. Tanch. ^a R. Kimchi. ^b R. Tanch. ^c R. Kimchi. ^d R. Tanch.
^e It is that which R. D. Kimchi followeth. ^f Jun. Trem. ^g Schind. in חבל, and see Abarb. Oecolamp.
^h See Syriack and Tig. Schindl. in חבל.

his meaning: he is not, for ought I find, followed by any other. It signifies also a company; and in this signification a noted Rabbin (Salomon Jarchi) taking it, expounds the words, that it may be polluted, it gathers companies, which companies being met, declare their counsels: and for confirmation of his taking it in this signification, he alledgeth the authority of the Chaldee,¹ who paraphraseth the words: Arise and be gone, this land is not an house of rest to the wicked: that they may pollute it they do corruptly; that you may defile it ye gather in companies to it, or against it. But neither is this by many followed. It hath the signification, lastly, of grievous pains and pangs, such as of a woman in travel, and the verb, to conceive and be in pains or pangs of travel, with pain to bring forth; and this here hath place in the opinion of some learned Jews.^{*} One of them, taking the verb חבבל Techabbel in the first signification, and the noun חבל Chebel in this last, interprets the words thus, Because it is polluted by you it shall destroy you, and there shall be sore pains, viz. to it, i. e. to you its inhabitants;¹ or, saith he; the verb also may be taken in the last sense, and then interpreted, because it is polluted by wickedness, viz. spiritual, (that is, idolatry) and carnal, pains shall come upon it, and those pains or pangs sharp, or grievous. And so doth the manuscript Jewish Arab translation render them, Arise and be gone, this is not a resting place for you; because it is polluted, it shall be in pangs, and the pangs shall be sharp. And the meaning thus will be good and agreeable to the scripture way of denouncing punishments to a sinful nation, viz. that the land defil'd by their idolatries and abominable lewdness, and all manner of wickedness, shall be pained as it were a woman in travel and in pangs, desirous to be eased of them her burden, and not be at quiet till she be delivered of them, and they cast forth of her. By the pains and sorrows attributed to the land are noted those evils that^m shall seize on the inhabitants thereof. The like expressions see Jer. xiii. 2. and xlix. 24. Psalms xlviii. 6. Hosea xiii. 13. Isaiab xiii. 8. with many other. As for the meaning of the judgment here denounced, either according to the first or this last interpretation, it may be compared with Lev. xviii. 25. 28. and xx. 22. the meaning is, that this land, which God had given them for a rest, and they promised to themselves for a sure resting place, now being by them contrary to his command defiled, should no longer bear them, but as a foul stomach corrupting what it hath in it, violently vomit and cast them forth, or, as a woman at her full time desirous to be eased of her burden, should be grievously pained, till it were rid of them, as being weary of them.

11. If a man walking in the spirit and falsehood, do lie, saying, I will prophesy unto thee of wine and strong drink, he shall even be the prophet of this people.

If a man walking in the spirit and falsehood, do lie, saying, &c.] Or, as in the margin, walk with the wind, and lie falsely. These interpretations are all one in sense; for if רוח Ruach be render'd spirit, then will it be, a man that pretends to the spirit of prophecy, whereas he hath it not, but follows his own false spirit, which is no better than wind, and vanity;ⁿ and the word signifies as well wind as spirit: so that the meaning will be, ^o if any falsely pretending to the spirit of prophecy and inspiration from God, but, indeed, walking with the wind, and following what is vain, and false, shall forge a lie, and say, he hath commission to prophesy unto them of wine and strong drink, i. e. to bid them drink and be merry, and to enjoy themselves, not fearing those evils, which the true prophets denounced to them,^p or that they shall have plenty of wine, and all good things, or, shall say, I will prophesy to thee for wine, and strong drink. i. e. ^q If thou wilt give me a cup of wine, I will prophesy and foretel good things to thee, not destruction and calamity, as those do that tell thee, they are sent with such sad messages from God, Even he shall be the prophet of this people, him will they readily accept of for such a prophet as they would have, and hearken unto him, whereas they will not hearken unto, or endure the true prophets, who reprove them, and denounce God's judgments against them, if they will not repent of their sins, and turn from them, but silence them, as ver. 6. and see Isaiab xxx. 10. This way of expounding these words is so evidently agreeable to them in the original, that to enquire after others would rather make them obscure, than add light to them. For, as for that rendering of the Vulgar Latin: would God I were not a man having the spirit, and that I did speak a lie? it can hardly be fitted to the words in the original. The particle לו Lu, doth indeed signify would God as well as if. But then, what ground is there to add the negative I were not? it would in this sense rather sound, would God I were a man, &c. Again, by what interpretation can this be made a wish befitting the prophet? He might, perhaps, wish that no such severe message had been sent by him, as of destruction to those his people, out of his compassion to them; but to wish that what by God's command he spake, were a lie, would be an injury, not to himself only, but to the Spirit by which he spake, the Spirit of truth, with whom falsehood is not to be mentioned, much less either in word or wish attributed to him. If he had only wished, that himself by his suffering might might have redeemed them, it had been an act of charity; but not to wish that God had sent a lie by him. St. Paul saith he could wish himself even accursed from Christ for his brethrens sake, Rom. ix. 3. i. e. suffer any evil to save them, and win them to Christ, but not that the gospel or doctrine that he taught them were a lie, rather than that they might suffer for refusing it.

¹ It may be enquired whether here be not two renderings in Chaldee clapt into one out of different readings: that which is cited by Rab. Salomon is only the latter. ^k Abu Walid. R. D. Kim. in Rad. Mich. Yophe. ^l R. Tanch. and see Ab. Ezra. ^m R. Tanch. ⁿ See Ezek. xiii. 3. Hosea ix. 7. Jer. v. 13. ^o Abu Walid. R. Salo. Jar. Ab. Ez. Abarb. R. Tanchum. ^p Tarnovius, Diodati, Drusus. ^q R. D. Kimchi, Vatablus, Drusus. ^r Doway Translation.

12. I will surely assemble, O Jacob, all of thee, I will surely gather the remnant of Israel, I will put them together as the sheep of Bozrah, as the flock in the midst of their fold; they shall make great noise by reason of the multitude of men.

13. The breaker is come up before them: they have broken up, and have passed through the gate, and are gone out by it, and their king shall pass before them, and the Lord on the head of them.

I will surely assemble, O Jacob, all of thee, &c.] Very different opinions are there concerning the scope and meaning of these two verses, Some taking them as a denunciation of judgment and utter destruction to them, as both before and after is threatned by the prophet from the Lord: Others as a promise of mercy and restauration after dispersion, as 'tis usual in the prophets to mingle promises of mercy with threatnings of judgment. Others, thirdly, make them the words of the false lying prophets mentioned in the foregoing verse, bidding them not believe the true prophets threatning them with severe judgments, but telling them, that however they threatned the contrary, it should be well with them. The first of these ways is taken by divers learned men, both * Jews and Christians; and the words must then be expounded to this purpose; That God threatens, that he will gather together the whole posterity of Jacob, and the remnant of Israel, (for many of them had already been destroyed, or carried away captives) i. e. all that remained both of the ten tribes, and also the two other of Judah, and Benjamin, in great multitudes, as flocks of sheep in Bozrah, a place noted for abundance of sheep; that as a flock are gathered into their fold, and there shut up, so they should be gathered into their cities and towns, that they might be taken together, and there, by reason of the multitude of them that were shut up, besieged, and distressed together, (or by reason of the enemies that in such great number surrounded them,) should make great noise, and be much troubled, as a great flock of sheep shut up in a fold, are disturbed ^u when any comes in upon them: viz. because the breaker, i. e. the soldiers of the enemy, who should break down their walls, should come upon them, and make free passage for themselves, by breaking open their gates, to pass in and out; or for themselves to enter, and to lead them out to captivity: and their king, viz. the enemies king, should pass before his army to lead them on; and not only so, but the Lord himself in the head of them, to give them victory over those whom he hath given up to be destroyed by them: and so this prophecy may be looked on as fulfilled in the taking of Samaria by the King of Assyria, 2 Kings xvii. 6. and of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, 2 Kings xxv. 1, &c. Others, who yet look upon it as then fulfilled, do differently expound the last verse, to wit, that ^w by the breaker should be understood the enemy, but then that for fear of him they should make breaches themselves in their walls to get out at, and pass out at the gates, to escape if they could by flight, their king himself leading them the way, (as * of Zedekiah 'tis said, 2 Kings xxv. 4.) but being taken, should be carried captive, and they after him; and all this because the Lord was in the head of them, i. e. the enemies, to execute the judgments that he had denounced against that people. But this seems harsh to interpret them, in before them, first of the Israelites, then in the same continued sentence, on the head of them, of the enemies. Others therefore expound it, shall be on the head of them, i. e. over them for evil, and to execute his vengeance on them, and to see that they shall not escape. Others, and the Lord shall in the head, or beginning, i. e. before, forsake them, and withdraw his presence, by which he was wont to protect and defend them; which ^z a learned Jew notes to be a far fetch'd interpretation.

The second exposition, viz. that in these words is a gracious promise of restauration to Israel after their dispersion, is preferred ^a by many learned men, both Jews and Christians; with this difference, that the Jews (the modern at least) understand it as a temporal restoring of the kingdom of Israel; the Christians of a spiritual deliverance by Christ, and the calling them into his kingdom, and gathering them into his church, together with the called of the Gentiles, as one flock into one fold under one shepherd. See John x. 16. The words being so taken, we need not (saith ^b a learned Jew) look after any connexion with the foregoing, or following, it being not unusual to have gracious promises so mingled with threatnings of judgments, where seems no coherence betwixt them. Or else the connexion may be made thus, ^c saith another, God having before threatned severe things against the people, both in this and the former chapter, as that their inheritance should be laid waste, and they cast out of it, be destroyed, and carried away captives; lest they should utterly despair of deliverance or salvation, intermingles this merciful promise of a gracious restauration, that he will again after the dispersion with which he hath threatned them, gather them together in as great multitudes as the sheep

Vol. I.

K

* R. D. Kimchi, Calvin. Paræus, Drusius, De Dieu, Tirin. Grot. ^a Grotius. ^b De Dieu. ^w Tarn. Joseph Kimchi. ^x Jer. xxxix. 4. and see Ezek. xii. 12. ^y Drus. R. Joseph Kimchi in R. D. Kimchi. ^z R. Tanch. ^a Chald. Paraph. R. Sol. Jarchi. R. Tanch. Abarb. ^b R. Tanch. ^c Abarb.

sheep of Bozrah, and as flocks are gathered together into their fold; so that there shall be a great noise by reason of their concourse, as if their place were too straight and narrow for them. Isaiah xlix. 19, 20. And then a flourishing, or mighty growing king, ^a according to one sense of the word פורץ Porets, or, a breaking king, shall break through all impediments (according to another signification of that word) and beat down the enemies; so that they following him shall, breaking through all difficulties of gates shut against them, pass in and out as they please, their king going before them, and the Lord being on the head of them, as leader of the Vauntguard, i. e. to protect, and help them by his providence and mighty wonders, and to hinder the enemies from hurting them. Thus a learned Jew, understanding the words literally; who in the mean while notes, though these words be of the preterperfect tense, have broken up, have passed, are gone out, yet that they are to be understood as in the future, shall break up, shall pass, shall go out; as such change of tenses is not unfrequent. And so ^c do others of them, who follow the same way, take it as a prophecy לעתיד Leatid, belonging to the time to come, i. e. to the times of the Messiah, which they deny yet to be come, and vainly expect, promising to themselves great carnal felicity therein. The ^f Christian Interpreters, who look upon these words as a prophecy of good things, do look, as taught in the gospel, after a more spiritual meaning, interpreting them as made good by Christ's calling, and gathering together, into his church, his fold, the Israel of God, his dispersed flock, who were before as sheep going astray; in which they should grow into great numbers, like the flocks of Bozrah. The comparing with these words, John x. to ver. 18. will serve much for the illustration of them in this sense understood. And in what numbers they came at first into the church, the history of the first times, as Acts xi. 41. and iv. 4. and elsewhere, and of succeeding times all the world over, testifies. They usually understand by the breaker, and by their king, the same person, viz. Christ, to whom that title of breaker may well agree, for his breaking down all obstacles, the middle wall of partition betwixt Jews and Gentiles, Eph. xi. 14. ^g breaking open the gates of death, and hell it self, so that neither he himself could be detained by them, nor his ^h be hinder'd by them, from following him into the kingdom of heaven, the gates of which having conquered death, and triumphed over all enemies, he set open to them, so that they might without hindrance go in and out, and find pasture, John x. 9. he going before them, and his sheep following him, ver. 4. and the Lord protecting them. It may be observed too, that if the word פורץ Haporets, be taken in that other sense mentioned, as it may signify one that increaseth, or groweth to power, it may likewise aptly be attributed to Christ the King of the church, who is called the branch, Zech. iii. 8. and vi. 12. and of whom it is said, that of the increase of his government there shall be no end, Isaiah ix. 7. and the rod of the stem of Jesse, and a branch that should grow out of his roots, Isaiah xi. 1. and a root of Jesse, whose rest should be glorious, by whom God would set his hand again, to recover the remnant of his people; and that he should set up an ensign for the nations, to assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah, ver. 10, 11, 12. To him that was promised to be as such, and was exhibited as such, and hath made good in himself what was promised, well may the title of פורץ Haporets, in this, or indeed in both senses agree. But if any think, that by פורץ Haporets, the breaker, and מלכם Malcam, their king, should be meant two distinct persons; let him hear, what the ancient Jews (as cited ⁱ by the modern) say, for exposition of this place. Haporets, the breaker, that is, Elias, and Malcam, their king, that is, the branch, the son of David; and then observe, what our Saviour himself hath taught us, that John Baptist was that Elias which was to come, Mat. xi. 14. and xvii. 12, 13. and what the angel saith of him, Luke i. 16, 17. that many of the children of Israel he should turn unto the Lord their God, and that he should go before him in the spirit and power of Elias, without fear, and with courage, as he, ^k rebuking sin, and removing it out of the way, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord: and how the prophecy of Isaiah is applied to him preaching repentance, viz. that he was, as he saith also of himself, John i. 23. the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight: every valley shall be filled, and every mountain and hill shall be brought low, and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough ways shall be made smooth, Luke iii. 4, 5. and what our Saviour saith, This is he, of whom it is said, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee; and that from the days of John the Baptist, the kingdom of heaven suffered violence, and the violent took it by force, Mat. xi. 10, 12. men breaking as it were, and passing through the gate, by his preaching repentance laid open, that they might go in and out: and it will be easy to apply to him this title of the breaker: and so shall we have in the words, a most illustrious prophecy of Christ, and his forerunner John the Baptist, which it will be no reason to let go, seeing the Jews themselves so readily yield it to us. Especially, when the words most nicely examined, will be more punctually applicable to this exposition than any other that is brought, observing only to look for these promises to be spiritually performed, which the Jews expect only as carnal; and because they have not yet had any such temporal deliverance, think the prophecy not yet fulfilled. Neither is it by divers Christians looked upon as yet completely fulfilled, but, in another regard, viz. because it respects Christ's calling, and gathering of his, not only here, into the fold of the church militant, the kingdom of grace, but hereafter into the church triumphant, the kingdom of glory; in the heavenly Jerusalem. This needs not be looked on as a new exposition, but a completion of the former, which it necessarily presupposeth. The third way of expounding the words is, of a learned ^m Jew, who taketh the former of the two verses to be the words of that lying prophet, spoken of in the foregoing verse, as if he should say to them, Drink and be merry, and fear not, for the Lord hath put into my mouth to say unto you, that he will surely gather together all that are dispersed of you, and you shall be in your cities in great multitudes, as flocks of sheep in their proper folds and pastures; and thus the false prophet leading them the way, they follow like sheep one after another, when one of them hath gone out of a gap, and even their king likewise doth the like, the Lord, at their first breaking out from his obedience, removing his presence, and providence from them. Thus he is explained, by another ⁿ of his nation, who yet rejects his opinion, because these words were spoken before the dispersion of the Israelites by captivity; so that if they had been a promise from their false prophets, they should rather have told them, that they should not be scattered, nor go at all into captivity, as the true prophets denounced, and not have prophesied to them of a return after captivity. Yet, do ^o Some Christian Interpreters also so far follow him, as to think the former of the two verses, to contain the words of the false prophets, but so as retorted by God upon them; that whereas they promised them, that they should be gathered together, he would indeed so gather them, but not for good, as they falsely promised them, but for evil, and a general destruction. It may be here observ'd, that whereas the most take Bozrah for the proper name of a place, noted for abundance of flocks, mentioned Isaiab xxxiv. 6. and Jer. xlviii. 24. yet by Others, it is not taken for a proper name, but translated ^p in a sheep cote, or fold, taking it to be in signification like מִבְצָר Mibzar, a fence, or, place of defence; ^q Others, in tribulation, or streights. Why Abarbanel and Montanus should take Bozrah for Rome, there is no reason, tho' it might be of old a place for feeding sheep.

^a R. Tanch. ^c R. D. Rim. and Rabb. in MSS. for in Bux. Bibles these words are left out. ^f Pelic. Oecolamp. ^g Diodat. Ribér. ^h Sa. Menoch. ⁱ See Col. xi. 15. ^k See Mat. xvi. 18. ^l R. D. Kimchi and Abarb. ^m Grot. Mat. xi. 14.

C H A P. III.

VERSE I. And I said, Hear, I pray you, O heads of Jacob, and ye princes of the house of Israel: Is it not for you to know judgment?

2. Who hate the good, and love the evil, who pluck off their skin from off them, and their flesh from off their bones.

3. Who also eat the flesh of my people, and flay their skin from off them, and they break their bones, and chop them in pieces, as for the pot, and as flesh within the cauldron.

THAT it may appear, how justly deserved God's judgments, which he threatned to execute on Israel, are, he proceeds to declare more particularly, the great corruptions that were among them; and, first, the avarice and cruel oppressions, exercised by such as had the government over them. They who by their office ought to know justice and judgment, and to direct the people in the ways thereof, and encourage those that walked accordingly, and to show love and favour unto them; were so far from doing according to their duty, that on the contrary, they bated those that were good, and favoured, and encouraged, those that were evil, ^a or, bated to do good, and loved to do evil: yea, instead of cherishing the good, did themselves pluck off their skin from off them, &c. by which figurative expressions are set forth their great oppression of them, and the savage cruelty they used towards them, in respect both of their persons and estates, extorting from them, and violently and unjustly spoiling them of all that they had to live by, that which was unto them as their skin, their flesh, and their marrow; and in so doing, shewed in themselves, ^b by their several ways of extortion and oppression, as great cruelty, as would be in a shepherd, who should deal with the flock which he were to feed, according to the literal expression of the words, that so thereby he might luxuriously glut and feed himself.

4. Then shall they cry unto the Lord, but he will not bear them: he will even hide his face from them at that time, as they have behaved themselves ill in their doings.

Then shall they cry unto the Lord.] What shall be the end or issue to them, whose wickedness he hath declared, he sheweth, viz. that those heavy judgments, which he before denounced, shall certainly seize on them; and then they not able to free themselves from them, and destitute of all other helps, shall cry unto him for deliverance, as acknowledging him alone able to save them; but all in vain, for in that time he will not bear their cry, but be as one that turneth his face away from such as put up their suit to him, denying to show any regard to them. And he addeth the reason of such his averſation, or turning away from them, viz. because they behaved themselves ill in their doings: by which illness of their behaviour (by reason of the particle כַּאֲשֶׁר Caasher, signifying as, or even as, and because God often proportioneth the punishment to the sin, rendring, as the Jews speak, ^a measure for measure) may well be meant their stopping their ears against the cry of the poor, whom they themselves oppressed, or would not deliver from their oppressors, as they ought to have done, and their turning away their faces from them, having no regard to them in their need: according to which their inflexibility, will God now with great severity, in the time of their great need, behave himself as regardless of them, and show himself inexorable for all their cries. He will send against them an enemy ^c which shall deal as cruelly, and as unmercifully with them, as they did with the poor; or more generally, as you formerly turned the back to him, ^d and would not hearken to him calling on you, so will he then behave himself towards you, James xi. 13.

be-

¹ Christ. à Castro. ^m Ab. Ezra. ⁿ R. Tanch. ^o Jun. Trem. Grot. &c. ^p Chaldee Par. Vulg. Lat.
^q Septuag. Syriack. Arabick. ^a R. D. Kimchi. ^b Abarb. ^c Grot.

5. Thus saith the Lord concerning the prophets that make my people err, that bite with their teeth, and cry, Peace: and he that putteth not into their mouths, they even prepare war against him.

That bite with their teeth, &c.] Here God proceedeth to declare the iniquity of the false prophets, of whom mention was made, chap. ii. 11. and to denounce his judgments against them. Although the signification of the words be clear, yet as to the meaning of them there are different expositions. By their biting with their teeth, ^a Some, will have meant their bitter inveighing against the true prophets who denounced God's judgments, whereas they on the contrary promised peace. ^b Others, that while they speak peace to that sinful people, and bid them to expect it, and flattered them in their wicked ways, they did indeed bite them, and occasioned hurt and mischief to them by thus deluding them. ^c Others, that they were such, who while they had given to them what they might bite with their teeth, or feed on, prophesied peace to such as fed them: which may seem confirmed by the following words, shewing that against such as did not so treat them; they prophesied evil, war and destruction, and set themselves, and stirred up others against them, to do them all the mischief they could, which is called their preparing war against them; shewing that they prophesied for gifts and rewards, as ver. 11. and according to the rewards that they received, proportioned what they prophesied either for good or bad.

6. Therefore night shall be unto you, that ye shall not have a vision, and it shall be dark unto you, that ye shall not divine, and the sun shall go down over the prophets, and the day shall be dark over them.

7. Then shall the seers be ashamed, and the diviners confounded: yea, they shall cover their lips, for there is no answer of God.

Therefore night shall be unto you, &c.] Of the judgment in these words denounced against the false prophets, the plainest meaning seems this, That such confusion shall seize upon them, by reason of the great calamities that shall befall them, expressed by terms of night, and darkness, and the going down of the sun, and the day being dark upon them: it shall be with them as with men in utter darkness, who know not which way to turn themselves, much less can pretend to direct others, or show them which way to go: and when things shall be so with them, they shall be ashamed and confounded, their impostures being made manifest to all: and that what they pretended as messages from God promising peace, being so far from being made good that the clean contrary is hapned: were meer delusions of their own, and being so now discovered, ^a they shall not dare to proceed in their former ways of false divinations, nor pretend any revelation from God, but cover their lips, as men put to silence, not able to say any thing that shall be accepted, or daring once to open their mouths. For it cannot be interpreted, as if God should now cease to put his words in their mouths, or to send any message by them, for they never were before employed by him, but pretended falsely to have received from him what they spake; which falsehood of theirs being now by the contrary events discovered, they shall be so confounded with shame, as not to dare any more to open their mouth to the people. ^b So that those last words, for there is no answer of God, seem not so much a reason, why they now should hold their peace, viz. because God now refused to answer or speak by them (for he had not at all done so) as to declare, that these things which now came to pass, discovered that they never spake by the Spirit of God, and this discovery brought necessary silence with shame to them. Covering the lip was a custom of Lepers, Lev. xiii. 45. confessing their uncleanness, a sign of sorrow and shame, a token of sorrow, Ezek. xxiv. 17, 22. Here it seems to signify the ^c stopping of their mouths from speaking.

8. But truly I am full of power by the Spirit of the Lord, and of judgment, and of might, to declare unto Jacob his transgression, and to Israel his sin.

But truly I am full of power, &c.] He opposeth himself to those seducers, his commission, his faithfulness in executing of it, and his behaviour to theirs. They being not inspired by God's Spirit, nor having any message or

^a Abarb. ^b R. D. Kimchi. ^c Tirinus. ^d Christ. à Castro. (although it be not Kimchi's exposition, as he would have it). Tirin. ^e Ab. Ezra. R. D. Kimchi. R. Tanchum, Prov. xxviii. 6. ^f Rashi. R. D. Kim. R. Tanch. Abarbincl. ^g Aben Ezra. R. D. Kimchi. ^h R. Tanchum. ⁱ R. Tanchum.

or answer from him, but led by their own erroneous spirit, directed all that they spake to their own ends and advantage, and flattered such as fed them and made much of them, and promised good unto them, with those that did not so, dealing otherwise: but he is truly inspired by God, full of his Spirit, and by virtue of that full of power, freely and without fear or partiality, without any self respects or by-ends to utter the message with which he is sent from God; and of judgment, by which to ^a discern between right and wrong, and what and when to speak; and of might without fear of men or their greatness to speak it, even to declare unto Jacob his transgression, and to Israel his sin, not respecting persons or soothing any in their evil ways, but boldly and freely reproving all of what condition soever, that so they may turn to God by repentance, or else know what judgments they are to expect. And so by the word full of judgment, ^o Some understand the judgments of the Lord to be denounced, as if he were by the Spirit moved to denounce them; though ^p Others prefer the notion of ability in discerning between things, and so rightly applying what he should speak, and knowing how and when to do it.

9. Hear this, I pray you, ye heads of the house of Jacob, and princes of the house of Israel, that abhor judgment, and pervert all equity.

Hear this, ye heads of the house of Jacob, and princes of the house of Israel.] The like compellation we had, ver. 1. That it may well agree to the whole twelve tribes is no doubt, though after the division of them into two kingdoms, the name of Israel be often particularly given to the ten tribes. See note on chap. i. 5. Here in this chapter in both places these titles seem to many Interpreters to be attributed to the same, viz. those that were in dignity and authority in both kingdoms: but ^a a learned Jew, considering that the judgments denounced in the former verses may well concern the kingdom of Israel, thinks by the princes of the house of Israel, in the first verse, to be meant those of that kingdom as distinct from Judah, and in those following this verse, seeing Zion and Jerusalem are expressly named, and the judgments particularly concern them, by the heads of the house of Jacob, and the princes of the house of Israel, to be meant particularly those of Judah, and them to be called by the same title with the others, because they were like them in sins; as Isaiah i. 10. they are termed rulers of Sodom, and the Jews the people of Gomorrah, because their deeds were like to theirs.

The power of the Spirit of the Lord in him he sheweth; by daring, even to those of greatest authority, to declare their transgressions without fear of their greatness, and to reprove them, for that whereas they ought to have known judgment, (as he speaketh, ver.

1.) to have themselves walked in the ways thereof, and caused others to observe them, they did clean contrarily abhor it; and perverted all equity, all that was right, even setting themselves to do what was contrary thereto as things hateful to them, and scorning to be guided by the rules thereof which were contrary to their ends.

10. They build up Zion with blood, and Jerusalem with iniquity.

They build up Zion with blood.] So according to the sense it is rendered; as being a farther description of the sins of those spoken to; otherwise the word, being in the singular number, and sounding he buildeth up, may be expounded ^r Every one of them buildeth, &c. or, ^s as still speaking to them, O thou which buildest, &c. or, Every one of you which buildeth up Jerusalem, i. e. build therein houses and palaces with blood (or, that think it shall be built and inhabited when such things are done in it.) With blood, that is therein shed; said the Chaldee, i. e. with wealth gotten by the murdering violently or unjustly, putting to death the owners thereof, which they did so frequently; that blood touched blood, Hosea iv. 2. or ^t by money which they took of murderers to save them contrary to the law, which required life for life; blood for blood. Others ^u think that the word blood is not necessarily here to be properly taken, but more largely; as elsewhere, for bloody hainous things of several sorts; and ^w Others more particularly for violence, fraud and oppression, by which the goods, which are taken from the poor owners, that should thereby sustain the life of themselves and their families, were ^x as their blood, and the taking them from them as shedding their blood.

^y Others refer the word build, not to those unjust rulers spoken of, but to God the builder of Zion, and to be spoken by way of admiration or interrogation to this sense, Shall God (or, shall I? as in the person of God) build up, or establish Zion with blood, and Jerusalem with iniquity? that is, when such sins are committed in it: ^z or, Did he build Zion with blood, or Jerusalem with iniquity? And this sense would well agree with what precedes and follows; but the other meaning is more received.

11. The heads thereof judge for reward, and the priests thereof teach for hire, and the prophets thereof divine for money: yet will they lean upon the Lord, and say, Is not the Lord among us? no evil can come upon us.

The heads thereof judge for reward; &c.] He proceeds to declare the sins of all sorts of those, by whom the people ought to have been governed and directed in the right way. The heads, (who were by the law forbidden to take any gift, lest they should be perverted, according to what is said, Exod. xxiii. 8. Thou shalt

VOL. I.

L

^a Grot. Tarn. ^o Ribera, Sa, &c. ^p Tarn. ^q Abarb. ^r Aben Ezra, Kimchi. ^s R. Saadi.
Arab. Version MS. R. Tanchum. ^t Kimchi. ^u R. Tanchum. ^w Kimchi. ^x See Ecclus. xxxiv. 21, 22.
See Christ. à Castro. ^y R. Tanch. ^z Abarb.

shall take no gift, for the gift blindeth the wise, and perverteth the words of the righteous; and, again, to the very same purpose, is repeated, Deut. xvi. 19.) do judge for reward, and accordingly for gain wrest judgment, being guided in their sentence by the bribe they receive, and not by the merits of the cause. The priests, whose lips should keep knowledge, and at whose mouths they should seek the law, as being the messengers of the Lord of Hosts, and by him given for teachers and right interpreters of his law, Mal. xi. 7. They teach for hire: their mouths are opened only to those that will give to them: and then will teach them not so much the truth as pleasing things, such as they shall desire, not what they ought to hear. And whereas no prophet should undertake that function but such as were sent by God, and such should impartially deliver his message, without respect of persons, fear or flattery, or any by-ends, there were among them many that pretended to be prophets, who divined for money, and that they might get thereby, vented false visions, and feigned messages from God who never sent them. See Ezek. xiii. 6, &c. (following the ways of Balaam, who loved the ways of unrighteousness, 2 Pet. xi. 15.) To any that would believe them and put into their mouths, ver. 5. and reward them for it, they would undertake to foretel such things as should best like and please them, and sooth them up in their ways; to others the clean contrary: in summ, all these, in that corrupt state so without regard to justice and truth, made their gain not God's glory their end, and yet for all this would ^a flatter themselves with vain hope of security and confidence in God and his presence among them. He had own'd them for his people, chosen Sion for his habitation, promised to dwell in the temple at Jerusalem; ^b they had there the ark of his covenant, and the signs of his majestick presence, so that they thought him even tied to a perpetual residence among them; and so long as he was among them, they thought themselves sure that no evil could come upon them, he would not cast off his people, nor let his city and his temple be destroyed. Such vain confidence in the Lord by them who forsook the Lord and his ways, and yet hoped not to be forsaken by him, see described likewise, Jer. vii. 4, 8, &c. where he sheweth on what terms only he would continue his presence with them and defend them; which conditions seeing these here observed not, how vain and groundless their confidence is, the issue shall shew, and that is in the next words declared.

12. Therefore shall Zion for your sake be plowed as a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house, as the high places of the forest.

Therefore shall Zion for your sake, &c.] They seem'd to think for Zion's sake, and Jerusalem's, and the house of the Lord's sake, they should be secure, however they behaved themselves; but God declareth, that on the contrary, for their sakes, and the evil of their doings, whereby they had made those places which should have been kept holy to him: a den of robbers, of murderers, adulterers, idolaters, and the like, even those places themselves should be given up to utter ruin and destruction; his anger toward the people should extend it self even to the place it self which was defiled by them, it no longer retaining its holiness than they continued holy. For your sake shall Zion be plowed as a field, &c. These words are cited, Jer. xxvi. 18. where it is shewed that they were spoken in the days of King Hezekiah. Plowed as a field, the buildings thereof being all thrown down, it shall be laid plain as a field which shall be plowed, or ^a which the enemy shall plow up, that he may leave no sign of a place ever inhabited, or a sign that it should never more be inhabited; and Jerusalem as an heap of stones, the stately buildings thereof being demolished, not one stone left in order on another, but all thrown down, Mat. xxiv. 2. and laid in rude heaps. And the mountain of the house, the mount Moriah, on which the glorious temple stood, as the high places of the forest, as hillocks on which trees and weeds should grow, as in a wild place, not regarded or inhabited by men, but only by wild beasts, Hosea ii. 12. All these are expressions of utter ruin and desolation. The latter words rendred; high places of the forest (or of a wood) ^a a learned Jew saith may be rendred, as high places of the boar of the forest, in reference to what was done to that place by Adrian the emperor, who to make the place more odious to the Jews, ^b set up in several places of the city the images of hogs and other things detestable to them; and he would have this prophecy to respect what was by the Roman emperors done when they destroyed Jerusalem, when one under Titus who destroy'd it, ^c plowed up the ground where it stood, in token that none might, without the emperor's leave, build any more any house there, and when such things were done by Adrian, who built there a city which he called Ælia, and built up and down in several places idols temples. But, however, this prophecy may seem to him and others to ^d extend it self so far, and then to the utmost of the letter to have been fulfilled, or the whole of what is here said done, yet we may justly look upon it as limited to a shorter time, and sufficiently, as to making good these descriptions of great desolation, fulfilled in the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple by the Chaldeans, by whom the city and temple were made heaps of rubbish or dust, Neb. iv. 2. 2 Kings xxv. and 2 Chron. xxxvi. 19. in the time of King Zedekiah, till when, though it was before spoken, it seems to have been differed on their repentance, as is intimated in the forecited Jer.

^a Isaiah xlvi. 2.
^b Psal. lxxx. 13.

^c Kim. Abarb. Grotius.
^d Calvisius an. Christi. 135.

^e Jer. vii. 9, &c.
^f Calv. an. 123.

^g Grot. Christ. à Castro.
^h See Christ. à Castro.

ⁱ Abarb.

Jer. xxvi. 19. though to the other also, in respect of the things done agreeable to these expressions, it may not unfitly be applied. See also R. Saadiah his Arab translation, And the mountains of the house shall be chapels, or houses of other worships, or, as some say, a wood.

C H A P. IV.

VERSE I. But in the last days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills, and people shall flow unto it.

BUT in the last days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the Lord, &c.] According to God's usual method, in the midst of judgment remembering mercy, here are to those grievous judgments before denounced, subjoined gracious promises of great mercy. In the foregoing words he threatneth an utter desolation to the mountain of the Lord; here he promiseth a gracious restauration, establishment and exaltation: in those the obstinate sinners are given to understand the severity of God's unavoidable judgments to them; in these penitent believers are given to expect his mercies, that never fail those, who are qualified to receive them. How far the mountain of the house in the foregoing words, and the mountain of the house of the Lord in these, agree or differ, in what is signified by that expression, will appear in what shall follow.

In the last days, &c.] That by the last days (though more generally may be signified any time to come after, yet) are here meant the days or time of Messiah or Christ, is so far agreed on both by ^a Some Jews of as good authority as any, (giving, I suppose, the common receiv'd opinion among them) and most Christians, that if any think otherwise, we have not reason to be swayed by their authority. But though both Jews and Christians so far agree to the signification of the words, yet in their applying them is there great difference; the Jews denying the promised Messiah to be yet come, the Christians believing, and acknowledging him to be long since come: the Jews looking for his kingdom as of this world; the Christians looking on it as spiritual; and so what the Jews say is not performed, understanding the words literally according to the outward sound, the Christians acknowledge to have been already made good, and according to the true meaning and import of the words in an higher and spiritual meaning, understood as they ought to be, performed. All the advantage that we may expect from the Jews, is a concession that such or such passages have respect to the promised Messiah, or to Christ and his times, how they are accomplish'd we must learn from the history of the New Testament and Christian Interpreters.

In Isaiah ii. 2, &c. we have much the like expressions as here, as if one of these prophets had borrowed words from the other. Whether one did make use of the others expressions; as of words already known to the people, or for what end, we need not further enquire; 'tis sufficient to know, that God's prophets did not steal his word one from another, as 'tis said of those prophets, Jer. xxiii. 30. but that being all full of power by the Spirit of the Lord, chap. iii. 8. they spake as they were moved by that Spirit, which representing to them sometimes like visions, moved them to utter and declare them in like words and expressions. So Isaiah and Micah here: so in Obadiah, ver. 4, &c. and Jer. xlix. 9. and 16. and in the one and other are they the words of the same living God, suggesting to them what to speak, and inspiring them to declare the same things in the same language.

The mountain of the house of the Lord, &c.] That is, according to the letter, the mountain on which the temple, call'd the house of the Lord, stood, viz. mount Sion, or that part called mount Moriah. Of this the Jews understanding it (the soberer of them) to omit some wilder and absurd expressions at least (though we may think they meant not to be understood literally, as if hill should be set on hill for exalting it) observe, that by saying, it shall be established on the top of the mountains, and exalted above the hills, is not to be understood that it should be increased in measure of height, but should be made illustrious by glorious privileges confer'd on it, tokens of God's peculiar grace and favour and presence in it, and the temple on it: in consideration and admiration of which, many people should with reverence and respect look towards it, and in great multitudes flow unto it; for the word נָבָרוּ Nabaru in the original seems to signify both these; first, to look, or set the eyes upon, and secondly, to flow like waters of a river continually flowing: in this latter sense it is, as by our, so ^b by most Interpreters rendred: but some learned ^c Jews prefer the former. The scope of both will be much one, viz. to shew what great respect, and regard, and affection people shall have to it, as to a place more eminent and desirable than all others, by reason of the glory that God shall confer on it, and the privileges that he shall bestow on, and in it. Those privileges here promised are so great, as ^d that the Jews, minding temporal concerns, do not acknowledge to have been under the second temple after their return from captivity made good, and therefore yet expect the coming of a Messiah, under whom they shall enjoy them. But Christians looking on them as concerning spiritual things, acknowledge them to be already made good by the coming of Christ, and setting up his spiritual kingdom by the preaching of the gospel, and the gathering of people to it. If we look on the place here called the mountain of the house of the Lord according to the sound of the letter,

ter,

^a R. D. Kimchi. Abarbanel. Tanchum.

^d R. Tanch.

^b R. Solo. Ab. Ezra. R. D. Kimchi, Abarb.

^c R. Saadiah, Abu Walid, R.

ter, even that was highly exalted and made illustrious, filled with his glory at his coming, the glory of the latter house standing on that (according to what is prophesied, Haggai xi. 9.) greater than of the former, made so, ^c not so much by the external pomp of it, as by his presence, and the miracles by him and his Apostles wrought, and the Holy Ghost, and many graces by him confer'd in it. And with what respect people may be said to have looked up to it and flowed unto it, appears by that early conversion of so many out of every nation under heaven, as are reckon'd up, Acts ii. 5, 9, 41, 46, 47. chap. iv. 4. This, if we should so far restrain the name of the mount of the house of the Lord, sufficiently proves this prophecy in great measure made good in respect to what was done in it, and about it. But that we may see the more evident fulfilling of the whole, it will be convenient to take those words in a larger acception, with many, if not most of Christian Interpreters, so as to denote the church or ^f kingdom of Christ, which from thence had its rise, and of which that mountain and house of the Lord, or temple was a type, so that it may well bear its name: which also, in the words of Christ, ^g Mat. v. 14. may be compared to a city that is set on an hill, more illustrious indeed than Jerusalem it self, or any the most eminently placed and exalted cities; yea kingdoms: and then in the large spreading of the doctrine of it, by so many converts and so many nations looking and flocking unto it, will the utmost that can be expected from the words be made good. What is said, shall be established, a learned ^h Jew observes to be an expression denoting continuance and perpetuity, that it shall continually remain on its settlement; and this well agrees to the church of Christ, of which he saith, Upon this rock will I build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it, Mat. xvi. 18. Some of great note from of old, by the mountain of the Lord's house, will have Christ himself to be here understood: but whether it be understood of Christ the head, or the church his body (that temple built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone, in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple of the Lord) ^k as they are one, so the scope and meaning will be one; although the former acception of the words is most followed.

2. And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob, and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem.

And many nations shall come and say, Come let us go up, &c.] In what multitudes and what zeal and affection, not only Jews but Gentiles also, whom God promised to Christ for his inheritance, Psal. ii. now made one willing people of God, Psal. cx. 3. the middle wall of partition, which before separated them, being broken down, should flock to the church of Christ, he here expresseth, in that they should mutually exhort one another, saying, Come, &c. The thing signified being done, ⁱ though those words should not be expressly by them spoken, is that which makes good the expression; although we cannot doubt, but oft among them such exhortations to stir up one another to embrace the doctrine of Christ, have been in words us'd, as well as we hear, ^m Andrew exhorting his brother Simon, and ⁿ Philip Nathaniel, and ^o the woman of Samaria those of that city to come unto Christ. Nor need we look on it as any sufficient ground of cavil for the Jews, that all these nations came not in person up to Jerusalem; and the mountain where the temple stood; that is not the thing required; but the coming in to Christ, and embracing the gospel, which began first to be preached at Sion, and from thence went forth into other nations, is (though done at the greatest distance from Jerusalem,) a going up to the mountain of the Lord, exalted above all other mountains, the church, which now extends it self wide on the face of the whole earth, where they may now as properly and acceptably worship God, as formerly in the court of the Gentiles, at the mount of the material house of the Lord. That hour is now come, John iv. 21, 23. The house of God is the church, 1 Tim. i. 15.

And he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths, &c.] The end which they are to propose in their coming into the church, is here shewed to be, not that they may obtain wealth, worldly honour and dignities, but that they may learn his will, that they may know how they ought to walk; and accordingly they must resolve to walk in his ways, which lead to salvation and true happiness, which he alone teacheth. They seek not temporal but spiritual good things; for his kingdom (as he declareth) is not of this world, John xviii. 36. The mistake of those things, which were to be expected from Christ at his coming, did at first keep the Jews from acknowledging him, and ever since hinders them from coming in to him. To learn of his ways and walk in his paths is not that felicity which can satisfy their expectations from him; but here we are taught, that that ought to be the chief thing desired in his church and kingdom, that we may know his ways, and be happy in practising and doing accordingly, otherwise to know them will be vain.

For the law shall go forth of Zion, &c.] These words, which by most are taken for the words of the prophet, (though ^p by Others for the words of those people speaking among themselves; the matter will be all one) declare the reason why they should go up to the mountain

^c See Grotius in Haggai.

^f See Paræus, Isaiah ii.

^g See Dr. Hammond.

^h Abarb.

ⁱ Eph. xi. 20.

^k See Tirinus on Isaiah xi. 2. and Paræus on Micah.

^l Ribera, Tar.

^m John i. 45.

ⁿ Ver. 46.

^o John iv. 29.

^p Abarbinel.

tain of the Lord that they might learn his ways, viz. because there only should be had; and thence proceed the true and clear knowledge of God and his ways. Of old the law went forth from mount Sinai, and then seated it self as it were in Sion, and was even the peculiar of the Jews, for then he shewed his word unto Jacob, his statutes and judgments unto Israel; but dealt not so with any other nation; and as for his judgments they were not known to them, Psalm cxlvii. 19, 20. But in the last days here spoken of, the times of Christ, it was to go forth of Zion, and from Jerusalem, there first to be divulged, but not confined to it, but to be preached all the world over, and communicated to all nations, according to our Saviour's commission to his disciples, that they should go and teach all nations, Mat. xxviii. 19. which being accordingly by them (who were to be witnesses to him both in Jerusalem and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth) executed, their sound went into all the earth, and their words to the ends of the world, Rom. x. 17, 18. And that law, that word, viz. the gospel, which by this means went forth of Zion, and Jerusalem, must all of all nations, that will learn of the ways of God, and be instructed rightly to walk in his paths, embrace and attend to, as the only doctrine that teacheth what ought to be known of him and his will, and how to please him, and so to obtain those good things promised to the obedient subjects of his kingdom.

3. ¶ And he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plow-shares, and their spears into pruning-hooks: nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

And he shall judge among many people and rebuke, &c.] Who is this that shall judge and rebuke? The Lord, ^a say Some, mentioned last in the foregoing words; his word, ^r say Others, there likewise mentioned: which, without doubt, shall be done by the mediation of one constituted by him, which shall divulge such truths as should be received from him: ^s Others, Sion, or the mountain or house of the Lord, that is, the church. Some Jews of great learning and authority among them expressly say, Messiah, though not expressed, is here meant (according ^t to the manner of scripture, leaving the person which is necessarily understood, unnamed) that he is the teacher, in the former words, the judge and rebuker in these spoken of; and so diverse Christians; and this way taken comprehends all the rest, God in the church judging by Christ, and he by his word: for the Father having set Christ as king upon his holy hill of Sion, Psalm ii. 6. hath committed to him all judgment, and the scepter by which he judgeth or rebuketh among people is his word, by which he instructeth them in his ways and governeth them; and by this he shall judge, distinguish, and teach them to discern between right and wrong, that they may walk in the ways, and observe the rules of justice and charity, whensoever, or wheresoever they be or live, and rebuke them that do otherwise than they ought, that they may amend their ways. The King Messiah (saith a ^u learned Jew) shall, as Lord over all nations; judge among them, so as that if any have quarrels or differences with others, they shall make addresses, or refer the matter to him, and he shall bid him that hath done wrong, to do right to his neighbour. He shall compose all quarrels and differences between them. He shall ^w judge and rebuke not by the sword or spear and violence, but by his word and Spirit. The effect of which his so judging and rebuking shall be, that being wrought on and disciplined by his word, they shall lay aside all animosities and dissensions, and desire to live in peace one with another, which is expressed by saying, they shall beat their swords into plow-shares, &c. i. e. they shall be so averse from war one with another, that they shall turn their instruments of war, (as having no more need of them, or resolving no more to use them) into such as are proper and necessary for times of peace, (an expression contrary to what is us'd, Joel iii. 10. for expressing times of war and tumult, Beat your plow-shares into swords, &c.) This being promised as the effect of Christ's reigning and the preaching of the gospel, which we call the word of God, the Jew, who acknowledges not Christ to be yet come, requires us to shew how this hath been made good under the gospel, that so we may prove this prophecy to have been made good, and so Christ to be come? For answer to which objection several things are said, as, first, ^x that these words are figuratively to be understood, not precisely according to the sound of the letter, not so much of outward peace in the world, as of inward peace of conscience, that peace which being justified by faith we have in God, Rom. v. 1. that which Christ promiseth to his, that they shall have in him though they have trouble in the world, John xvi. 33. and this peace have Christians always found, and shall find in Christ: he left it with his and will continue it to them.

VOL. I.

M

Secondly, that the gospel is a doctrine of peace, commending it to men and disposing their minds to it; so that whosoever as much as lieth in them live not peaceably with all men, Rom. xii. 18. live not according to the rules thereof, and animosities, wars, and dissensions argue a deficiency of faith in men, and that they ^y have not ascended up to the mountain of the house of the Lord, nor learned (as they ought) his ways to walk in them. But seeing the word of Christ instructeth to bear wrongs and not to revenge, &c. and disposeth to peace, and requireth it, it may be well said, that

^a R. Tanchum. ^r Abarb. See Christ à Castro. Kimchi. ^w Christoph. à Castro. Abarb. ^x Tar.

^s Ribera. ^y Paræus.

^t R. D. Kimchi, Aben Ezra.

^u R. D.

that by the preaching thereof men should be so dispos'd, as ² that they should beat their swords into plow-shares, &c. that they should not levy war any more.

Thirdly, Some ^a think this made good in that about the time of Christ's coming, there was peace in the known world under Augustus, in token of which the gates of the temple of Janus at Rome were shut, as after again under Nero, &c. but that peace seems to others not much to respect this peace, as not being an effect of preaching the gospel.

Fourthly, it may seem rather to have been fulfilled in what is said, that when great multitudes were converted to Christ by the preaching of the gospel, ^b they were all of one heart, and one soul, Acts iv. 32. and as the doctrine farther diffus'd it self, so did also peace and charity, among all those many and of different nations that received it, so far as that it was a note and character of Christians ^c acknowledged by the unbelieving heathens, who were forced to say of them with envy and admiration. See how they mutually love one another. If it continued not so, it argues (as we said) in men a falling as from their first love, so too much from the faith, and is a sign of those perilous times that the Apostle foretold should come in the last days, 2 Tim. iii 1, &c. They that faithfully adhere to Christ, and sincerely love him, will still be known to be his by their loving one another, and living peaceably as far as is possible with all men: and of such only ^d to some seems this prophecy to be spoken, and to have respect not generally to all men, but to the godly, and true believers, who have always endeavoured, and always will endeavour to make it good, and shew it fulfill'd in themselves. If any think not these answers sufficient, but expect a more literal fulfilling of the words by a general peace in the world, they must expect ^e what time will hereafter produce; and if they be the Jews, that this answer may suffice them, and that there is no force from the argument to prove that the Messiah is not yet come, will appear from what diverse of their own doctors say, that the time or kingdom ^f of Messiah lasteth on earth many thousands of years, (doubtless to the end of the world.) So that if ought spoken as concerning his time be not yet fulfill'd, it may be longer expected without denying him to be yet come. Again, as to them, their doctors also say, ^g that weapons of war shall not cease even in the days of Messiah, but only in the world to come: and so do some ^h Christians interpret these words, as that they are to have their full completion in the world to come after the second coming of Christ. But the prophecy may seem rather to respect what shall be done in this world than that to come, and we may well rest satisfy'd that it is already perform'd, even in respect ⁱ of that outward concord, which followed among many different nations on the preaching of the gospel.

4. But they shall sit every man under his vine, and under his fig-tree, and none shall make them afraid: for the mouth of the Lord of Hosts hath spoken it.

But they shall sit, &c.] A figurative expression of great security and tranquillity, ^k elsewhere likewise used, the effect and sign of peace; and so is to be understood, as the former promise of peace, whether of outward or inward tranquillity: which that they may without doubting expect, is added for confirmation, that the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it, who can and will make good whatsoever he saith without fail, however improbable at present it may seem.

5. For all people will walk every one in the name of his god, and we will walk in the name of the Lord our God for ever and ever.

For, &c.] This particle shews these words to have dependence on something before said, and to give a reason of what was said; and they seem spoken by the prophet in the name of those, who should go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob, and learn of his ways, and walk in his paths, and had promise of peace and security to them; rendring a reason why they might certainly expect a performance of those good things promised to them, viz. from their acknowledging him only for their God; adhering to him, and constantly walking in obedience to him, and affiance in him. For as all people will walk every one in the name of him, whom they take for their God, and use so to do; so they by a constant walking in the name of the Lord, will evidence, that they acknowledge him for their God, and so have reason to expect the good things which he hath promised, and will without fail perform to those that (as they resolv'd to do) constantly cleave to him, faithfully serve him, rely and depend on him, and his protection and favour. This exposition may be illustrated by what is said, Jer. ii. 11. Hath a nation chang'd their gods, which are yet no gods? But my people have chang'd their glory for that which doth not profit. It was formerly the perverseness of Israel according to the flesh, that they would forsake the name of God, and his worship, and follow vain idols; but here the true Israel of God, the faithful members of his church (out of what nation soever call'd) unanimously profess constantly and for ever to adhere to him alone, as constantly as other people did to their gods, and in so doing may justly promise to themselves the benefits of his providence and protection, out of which they will not, by their own fault and defection from him, put them-

² See Sanc. p. 35. Edit. Rigalt. out of Shabat.

^a Rib. See Christ. à Castro.

^d Ribera.

^c See Grot. de Verit.

^b See Acts ii. 42. and 44, &c.

^f Chelec. p. 361. Edit. Cochi.

^e See Tertullian's Apology,

^g See Raimund

^h See Diodati, &c. Isaiah ii. See Christ. à Castro, Paræus.

ⁱ See Jerom. to Sunia and Fretela.

^k 1 Kings iv. 25.

themselves. And according to this exposition the word וְאֵנָּחְנוּ Veanchnu, rendred by many, But we, will be rather rendred as it is by ours, And we, as it properly signifies. A¹ learned Man gives the meaning thus, No marvail that God should have so singular a care over us: for other nations, for performance of their matters, call every one on their gods; but we do and ever will walk in the name of our God the true God. ^m Another, No marvail that we shall be safe, or secure, seeing we have God for our protector, against whom neither our enemies, nor any other gods can prevail. The sense, I suppose, according to them, must thus be made up, As long as we adhere to the true God, no fear but we shall have his promises of security made good to us; seeing the nations that are against us trust in false gods, which can neither help them, nor annoy or hurt us, under the protection of our God, to whom we constantly cleave. Some of the ⁿ Jew doctors thus expound the words, Till that time all people shall walk in the name of their gods, for they shall not return to the right way, till that time when the King Messiah shall turn them into the right way: but we of the house of Israel will walk in the name of our God for ever; though the temple be destroyed, and we led captives out of our land, yet will we not change our God for another, but walk in his name always. ^o Another thus, For all people, which now walk every one in the name of his God, and we also the sons of Israel, all of us, both we and they, in that time will walk in the name of our God, &c. The connexion of inference, I suppose, in all these must still be the same, viz. that therefore they will faithfully expect that those blessings of peace and security, which God hath promis'd, shall be made good to them: which profession the Prophet makes in the name of those that are spoken of, that shall come in to God, as joining himself to them. ^p Some give the meaning thus, Although other people shall worship other gods, yet the faithful believers will constantly acknowledge and worship the one true God, and serve him alone. And by them the particle כִּי Ci, (which we render, for) is taken (as sometimes it is) for a word of asseveration only, as much as to say, certainly, or although. Vatablus in his notes in the edition in folio by Robert Stephens saith, that this expression of walking in the name of God, or the Lord, &c. is an Hebraism, (why it need so be called I know not) he saith that the meaning of it is, to worship or serve God. The like expression occurs, Zach. x. 12. they shall walk up and down in his name, and there in the lesser editions of those notes in 4to and 8vo he saith the meaning is freti auxilio Dei, trusting on the help of the Lord. And, indeed, both those doth it manifestly seem to imply, 1. To own God for their God, and to cleave only to him, and him duly and faithfully to worship, invoke, serve and obey, and to conform their lives to his will and precepts, which is called walking with God, Gen. v. 22. or before him, Gen. xvii. 1. as the contrary behaviour, walking contrary to him, Levit. xxvi. 21. 2ly, To have affiance in him to place their trust and confidence in him, and on him, whose name is a strong tower, Prov. xviii. 10. to rely professing that their help is in the name of the Lord, Psalms cxxiv. 8. These notions of walking in his name, however they may be considered as distinct, yet cannot be severed in the subject so as that they should be one without the other. For he that doth not rightly own God, and cleave to him alone, and faithfully serve him, cannot have any grounds to rely or trust on him for good and protection, but he that doth adhere to him, and duly serve him, may with confidence depend on him, and shall find from him assured protection. These meanings will easily be made out of the use of the single words, which they have besides their proper signification, as walking is used for living or framing the course of ones life, or conversation, behaving or deporting oneself, or continuing in any course of living, and as the name of the Lord is used either for his doctrine, worship, religion, will and commandment, or else his power, assistance, blessing and protection. They will live in constant fear of him, and obedience to him, and without fear of any others in confidence of his assistance and protection. To walk in the name of God will be to give up their selves to him, either as the object of their worship, or of their confidence: the expression here we look on as including both these, and that seems the full import of it.

6. In that day, saith the Lord, will I assemble her that halteth, and I will gather her that is driven out, and her that I have afflicted.

In that day, saith the Lord, &c.] In that day, at that time, (ver. 1. call'd the last days) when God in his judgment remembring mercy, shall graciously visit and redeem his people, he saith, that he will assemble, or gather, or, as Some will, ^a beal (for in ^r that signification also is the word used, and may here well enough be applied,) her that halteth, or is ^s lame, broken or maimed, i. e. such of Israel as are weak and helpless, inwardly and outwardly afflicted, so that they are not able to bear up and support themselves, and so justly likened to a poor, lame, maimed sheep, that is not able to go upright, or keep her way. This seems a more simple interpretation than that of ^t Some, who would have this epithet given to them as the posterity of balting Jacob, Gen. xxxii. 31. and, perhaps, than that of Others too, who would ^u have it to denote their wavering or unsteadfastness in their religion, and the service of God, in which regard they are elsewhere where said to halt, 1 Kings xviii. 21. though the word be there different in the original; (although such halting was cause of their other halting or fainting under afflictions thereby pulled on them.) The word here us'd, is elsewhere also us'd for fainting, or failing for want of strength to go upright, as Psalm xxxviii. 17. and Jer. xx. 10. And in Zephaniah iii. 19. the same epithet is us'd that is here, and in the same sense, and hath the same word subjoined to it, viz. her that is driven out, &c. I will gather her that is driven out from her own country, and from the more visible presence of God, and his protection, which they had in manifest manner formerly enjoyed, cast out by God, and from him, ^w whom being her husband she had like an adulteress forsaken and dispersed among the nations: And her that I have afflicted, sent evils and afflictions upon, and evil intreated, for the sins of my people (as the Chaldees adds.) These epithets here being in the feminine gender, it may be inquired what the person, or substantive understood, to which they are to be applied, is, whether the house of Jacob, or, the kingdom of Israel, (without distinguishing between that of Judah, and that of the ten tribes, as some ^x Jews do, applying the first to the one, and the second to the other) or ^y synagogue, or congregation, or ^z daughter of Sion, or Jerusalem, mentioned ver. 8. Or else whether the feminine gender here be put (as usually) for the neuter, and so may be rendred or understood, whatsoever halteth, &c. i. e. all that halt, and are driven out, all Israel, all or any of them who are in such condition. But (which will still be to the same sense and purpose) if we shall (as a ^a learned Jew directs) for the better perceiving the meaning of these words, compare them with what is said, Ezek. xxxiv. 16. I will seek that which was lost, and bring again that which was driven away, and will bind up that which was broken, and will strengthen that which was sick, &c. where the epithets are as here in the feminine gender, her that was lost, &c. and manifestly agree to sheep, or cattle, to which the weak of God's flock, that is, of the people of Israel are compar'd; and withal consider how it is the usual custom of the scriptures to call God's people, his sheep, and to compare such as are distressed, or go astray among them, to silly weak or lost sheep, as Jer. i. 6. My people hath been lost sheep, and ver. 17. Israel is a scattered sheep: considering, I say, these things, it may seem very agreeable to understand here likewise, sheep, or cattle, the weak or distressed of Israel (God's peculiar flock:) and then will this prophecy appear manifestly to be fulfilled in what Christ saith, Mat. xv. 24. that he was sent to the lost sheep of the house of Israel; and his commanding his apostles to go to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, and to preach to them, saying, the kingdom of heaven is at hand; and to heal the sick, to cleanse the lepers, to raise the dead, and to cast out devils, Mat. x. 6, &c.

¹ Grotius. ^m Sanct. ⁿ R. D. Kimchi MSS. and see Aben Ezra. ^o Abarb. So Montanus also distinguishes the words, and compares Galatians iv. 8. and 9. and Ephesians ii. 11, 12. ^p See Montanus and Sanctius. ^q R. Solomon Jarchi. ^r 2 Kings v. 3, 6. ^s R. Tanchum. Septuagint. Arab. Version. ^t Abarb. Ar. Montanus. ^u Hierom. Ribera, Menochius.

This his bringing them into his fold, the church, by his own preaching, and that of his apostles and disciples, was a more signal and illustrious assembling of her that halted, and gathering her that was driven out and afflicted, than any restoration of theirs, or bringing them home to their own country from among the nations where they were dispersed. That did but make way for this greater healing of their breaches, and better benefit to them; in description of which proceeding, he says, ver. 7.

7. And I will make her that halted a remnant, and her that was cast far off, a strong nation: and the Lord shall reign over them in mount Zion, from henceforth even for ever.

And I will make her that halted a remnant, &c.] God reserving them for better things, though they be distressed and dispersed, will not suffer them utterly to fail and be lost, or perish, but so preserve them, that there shall be a remnant that shall return and increase: yea tho' now they be cast far off, and seemingly in a lost condition; they shall become a strong nation. Which promise may appear manifestly made good in the flourishing and growing condition of the church, from beginnings low in the sight of men, growing to such a height and greatness, as it hath attained both for extent, multitude and power, by the calling into it, first, the lost sheep of Israel, that remnant according to the election of grace that should be saved, Rom. ix. 27. and xi. 3. in so great multitudes, as appears by the history of the Acts of the Apostles, and then those of the Gentiles also, which were before aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, and so every way far off; out of all parts of the world, in such abundance, as it is ever since to this day, as that in all regards they may be justly call'd, not only a remnant which should continue without fear of failing, but a strong nation, against which the gates of hell it self have never since been, or ever shall be able to prevail: (that we may not confine this appellation of a strong nation only to the apostles, who were for the effecting of this ^b endued with power from on high, and with a mouth and wisdom, which no adversaries were able to gain say or ^c resist (as ^d Some seem to do;) nor ^e yet to the strength and undaunted courage of the martyrs; but extend it, as due, to the whole church, in regard to their multitude above any nation, and their spiritual strength.)

This part of this prophecy, though it might seem (as Some will) partly fulfill'd in the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity, and ^f that form of a kingdom which under Zorobabel they were restored to, and under the second temple which was then built; yet do the following words plainly shew that it cannot be said to have been wholly then fulfill'd, and that what was then done in the restoring of Jews and and Israelites from their dispersion, was but to prepare and make way for greater things after to be done under Christ, for the making good of what is here promised; for it follows, and the Lord shall reign over them in Zion from henceforth even for ever. Now that this hath not been according to the letter, and in any temporal respect fulfill'd to the Jews, is manifest; all form of government being long since cut off from them, and Zion (that place properly so called) in the hands of their enemies; sometimes one nation, sometimes another having born rule there. But take Zion (as it is usual) for the church, and in that God hath from the first beginning reigned, and ever doth, and for ever shall reign over his in Christ in it. It is said of Christ, Luke i. 33. that he should reign over the house of Jacob (his church) for ever, and that of his kingdom there shall be no end. Wherefore ^a Some not absurdly make these words an argument for proof of the divinity of Christ, because he is here call'd by Jehovah the proper name of God. It will be all one to say, the Lord, i. e. God the Father in Christ shall reign, or Christ the Lord shall reign, or reigneth over his in Sion, he and his Father being one. What hath been intimated in these words will farther be confirm'd in the next verse.

^w Tarnovius. ^x Abarbincel. ^y Ribera, Menochius, Tarnovius. ^z Dutch Notes. ^a R. Tanchum.
^b Luke xxiv. 49. ^c Luke xxi. 15. ^d Rib. Sa. Menoc. ^e Hierom. Tar. ^f R. Tanch. Tirinus.

8. ¶ And thou, O tower of the flock, the strong hold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion, the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem.

And thou, O tower of the flock, the strong hold of the daughter of Zion, &c.] O tower of the flock. The word rendred flock, and so otherwise signifying, being in the Hebrew עֵדֶר Eder, there is some difference between expositors concerning the interpretation of it; Some looking on it as the proper name of a place. A place so call'd is mentioned, Gen. xxxv. 21. ^a beyond which it is said Israel, i. e. Jacob spread his tent, after he had journeyed from Bethlehem, (about a mile's distance from it) where they conceive the shepherds to have been abiding, when the ¹ angel brought to them the good tidings of Christ's birth, and so of that his kingdom, that first dominion here spoken of. Others taking Bethlehem it self to be meant by it, will have what ^b is here prophesied, to be the same that is repeated chap. v. 2. and there to be explained. But others think it the name of a tower at the gate in the walls of Jerusalem, ^c call'd the sheep gate, Neh. iii. 32. through which ^m Some conceive Christ to have rid into Jerusalem when he was received with Hosanna's. But by Others more probably is here thought to be designed the tower of David, ⁿ or rather all Jerusalem it self, which was as it were the tower and fold of God's flock, Israel, because (say Some ^o of the Jews) all Israel there convened, or were gathered together three times in the year, as a flock in their ^p fold: and the same to be likewise called in the words subjoined, the strong hold of the daughter of Zion. The word rendred strong-hold is עֹפֶל Ophel, which beside this signification, is also the proper name of a place at Jerusalem, or in the wall thereof, as Neh. iii. 26, &c. and 2 Chron. xxvii. 3. and xxxiii. 14. It hath also the signification of obscurity and darkness, attributed by Some to it, as עֶבֶל Aphal, another word of like sound signifies, and is accordingly here ^q interpreted, though to no perspicuous sense, which we shall not here therefore insist on, but take it, as by Ours well rendred, to denote whole Jerusalem, though perhaps properly signifying a part thereof. And that which then we are to take notice of is, that as the name Jerusalem it self and Zion are taken in the prophetical scriptures not only precisely for those places properly so called, but for the church of Christ, of which they were ^r types and figures, and which had its first visible rise and beginning in or from them, and thence spread itself; so that these, and other like denominations, and appellations given to them, sometimes may and ought to be applied to that and understood of it: and that the prophecies, seeming to be spoken to them, do contain more than can be restrained, or limited to them, and necessarily are to be expounded of it: and in such latitude must these appellations of tower of the flock, and strong hold of the daughter of Zion, be here taken. And, indeed, they more deservedly agree to that which is the fold of Christ's sheep, and that mountain established in the top of the mountains, and exalted above all hills, ver. 1. that temple so firmly built on a rock, that nothing can shake it, nor the gates of hell prevail against it, than they ever did to that Jerusalem of mens building, though in its time the glory of the whole earth, and after by man again destroyed. This it will be necessary to do, that we may see how the following promise hath been made good. To this it evidently hath, but not to that: and to this therefore 'twill appear more properly to belong, than to that. The promise made is, Unto thee shall it come, &c.

Unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion of, &c.] ^s Some of the Jews, by a nice observation of the accent in the word, rendred shall it come, so distinguish the words, as if this word had reference to the remnant of halting Israel, of her that was cast far off, mentioned in the foregoing verse; and so the words to sound, Unto thee shall it, that is, that remnant that halted, or of her that halted, &c. come, and to thee shall come the first dominion, which is the kingdom of the daughter of Jerusalem. But ^t Others of them will not have here any consideration to be had of that distinction, but rather the two verbs of the

Vol. I.

N

^a Munster. ^b Christ. à Castro. Tirinus. ^c Luke ii. 8. ^d Grot. ^e Jun. Tremel. Diodati. ^f Tirinus. ^g Ab. Ezra. ^h R. D. Kimchi, R. Tanchum. ⁱ Some think it so called from its poor condition. See Calvin. ^j Chald. Greek, Vulg. Lat. ^k Jun. Tremel. Diodati. ^l R. Sol. Jarchi. See Abarbinel. ^m Aben. Ezra, R. D. Kimchi, R. Tanchum.

the same signification to be referred to the same subject, to wit, the first dominion, only for confirmation sake, and to sound, Unto thee shall arrive and come the first dominion, &c. i. e. Unto thee shall certainly come the first dominion, " which shall be the kingdom to the daughter of Jerusalem, or, " such as was the kingdom of the daughter of Jerusalem. And this emphasis is well expressed in our translation by some little transposition of the words, and understanding the last as a repetition of the former, that this kingdom or dominion should come to the daughter of Jerusalem. But this makes no great difference or difficulty. It is to be enquired what is meant by the first dominion, and how that came to Jerusalem, or in whom what is promised was to be made good. By the first dominion may be understood such a dominion and kingdom as was at first to them under David and Solomon, (so the Jews mostly understand it;) or the chief dominion; or, thirdly, that the dominion should in that first place come to the daughter of Zion or Jerusalem. Now how in any of these senses or all of them, it came, or it was to come to them, and in whom it was seated, or in whom it was to be, or is, made good to them, is the main enquiry. In Zorobabel first (say some * Jews) and under the second temple it was made good to them. But sure Zorobabel never ruled in that greatness and splendour as to be compared to David and Solomon, or that his dominion might be equalled to theirs over Israel. And he that relates that opinion of theirs, confesseth that in these prophecies are greater things (as those in the first verse) spoken, then can be said in him to have been fulfilled, or under the second temple, though this and some other passages he thinks to belong to those times, but that the other are yet to be expected; and says withal, that by Some all these prophecies are looked on as belonging to the times of Messiah, the speedy coming of whom he and they earnestly desire. And that indeed seems the opinion of most of them, viz. that these are things not yet fulfilled, looking on them as carnal and temporal promises of an earthly glorious reign of Messiah on earth, wherein he shall rule over all Israel, all the twelve tribes, as David and Solomon did, having his seat at Jerusalem, which shall never more be destroyed, which state of his power they look on as signified by the first * dominion. And that this prophecy was antiently looked on as respecting the Messiah, is plainly declared by the Chaldee paraphrast (of great antiquity and authority among them) who makes him by the name it self of tower of the flock to be described, thus rendring it, And thou, O the Messiah, or Christ of Israel, which art hidden because of the sins of the congregation of Zion, unto thee shall the kingdom come, and the first (or antient) dominion shall be to the kingdom of the congregation of Jerusalem. So that on all hands, as well the most of the Jews as Chri- stians, will it be agreed that this prophecy was to be fulfilled in the Messiah, and respects his kingdom, and the times under him; but with a vast difference between them, the Jews looking on it (as we said) as a promise of an earthly kingdom in this world which is not yet come, nor any Messiah, in earthly pomp and splendour to assert it, yet revealed, for their sins as the Chaldee intimates retarded; but that such a one shall come, and make good what they expect agreeable to the literal sense of the words according to their interpretation: but Christians firmly believing the promised Christ to be already come, and to have made good all that by virtue of the prophecies was to be expected in that way that they are to be understood, to wit, in a spiritual way, and of better things than the things of this world. And to him do we say, and to the Sion and Jerusalem here meant, viz. the church, that the words may, as they ought to be, in their best and highest sense and full latitude be applied. To him, and in him, to Jerusalem did the first dominion, i. e. that of David and Solomon, come. So the angel of him, that the Lord God should give unto him the throne of his Father David, and that he should reign over the house of Jacob for ever, Luke i. 32, 33. over the whole house of Jacob, all the twelve tribes; and not only over them, but that his kingdom (he set by God on his holy hill of Sion) should take in the beatben also for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession, as David prophesieth of him, Psalm ii. 7, 8. So that under him is no difference between Judah and Israel, no nor between Jew and Gentile, all believers in him being as one all the Israel of God, Gal. iii. 28. Col. iii. 11. Ephes. ii. 12, &c. To him was given dominion and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him, and his dominion be an everlasting dominion, Dan. vii. 14. Unto all whom the sound of his kingdom went forth, Rom. x. 18. And so in the second notion the first, that is, the chief dominion came to the tower of the flock to Jerusalem, in and by him, a dominion and kingdom greater and larger than that of David or Solomon, or any other. David in Spirit therefore called him his Lord, Psalm cx. 1. Mat. xxii. 44. and of himself he witnesseth, and his witness is true, that he was greater than Solomon, Mat. xii. 42. and hath therefore deserved a name given him, King of Kings and Lord of Lords, Rev. xvii. 14. and xix. 16. Prince of the kings of the earth, chap. i. 5. None of their dominions were ever like his for extent or duration. David's and Solomon's were in all their greatness but types of his, their kingdom being even quite overthrown; and the * tabernacle of David, which was fallen down, was in him raised up to a greater height and more excellent manner than ever it was in under the Jews. Thirdly, to the tower of the flock, to Sion and Jerusalem, to the nation of the Jews, in and by our Lord Christ, came the

* Abarb. * Kimchi. * R. Tanchum. * Abarb. * Kimchi. * Acts xv. 16.

the first dominion, i. e. there it was first set up and divulged by the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom to the Jews and lost sheep of Israel, there he himself proclaimed it, and shewed his disciples, that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem, Luke xxiv. 47. and so St. Paul tells the Jews, that it was necessary the word of God should have been first spoken to them, Acts xiii. 46. And it may perhaps not be impertinent to observe, that he was even at first acknowledged for the expected King at Jerusalem by much people, when riding on an ass into the city (whether through that gate which was called the sheep gate, and properly denoted by מִגְדַּל אֶדֶר Migdal Eder, the tower of the flock, ^b as Some think, or not, it will not concern us nicely to enquire; by which fact of his is said to be fulfilled what was spoken by the prophet, Tell ye the daughter of Sion, Behold thy King cometh to thee meek, and sitting upon an ass, &c.) he was received by the acclamations of great multitudes, saying, Hosanna to the Son of David, &c. Mat. xxi. 4, 5, &c. or, as St. John hath it, Hosannab, Blessed is the king of Israel that cometh in the name of the Lord, John xii. 17. or as in St. Mark xi. 10. Blessed be the kingdom of our Father David that cometh in the name of the Lord, which cometh nearer to these words of the prophet here, and so Luke xix. 38. So far were they convinced by the great miracles that he shewed, such as were before never shewed, and his power not only over men (as when he drave out of the temple those that profaned it) but over seas, and winds, and devils themselves, that they could acknowledge him no less; and therefore, had he not declined it, would have by force made him a king in another manner than he would be so acknowledg'd, viz. an earthly king, John vi. 15. And so far it appears, this opinion of him prevailed among the people, that it was put in as an accusation against him by those that would not acknowledge him, that he said he was a king, Luke xxiii. 2. though it was not he himself but the people that said it; and in respect to that common vote did Pilate say, bringing him forth to the Jews, Behold your King, and put for the superscription of his accusation on the cross, The king of the Jews, (Mark xv. 26. and the other Evangelists) giving him indeed, though but in scoff, his just title; at which the chief priests offended, desired him to change it, and not to write, the king of the Jews, but that he said, I am the king of the Jews, John xix. 21. though he never said it, nor challenged to himself any such kingdom as they pretended contrary to Cesar's; but only such, as he himself told Pilate, that was not of this world, John xviii. 36. And that was it indeed which was his crime with them, because he challenged only such a kingdom. Had he come in the lower power and splendour of an earthly king, they would, the chief of them; have been as forward as the common people were to have acknowledged him; whose dominion, because he did not so, they rejected, and for the same reason do their posterity still deny and reject it, and so will not acknowledge those prophecies, as this and other like, concerning his kingdom to have been in our Lord Christ fulfilled, but still vainly look for another in whom they should be fulfilled to them, in a kingdom that is of this world, wherein keeping his seat in an earthly Jerusalem reedified, he should rule over Judah and Israel, by force of arms subjecting the rest of the world to them. But we having learned from himself the nature and manner of his kingdom wherein he ruleth, and which he, beginning at Jerusalem, so miraculously propagated through the whole world, not by carnal arms and force, but by the power of his Spirit and Word, do see and cannot but acknowledge the utmost of what by virtue of this prophecy could be expected, made good in and by him; and that it plainly belongeth to him. After all this, may be taken notice of yet another construction of the words, by Some ^c followed, yet tending still to the same purpose, Thou, O tower of Eder (or the flock) that is, Bethlehem, that art obscure, to thee shall come the daughter of Zion, and there shall come from thee the first dominion, that is, the kingdom to the daughter of Jerusalem, such a king or kingdom which shall bear rule in Jerusalem, i. e. in thee Messiah the king of Jerusalem shall be born: which, though some say, may be partly applied to ^d Zorobabel, yet no otherwise they say than as he was a type of Christ, who was to spring of the same race. In summ, these words, however they be interpreted, are a prophecy concerning Christ and his kingdom, which cannot be eluded: in him and by him, are they in the amplest manner, and in none other person ever yet were fulfilled: he it is that should come, and in vain do the Jews look for another to come and bring an earthly dominion and kingdom to them.

9. Now why dost thou cry out aloud? Is there no king in thee? Is thy counsellor perished? for pangs have taken thee, as a woman in travail.

Now why dost thou cry aloud, &c.] Having in the latter end of the former chapter denounced very heavy judgments against the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and in the foregoing verses of this made very gracious promises of great good things, now in what follows he so mingleth a repetition of both threats and promises, as to shew, that the one does not hinder nor cross the performance of the other, but that both shall in their time have their due accomplishment, successively one after the other, first, the judgments, then the promises, though by the evils which they should suffer, they might seem to have cause to despair of ever seeing good again. In the first place, to shew the certainty of the evils to come on them, them, he, to whom all things to come are present, and whatsoever he has determined is as already done, speaketh to them as if they were already befallen them, and expostulates with them concerning their behaviour under them, as favouring too much of infidelity and distrust.

Now why, &c.] What is the cause of all thy sad complaints, of those expressions of grief, like those of a woman's pangs in travail in child-birth? (which is in the scripture an usual expression of great sorrows.) Is it because the enemy hath deprived thee of thy king and counsellors, under whose conduct and government thou formerly enjoyed'st tranquillity and comfort? This seems the most literal and simple sense of the words, and in this way they may be compared with what is said, Hof. xiii. 10. as the words are by many rendred, and well bear, Where is thy king now that he may save thee, or thy judges, &c. The history of their being bereaved of king and counsellors, is read in chap. xxiv. and xxv. of the second book of Kings. And from the words so expounded, may be inferred and will be included that, which ^c Others give as the sense of them, Is there no King in thee? that is, Is not God, for all this that thou sufferest being deprived of thy earthly king, thy king and thy counsellor, so that thou mightest in him find strength and comfort to support thee, and from him counsel to direct thee, and by him be at last delivered from all these evils? But at present she, i. e. Jerusalem; or the church of the Jews, deprived of all visible comfort, hath no king of her own nation to protect her, no senate nor counsel to direct her, and God her heavenly King hath for the present withdrawn the wonted signs of his visible and gracious presence and protection from her; and therefore may she seem to have just cause of bemoaning her condition in most passionate signs of grief: and therefore by way of concession bespeaks he her in the next verse.

10. Be in pain, and labour to bring forth, O daughter of Zion, like a woman in travail: for now shalt thou go forth out of the city, and thou shalt dwell in the field, and thou shalt go even to Babylon: there shalt thou be delivered, there the Lord shall redeem thee from the hand of thine enemies.

Be in pain, and labour to bring forth, &c.] Or as some change the imperative into the future, by way of ascertaining her that these things she must for a while endure, Thou shalt be in pain, thou shalt be as in labour, or, as a woman in travail, in great anguish. For thou shalt certainly go forth out of the city; she shall be forced to lye abroad in the fields, without house or home of her own, and then led into captivity as far as to Babylon: so that indeed she hath visible occasions of great sorrow. But those sorrows, though great as of a woman crying out in labour and travail, yet shall be as hers also in another respect, viz. that they shall end in joy, John xvi. 21. for there even in Babylon, where she might fear utterly to perish, and that her name and posterity should utterly be cut off, doth the Lord promise to save her, and redeem her out of the hand of her enemies, that had done such despite unto her. So that here is joined to a certain denunciation of judgment, a certain promise of deliverance again from it: that they may not despair under what they shall suffer, but with patience and comfort expect the joyful issue in God's good time; which is also the scope of the following words. But before we proceed to them, we may take notice of a different exposition of the ninth verse, from what has been given, which we then omitted that we might not interrupt the sense; it is ^e of Jewish Interpreters of good authority among them, fastening another signification on the word rendred cry aloud, to wit, Why dost thou seek to make friends to thee, viz. the Egyptians and Assyrians, that they may save thee from those evils which God for thy rebelling against him hath threatned to send on thee, and why does the approach of the enemy affright thee? Dost thou not consider that he is thy King and counsellor, and that in turning to him would be thy only safety? But now forgetting him and seeking to others, and finding them not able to save thee, pangs have taken hold on thee, and thou art greatly distressed? and thou hast great cause so to be. Be in pain therefore, and bow down thy self as fainting under sorrow; for now, according as he hath determined, shalt thou go into captivity; but he then that is thy King still, when he hath so humbled thee, will in the midst of judgment remember mercy and deliver thee, &c. This according to that rendring would be the nearest meaning: but this Interpretation though antient is by few followed. But following our translation, (with which most others agree) there may also be given another exposition, something different from the former, Now why dost thou cry out, &c. Is there not a King in thee? Hast thou not counsellors and directors, to save thee? These she once asked, Give me a King and Princes, Hof. xiii. 10. and she had them, and in them trusted; but now doubting that they are not able to save her, and fearing the force of her enemies, she is in anguish as a woman in travail; and deservedly, for for all that they can do to help her, she shall be driven from her home, and led away captive to Babylon. Yet that she may not despair, she is assured of help from the Lord, who, when she hath been made to know, how vain all other helps are, will shew his power in delivering her, even then, when there seemed no hope to be left to her: and so will there be a plain connexion also between these and the following words. But the first exposition may seem the plainest.

11. ¶ Now also many nations are gathered against thee, that say, Let her be defiled, and let our eye look upon Zion.

^c Aben Ezra. R. D. Kimchi, Drusus.

^e Chaldee Paraphrast. R. Sol. Jarchi. and see Abarb.

Now also many nations, &c.] In these words and the following, he gives a farther representation to her of what evil shall befall her for a time, and then an assurance that she shall in the end overcome all that afflict her, and by the might of the Lord prevail over them, and bring them under. But though this be evidently the scope of this and the following verses, yet (for making it plain) are some difficulties to be cleared: as, first, who those many nations were that are spoken of: secondly, when they here spoken of had these promises of victory made good to them: and before some forms of expression in the words are to be explained for the better understanding the ground of these queries, and the solving of them. Those many nations that are gathered against Zion shall say, Let her be defiled. * The word signifieth sometimes, pollution, or, defilement by sin, so Jer. iii. 1. Shall not the land be greatly polluted? and Num. xxxv. 33. Ye shall not pollute the land wherein ye are, for blood it defileth the land. And this signification seem they to respect not only who render it as Ours; or they more manifestly ^h who render, She shall sin, or, be wicked; and they again who render shall be condemned, or, be guilty, or, be obnoxious: but they also who render, ⁱ Let her be stoned, viz. as a defiled adultress: and perhaps the Greek also, who looking not so much on the signification of the words, as their meaning, render it, Let us insult, (although they change both number and gender.) For what will be the intent of all these but as much as to say, Let her be looked on as defiled with sins and made loathsome to her God, and so being forsaken by him let her be dealt with as such, despitefully used and destroyed, that we may insult over her; we cannot now doubt of being able so to use her. But then defiled here will be referred not only to express her guilt, but rather the miserable condition they hope to bring her to, in polluting her with blood and slaughter, and contemptuously using her, without respect to her former holiness, and as much as in them lies abolishing all signs thereof. In much like sense seems the word defiling (though the word in the Hebrew be differing, yet of like signification) to be taken for contemptuous using or destroying, as it is said, Josiah defiled the high places, 2 Kings xxiii. 8. and Ezra vii. 24. God threatens, that their holy places should be defiled by the heathen, and Psalm lxxxix. 39. Thou hast profaned his crown, by casting it to the ground. In much like sense may the word here be understood. It has also another signification, of doing hypocritically, or, being an hypocrite; and Some ^k here chuse to take that. So the Tigurine version, she was an hypocrite. The intention must still be, Let her have the condemnation or punishment of, or, be used as a profane hypocrite (for the word is not of the pretertense but of the future, and is rather after this notion to sound She is, or let her be, then She was, or hath been.) In fine, it is an expression of their desires, that all manner of mischief and shame might befall her to her utter desolation (like theirs, Psalm cxxxvii. 7.) and their hopes to see it that they may rejoice at it and insult over her, as is farther expressed by the next words, and let our eye look upon Zion, let us see our desire upon her, as the word is likewise used, Psalm liv. 7.

VOL. I.

12. But they know not the thoughts of the Lord neither understand they his counsel: for he shall gather them as the sheaves into the floor.

13. Arise; and thresh, O daughter of Zion: for I will make thine horn iron, and I will make thy hoofs brass, and thou shalt beat in pieces many people: and I will consecrate their gain unto the Lord, and their substance unto the Lord of the whole earth.

But they know not the thoughts of the Lord, &c.] So they thought, and so they wished, as was afore said, that Zion should by their hands be laid perpetually desolate; but the Lord had other ends; to chastise his people by them, but then to return their malice on their own heads, and to bring that final destruction, which they intended to others, on themselves. Such difference betwixt God's counsel and thoughts, and the thoughts of the enemies of his people which he makes use of sometimes, for humbling and chastising his people, see likewise described, Isaiah x. 5. and following verses. He when he hath done his work by his enemies, shall again in mercy receive his people into favour, and destroy those to whom for a time he gave power over them; which destruction he expresseth by saying, he will gather them as sheaves into his floor, and bidding the daughter of Zion in his might, to arise and thresh them, trample on and triumph over them, for that he will enable her so to do; for that end he will make her horn iron, and her hoofs brass, that she may beat in pieces many people, that is, he will give her irresistible strength and power so to do. In these expressions, the like to which are elsewhere used, is manifestly alluded to the custom in those countries, both of old and still, to bring the corn, after it is gathered in, made up in sheaves, into a floor in an open place, and then laying the sheaves in order, to lead about oxen over them, drawing after them a pair of dented iron wheels, or, as in some places, planks stuck with sharp flints driven into them, that so the corn may be trodden or forced out by the hoofs of the oxen, and the straw by the wheels or flints broken in small parts like chaff; and then the corn purged from the straw is laid up for the use of men, and the straw for the ordinary food for their cattle. This custom is elsewhere alluded to in scripture, Deut. xxv. 4. This being observed, it easily will appear to be the meaning (as was said)

* R. Tanch. ^h Vatab. Calvin: See Chald. Paraph. R. Solomon Jarchi, Kimchi, Munst. ⁱ Vulg. Lat.
^k See Arias Montanus and Christ. à Castro, said) that their enemies should be gathered for destruction, and they should have power given them, to bring them under and utterly subdue them. Some learned men, because the expression is borrowed from the treading out of corn, which the oxen do not by the use of their horns, but their feet and hoofs, think it more convenient here, not to understand by born the horns on the head, (although by these strength is elsewhere rendred) but the horny substance on the feet of the cattle, to wit, their hoofs, which by saying he will make iron and brass, is meant (as also if the word born be properly understood) that he will give them unwearied strength and irresistible power in subjecting and prevailing over their enemies. The Chaldee therefore without mentioning born, or hoof, renders, I will make the people in thee strong as iron, and their remnant firm as brass. The subduing of their enemies seems farther expressed by the following words also, and I will consecrate their gain unto the Lord, &c. Of consecrating or devoting spoils and goods taken from enemies, read in Numb. xxxi. 28, 50, &c. and Josua vi. 17, 19. and to omit the custom of other nations in consecrating spoils taken from their enemies to their gods, Nebuchadnezzar may seem to have consecrated the vessels taken out of the Lord's house to his idols; for he carried off the vessels out of the house of the Lord to Babylon, and put them in his temple at Babylon, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 7. in the house of his gods, Ezra i. 7. That which we take notice of is, that the consecrating and devoting the goods and spoils of the enemies, imports and is a signal and memorial of their defeat and destruction. So that the words are a repetition, or continuation of God's promise of victory to his people over those many nations which should be gathered against them, and of his denunciation of destruction to those nations. But then who are by those nations meant, and how, or when this prophecy was, or was to be, made good on them, are the things to be inquired: and they may be joined together. First, as for those nations ^m Some insisting on the particle now, in what is said, Now also many nations are gathered against thee, as if it denoted something nigher at hand than the Chaldeans coming against Jerusalem and to be done before that, will have to be understood those that came up in the army of Senacherib King of Affyria in the fourteenth year of King Hezekiah, whose gathering together, and taunting insulting speeches, and threats against Jerusalem are described in Isaiah x. and xxxvi. and xxxvii. as also, 2 Kings xviii. 19. And that the prophecy of destruction to those nations with its expressions was made good on them, they prove from the history in the forecited places, which saith, that when they were gathered together to set upon Jerusalem, the angel of the Lord went forth, and slew in the night an hundred fourscore and five thousand in the camp of the Affyrians, and all the leaders and captains, so that Senacherib, after all his proud brags and insultations, returned home with shame unto his own land. To what may be objected, that here the daughter of Zion is bid to arise and thresh, &c. and that she should beat in pieces many people, but that she had no hand in this, but all was done by the angel of the Lord; it may be answered, that what was done by the Lord for her sake, though by other instruments, ⁿ is not unfitly attributed to her, and she is called to trample on and triumph over them, whom in her behalf, and for her sake, he had brought under her feet; and it may be well said that the Lord had by his utter destruction of them, ^o devoted them and their gain and substance to himself. So that we need not inquire after the truth of what ^p Some affirm (perhaps without any good grounds) that Hezekiah consecrated to the Lord many spoils taken from those Affyrians; though it may be taken notice of, what is said, 2 Chron. xxxii. 23. that upon the victory many brought gifts unto the Lord to Jerusalem. But Others think, that there ought not that stress here to be put on the particle now, as to the designing of the time, but ^q that the import thereof here is for assurance, that what is spoken shall as certainly come to pass in the time by God determined, as if it were already done, and therefore that to be said to be done now, which was a good while after without fail to be done. ^r Some Others therefore understand by the many nations, such as were in the army of the Chaldeans, by whom Jerusalem was taken and destroyed, and the Jews carried away to Babel. But what victory had the Jews ever over them? (the like objection to what was against the former opinion.) The answer must be, God gave them into the hands of the Medes and Persians to be threshed and destroyed, so that the Jews then in captivity under them, might justly insult and triumph over them, and what God did by others for their sakes be attributed to them. And the consecrating their gain to the Lord, ^s Some think to be made good by God's bringing it to pass, that the vessels by them taken out of the house of the Lord were sent back again. Others, looking on this as no satisfactory completion of this prophecy alone, ^t think it ought to be extended to the times of the Maccabees, and that in their history may be found that, whereby all that is here spoken may be well said to have been fulfilled. But with none of these are the Jews satisfy'd, and therefore look on this prophecy as not yet fulfilled, but to belong to the times of the restoring their captivity, the bringing down all their enemies, and reestablishing their kingdom under the Messiah, whom they yet expect, and ^u by those many nations understand, Some, of them which at that time shall come up with Gog and Magog, being, being, though they promise to themselves the destruction of Zion, " by God stirred up and gathered together, that they may be themselves destroyed: Others, the armies of the Romans, by whom Jerusalem was sacked, and the second temple destroyed, and also such * armies of the Christians and Saracens also, as afterwards invaded, or shall hereafter at that time of restoring the captivity, be gathered by God to that place, and there be destroyed, or, (as before) the armies of Gog and Magog; and according to their several fancies expect the fulfilling of all these things here said: whose dreams as Christians do deservedly reject, so in this do they (at least divers of them) join issue with them, that whatever else may be said otherwise to have been done towards the fulfilling of the things here said, as to the destruction of the Assyrians, or the Chaldeans, or those of diverse nations in the times of the Maccabees, yet the full completion of them to belong to the times of Messiah or Christ, (not yet to be expected, as the Jews would have it, but already come) under whom they have been and are manifestly fulfilled. But then things are spiritually (as before was observed) not carnally to be understood, and the daughter of Zion not to be the earthly Jerusalem, but the church of Christ, which indeed (as was above said) from Jerusalem took its first rise, and thence spread it self over the face of the earth, and brought under many nations and much people. With what rage and malice both at the beginning and in succeeding times they gathered themselves against her, is manifest: yet were they by the power of Christ, the sword of his Spirit, and sceptre of his Word, and by those whom he employ'd furnishing them with weapons, not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds, and to the casting down imaginations, and every high thing that should exalt it self against the knowledge of God, and to the bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ, gathered into his floor, brought down, and put under his feet, willingly subjecting themselves in obedience to him, and consecrating and dedicating themselves and their substance to his honour. Did we look on things after the flesh, or according to worldly concerns, it might not be hard to shew that the Christians (under godly emperors) have had so great victories over the insulting enemies of the church, as might according to the letter of this prophecy be justlier said to have been a fulfilling thereof than any things by those of the Jewish church: but Christ having declared his kingdom not to be of this world, we are not so much to judge of his conquests by what hath been wrought by the arm of flesh, though by his power and in his name, as by those wrought by the sword of the Spirit, not against flesh and blood; but against principalities and powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places, Eph. vi. 12, against the rebellious minds of obstinate men to the subjecting all to himself. It is observed by Some concerning this prophecy, that it is to be in fulfilling to the second coming of Christ, (for he must reign till he hath put all things under his feet, 1 Cor. xv. 25.) In that day certainly will it appear how the things here spoken (as every other word of God) have without the failing of one tittle, been fully made good, though perhaps till then, men will not well agree concerning the manner how, or time when.

¹ Diodat. Ludovicus de Dieu. ^m Christ. à Castro, Menoch. Tirinus. ⁿ Diodat. ^o According to the notion of the word Hecheramti. ^p Tirinus out of Josephus, but in Josephus no such thing is expressed. ^q R. D. Kimchi. ^r Rib. Grot. ^s Grot. ^t Sanctius. ^u Ab. Ezra.

CHAP. V.

VERSE I. Now gather thy self in troops, O daughter of troops: he hath laid siege against us: they shall smite the judge of Israel with a rod upon the cheek.

NOW gather thy self in troops, O daughter of troops, &c.] It will not be easy in few words to give account of the different expositions of these words, which are found in Interpreters, or to pass judgment between them. They differ in giving the signification of some of them; and then in applying them. The grounds of which that we may see, it is to be observed that the root גדר Gadad (from whence is the word תתגודדי Tithgodedi, rendered by Ours, Gather thy self in troops, and the word גודר Gedud rendered troops) hath two significations usually attributed to it, one of gathering together in troops, the other of cutting, and hence have Interpreters, according to their different judgments, taken occasion of different interpretations. As for the first word ^a Some taking it from the first of those significations, render it, Now shalt thou gather thy self together, or, Gather thy self together in troops, or, Troop together; Others, ^b Thou shalt be compassed and beset with troops, or, invaded by troops, or, ^c Now shalt thou go forth in troops, or, Thou ^d shalt make an impression; or, give an onset, and the like. To this seems the Greek also to have respect, rendering it, Now shall be shut or blocked up the daughter with a shutting or blocking up, that is, so shut or blocked up with troops surrounding her, ^e that she shall not be able to go forth. Although if we should take their meaning from the Arab printed version, which mostly follows the Greek, and here renders, Now shall be hedged up the daughter of Ephraim with an hedge, one might think, that by mistake of a letter, they deriv'd it from גדר Gadad, which signifies to hedge, or, wall about, instead of גדר Gadad, to gather in troops, putting גר for גד, which differ in the Hebrew very little. Others preferring the latter signification, render, ^f Some, Thou shalt be destroyed, or, spoiled; ^g Others, Thou shalt be cut off; ^h Others, Thou shalt be wounded. The same word, in the form here used; is also elsewhere used for cutting ones self in in token of sorrow or mourning, Deut. xiv. 1. and may perhaps in that sense be applicable, Now cut thy self, &c.

* R. D. Kimchi. x Abarbinel. y Calvin. a Pagninus, Raschi, Jun. Tremel. &c. b Michlal Yophe, Munster. Drusus, and see Kimchi. c Interlineary. d Castalio. e Calvin. f Vulg. Lat. g Grot. h R. Tanch. Abarb.

Accordingly do they differ in rendering the noun, Some rendering, O ¹ daughter of troop, or troops; (or, Thou that hast an army, or armies.) Others, ² Of the spoiler, or robber, Others, Daughter of the cutter off.

More difference yet is there in the application of the words as to the person spoken to. To Jerusalem, say Some, are they directed, and all of them concern her, so as to shew what shall befall her and the reason why, to this sense, O Jerusalem, daughter of the spoiler, or robber, (which art full of spoilers and robbers, or which hast great store of military troops,) now shalt thou be spoiled, thou which didst lay siege against, or in hostile manner deal with us, ³ the prophets and messengers of God, and in which they shall smite the judge of Israel, Christ himself, with a rod on the cheek. This sense is harsh in respect both to the construction and to the coherence. For if there be any coherence between these and the following words (as there manifestly is) these things must be fulfilled before Christ was to be born in Bethlehem, and so he that was after to be born could not be he that is here said should be smitten. (Which exception lies against all Others ⁴ who would have by this judge of Israel to be understood the Messiah, or Christ, however differently they expound the former words.)

It is a clearer sense which is given by Others, who taking Jerusalem for the person spoken to, in the former part of the verse, take their enemies as spoken of in the latter part; so making it a repetition or farther declaration of those evils above threatened to Jerusalem, which she should certainly expect to undergo; and telling by whom, and in what manner, or how far they should be inflicted on her: and that, whether the former words be interpreted in that signification already mention'd, or in the Others also above spoken of. If in the same signification that those Expositors already mentioned take them, then thus, Now, ere long, thou shalt be spoiled, ⁵ O daughter of the spoiler, or robber, &c. for he, that is, the enemy, bath laid siege, i. e. shall certainly do it, (speaking of the thing ⁶ as already done, in token of the undoubted certainty of it in its time by God determined:) and shall so far prevail, and bring them under, as by way of contempt to smite the judge (or judges, taking here the singular in the sense of the plural,) i. e. the chief men, the governors and rulers of the people of Israel, with a rod upon the cheek, as being in their power to abuse them and deal with them as they pleased.

Of the same concern as to the Jews do Others also make this passage, who yet render the first words in the other of the two significations mentioned, viz. of being gathered in troops, whether thus, Now thou shalt be in- vaded or compassed by hostile troops, O Jerusalem, therefore ⁷ deservedly called daughter of troops, i. e. the assembly or rendezvous, and meeting place of troops that come against thee: be (the enemy) bath laid siege against us, (of Jerusalem) i. e. shall certainly, in that time determined, besiege, &c. Or, ⁸ Now shalt thou be gathered in troops, or, all thy troops be gathered, and shut up together in thee, not able to go forth, O daughter of troops, (which hadst, and wert wont to send forth many troops:) for he, (that is, the enemy) bath laid siege, &c. Or, imperatively, (as the future indifferently may be rendered either as future or imperative) Now, (things being thus ordered by God) gather thy self in troops, thou daughter of troops, ⁹ that wert wont to have and send out many troops to spoil others, now assemble thy troops, and gather all thy forces together, to resist the enemy, and save thy self if thou canst: all shall be in vain; for he, the enemy, bath laid siege, shall as certainly lay siege as if it were already done, against us (the prophet speaking in the person of the people, or making himself one of them;) and shall so far prevail, as to smite even the judge of Israel, with a rod on the cheek, i. e. most contumeliously use the chief among us, abuse and vilify them; which is the import of that expression.

According to these expositions, Jerusalem, or the people of the Jews, is here bid to expect those evils before intimated, chap. v. 9, 10, 11. and told that they shall certainly and inevitably befall them before they shall enjoy those good things, and obtain that redemption and victory promised there, ver. 10, 12. God hath threatened the one in the first place, and promised the other after to succeed, and in making good both in their due time, will he shew his veracity. This verse concerns the evils that they shall suffer, and then in the following is farther assurance given of their redemption, and Redeemer, or, Saviour. Against these latter interpretations, there is no apparent objection from either the signification, or construction, or coherence of the words, with either what preceeds or follows; yet do Others prefer a different way of expounding them, by understanding, the person spoken to of the enemy, not of Jerusalem it self. But great variety is there between them in assigning who is the enemy then meant. It will not be needful to insist on that exposition, though of a very ¹⁰ learned man, which would have these words directed against Gentilism, or Heathenism in general, all those false religions which set themselves against Christ and Christianity, and contumeliously used and derided them, and persecuted them, to tell them, that though they abounded in troops and number, yet they should be brought to nought by the preaching of the Apostles, and the prevailing power of the gospel: for this rather shews how the words may be applied,

¹ R. Tanchum. ² Vulg. Lat. ³ Grot. ⁴ See in Christ. à Castro. ⁵ Aben Ezra. Capell. Crit. Sac. p. 246. ⁶ Pelicanus. ⁷ Tanch. ⁸ Kimchi. ⁹ Calvin. ¹⁰ Diodat. Dutch Notes. Arias Montanus.

plied, than gives the prime literal meaning of them, which we seek for. But who is then the enemy spoken to and of? Rome, or the Romans say ^a Some, and their forces under Titus which sacked Jerusalem, to this sense, Now thou shalt assemble thy troops, O daughter of troops; (Rome, that hast so many troops) that thou mayest lay siege against Jerusalem, and thy men shall smite, &c. Or, as Others, ^x Now shalt thou be spoiled or cut off, or compassed with troops, O Jerusalem, daughter of troops: for, thine enemy, viz. the Romans, shall lay siege and prevail against thee; or as a ^y learned Jew, Now cut and make bald thy self (viz. in token of sorrow, as Deut. xiv. 1.) for the many evils that thou shalt suffer, O daughter of troops, thou which sentest so often many troops to distress Jerusalem and lay her waste (viz. the Romans and other nations with them;) for God at length in his appointed time, shall bring thee there to take vengeance of thee, in the place where thou didst that mischief. ^z Which vengeance, he saith, God will bring on them for two causes mentioned. First, because they laid siege against Jerusalem, when they took it, and destroyed the second temple. Secondly, because they used contumeliously the chief of the Jews, whom they carried captives, as is shewed by the expression of smiting with a rod upon the cheek. These, though otherwise differing, yet in this agreeing, that they understand by the enemy spoken of, the Romans who took Jerusalem and destroyed the temple, are all liable to a common objection, viz. that the things here spoken according to the series of the words, were to be fulfilled before that ruler in Israel, prophesied of in the words next following, to wit, the Messiah, was to come forth out of Bethlehem, that is, to be born there; whereas the siege and destruction of Jerusalem and the temple were after Christ's time. To the same exception, lies open also the opinion of other ² Jews, who by the enemy here pointed out understand the numerous armies of Gog and Magog, which they will have to be yet to come against Jerusalem long since destroyed. But if they say this objection toucheth them not, because they hold the Messiah is not yet come, we must answer, that we are assured by the fulfilling as of all other prophecies concerning him, so of that immediately following, (as in the consideration of it will appear) that he is already come, and that Jesus our Christ was he, and therefore their obstinate denying of that truth, doth not justify their error or mistake in this interpretation, which perhaps they therefore take up, that they may seem to have some colour for that grand error and their obstinacy in it, by saying such things ought to be done before the coming of the Messiah, which are not yet done, and that therefore they cannot believe him to be yet come. As for what ^b Some answer here, that the particle now, seems to import a time nearer to the prophet's uttering this prophecy, than the coming of the Roman armies was, it is perhaps not much to be insisted on, because that ^c may be interpreted of its due time, or time determined for it by God, to whom even what was farthest off, was then as present. ^d But Others therefore more probably by the enemies here meant understand the Assyrians under Senacherib (whom also they understand by those many nations mentioned, chap. iv. 11.) and that these words are a threatening of cutting off, or destruction to them. What is elsewhere threatened to them, see Isaiah x. 12, &c. and xxxiii. 1. and what destruction befel them, chap. xxxvii. 36, &c. as likewise, 2 Kings xix. 35, &c. Against this exposition, appears nothing in the words, or context, which may be objected, if Senacherib's sending a great army to Jerusalem by Rabshakeh, and Rabshakeh's insolent carriage towards the king and his messengers, and reproachful language, and Senacherib's own blasphemous letter to the same purpose, may seem sufficient to make good what is said, he hath laid siege against us, they shall smite the judge of Israel with a rod on the cheek; and ^e then may the former words be expounded either, ^f Now in the mean while shalt thou gather together thy troops, O Assyria, daughter of troops, and bring thy army which shall lay siege, &c. or in the other signification, Now shalt thou be cut off, or destroyed, O daughter of troops, or, the spoiler ^g that useth to send out thy troops to spoil others. Yet do Others prefer to apply what is said, to the Babylonians or Chaldeans, who with numerous armies did both besiege and take Jerusalem, and despitefully used the King Zedekiah, and slew his sons, and then put out his eyes, and bound him with fetters of brass, and carried him to Babylon, and slew also their priests and nobles, 2 Kings xxv. 1. and that whether the former words be expounded according to the one of the forementioned significations, or the other, either to this sense, Now gather thy self in troops, or, prepare thy army, O daughter of troops, which may lay siege against us and smite, &c. for so far shalt thou prevail: but then those judgments denounced, chap. iv. 12. shall befall thee, and Israel shall have a Redeemer, as follows here in the next verse: Or, Now in the time appointed shalt thou be spoiled, O daughter of troops, or owner of that army which laid, (or shall lay) siege against us, and which smote (or, shall smite, &c.) or, Now shalt thou be cut off, or, spoiled, O Babylon, daughter of the cutter off, or, spoiler, (viz. ^h Nimrod the greater spoiler) who hath laid siege to us and smitten, &c. or, ⁱ Now shalt thou cut and tear thy self for sorrow, O daughter, &c. But among all that go this way (against which lies no apparent exception) none more perspicuously makes out the sense, together with the coherence and construction, than a learned ^k Jew, thus. Having described what should befall them, that they should be led captive to Babylon, and how the

Vol. I.

P

^a Vatablus. ^x Lyra. Christ. à Castro. ^y Abarb. ^z Abarb. ² R. D. Kimchi, Michlal Yophe.
^b Ribera, Christ. à Castro. ^c See Kimchi and Abarb. ^d Christ. à Castro. Menochius, Tirinus. ^e Christ. à Castro.
^f Tirinus. ^g Christ. à Castro. ^h Grot. ⁱ Pelicanus. ^k R. Tanchum.

the Chaldeans should prevail over them, and then promised that in a short time they should be released, he declares that it should be by cutting off the empire of the Chaldeans, as it came to pass; and therefore, as addressing his speech to them, saith, *Thou shalt be wounded, or Be thou also wounded, or cut with the sword of the enemy, that is, taste of that which thou hast made us taste, O daughter of troops, i. e. owner of that army which hath laid, i. e. shall surely lay (for it was not yet done, according to the usual language of the prophets, speaking of what shall certainly be as already done) siege against us, and which shall smite the judge of Israel with a rod on the cheek, meaning their contumelious usage of their King Zedekiah, i. e. this shall befall thee, because thou hast done these things in besieging us, and despitefully using our prince and king. And then having intimated what contempt shall befall the house of David, he subjoins (according to God's usual method) a declaration of what dignity they shall again attain to, in the time of their restoration, saying, But thou Bethlehem, &c. So will the coherence of the words one with another be manifest, and that there is in these words a prophecy of the first (i. e. the Babylonish) captivity, and the first restoration, i. e. that from that captivity, and not meant as some other, as we have seen, would have it, of the destruction of Jerusalem, and second captivity, as they call it, by the Romans, from which they are not restored. And what he subjoins, And thou Bethlehem Ephratah, &c. will be a promise to the house of David of the return of the kingdom to them, to be expected in the time of the Messiah. And so according to this way of exposition, is a plain way made, to the consideration of those words, which concern the kingdom of the Messiah, whom they expect, and we say is already come, viz.*

2. But thou Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me, that is to be ruler in Israel: whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting.

But thou Bethlehem Ephratah, &c.] These words being a prophecy concerning him, in and by whom God would make good to his people that redemption, and those good things promis'd to succeed the evils, which they should first suffer, describe him by the place of his nativity, and condition of his person; as will appear by considering them in order. Thou Bethlehem Ephratah, i. e. Bethlehem of Judea, Mat. ii. 1. or which was in the land of Judah, as there, ver. 6. where these words are cited, it is called, and so also Bethlehem Judah, Judges xvii. 7. xix. 1. and Ruth i. 1, &c. in which book, chap. iv. 11. is the name of Ephratah also mentioned, both being names of the same town, as appears from Gen. xxxv. 19. and both here joined distinguish it from another town called by one of them, to wit, Bethlehem, which was in the lot of the tribe of Zabulon, mentioned, Joshua xix. 15. In this town here spoken of did David's father live, and he was born, 1 Sam. xvii. 12. Jobn vii. 42. Though thou be little among the thousands of Judah. These words cited, Mat. ii. 6. are there read, Thou art not the least among the princes of Judah, which sense seems almost contrary to what is here read, according to the ordinary translations (art little.) To solve the seeming contrariety, Expositors have sought out several ways, amongst which are these: First, that which our translation gives, by supplying the word though as understood. Secondly, that of Others reading the words interrogatively, Art thou little? and that of Others, It is little that thou be, &c. By all which the sense will be brought to be near the same in both places. But the plainest way of reconciling them seems that which a learned Jew, who probably never knew what is written in St. Matthew, and would certainly never have strained to say what should make for justifying the gospel, or advantage of Christians, gives us, which is this, that the word צעיר Isair here used in the Hebrew, and by Interpreters usually rendred little, hath two significations, viz. little, and great, or of great note and esteem, and that in this latter sense it is here to be understood in this place. That the word hath both these significations (as many other words have both in the Hebrew and other languages, and in contrary senses) he proves ^a by instancing in other places, in which though frequently it signifies little, it is to be rendred, great, or chief, or prince. (The same is affirmed ^o by Others of good authority and among the chief masters of their language.) His words are to this purpose; Whereas others take this as spoken by way of diminution to that city or family of that tribe, as if it were not worthy to have the kingdom over Israel peculiar to it, unless God had peculiarly chosen David because he was acceptable in his sight, from whom their grandfather they inherited that right, it is a better way to understand the word, צעיר Isair, in the contrary notion, of chief, or ruler, that the meaning may be, thou shalt be chief, prince, or ruler among the thousands of Judah. So that if that rendring of their ancients in reporting this prophecy in St. Matthew, viz. not least (which is all one with great in renown) had been shewed him, he must have acknowledged it to be the true meaning of the word in the Prophet. And with great emphasis seems that word here put which signifies at once both little and great, or, of great renown, to shew that as some other things which are little in bulk or quantity, are yet in other regards of more esteem and value above others in sight greater, so it was with Bethlehem, though perhaps otherwise little in number, bigness, or account, among the thousands of Judah, ¹ De Dieu. ^m R. Tanch. ⁿ See Porta Mosis, Chaldee Paraph. and Zach. xiii. 7. in Syriack and Greek, and Arab. ^o Abu Walid. Gloss. Heb. Arab.

Judah, or, as in St. Matthew, among the princes of Judah, which in sense is all one, alluding to the custom of the Israelites ^p of dividing their tribes into thousands (as among us the shires are divided into hundreds) over every one of which thousands was a prince or chief: so that to say among the thousands, or princes (viz. of those thousands) is all one. The same word which is here used and signifieth a thousand, Judges vi. 15. is rendred family, and so here is by Some ^q Jews expounded families, by ^r Others, cities. To say then, thousands, or princes of thousands, or families, or cities, will be in this regard as to the meaning all one. And though in any regard Bethlehem among these might according to the one signification of the word be accounted little, yet indeed the other signification did deservedly agree to that place, of being not least, yea great and illustrious, even chief and prince among them. That by which it was so ennobled follows, because, out of thee shall he come forth unto me, that is to be ruler in Israel, i. e. that it was to be the birth place of the great ruler by God promised to Israel to save them.

Out of thee shall he come forth. That is, in thee shall be born, for so this word that signifieth to come forth is ^s elsewhere used, as Gen. xxv. 25. and Isaiab xi. 1. And that in this sense it is here to be taken appears by that answer, which by the chief priests and scribes of old was given to Herod the King, enquiring of them where Christ should be born, Mat. ii. 5, 6. they readily answer to him, that he was to be born in Bethlehem of Judea, because it was so spoken in the prophet here, that out of Bethlehem should come a governor that should rule God's people Israel; and likewise by what we read, John vii. 41, 42. where some by mistake thinking that Christ, because he had been much conversant in Galilee, was born there, thought that a sufficient proof to deny him to be the promised Messiah, because (as from this prophecy I suppose they had their only ground which they took for undoubted) that he was to come of the seed of David, and out of the town of Bethlehem where David was. None could they then acknowledge for the Christ, who was not born in that town. And to their interpretation must we stick that we may not give advantage to the latter Jews, who think it sufficient for the fulfilling what is here said, that he was to have his extract from Bethlehem, ^t from the lineage of David who was there born, though himself was born elsewhere; probably to avoid that argument of the Christians of old, who thought it a proof, (as appears out of ^u Tertullian) that Christ was already come, because Bethlehem was now brought to ruin and not inhabited by the Jews, that there might be any probability of any other Christ than him whom we acknowledge to be born there. In our Lord Christ did both these concur, that he was both a ^v branch out of the root of Jesse the Bethlemite, ^x of the house and lineage of David, and also (God so directing it by his providence) born in Bethlehem. So that in him all that can be by this expression in this prophecy understood or expected, was fully completed: as also what is farther expressed, that he, that was to come forth out of Bethlehem, to have his rise thence, and that for the place of his nativity, was to be ruler in Israel. Who he is, that is spoken of as so, is inquired. An ancient ^y Commentator mentioning some, who would have it Hezekiah, faith of them, that they do more Judaize than the Jews themselves, for so little do the things here spoken of agree to Hezekiah who was not born in Bethlehem, (if he were not born before this promise of one to be born, as probably he was) that the Jews themselves would not go to attribute them to him. And the same censure will in great part take hold on those who attribute them to Zorobabel, who neither was born there, and in whom such other things as are here spoken ^z cannot by any means be said to have been made good. For though by what is delivered by some ^a ancient Fathers of the Christian church, we may think that heretofore some Jews did avow the person here spoken of to be Zorobabel: yet, those ^b who better considered the matter, and have given us their mind in writing, say no such thing, but unanimously (none we suppose contradicting) affirm, that person to be the Messiah, or King Messiah: in which so far they agree with us Christians, but with great difference otherwise, they affirming the words to note such a Messiah, as is not yet come, and labouring from these and the following words to prove it, we, that he that is here promised, the true Messiah, is already come, and that these words prove that he is so, and that it appears from them, that our Lord Jesus Christ is he that should and did come forth of Bethlehem, and be ruler in Israel. As this is here foretold of our Saviour Christ, so when he was now to be born into the world, the angel bringing to his mother the good tidings thereof, faith, Luke i. 32, 33. The Lord shall give unto him the throne of his Father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end; and this was made good in him. But here the ^c Jews object, Jesus ruled not in, or over Israel, but they ruled over him, and put him to death, and as yet neither do believe in him or serve him. The answer to which is easy: they did indeed and had power over him so far, but not to hinder or impair his dominion over them here promised: but more to discover the true nature of it, which they were, and continue mistaken in, and

^p See Hammond on Mat. ii. and see ¹ Sam. x. 19. Exod. xviii. 25. ^q Rashi, Abarb. ^r R. D. Kimchi.
^s Grotius. ^t R. D. Kimchi, Abarb. ^u His book against the Jews, chap. 13. edit. Rigalt. ^v Isaiab xi. 1.
^x Luke ii. 4. ^y Lyra. ^z For so R. Tanchum confesseth on ver. 3. ^a Theophylact on the second of Matthew. ^b Chaldee Paraphrast, R. Solomon, R. D. Kimchi, Abarb. R. Tanchum, Nitzachon. ^c R. D. Kimchi.
Nitzachon.

and to further the manifestation and propagation of it, not only over Israel in the narrow sense wherein they appropriate it themselves alone, who are Israel according to the flesh only, but over the whole Israel of God, all those that truly know him and believe in him, and are his chosen people. Herein was the mistake of their ancestors, and is still theirs, that they expected him to be a carnal ruler, whereas his dominion was to be spiritual, as he declares that his kingdom was not of this world, which duly observed is an answer to all their cavils. Had his kingdom been of this world, his servants would have fought that he should not have been delivered to the Jews, John xviii. 36. and whose service could he not in that kind, have commanded, whose ^d command even the winds and waves, yea the devils themselves obeyed? who by his word cured the blind, deaf, dumb, and lame, and every way impotent, raised men from death to life, and could have obtained from his Father more than twelve legions of angels for his guard, Mat. xxvi. 53. Or could he not by the bare breath of his mouth, have made all his enemies fall to the ground, as he did some of them that came to take him? John xviii. 6. But then how should the scriptures have been fulfilled, Mat. xxvi. 56. thus far it behoved him to suffer, for fulfilling them, and through^e suffering, enter into his glory. It behoved him to be lifted up upon the cross that he might draw all men to him, John xii. 32. His so far submitting himself did not diminish but increase the glory of his dominion. That blasphemous scoff of the ancient Jews, Mat. xxvii. 42. “ If he be the King of Israel let him now come down from the cross, and we will believe in him, could not then hinder many as well of the Jews as of other nations from coming in to him, and believing that he was truly the King of Israel, and the obstinacy of many of their posterity in still persisting to say, we will not have this man whom our ancestors crucified “ to reign over us, must not beat us off from acknowledging this prophecy so far fulfilled in him, as that he was the person here spoken of, that should come forth to God out of Bethlehem and be ruler in Israel; but, considering how all the other prophecies seeming to them to cross this, were together reconciled and jointly fulfilled in and by him, to infer with the Apostle Peter, Acts ii. 36. therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye crucified, both Lord and Christ. Those that do otherwise, and will not acknowledge him so, do not prove him not to be so, but themselves not to be the ^h Israel of God, though insisting on the outward privileges of the flesh they call themselves Israel. That is the true Israel in which he ruleth, not by a carnal sceptre or weapons, but by his word, of which his sceptre the greatest part of the world hath so many years seen and acknowledged the power: and that therefore which most concerns us, is, not being moved by the groundless cavils of Jews, or any other against his dominion, by yielding him willing obedience, to approve our selves in the number of those, in and over whom he ruleth, so shall we approve our selves to be the ⁱ true Israel of God, whilst other falsely and in vain so call themselves. Where he is not ruler, there is no true Israel.

Whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting, or, (as in the margin) the days of eternity. He goes on in describing of him, who, he saith, should come out of Bethlehem, and be ruler in Israel, by another more eminent coming or going forth than that from that place, even before that place was, from all eternity, which is so signal a description of the divine generation before all time, or, that going forth from everlasting of Christ the eternal Son of God, God of the substance of the Father begotten before all worlds, and afterwards in time (according to what is said, that he should come forth of Bethlehem) made Man of the substance of his Mother and born in the world, as that it appears that this prophecy belongs only to him, and could never be verified of any other. Yet the ^k Jews who deny the divinity of Christ, endeavour to put us off from this proof of it, or, our so applying the words to him by another interpretation, viz. that these words import no more, than that his going forth, viz. his extraction, should be from David, between whom and him here promised should be a long time, a great number of years and ages, and so according to them it should so only be rendred, from of old, from days of age, or, antiquity, i. e. a long time since, and not from everlasting or before time, (and so ^l Others who are not Jews following their exposition, think that the words may well enough be applied to Zorobabel; who was of the posterity of David, who was originally from Bethlehem, and so had anciently his extraction thence. But this the Jews themselves do not say, who (as was before shewed) do not apply them to him, but to a Messiah, whom they yet expect to come of the lineage of David.) Another ^m Jew expounds them in something different words, viz. the causes of whose production have been from of old, and who hath been from long time foretold of and promised. But the same answer will serve to all these, that we may not let go the plain meaning of the words, which our translation gives us, as an evident proof of Christ's eternal generation, and so of his divinity, seeing he that is eternal, must confessedly be God. Our answer will best be framed by taking the words in order, and, first, that the מוצאתיו Motsothaw, rendred whose goings forth, doth manifestly and properly so signify it cannot be denied, and that it necessarily implies, in the person of whom it is spoken, an having been or gone forth actually, when or before the prophet spake these words. In the former words where he speaks of his being born in after-time (which was to come to pass after the

^d Mat. vii. 27. Luke viii. 25. ^e Luke xxiv. 26. ^f Mark xv. 32. ^g Luke xix. 14. ^h See Romans ix. 6.
ⁱ Galat. vi. 16. ^k R. D. Kimchi, Abarbincl. ^l Grotius. ^m R. Tanchum.

the uttering this prophecy) he puts the future tense [shall come forth,] but here speaking of a going forth, which was before that time from of old, the preter tense must needs be understood, and is well supplied in our translation, by [have been,] the verb substantive being according to the usual property of the Hebrew language not expressed but understood. We say it is well supplied by the tense denoting the time past; for the future can here have no place: it will be no sense to say a thing shall be from of old: that would be to confound past and to come in one. This going forth having been from of old, cannot be said to have been made good, by the being of the person spoken of in his ancestors loins, nor by the causes of his being having been of old. That would note only that there was then a possibility of his coming forth, not be properly called an actual going forth, as it is here called, no more than 'twould be proper to say, that in Adam's time all men had their goings forth, or were then born and in actual beings, because they were all then in Adam's loins, and there were then causes which should in after-times produce them. To say then that the person here spoken of had his goings forth, because he was to come forth out of the family of David, after this was spoken, can be no proper exposition of this word, because it denotes goings forth that had actually been, not that were to come. Neither if he had been actually born in David's time, or any of his ancestors before him (although neither he nor any of his ancestors are here expressed) could this make good what follows in the next words, from of old, from everlasting, or, from days of eternity. But then the rendring of those words also must be vindicated from the glosses of the Jews, who would have them to signify only from some long time ago, (some hundreds of years) and not from eternity, or before time properly so called. We say therefore, that as the words here used, (to wit, קדם Kedem, by our translators rendred of old, and עולם Olam, rendred everlasting) do sometimes signify, the first, time long since, and the latter, long duration of time, whether past or to come; so they do also signify eternity, of days and time, (that we may so, in the language of scriptures, which speak to men in their own way of speaking, call that eternal continuance which was before time or days properly so called.) We need not seek far for proofs of this. That in Proverbs viii. 22, 23. may suffice for a testimony of both, where the heavenly wisdom saith, God possessed me in the beginning of his way, קדם מפעליו מאז Kedem Miphalau Meaz, before his works of old, and I was set up, מעולם Meolam, from everlasting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was. That both those words there signify eternity is manifest by the context, this being said to be before the earth was: and it is manifestly to be expounded, ^a as one of their own there glosseth it, before the creation of the world, or, as

Vol. I.

^o another understands it, of priority of eternity, by priority of necessary existence, not of time properly so called, because time was afterwards created. To this may be added, as for this use of the former word קדם Kedem, that in Psalm lv. 19. He that abideth קדם Kedem, of old, i. e. from eternity: and for the second, i. e. עולם Olam, what is said, Psalm xc. 2: מעולם עד עולם Meolam ad Olam, necessarily rendred from everlasting to everlasting: to omit the many other places, where it is necessary so to be understood. And as for that word too which is rendred from days, that also is used sometimes to signify that eternity in which was no distinction of days or parts of time; so Isaiah xlii. 13. מיום אני הוא Miyom ani hu; word for word from the day I am he; that is, as the Jews themselves interpret, and Ours rightly render, before the day was, i. e. from eternity. And so God is called according to the usual exposition, the ancient of days, Dan. vii. 9. not that he is circumscribed by days of the greatest number or antiquity, but eternal. Now if these words singly, any of them, may denote eternity; how much more, being all put together, in that order as here, must they increase and heighten the signification; and shew that, of the person here spoken of, as having actual goings forth, the nature of which is so describ'd when the words were spoken, they are in the most improv'd signification to be taken? Which will be farther confirmed by adding that advantage, which is not only urged by ^a divers Christians, but suggested by that Jew himself, who most earnestly endeavours to deprive us of this proof for Christ's being God of the substance of the Father, coeternal with his Father. To this he argues, That the Christians concluding from these words, that Jesus is God, because he had his goings forth from of old, &c. and their saying, Who is from days of old but God? is false, because God was before the days of old; and whereas they say his goings forth were from of old, from days of Olam, (age or long ago) implies that then he went forth; but God is ancient, (or, eternal) without beginning: and what is said from Olam to Olam, i. e. from age or antiquity, and to age, thou art God, signifies from before age or the world, as he saith there, before the mountains were brought forth: and so what is said, Prov. viii. 23. I was set up Meolam, from Olam, or age, or antiquity, is, before Olam, or age, or the world, as he there adds or ever the earth was. In this his obscure way of arguing is to be observed, that he misreports the opinion of the Christians, as if they said, Then, in age or ancient time, Christ went forth (i. e. had his beginning and was not before) whereas God had no beginning: whereas we do not say so, but that he had his going forth or emanation from the Father, his eternal generation without beginning of time, or priority; but so as that he is coeternal with the Father. And so what he saith, as if we give to Christ a beginning of his going forth, comes to nothing, nothing, as a meer fiction of his own. But what he adds, is that which makes wholly to our advantage, i. e. that the prepositive letter or particle Mim, which is here put to these words, may be, and in the places cited ought to be understood, as signifying not only from, but before. And so then may it here also be understood, and so is * by divers learned Christians; and will so prevent any advantage, that may by any be taken from attributing here to Kedem, of old, or, Yeme Olam, days of age, any narrower signification, than that of eternity; by rendring it, before what was of old, or, the beginning; or before days of age, (before any days or age began,) which then will be all one with from everlasting; and so our conclusion still be confirmed, that the person here described by his goings forth, of that nature as the words necessarily require, must be eternal. No other sense will agree to the words spoken of goings forth, which were in actual being when the Prophet spake this; nor can they agree to any that then were not in being, as hath been shewed. And that the words are to be applied to our Lord Christ, and were spoken of him, hath been also shewed. All the cavils and objections of the Jews have nothing in them that may shake our principles, or weaken our belief in him, but rather confirm them; and at once shew, with what vain hopes they deceive themselves, while they will have these words to be a promise of a Messiah, and yet, denying the true Messiah, in whom they are fully made good, expect one by virtue of them, to whom they can by no means agree, viz. one who had had no actual goings forth, when these words were spoken, nor yet hath, and they do not expect that he should have, till he take his whole actual being, as other men do, at the time of his birth, being till then only in the loins of his ancient stock: whereas these words cannot be verified of any person, but such a one as may say, as Christ of himself, John viii. 58. Before Abraham was (much more before David, yea, before Adam, before the ancientest of times) I am, by an eternal being. Out of what hath been said may likewise appear (although Calvin doth not deny that Christ's eternal being and divinity may hence be proved) the invalidity of another exposition, by Some, though interpreting the words concerning Christ, so expressed, as to give advantage to the Jews, viz. that these goings forth of Christ, are still to be understood, as the former words, of his being made Man and born at Bethlehem, which is said to have been from days of eternity, because from all eternity it was decreed, that there in time he should be born. But, why these goings forth, from of old, from everlasting, which the person spoken of is said to have had when this was spoken, cannot be the same with that coming forth which he should have afterwards in time to come, out of Bethlehem, by being born there, hath been shewed. Again, it cannot with any propriety of speech be said, That

Q

^a R. Solomon Jarchi.^o Aben Ezra.^p Compare Psalm ii. 7.^a Tarnovius, Glasius, Hacspan:

Kimchi.

God's decree maketh things actually to have been, before ever they were produced in the time determined for their production, (except other circumstances make it necessary so to understand it, as according to some, Rev. xiii. 8. but of that place, see Dr. Hammond, who otherwise understands it.) Though by virtue thereof all things are present to God, and as certain to be as if they already were; yet it will not be language intelligible to men, by taking away all distinction of times, to say, such a man hath been already born into the world, because God hath decreed he should be born. Add, that if it were sufficient so to understand the words, here would be nothing more said of this eminent person here signally pointed out, by some great thing peculiar to him, by which he should be known and distinguished from all others; than might be said of any other ever after born in Bethlehem, of all which it might be also verified, that their goings forth thence had been from of old, &c. because their ancestors lived there, and God had decreed they should be born there. This exposition then cannot be sufficient or satisfactory. Whosoever will soberly and seriously and without partiality consider the words, shall perceive in this verse, the person spoken of (who is Christ the true only Messiah) described, by a twofold emanation, coming, or going forth; the first in order of the words his birth as Man, in time, after this prophecy uttered, at Bethlehem; the other his eternal emanation or generation from the Father, which he had when this was spoken, and from all eternity, before the beginning of times or days properly so called. The first of these though singular to him, in that it was without concurrence of an earthly father, yet in this common to him with Others, in that he was born of a woman in time, and in Bethlehem, and so shews him to be a Man: but the other wholly peculiar to himself and distinguishing him from all Others, because it was from eternity before all time, and so shews him to be God eternal and one with the Father. Before we pass from the words, one thing more may be observed, to wit, concerning the wonderful aptness and suitableness of the word, מוֹצֵא Motsooth, or goings forth here used, to the thing spoken of, in as much as the same word, מוֹצֵא Motsoa, coming, or, going forth, is used for expressing a word, which is the production and going forth of the mouth, as Deut. viii. 3. מוֹצֵא פִּי Motsoa Pi, and מוֹצֵא שִׁפְתָּי Motsoa Shephataim, the going forth of the lips; it is therefore very appositely and significantly here used to express the going forth, or eternal generation, of him who is called the word of God, of whom it is said, John i. 1. In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and the word was God, the same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him, &c. Which words shew the same that here is said, that Christ (there called the word) had his goings forth before all time without beginning to be, being eternal with the Father, and gave certain evidence and demonstration of that his eternal being, or goings forth before time, by creating and giving goings forth to time it self, and all things that are dated or measured by time; which * Some also will have here signified: though doubtless his own eternal being, as distinct from his birth at Bethlehem, is the thing here chiefly described; and not only the manifestation of it in his works in time even at the beginning of it.

evi-

3. Therefore will he give them up, until the time that she which travaileth hath brought forth: then the remnant of his brethren shall return unto the children of Israel.

[Therefore will he give them up, until the time that she which travaileth hath brought forth, &c.] How these words are inferred from the foregoing, as the word therefore shews them to be, will be the better perceived, when we shall have inquired into the meaning of them. Many and different expositions are given of them: that we may see which to prefer, some of them are to be taken notice of. * The Jews report a saying of some of their ancient Doctors grounded on what is here said, That the Son of David, i. e. the Messiah, should not come till the kingdom of wickedness (or, * as Others read, the fourth kingdom) had overspread the whole world for nine months, as it is said, therefore will he give them up, until the time that she that travaileth hath brought forth, &c. * This the latter Jews cite, but do not much insist on the explication of it. Perhaps they received (* faith One) by tradition from the days of the Prophets, that exactly so long the trouble spoken of should endure, according to the time of a woman's going with child. But seeing they labour not farther to inquire, or cannot tell us, what their ancestors meant, it will not concern us to trouble ourselves about it; but rather to look, what explications they themselves give. Such are, First, * That God will leave Israel, or deliver them to their enemies, till their condition shall be like the condition of one that is with child near her time of bringing forth; and then shall the (promised) ruler, and his near relations appear, and return to be, or become a ruler over the children of Israel, as he saith, with the remnant of his brethren shall return unto the children of Israel. Or, as ^b Others express it, In the day of salvation (when God will bring salvation to Israel) he shall deliver them into great tribulation, so that pangs shall take hold of them, as pangs of a woman in travail, as he saith in Daniel xii. 1. and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time: then the remnant of his brethren, i. e. of the Messiah, i. e. the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, which were left, when the ten tribes were led captive, shall return unto, i. e. with, the children of Israel, the ten tribes, viz. they and these, all of them shall return to their land, and the King Messiah shall rule over them. Or, as ^c another saith, the ten tribes shall go up first into the land of Israel to war against the Christians, and other people of the East, and North, and then their brethren of Judah and Benjamin shall return, or come unto them, according to his fanciful explication of some foregoing passages, as chap. iv. 13. and the first verse of this chapter.

The construction of the words according to this exposition must be with a supply, unto a time like the time of her [i. e. a woman] that bringeth forth [or was with child] and hath brought forth. But this supply of like the time is harsh, and hath no grounds for it; as neither to say, that this denotes a time of sorrow and pangs. Those are yet while she is in travail, and hath not yet passed her labour, and brought forth. When she hath once brought forth, and is delivered of the child, her anguish is turned into joy, because a man is born into the world. And here is nothing in these words, that signifieth pain or anguish, but it is only said word for word, until the time that she that beareth hath brought forth. Secondly, ^c another exposition, by some of them given, is, by expounding He not of the Lord, but of the ruler promised to come forth out of Bethlehem, and the word, shall give them up, by shall permit, or suffer, or leave, or let alone, (as it is used, Gen. xx. 6. therefore suffered I thee not to touch her, word for word gave I thee not, &c.) Thus the Messiah shall suffer them, i. e. shall defer his coming to them [or helping of them] till such a time, as in the former explication. Or, as Thirdly, Others give the meaning, Till the time that she that beareth hath brought forth, i. e. till the time of birth be come, the time of appearance for him, and them; according to what is said in Isaiab ix. 6. Unto us a child is born, &c. or, as he saith, Isaiab lxvi. 8. Zion travailed, she brought forth her children. Or, yet, Fourthly, something different, as ^e another hath it, He should give them up, i. e. that they shall continue in captivity, till the time that she that travaileth, &c. i. e. Zion, of which he saith, chap. iv. 10. be in pain and labour to bring forth, O daughter of Zion, like a woman in travail, and that in Isaiab lxvi. which we have seen, without farther explication of the meaning of this bringing forth: and then, that the meaning of the words, and the remnant of his brethren shall return unto the children of Israel is, that they all shall be comprehended under [the name of] Israel, and shall not be any more as two nations, nor any more divided into two kingdoms. These expositions have we from the Jews, which we have thus more largely related, because it is in a prophecy concerning the Messiah, in which is the great controversy between them and us, lest it may be said, that we follow our own opinions without taking notice of what they say. Besides these, there is also another exposition

* Jun. Tremel. Pet. à Fig. See Tarnov. * Talmud. lib. Yoma. c. 1: * Yalkute. * Kimchi. * Abarb.
^a R. Tanch. ^b R. D. Kimchi, Michal Yophi. ^c Abarbinel. ^d John xvi. 21. ^e R. Tanchum.
^f Lipman in Nitzakon.

tion hinted by Abarbinel, as extravagant as any of the other: viz. Therefore, i. e. because the children of Israel forsook the house of David (of which the ruler ought always to have been) God shall give them up into their captivity, until the time that she which travels hath brought forth, in many distresses and sorrows, so declaring that the destruction of the ten tribes should be for that sin; and as for Judah and Benjamin, which did not forsake David their King, yet they also shall go into captivity as well as the other, wherefore he saith, and the remnant of his brethren shall return unto the children of Israel, i. e. to go into captivity as they went. Thus he saith the words may be also interpreted; but I suppose none else will so think, except some who as he will seek to say any thing, without considering whether it agrees with the words, or makes any probable or tolerable sense (as this exposition plainly doth neither) rather than embrace the true meaning, if it make against what they are obstinately set on.

Now as for Christian Expositors there is among them also great difference in giving the meaning of this verse, ² Some so giving it, as if it should signify, That therefore, because things should be so ordered, as before spoken, by God, he would give up the Jews for a while to be grievously afflicted; but their afflictions should have a joyful issue, as the sorrows of a woman in travail, which when she hath brought forth are turned into joy; and that to such a woman he compareth the body of the people of the Jews: so that their sufferings under the hand of their enemies are, ³ according to them, compared to the pangs of a travailing woman, their deliverance to a happy birth. Or, 2ly, that before the coming of the Messiah (Christ) the Jews should be delivered up for a certain time to suffer great afflictions, and then Messiah should stand up, &c. ⁴ Others, he shall deliver them up unto the time, that the church shall by a spiritual birth (⁵ the conversion of the Gentiles by the preaching of the gospel) bring forth, and the remnant of the Jews also with those of the ten tribes shall turn unto him. ⁶ Others, far otherwise as to the first words, Therefore will he permit them, that is, bear with the Jews, and suffer them (who were afterwards to be destroyed by the Romans) so long to live and remain in their country being returned from the Babylonish captivity, till the church by the preaching of the gospel hath brought in many brethren of the Gentiles, as well as Israelites, in the time betwixt the passion of Christ and the destruction of Jerusalem; or much to that purpose, as One in few words gives it, ⁷ till the synagogue hath brought forth Christ, or the church, or till ⁸ Gentilism hitherto barren, hath brought sons to God, brethren to Christ.

And there is yet another Interpretation brought, in which by these words, until the time that she that travaileth hath brought forth, is understood the Blessed Virgin's bearing, and bringing forth Christ: which though ⁹ Some look on as forced, yet is by Others preferred before the rest, and will perhaps upon the examination be found the most simple proper and genuine among them. To the farther explanation of it may be premised, that the word rendred therefore, may signify also, but yet, notwithstanding, or nevertheless, agreeable to its signification in the Arabick tongue, and as ¹⁰ Some observe it sometimes to signify in the Hebrew; and then the words yield this meaning, Because God hath determined, that that ruler in Israel, whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting, shall in time come forth out of Betlehem, and be there being made Man born of a woman; therefore till that time, till she which is to bring him forth hath there brought forth, will he give them up to be afflicted, and troubled, and not presently show to them his promised salvation in full manner: but then after that he is come forth and manifested, his brethren the converted Gentiles by faith being become children of Abraham, and so brothers to this ruler, and ¹¹ to the true Israel, shall return unto him, and be altogether faithful subjects and members of his kingdom, and he shall stand, and feed, or rule them all, &c. Or else, Though God hath certainly decreed and promised to give salvation unto Israel, by him whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting; yet he hath determined withal, that he shall come forth unto him out of Betlehem: and therefore notwithstanding the certainty of this salvation by him promised, it shall not presently be manifested to them, but he will defer it; till she that should bring him forth, hath there brought him forth; and then shall it be manifested by his calling into his kingdom the remnant of his brethren, the Heathen, that shall be converted to him, who shall together with those of Israel turn unto him, and he shall stand, and feed, or rule among them in the strength of the Lord, &c. What is there in this explication that is forced either as to the plain and proper signification of the words, by all agreed on, or as to the connexion? And this prophecy so understood will well agree with that of Isaiab vii. 14. where, as a sign of salvation to them, and to point out the time when it shall be brought to them, it is said, Behold a virgin shall conceive, and bear a Son, which is the same that is here promised, and said to have been made good by the Blessed Mother of Christ, her bringing him forth in Betlehem, Mat. i. 22, 23. These two Prophets, Isaiab and Micah, lived at the same time, and in their prophecies were directed by the Spirit of God to speak sometimes the same things, as appeareth by what we have seen, chap. iv. 1, 2. and so both agree concerning the birth of Christ of a Virgin, or Mother in Betlehem, that he might be the Saviour of the Israel of God all the world over: for the pro-

² Calvin. ³ Grotius. ⁴ Munster. Vat. edit. Steph. in fol. ⁵ See Dutch Notes. ⁶ Vatabl. Ed. 4to and 8vo Hierom. Iyra, Tarnov. See Casta. ⁷ See Christoph. à Castro and Pelican. ⁸ Ribera. ⁹ Calvin. ¹⁰ R. Tanchum on Hosea ii. 14. ¹¹ Diodat.

promise of God was not only to Israel according to the flesh, but to all also that were afar off, even as many as the Lord our God should call, Acts ii. 39. and all these are called the remnant of his brethren, even those that were before aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and afar off, are now in Christ made one with them, Eph. ii. 12; &c. all brethren among themselves; and all brethren to Christ their ruler. Having taken on him their nature in the flesh, he is not ashamed to call them so, as the Apostle speaketh, Heb. ii. 11. confirming it out of Psalm xxii. 22. where in the person of Christ he saith, I will declare thy name unto my brethren. And there is no reason to take the name of brethren here in a narrower sense than to comprehend all the remnant, whom the Lord shall call, Joel ii. 32. whether the Jews or Gentiles, and to restrain it with some only to the Jews, though they were nigher of kin to him according to the flesh, and were first invited to come in. We are taught of Christ himself to give the word this latitude, when to the Jews who appropriated that name to those who were merely related unto him in the flesh, he gives answer, that whosoever should believe in him, and do the will of God, is his brother, and sister, and mother, Mat. xii. 46, &c. or as Luke viii. 22. My brethren are these which hear the word of God and do it. Now he, that great ruler in Israel, whose goings out were from everlasting, being come out in the time appointed out of Bethlehem, and being there born of a woman, and so God manifested in the flesh, and having called those his brethren unto him, and set up his spiritual kingdom among men, it is added,

4. ¶ And he shall stand and feed in the strength of the Lord, in the majesty of the name of the Lord his God, and they shall abide: for now shall he be great unto the ends of the earth.

And he shall stand and feed, &c.] He shall persist, and continue to feed, or set himself to feed, i. e. he shall with all care, and prudence, watchfulness, and diligence, and tenderness, rule, and guide, and conduct, and provide for, and supply with necessities his subjects, which are his flock, as a good shepherd (to which good princes, and rulers are usually likened) doth his sheep. And this he shall do in the strength of the Lord, not as an ordinary man, but as one, who hath extraordinary, and plainly divine power conferred on him from the Lord to enable him so to feed and rule, not to be hindred, or overpowered by any that would oppose him, or do wrong, or violence, and prejudice unto his flock under his protection: and in the majesty of the name of the Lord his God, so as plainly to evidence, that the majestick name of the Lord his God is in him, that God hath glorified him, and is glorified in and by him; and under the protection of his great power and majesty, they his subjects shall abide, be in a sure and stedfast condition, secure against all other powers: for now, when he shall enter on his rule, shall he be great unto the ends of the earth, extending his name, glory, and dominion as wide as the world, and to the utmost parts thereof. These expressions (saith a learned Jew) evince, that the ruler here spoken of can be no other than the Messiah; not Zorobabel, who never attained to this height and happiness. So say we; and that our Lord Christ is the here and elsewhere promised Messiah, and that all here spoken evidently agrees to him as fulfilled in and by him, who is that ruler in Israel, that good and great shepherd of God's flock, which standeth and feedeth them continually, that in safety they go in and out, and find pasture, and defendeth them in the strength of the Lord (all power being given to him in heaven and in earth, Mat. xxviii. 18.) so that they shall never perish, neither shall any pluck them out of his hand; for no man is able to pluck them out of his Father's hand, who is greater than all; and He and his Father are one, John x. 28, 29, 30. In his name doth he keep them, ib. ver. 11, 12. and they shall therefore abide, never miscarry under his protection. For he is and will be with them alway unto the end of the world, Mat. xxviii. 20. and in gathering and guiding his, will shew and extend the greatness of his power and his glory unto the ends of the earth, among all nations, as it is this day, and ever shall so be. He shall be great, that is, the name of the Messiah, saith Kimchi.

VOL. I.

But while we apply these words to our Lord Christ, another Jew steps in and endeavours to raise cavils and objections out of them against us. Having said that Christ is not acknowledged as ruler by Israel, which hath been already answered; he adds and argues from what is said, in the majesty of the name of the Lord his God, that therefore he (here spoken of) hath a God, and therefore is not himself God: and if they say this is spoken of him as Man, or in respect of his manhood, Was Man from of old, from everlasting? Again, This King hath brothers; again, Is it not so that at his birth no new thing happened? Only they say that at the hour of his death he reigned. Further, His dominion is not to the ends of the earth, &c.

His words are short, but so as his meaning appears; and he thence infers that hence is proved, that the promised Messiah is not yet come. But these are slight cavils, and signify nothing to us, who profess that our Lord Jesus Christ the Son of God, is God and Man, God of the substance of the Father begotten before the worlds, and Man of the substance of his Mother born in the Word, perfect God and perfect Man, equal to the Father as touching his Godhead, and inferior to the Father as touching his Manhood. In these words is nothing that may cross what we hold and believe, but

R

See likewise Mark iii. 35.

1 Tim. iii. 16.

Exod. xxiii. 21.

R. Tanchum.

John x. 14.

Ib. ver. 9. Mat. xxviii. 19. Acts i. 8. Rom. x. 18.

R. Lipman in Nitzachon.

but fully confirms it. In that the Messias here spoken of had his goings forth from of old from everlasting, it is manifest that he is God, as hath been before shewed: in that he was in time to come forth out of Bethlehem, and God is called his God, and men his brethren, it is manifest that he is also Man, partaker of flesh and blood. But do we therefore say, that man, or flesh and blood was from everlasting, or eternal? By no means, but that he that was eternal God before time, was in time made Man, and so though in the first respect one with the Father, coequal to him, God himself, yet in the latter respect, after him and inferior to him: so that one Christ is both God and Man, yet without confusion of substance and natures. So that if what is affirmed of him according to one nature should be objected as not agreeing to the other, and so a proof against its being in the same person, will be no more, than if any should object against him that affirms, the reasonable soul of man is incorruptible, that therefore he affirms the body, which together with that soul makes one man, to be also incorruptible. As he is one God with the Father, so is he the Lord and God of men, (as Thomas acknowledged him, John xx. 28.) as he is man inferior to the Father, so he calleth men his brethren, and their God his God, John xx. 17.

Why he should here take occasion of objecting, that no new thing happened at his birth, I know not. Had there not, it might be an answer to him, that his own greatest Doctors tell him, that no new alteration in the world ought to be expected at the coming of the Messiah. But we know there did happen such strange things as never did at the birth of any other, as (not to mention that he was born of a Virgin without father on earth, as never any other was) that strange star, the appearance of which made those wise men from the East coming to Jerusalem to ask without doubt or more ado, Where is he that is born King of the Jews? Mat. ii. 1, 2. and that glorious apparition of the Angel, Luke ii. 10. proclaiming to the shepherds, I bring you tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people, for unto you is born this day in the city of David (which is Bethlehem here spoken of, and the thing here spoken of it) a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord. What he adds, only at the hour of his death (or concerning the hour of his death, for his words are obscure) they say that he reigned, seems to intimate, as if he fancied that Christians, because they could not avoid that objection, That no strange thing happened at his birth, did therefore date his kingdom from his death; or else that he upbraids us, that we say, that he that was overcome by death reigneth. Be his meaning what it will, his objection is of no force against us, who profess that Christ was both born King, and all the time of his living on earth evidently shewed himself so, by such means, as we have formerly seen; insomuch that Nathaniel convinced by what he saw, plainly confesseth him so, Rabbi, that thou art the Son of God, thou art the King of Israel, John i. 49. and the people not doubting of it, would needs have taken him by force to make him a temporal king as he shewed himself a spiritual one, John vi. 15. besides their openly proclaiming him so, Mark xi. 10. Luke xix. 38. and that his death whereto he humbled himself, did not (notwithstanding the blasphemous scoffs of the chief among the Jews, Mat. xxvii. 42. Mark xv. 32.) evidence that he was not a true King or put an end to his kingdom, but more advanced it, and did but serve to draw his subjects (even a great part of the world) all men unto him, John xii. 32. And at that too, as ignominious as they sought to make it, happened such strange and unusual things, as made the centurion, and those that were with him watching Jesus, to confess him not an ordinary King, but to say, Truly this was the Son of God, Mat. xxvii. 54. Mark xv. 36. So far was he from having his power lessened by his death, that by it he overcame death it self, and destroyed him, that had the power of it, that is the devil, Heb. ii. 14. and in his cross triumphed over them, and all infernal powers, openly and discernably to all that would not shut their eyes, Col. ii. 15. Then his resurrection after his death (that not being able to hold him, Acts ii. 24.) which he made evident by so many ways, as we find in the gospels, and by appearing so many times, and to so many witnesses, (as is recorded, 1 Cor. xv. 4, 5, &c.) and then his ascending visibly into heaven in the sight of his Apostles, Acts i. 9. Mark xvi. 19. make it most evident, that the same Jesus, whom they crucified, God made both Lord and Christ, Acts xxi. 36. and that he is the Messiah, the ruler in Israel here prophesied of, and that we are to look for no other. But saith he, his dominion is not unto the ends of the earth. Here call we in the whole world to witness against him. He living in Germany (far enough from the land of Israel) could not but know how far and wide over the face of the earth the dominion of Christ hath spread it self, and in how many nations he is acknowledged as Lord, and King, and his name adored, and magnified: so that he would not have made this cavil, except he had willingly stopt his ears, and shut his eyes, or would not understand what he heard, or perceive what he saw; such obstinateness doth his way of arguing discover. There is nothing therefore in what he hath said, that may take us off from applying these words of the prophecy hitherto to our Lord Christ, and affirming them to be all in him fulfilled in their true and utmost meaning. His cavils out of the following words are of like nature, as in due place will appear.

But before we pass from these words one thing more may be observed, viz. that the word וַיָּשָׁב Veyashabu, by Ours rendred, and they shall abide, is ^b by some Others rendred shall return, or, shall be converted: into the reason of which it will not be needful nicely to ininquire, whether it were because instead of what is now read וישבו Veyashabu, which signifies and shall abide; they did read וישבו Veyashubu, which signifies they shall return; or whether reading it, as it is now read, they thought it to signify the same that וישבו Yashubu, taking the words שוב Shub, and ישב Yashab, to agree in the signification of turning also, as they sometimes do in the other of abiding, as appears by what we read, Psalm xxiii. 6. where ושבתי Veshbati, by consent of all, is rendered abide, or, dwell, though the theme שוב Shub, most usually denotes to return. They that follow this interpretation make the meaning to be, That many shall be turned and flock in to Christ, because now he shall be great, or that now he may be great, unto the ends of the earth. But there is no reason to forsake our translation, and the exposition before given.

^a Maimonides, Yad. Tract. Melchijm. cap. ult.

^b Chaldee Paraphrase, Vulg. Latin.

5. And this Man shall be the peace, when the Assyrian shall come into our land: and when he shall tread in our palaces, then shall we raise against him seven shepherds, and eight principal men.

6. And they shall waste the land of Assyria with the sword, and the land of Nimrod in the entrances thereof: thus shall he deliver us from the Assyrian when he cometh into our land, &c.

And this Man shall be, &c.] A learned Jew's faith of these words, that though the signification of the words be plain, yet the meaning and sense of the whole is very abstruse. In this they and Christians agree, that what is spoken in them agrees to the Messiah and his times or kingdom. But in the application thereof must needs be a vast difference, they saying that the promised Messiah is not yet come, and so (the most of them) that the things here spoken of are not yet fulfilled, but are to be accomplished, when the Messiah shall come: we, that the Messiah, who is our Lord Christ, is already come, and so the things by him and under him fulfilled, and in fulfilling, as they ought to be understood, and that no other Messiah is to be expected, nor other accomplishing of these prophecies. The truth will appear by going over the words in order.

This man shall be the peace. There is nothing in the original text expressed that signifieth man; but the words barely found, This shall be peace, without mention of person or thing, which hath caused difference among Expositors according to their different understanding of what is to be supplied, as pointed to by the particle this. Some understand it of the person before spoken of, as our Translators, who therefore add man, This man shall be peace. The same do many other Expositors understand, both Christians and Jews also. So one of them, It is to be understood of the Messiah, because he shall be the cause of peace, as it is said, and he shall speak peace to the nations, Zech. ix. 10. that great blessing was he to be the author of to his: and therefore our Lord Christ being the only true Messiah, of him is, agreeably to the words, here said, He is our peace, Eph. ii. 14. At his birth, was by the heavenly host proclaimed peace on earth, Luke ii. 14. and he entering on his ministry, while he was on earth, came and preached peace to them which were afar off, and to them that were nigh, Eph. ii. 17. and when he was again to leave the world, he bequeathed peace to his, gave it to them, and left it with them, John xiv. 27. So that well might it be said of him by way of prophecy, This man shall be peace, or, the peace.

And this supply of the person may seem as agreeable to the meaning of the words as any.

But then of us, i. e. of Christians, who thus understand the words as affirming that our Lord Jesus Christ shall be peace, or, the peace, may be demanded by the Jews or Others, what peace we mean; or, how that peace, which we say he is the author and establisher of, may agree with that description, which is given of it in this and the following verse, to wit, such as should be made good by repelling the Assyrian, by raising against him seven shepherds, and eight principal men, by wasting the land of Assyria with the sword, and the land of Nimrod, &c. and by delivering from the Assyrian, &c. To which we have to answer, that these expressions are figurative, and so the literal signification of every word is not nicely to be insisted on, so we may but have the whole meaning appositely given.

That diverse expressions of such benefits as were promised to be made good under the Messiah are figuratively to be taken, is that which cannot be denied, and by the learnedest of the Jews themselves confessed: as for instance, that which is likewise a description of the peace by him to be effected, that the wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard lie down with the kid, the calf with the young lion, and a little child should lead them, &c. and the lion should eat straw with the ox, &c. and all this should be because the earth should be full of the knowledge of the Lord, which none will say those beasts are capable of, or expect there should be such a strange change in their nature. And it must therefore be confessed, that the expressions are figurative, and denote only that great change in the natures and dispositions of men which shall be wrought by the Doctrine of Christ, and that mutual accord in love and meekness which thereby they shall be disposed to. And why may not these words be understood so too, i. e. figuratively? They must needs so be, if we read, This man shall be peace, that is, the peace here described shall be wrought by the Messiah (for reasons which will by and by appear.) And so figuratively taken, what do they but, under the type of a compleat temporal peace to the Jews, represent to us

^c R. Tanchum.
^f Isaiah xi. 6, &c.

^d R. D. Kimchi.

^e Maim. in Melac. cap. ult. and in his Epistle of the Resurrection.

us that more excellent spiritual peace, that comprehensive blessing of peace with God, peace among themselves (and as far as in them lies, peace with all men) and peace within themselves, not to be disturbed by the assaults of any enemies thereof, which is by Christ given to his church and the members thereof, the subjects of his kingdom, and wrought by the preaching of the gospel, maugre all that shall oppose it?

The Affyrians and Chaldeans were then the known enemies of the Jews, such as invaded their land, and trod in, or entred into their palaces, and wasted all things; if now God should raise unto them any, under whose conduct they should not only repel those enemies, but pursue them, and waste their land, and wholly subject them so as that they should no more have cause to fear them, would not this be a very great blessing, a bringing in and establishment of a most desirable peace, and a thing marvellous in their eyes, the greatest they could then wish for? By representing this therefore to them to be done, he figures out that greater blessing, that desirable peace, which that Messiah, whom in the foregoing words he had promised, and described, should be the author of, and make good by conquest of more malicious and potent enemies than the Affyrian or Chaldean, even Satan himself with all his infernal host (whom with his own weapons and in his own territories he hath vanquished; through death ^g having destroyed him that had the power of death, and given to his the victory over death, and the sting of it, sin) and the principalities and powers and rulers of the darkness of this world and spiritual wickedness in high places, Eph. vi. 12. and all the world that lies in wickedness, and the enemies of the truth which with unappeasable malice constantly seek to invade the church and infest the members thereof, and to disturb their peace. Against all these, and all that can be named, will he secure it to them, and continually raise up such a sufficient number of such as shall maintain his truth and beat down whatsoever shall oppose it, and furnish them with the irresistible power of his Spirit for that end, so that none shall be able to take from his that true peace which he giveth. With him is power also to secure to his an outward peace, and to raise up such as shall bring under all that shall infest that also.

And this also he often doth by wonderful means, as he seeth most for his glory and the good of his church. But that we do not look on as the thing here principally meant or promised, but that spiritual peace of a more divine nature, which we have spoken of, according to what he promiseth, John xvi. 33. that in him they should have peace, though in the world they should have tribulation, bidding them therefore to be of good cheer, because he hath overcome the world; which words of his seem a summary of what is here spoken and prophesied of.

If any of such who so read the words, This man shall be peace, that is, the Messiah, like not of this way of expounding them, but say, whether Jews or Others, that under the Messiah, they ought according to the proper sound of the letter to be fulfilled, ^h St. Hierom teacheth us thus to argue with them, These things spoken here as to be effected by Messiah are either fulfilled, or yet to be expected and not fulfilled. If they say, they be fulfilled, let them give us the history thereof by authority of ancient books confirmed, and tell us when the Affyrians and Chaldeans were ever subjected to the Jews, conquered and governed by them; (we may add; if they say they are, let them then confess that the Messiah, who they confess was to be the author of that peace, by the conquest of those enemies, and delivering them from them, is already come.) But 'tis not likely, that they will say this. If then they say that they are not yet fulfilled, nor Messiah yet come, as they do, ⁱ but that they expect that they shall be, according to the sound of the letter, fulfilled when he shall come, and that if the Affyrian should offer to invade them, (as in the Prophet's time he did) the Messiah with his princes and chieftains, denoted here by seven shepherds, and eight principal men, shall so subdue them, as to deliver them from all further fear of annoyance from them, we then demand, Where are their palaces in any land, that they may call their own, for the Affyrian to enter into and tread in? Where (if they had such) any Affyrians (they being so long since cut off from being a nation) to tread in them? Shall the Messiah, that he may fulfil these things according to the letter, build up for them palaces, which may be troden in, and raise Affyrians out of the dust, who have so long ceased to be a known nation, to come and tread in them, that so he may drive them out of Israel's land, and waste theirs with the sword? This would be such a strange miraculous change in the course of the world, as the greatest of their Doctors (as we have said) will not admit them to expect at the coming of the Messiah: and for this reason is it that, as above we intimated, these words must necessarily be understood figuratively, if understood as to be effected by Christ, because that before his coming these nations, viz. Affyrians and Chaldeans, had been so utterly destroyed, as not to be reckoned among nations, much less to be in any such power as to invade the land of Israel, and annoy them in hostile manner: and much more now stands the case so.

This objection seems ^k to one among the Jews (no less learned nor observant of his own advantages than others) so evidently pressing and so unanswerable, that he plainly professeth, that what is here spoken cannot be looked on as a promise of things yet to come, and to be expected: There is, saith he, no signification (or place) for a promise that Assur (or the Assyrians) shall in time to come be cut off or destroyed by the sword, seeing they are perished and cut off already, so that there is now no remainder of them, by which they are known to be: and this makes him look after other ways, by which the words may be expounded, so as not to suspend their fulfilling on the coming of the Messiah; as, first, not referring the word this to the person before spoken of, or what is before said of him, but to what is after in the following words described, and so supplying thing, or time, viz. this thing shall be our peace, or the condition of our peace, at that time by this shall our peace be procured, or established, viz. that when the Assyrian shall come, &c. then we shall raise, &c. So making it a consolation to Israel in those days, who stood in fear of the Kings of Assyria, and were threatned that they should be led into captivity by them, but are here promised (to fortify them against that fear and put an end to it) that after that another nation should rise up against them (that is, against the Assyrians) with many princes and commanders, who should revenge their quarrel on them, intimating, that the King of the Chaldeans should prevail over them and destroy them; as, saith he, it is expressly foretold in the prophecies of the Prophets in many places, and as it was actually brought to pass: (for otherwise this promise can signify nothing, if it be interpreted of the many commanders and captains of the forementioned ruler, as if they should with their sword destroy those, who were already destroyed, long before that ruler was born.) Or else he saith, there may be another exposition given, by reading the word, שָׁלוֹם Shalom, which is rendred peace, in the signification of recompence, or reward, as שָׁלַם Shilam, שָׁלוּם Shillum, שָׁלוֹן Shalmon, other forms from the same root do signify, that so the words may sound, and this shall be the recompence of Assur, who, or because he, (taking כִּי Ci, when, to denote here as much as Asser, who or because he) shall come into our land, viz. that there shall rise up against him such as shall bring him to ruin as before: and this exposition he likes of, and thinks that no objection ought to be made against it from grammar rules concerning change of vowels in construction, and distinction of accents, seeing they are rules that do not always unalterably hold.

^g Heb. ii. 14. ⁱ Cor. xv. 57. ^h On Micah v. ⁱ Judæi in adventu Christi quem sibi simulant hæc omnia juxta literam futura esse contendunt. Hieronymus, and see R. Sol. Jarchi, and R. D. Kimichi and Abarbinel.

^k R. Tanch.

This Rabbin plainly denies and takes away from those of his own nation and sect all ground of any argument from these words, whereby they would prove against Christians, that the Messiah is not yet come, because that is not done by our Lord Christ, which they expect should be done by the Messiah; but doth not in his expositions say any thing which may contradict what we believe, that our Lord is the Messiah spoken of in the foregoing verses, and that all that by virtue of this pro-

VOL. I.

phesy was to be expected from the Messiah hath had its due accomplishment, though he do not look on these present words as spoken of his person; in which some among Christians agree with him also, and do not understand by this, this man, or person, but ¹ Some taking it for a note of time, This time shall be a time of peace, or, then shall be peace and prosperity, when, i. e. after, the Assyrian and Chaldean shall have invaded our land, &c. for then we shall raise, (to wit, by our prayers to God) against him seven shepherds, viz. Cyrus, with other kings, and eight principal men, viz. great peers or captains, and rulers, Jer. li. 28. and they shall subdue with their weapons the land of Assyria, and Babylon, and free us, so that we shall not any more fear their coming into our land, and treading in our borders, as we did before. Others not much from the same purpose, so joining that particle with peace, as to denote the condition of it, as after described, viz. ² This shall be our peace, or thus the condition of it, and it thus acquired, viz. by the destruction of the Assyrian army, which invaded Israel, by the Angel of the Lord (they might add, and of his kingdom by the Chaldeans) and of the Chaldeans who sacked Jerusalem, and led them captives, by Cyrus and Darius, and those many princes with them (whom by their prayers to God they raised up, that they might perform this work) who subdued and destroyed both Assyria and Chaldea. And then some take it as to the connexion to depend on what went before, viz. For now shall be great unto the ends of the earth, as if this here were promised before hand to come to pass ³ as a pledge of that promise of Christ and his greatness, that seeing this come to pass, they might not doubt of that.

But if this exposition be followed, the words should seem rather to have respect to what is before promised, chap. iv. 10. &c.

Among all these expositions, that of the Christians first of all mentioned is most followed, and (as we have shewed) hath nothing in it why it should be excepted against; but withal there is no danger in following any of the rest, except that only of such of the Jews, who expect yet a literal fulfilling of these things by the Messiah, and would therefore prove him not to be yet come, because they are not yet so fulfilled. The vanity and absurdity of which opinion hath been sufficiently shewed, and is evident.

Having thus at large spoken of different opinions concerning the meaning of these two verses in general, occasioned chiefly by their different applying of the first word This, it will be convenient to look more particularly into the import of some other of the words in them, to see how they are, or may be accommodated to those different meanings, that we may accordingly judge thereof.

And, first, concerning Assur, (or the Assyrian) and the land of the Assyrian, and the land of Nimrod, some take these to be both as one, and that by the land of Nimrod, is meant no other^a than Assyria, viz. Nineveh, and its territories or provinces. Others distinguish them so, as by the land of Assyria to understand that distinctly, which was usually so called, under the dominion of Nineveh and the kings thereof; and by the land of Nimrod,^b that of the Chaldeans in the land of Shinar under the kings of Babel, in which Nimrod began first to reign, Gen. x. 10. and out of that land went into Assyria, and built Nineveh (according to the Margin in our Bibles, which translation a very learned man^c prefers, and is of the first opinion.)

¹ Drusius, Grotius.

² See LXX. and see Christ, à Castro.

³ Idem ex Theo.

As the name of Assyria is sometime so used as to comprehend^d both these, so it is manifest that at other times they are taken as distinct kingdoms, and came severally to invade the Jews; first, the Assyrians, who took Samaria, and destroyed the kingdom of the ten tribes, and then the Babylonians or Chaldeans, who took Jerusalem and captivated the Jews; and they themselves were severally destroyed, but both many years before Christ's being born at Bethlehem; and therefore these names (as we have seen) by those who understand the words here spoken as a description of things to be done by Christ after his coming in the flesh, are not properly understood according to the letter, but so as to denote any enemies, especially spiritual, representing them as terrible, fierce and malicious, as the Assyrians were then to the Jews;^e nothing could then express a greater enemy, or in higher terms, than the name of Assyrian, a name most formidable to them.

A Jew of great note,^f who properly understands these words, and expects the prophecy yet literally to be performed by his Messiah, and so interprets them, as to denote that in the latter days the Assyrians and Babylonians shall be at peace with Israel, and come no otherwise than peaceably into their land, and shall be obedient to their king, having Jerusalem for his Metropolis, and ruling over the whole world, starts occasionally a question, Why those nations are here named, and not Edom (which in his language are the Romans, or generally Christians?) and makes his answer to this purpose, Because Edom, or the Edomites, are the chief of their enemies, and therefore they shall have no mercy, but be utterly cut off, whereas the others on their subjecting themselves shall be received to terms of peace. So he shews his good will and desires, but confers nothing to the true meaning of the words.

Such^g as by Assyrians and Babylonians take here to be meant Gog and Magog, seem to have no good ground for their opinion from the words, nor will it be easily made appear that they are here meant.

When Asshur shall come.] The particle ו Ci, rendered when, and so properly signifying, yet having other uses, is by^h Expositors differently taken, by Some for when, by Others for if, by Others after that, by Others, because, or for that, as they can best suit it to their several expositions, and in the sixth verse, by Someⁱ least that, and so in this also by a Jewish Arabick Translator.

Seven shepherds and eight principal men. That is, many, say Interpreters; seven itself being sometimes put for an indefinite number denoting many, and much more eight being added to it, as in like manner the same expression is used, Eccl. xi. 2. Give a portion to seven, and also to eight, and Others not unlike elsewhere of the number of seven and seventy; for to take these precisely to signify the number expressed, is that which Interpreters agree to be no way necessary or agreeing to the scope of the words.

Some ancient Jews indeed seem so to take them, and reckon them up by name, viz. the seven shepherds to be, David in the midst,^j Adam, Seth, and Methusalem, on his right hand, Abraham, Jacob, and Moses, on his left; then the eight principal men, Jesse, Saul, Samuel, Amos, Zephaniab,^k Zedechiab, Elias, and Messiah; but the latter Jews wonder on what ground or tradition they did this; and whatever it were,^l one of them plainly saith that it makes nothing to the exposition of the present words (and therefore though in several books and copies there be some difference in reckoning up those names, it is not material, one name may serve as well as another, none of them serving to the purpose.)

What some also think, that in the naming of seven shepherds or rulers, there is an allusion to the number of seven princes and counsellors of the Persians, mentioned, Ester i. 14. and Ezra vii. 14. may seem also an observation of more nicety than much to be insisted on.

That which on all hands both by Jewish and Christian Expositors will be agreed on, is, that the import of the expression in this place is, that God so ordering it there shall not want many, and those sufficiently qualified with such endowments and power as is requisite, to maintain and make good against all opposers and enemies thereof, that peace which is here promised, to those to whom it is promised; and those so qualified are here called shepherds, and principal men, or princes of men.

Both these titles^m Some take to signify the same thing, viz. rulers, governors, commanders, chieftains, chief men: which they that more literally expound the words, understand of military men, or warlike commanders;ⁿ they that expound them figuratively, of governors vernours and pastors of the church of God, and ministers of the good thereof, and propagators and defenders of the truth, and endowed with the Spirit of God, and thereby enabled for performance of that office. That difference which ^f Some make, as if the latter (viz. נְסִיכֵי אָדָם Nesiche Adam, princes of men) did denote such as were taken out of the common sort of men, because Adam, the common name of a man, is often taken for an ordinary man, in distinction from אִישׁ Ish, a man of greater quality, and so did import, that God should from the meanest of the people raise up many, who should be so qualified and enabled, as that they should be able to perform that, which is here said they should, maugre all the opposition of most potent enemies, however true it is in it self, yet may perhaps to some not seem to be of that weight, as that it may be much pressed or insisted on as a necessary meaning of the words undeniably concluded from them.

^a R. Tanchum, Bochart. Peleg. p. 260. ^b R. D. Kimchi, Aben Ezra, R. Sol. &c. ^c Bochartus. ^d Grotius. ^e See Castalio. ^f Abarbinel. ^g Mead. ^h Solomon, R. D. Kimchi. ⁱ Grot. and see R. Kimchi. ^j See Aben Ezra. D. Kimchi, Tanchum, Abarbinel, and see Ribera. ^k In Kimchi, Seth, Enoch, and Methusala; but in a manuscript as we have put it. This is had out of the Talmud, Succah. cap. 5. fol. 92. ^l In Kimchi and Lipman, Ezekiah; so that the books and copies differ: and Yalkut for Amos hath Amram. ^m R. Tanchum. ⁿ Tarnovius. ^o R. D. Kimchi, R. Tanchum. ^p See Dutch Notes and others.

These, whoever they be, it is said shall be raised against him, i. e. against the enemy, denoted by the name of Assur or the Assyrian. Or, saith a learned ^g Jew, it may be rendred with him, that is, with the Messiah before spoken of, as to denote, that they should by him be set on work, and be employed under or with him in that work which he hath to do.

But this interpretation is neither by himself preferred, nor by others followed; however, it would alter nothing in the scope and meaning of the words: as neither will that much which is by ^h Some said, That by the naming this number Shepherds and Princes, is signified, that this promised Messiah should be a greater defence to them, than the help and force of seven Shepherds or Princes, which were Men, could be; so that it shall be abundantly sufficient that they have him to oppose against all enemies, and in confidence of that they are introduced as supposing themselves to have such forces.

These also, whoever be understood by them, it is said that they shall waste the land of Assyria with the sword, &c.

They shall waste. In the Margin of our English Bibles, is put, Heb. Eat up. The word רָעַע Raau, in the Hebrew is such as may indifferently be deduced either from the word רָעָה Raah, to feed, feed on, or, eat up, or from רָעַע Raa, to break, and accordingly by some is taken in the one, by some in the other of those notions. Some therefore would have it rendred shall break (i. e. destroy or rule over with tyranny,) Others, shall feed, i. e. feed on, or eat up, i. e. likewise destroy; for ^k that feeding, which is for the good of the cattle that feed, is the destruction and consuming of that which they feed on, or eat up.

So that the meaning here of the word (as taken from either of those roots, will be the same in effect, still destruction, and is well expressed by our Translators by the word waste.

And the land of Nimrod in the entrances thereof. In the Margin our Translators read, or with their own naked swords. The word in the original, פֶּתָחֵיהֶם Petacheah, being from the same root with פֶּתָחוֹת Petechoth, Psalm lv. 21. rendred drawn swords, and with פֶּתָחִים Petachim, which signifies, doors, gates, or, entrances, makes Interpreters doubt which to take. Our Translators, as loath to determine, put one in the text, the other in the margin.

If it be rendred swords, then to say with their own swords, will be as much as to say, they shall turn their own swords upon them, or conquer them with their own weapons, such as they find in their own land, for the word with that affix which it hath put to it, will literally sound, with the swords of it, that is, of their own land, and not with their swords, i. e. the swords of the conquerors; or else (as one ^l notes in a little different signification of the word, which he supposeth it to have) with the edges of that sword mentioned, for so he thinks the word also to signify the mouth, or edges of the sword. So as that the meaning may be, They shall deal with their land or with them according to their own dealings, so make use of the sword toward them, as they have used it towards others. If it be rendred entrances, ^m then will the meaning be, that they shall conquer their land, and slay them in their own gates, and entrances of their own country.

Yet some of the Jews, who are for a literal interpretation of the words, and a fulfilling them accordingly, will not have it so far literally understood, as that they should by virtue of what is said, destroy and cut them off with the sword; for, saith ⁿ one of them, the Prophet here promiseth peace and not war, and therefore the meaning only is, that they shall openly and manifestly every where rule over them in their land and cities.

^o Another of them saith, that by Swords here spoken of are to be understood those punishments that should come on them, viz. the Assyrians, from heaven by virtue of the prayers of Israel, according to what is said, Isaiah xxxi. then shall the Assyrian fall with the sword, not of a mighty man, and the sword not of a mean man shall devour him, &c. viz. because he was destroyed by an Angel. So that though hence may seem to be concluded, that even after the coming of the Messiah there shall be wars, yet it is probable, that these seven shepherds and eight princes of men, shall have no need of using the sword against Assur; so that ^p they themselves here do not think that the literal signification of every word ought strictly to be insisted on.

But according to that figurative acception of the words embraced by most Christians, which we in the first place mentioned, the meaning will be evident, That by the might and power of Christ, and such as shall be by him qualified and

^f Jun. Tremel. Tarnov. De Dieu.
^g R. Tanchum. ^h R. Tanchum.

ⁱ Kimchi.

^j Idem.

^k Paræus, and see Diodati.

^l Abarbinel.

^m R. Tanchum.

ⁿ R. Solomon, R. D. Kimchi.

^o R. D. Kimchi, Abar-

binel, and Christian Interpreters.

and commissioned for the spreading and maintaining of his truth, all that oppose it shall be brought under and made to yield as evidently, as when an enemy (such as the Assyrian then was to Israel) is by many commanders and their forces beaten in his own country, and with his own weapons, forced from him and turned back upon himself, so that he shall not be able to create farther disturbances.

And he shall deliver, i. e. the Messiah or ruler in Israel, Christ, by his own power, and the ministry of those whom he shall qualify and employ for maintaining his truth and his peace, shall deliver us from the hands of such enemies as shall assault us, that we shall not have need to fear them. They (^a saith he that rendreth it recompence instead of peace, as we have seen) i. e. those denoted by the seven shepherds and eight principal men, (so taking the verb here put in the singular number to stand for the plural הַצִּיל Hitfil, for הַצִּילוּ Hitfilu,) shall deliver us from the Assyrian that invadeth us and maketh incursions on us; or, that he may no more come, &c. ^a as Some. Thus may it seem convenient to take notice of the signification of some of the words, that so they may be adjusted and accommodated to that exposition which shall be embraced, as the scope shall direct and require. Our translation renders, thus shall he deliver us, i. e. by these means: but that which they render thus, properly signifieth, and, and is so by most rendred, though the meaning will be one.

7. And the remnant of Jacob shall be in the midst of many people, as a dew from the Lord, as the showers upon the grass, that tarrieth not for man, nor waiteth for the sons of men.

8. ¶ And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles, in the midst of many people, as a lion among the beasts of the forest, as a young lion among the flocks of sheep, who if he go thorow, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver.

And the remnant of Jacob shall be, &c.] A learned Jew maketh here a question, whether these words are by reason of the note of connexion and, to be joined with the words immediately preceding, viz. (as he would have it rendred) and this shall be our peace, or, (as he rather thinks it should be understood) and this shall be the reward of Assur, &c. and so to be understood of the happy condition, which they enjoyed after their return from their Babylonish captivity under the second temple, or to be referr'd and bear respect to the other words that went before, viz. the sixth verse, and he shall stand and feed, &c. and so to be looked on as a promise, the fulfilling of which is yet to be expected, when their yet expected Messiah, shall be come: no inconvenience or absurdity he thinks will be, to which soever it be applied.

This observation of his concerning the connexion of the words, it will not be amiss to observe, because among Christian Expositors ^a there are Some, who interpret what is here said, as to refer it to the Jews that returned from the Babylonish captivity, and their condition before Christ's coming: and if their opinion be followed, then perhaps will the connexion be more proper with the words immediately foregoing. Others, to the times of Christ after his coming in the flesh: and then may they be referred to all, not from the fourth verse only, but from the second also in a continued series, but with difference from what that Jew would have it, not as a promise which is not yet fulfilled, but which hath been already made good, and is still in making good, and shall be so till Christ's coming again at the end of the world.

The remnant of Jacob, &c.] In chap. iv. 7. he promiseth, that she that halteth, or was afflicted, should be made a remnant. By the remnant of Jacob here ^a Some understand those that should of them return from Babylon; ^b Others those of them, that should any where be left of them among the nations, and could not return home; ^c Others, those of them that should remain with God after they were tried or refined in the furnace of affliction, according to what he saith, Zeck. xiii. 19. And will refine them as silver is refined. ^d Diverse of Christian Interpreters expound it of the Apostles, and apostolick men, and such as should succeed them in the church for propagating the knowledge of Christ and his gospel. But probably this title may be extended to as many as the Lord should call, to all to whom the Apostle saith the promise was, Acts ii. 39. That remnant which should be saved, Rom. ix. 27. the remnant according to the election of grace, Rom. xi. 5. those whom our Saviour calls his little flock, Luke xii. 32. by a title well answerable to this of remnant of Jacob, or in a word, to the whole church and true members thereof, which in respect to the many, that are out of it, are but a remnant, and that remnant a remnant of Jacob, though not all according to the flesh sprung from him (as the first of them who were called were) yet all by faith the Israel of God.

To this remnant (however taken) are here great promises made, and peculiar privileges attributed, and those set forth under two similitudes of differing nature in different respects, in one they being compared to dew, in the other to a lion. ^e They shall be in the midst of many people, as the dew from the Lord, as the showers upon the grass, &c. Of these words are two somewhat different expositions given, the one of which maketh them a description of the condition of that remnant of Jacob in respect to themselves, how it shall be with them by

^a R. Tanchum. ^b David Kimchi, Chaldee and Syriack. ^c R. Tanchum. ^d Grotius, Tirinus.
^e Grot. ^f Aben Ezra, Abarinel, and see Pelican. ^g R. D. Kimchi. ^h Vatablus edit. 4to and 8vo, Ribera.
Menoch. Christ. à Castro.

by the blessing of God; the other in respect to others, or how they shall be to others among whom they are; the first ^z attributing those latter words, that tarrieth not for man, &c. as an epithet not to grafs, but to dew from the Lord and showers upon the grafs, and maketh out the meaning to this purpose; That as the dew and bigger rain, which falleth on the grafs; is only from God, and ^a so disposed of as he will, without man's help or disposal, so the remnant of Jacob shall depend only on God, and his goodness, not on man's help or contrivance, or assistance, and by his help and blessing shall in the midst of many people, many enemies encompassing and exposing them, be yet preserved and maintained, so as still to subsist and wonderfully on encrease to the admiration of those many that shall behold them. According to this exposition it will not perhaps be amiss (as a Divine of ^b great note observeth) by dew, or rain on grafs, to understand grafs, or fields of grafs, nourished, or refreshed by dew and rain, without the help and cultivation of men, by the sole hand and blessing of God.

The second way of exposition is, by referring those words that tarrieth not for man, to the grafs, by God's watering it with dew and rain from heaven, cherished and caused to grow and flourish; and so the meaning will be, that that blessed remnant shall be in the midst of those many people, among whom they are dispersed, by whom they are entertained, and received, and hearkened to, as beneficial to them, as dew from the Lord, as showers on the grafs, which cause them to grow, and flourish without the help of man; their doctrine shall drop on them as rain, their speech distil as the dew, as the small rain on the tender herbs, as the showers on the grafs, Deut. xxxii. 2. so they by their heavenly doctrine and good example and communicating of spiritual blessings, shall cause them, who are otherwise as uncultivated herbs and plants, to grow in grace and flourish in the house of God, and bring forth fruit unto him only by his blessing, and not by any art of man; Or, (as ^d a learned Jew thinks the words may be expounded) without expecting reward from men. To which may be added perhaps not unfitly, that they shall be thus beneficial to all among whom they live, by drawing down God's blessings on them for their sakes, as Laban confessed, that God blessed him for Jacob's sake, Gen. xxx. 27. and by cooling and mitigating God's wrath, which otherwise would speedily burn them up, if these were away, as the moistning dew and showers preserve the grafs and herbs from the scorching of the sun (see Gen. xviii. 26, &c. and xix. 22. and Mat. xxiv. 22. Mark xiii. 20.) This may be looked on as comprehended in, though not the main intention of the words.

A Jewish ^e Doctor expounding these words in this manner also, viz. as describing how the remnant spoken of shall be in behaviour towards these many people in the midst of which they are, makes the meaning of them to be, That they shall be loving to, and deal kindly with; those that deal courteously with them, and do good to them, as dew doth to the grafs, and that of their own good nature, without respect to profit or reward: to them, he means, and to them alone, being of contrary behaviour to others, as will appear by what he saith on the next words. And if this be all, that he thinks meant, surely he falleth far short of showing the duty and property of true Israelites (who by this remnant are meant) who are taught to do good to all men, Gal. vi. 10. to love not only those that love them, but also even their enemies, and to do good to them that hate them, Mat. v. 44. that they may be children of their heavenly Father, who sendeth rain on the just, and on the unjust. So must they be as the dew from the Lord, and as rain by him given in the midst of many people, striving to extend their good to all those many, that as many as are capable of receiving good by them may receive it. Mean while he may suggest to us another property, which the comparing them to dew and showers requires in them, viz. softness and gentleness in their behaviour, in the midst of those; or amongst those, that will receive them, and hear them; which will the better bring us to the consideration of what is meant in the second similitude; which is, that they shall be as a lion, &c. They, which shall be gentle and soft in their behaviour, as communicative of all good to those that will receive the truth, shall against all that oppose it, though many and strong, be of a lion-like courage, and by God be enabled with power to beat and tread down all before them, and prevail over them, so as none may resist them; as a lion doth over the beasts of the forest, and a young lion over the flocks of the sheep. This their power may well be described by the words of the Apostle, 2 Cor. x. 4, 5; 6. in that by the weapons of their warfare, which are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds, they cast down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth it self against the knowledge of God; and bring into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ: so hath Christ promised to them, a mouth and wisdom, which all their adversaries shall not be able to resist; Luke xxi. 15. This was made good in the Apostles, and such as have since succeeded them in their employment, and administration of Christ's kingdom; and others the true members thereof, and he will never leave his church destitute of a remnant of such valiant defenders of the truth and conquerors (through the power of his Spirit) of what is contrary to it: though all the powers of hell join their forces against them, they shall disperse them:

^f Some learned men refer what is here spoken to the times after the Babylonish captivity, and especially

^z R. D. Kimchi, Abarbinel, Munster, Grotius, Diodati.

Ravan. ^b Calvin.

nel. ^c Abarbinel.

^e Vatab. edit. 4to and 8vo; Ribera, Menoch.

^f Tirin. Grot.

^a Compare Psalm cx. 3. and see Flac. Illyr. and especially those of the Maccabees, wherein the Jews under valiant commanders overcame diverse strong enemies, and with lion-like courage set on them and brought them under; which though it may be granted, and their victories looked on as a fulfilling what is here spoken in part, yet sure it will appear to have been more evidently and fully made good since Christ's coming into the world, and setting up his spiritual kingdom among men by these conquests by his little flock obtained over the devil and the world, sin and error, never so deeply rooted and strongly backed, and all that may be comprehended under those names by the Apostle given them, Eph. vi. 12. of principalities, powers, rulers of the darkness of this world, and spiritual wickedness in high places.

Dutch Notes, Christ. a Castro: ^d Abarbi-

The conquering and dispersing these (as by the church of Christ in the power of his might and invincible force of his Spirit hath been wonderfully done) and converting rebellious sinners, are things of a higher nature, and signs of a greater strength and courage, than any that is shewed in the conquering and destroying the greatest and most potent nations that ever were on the earth, as to any temporal dominion or concerns, in as much as the bringing the minds of men into subjection is harder than the forcing their bodies. And sure though God's remnant have promises of temporal things as well as of spiritual, yet where such are mentioned as concern them as members of Christ's kingdom (as the things here spoken of from the second verse all along have been shewed to be) it is manifest, that they chiefly relate to their spiritual estate, the things thereto pertaining being the peculiar privileges of his church and flock as so, being a kingdom not of this world, and the happiness of that and them being according to those to be valued, whereby their dignity may be made appear not so much by their being great in this world, as their being great in the kingdom of heaven, and their prevalency not over temporal and carnal, but over spiritual enemies, which are worse, and require a greater force than those to subdue them; in the conquering of these is the strength of the lion of the tribe of Judah chiefly seen.

The Jew last cited saith, that as Israel shall deal kindly with those that have shewed kindness to them, so on the contrary shall they deal with their enemies that have done ill to them, behaving themselves towards some of them, to wit, the Assyrians, as a lion among the beasts of the forests, killing whom they please; and towards others, viz. the Edomites, (so they call Romans or Christians) to whom they have greatest hatred, as a young lion among the flocks of sheep, utterly destroying them, and suffering none to escape. You may see in them still the leaven of their old doctrine in their false interpreting of the law, by Christ reprov'd, Mat. v. 43, 44. Thou shalt love thy neighbour, and hate thine enemy;

but the Jews generally^b in expounding these words, run on in their old error, which they will not retract, viz. that the things here spoken concern a time not yet come, viz. when those nations by this man mentioned, or, (as others of them) when Gog and Magog shall come to fight against Jerusalem; because they will not acknowledge the Messiah, on whose coming the fulfilling of them depends, to be yet come: and again in that they expect them to be fulfilled, only in a gross literal sense, by a bloody massacre of their enemies with the edge of the material sword. We may make use of them as for finding out the signification of the words, as in other places, so in such passages of the Prophets also as concern Christ, his coming, and kingdom, and the privileges thereof; but as to the sense in such we must expect to have it as wide from the truth, as they can wrest it, being obstinately resolved not to acknowledge him as yet come.

9. Thine hand shall be lift up upon thine adversaries, and all thine enemies shall be cut off.

Thine hand shall be lift up, &c.] Thine hand (O remnant of Jacob.) That seemeth the nearest person to be understood, Thou shalt have the upper hand or victory over all that oppose thee. Others refer it to God, Thy handⁱ O God, ^k or, O Christ: it will come all to one pass; they doing what they do by the power of his might, and he being exalted and magnified in them by what they do by his power. What is to be understood here by the cutting off of the enemies^l may be taken from the former verse, they shall be cut off from being enemies, all (if understood of men) that makes them enemies to Christ, and his church, their sins and errors taken out of the way. Some^m of the Jews read, let thy hand be lift up, understanding the enemies as before, viz. adversaries to denote the sons of Esau, and Ismael, still looking for what is spoken as yet to come, as we have said.

10. And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord, that I will cut off thy horses out of the midst of thee, and I will destroy thy chariots.

11. And I will cut off the cities of thy land, and throw down all thy strong holds.

12. And I will cut off witchcrafts out of thine hand, and thou shalt have no more soothsayers.

13. Thy graven images also will I cut off, and thy standing images out of the midst of thee: and thou shalt no more worship the work of thine hands.

And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord, &c.] Here, that the connexion of the words may appear, is questionable, what is the time designed by that day, and who the

^a Abarbinel. and Tarnov.

^b R. D. Kimchi.
^m Abarbinel.

ⁱ Drusius, Christ.

^k Castro.

^l Sa. Menoch.

^l See Hierom. Ribera

person, or persons here spoken to are. Some among ^a Christians think; that the connexion is between these words and the first verse, as if all coming between were a parenthesis, and that the day here spoken of is the same with that wherein the things there mentioned were to be made good, and that the person here spoken to is the same that there, namely, Babylon, and that what here follows are threats and comminations to her, answerable to those things, that are elsewhere in Jeremy, and other Prophets threatned to her.

° A learned Jew thinks the words to be coupled not with the promises immediately preceeding, but with the threats, that were before by our Prophet denounced against the Jews, and Israelites, as containing farther threats, and so the time to be the same, in which the things before in this prophecy threatned against them shall have effect by their enemies coming on them, and they still the persons spoken of and to, and the words also to have connexion with what followeth, chap. vi. 1. Hear ye now what the Lord saith.

But to Others both Jews and Christians (the most of them) this breach seeming wider than so to resume the connexion of the words; they refer what is now spoken to the words immediately preceeding, and will have the time to be that wherein the things therein mentioned should be fulfilled, and the persons still spoken to, Israel (or the remnant of Jacob) and the words, though seeming to have the form of a threat, yet to be indeed a gracious promise of that peace, and security, which they shall enjoy, and have no need of seeking other helps, such as they and other nations then ordinarily made use of, but relying on God alone; and cleaving faithfully to him, shall find him all-sufficient to them; ^p yea therefore will he take from them such things, that they may learn to depend upon him: ^q so the Jews to this sense, I will cut off thy horses, &c. i. e. I will by giving thee firm and secure peace cause that thou shalt have no need of multiplying horses, or chariots, or walled cities, or strong holds: or, for fear of the enemies to fly to witchcrafts, and enchantments, or to soothsayers to direct thee when to fight with success, nor for want of help in me to betake thy self to idols, and to worship them. So that the cutting off, and destroying those things to them, and depriving them of them, will be in their sense the cutting off and destroying their enemies, the fear of whom made them formerly fly to them.

They do likewise cite their Chaldee Paraphrase, who goeth in a different strain, rendering, I will cut off the horses of strangers from among thee, and their chariots, and the cities of the people, and destroy all their strong towers, and I will cut off also witches from amidst thee, and thou shalt have no soothsayers, I will also cut off the images of the people, and their statues out of the midst of thee, and thou shalt no more serve the works of thine hands; and I will root out the plantations of the Gentiles from amidst thee, and destroy thine enemies. This paraphrase ^r they cite, as in confirmation of their own expositions; with which it agreeth indeed as to that, which they make the scope in general, to denote, that they shall enjoy peace and security, and trust in God, and serve him alone; but in this, much differs from it and from the text, in that what is attributed according to them, to Israel, is in it attributed to their enemies, their horses called their enemies horses, of which they give no reason; perhaps they might think they meant Israel themselves, tho' in respect to them they instead of their name put in their enemies, &c. lest the words, that seemed to import ill unto them, might be joined with it, as elsewhere ^s by the enemies of David they will have to be understood David, as 1 Sam. xxv. 22. and by the enemies of the Lord, the Lord himself, 2 Sam. xii. 14. making there the meaning to be, thou hast provoked the Lord, whereas the letter sounds the enemies of the Lord.

But a ^t Christian Interpreter makes farther use of the Paraphrast's expression, viz. for confirmation of his opinion, that these things here spoken belong to the times after Christ, and that the persons spoken to are not only those of Israel, but of all other nations, that should be converted to Christ, because else an objection might be made against it, for that after the return from the Babylonish captivity, and when Christ came, and since, the Jews were not guilty of idolatrous worships and witchcrafts, &c. that they should be promised to have them cut off from them, and that therefore the words cannot be looked on as a promise of good to them, and therefore that the horses and cities, and witchcrafts, and idols, are to be understood of such as were among other nations, who were to be converted to Christ, and so be made the remnant, and Israel of God, i. e. that those things in which they did before trust, and so hardly receive the gospel, he would now take away, or at least make them no longer to be the cause of their resisting the gospel, but that all should yield and give place to it. But though that which he saith be true as to the main, viz. that God's Israel comprehends as well the Gentiles that were to be called into Christ's church, as the Jews, and that there were among the Jews no idols, or idol worship at Christ's coming, and that this promise was to be fulfilled as well to the believing Gentiles as Jews, yet that there is need to interpret the words therefore, as if by the things named were to be understood those among the Gentiles, because at Christ's coming no such were among the Jews, or that the Chaldee Paraphrast meant them of those, is neither evident, or need to be insisted on, or scrupled at, because the Prophet seems to speak of things as they were in those times when

^a Grot. and see Christ. à Castro, and Stokes.

^o R. Tanchum, so Cyril. Alexand.

^p Calvin, Drusius.

^q R. Sol. Jarchi, Ab. Ezra, R. D. Kimchi, Abarbinel, and R. Tanchum mentioneth this way of interpreting though he approveth it not.

^r R. D. Kimchi.

^s Kimchi. R. Tanch. &c. See Kimchi de Rad. in ע"ז.

^t Ribera;

and see Sa. Menoch. and Tirinus.

when he spake, and to say that in future time, when God would fulfil his word here spoken by the Prophet, he would cause that it should be otherwise; they whom he speaks of should not make use of or confide in such things as they now did. That in the Prophets time such things were among the Jews, and they peccant in forsaking God to rely on them, appears by what is said in the Prophet Isaiah who was contemporary with Micah, Isaiah ii. 6, &c. Therefore thou hast forsaken thy people the house of Jacob, because they be replenished from the East and are soothsayers, &c. Their land also is full of horses, neither is there any end of their chariots, their land also is full of idols, they worship the work of their own hands.

Where we see are reckoned up such things, as are here mentioned, and their sin shewed to be their relying on and pleasing themselves in them to the neglect of God and his ways; so that well may here be understood that he saith, that for the future, the time here pointed at, he would cause that it should not be so with them, (and hence by the way may be taken another conjecture why the Chaldee Paraphrast should instead of thy horses and chariots, &c. put the horses of strangers, &c. viz. because these things they had from other people. (So * Some expound thy horses, i. e. the help of Egypt which thou reliest on to furnish thee with horses) or learned the use of them from other people, and used them as they did. But we need not be much inquisitive after his meaning, that being to be reduced to the text, and not the text to that. Mean while, that these words are to be looked on, as a promise for good to those whom they concern, viz. a promise of peace and security in God alone, and encouragement to rely on him alone, without dependence on any human helps or ways, rather than a menace of evil to those spoken to, we may well be inclined to think by the application of much the like words to the peaceable condition of the kingdom of Christ, * Zech. ix. 10. I will cut off the chariot from Ephraim, and the horse from Jerusalem, and the battle bow shall be cut off, and he shall speak peace unto the Heathen.

14. And I will pluck up thy groves out of the midst of thee: so will I destroy thy cities.

And I will pluck up thy groves out of the midst of thee.] Of what use consecrated groves were anciently, in the times of idolatry, we may easily perceive out of the ancientest records, viz. the books of Moses, as Exod. xxxiv. 13. where Israel being forbidden to make any covenant with the Amorites and Canaanites, and other idolatrous nations, are commanded to destroy their altars, break down their images, and cut down their groves (as wherein they worshipped, or did honour to their idols) as appears again, Deut. xii. 2, 3. Ye shall utterly destroy all the places wherein the nations, which ye shall possess, served their gods, upon the high mountains and upon the hills, and under every green tree, and you shall overthrow their altars, and break their pillars, and burn their groves with fire. So we read that Israel served Baalim and the groves, Judges iii. 7. and again, chap. vi. 25, 28. we read of Baal's grove; and the Israelites to keep them from idolatry are commanded not to plant a grove of any trees near unto the altar of the Lord their God, Deut. xvi. 21. notwithstanding which command, as Israel afterwards fell to idolatry, so they fell also to planting of groves to the honour of idols, and worshipping them in them. So Maacab the mother of Asa, made an idol in a grove, 1 Kings xv. 13. And Abab setting up the worship of Baal made a grove, 1 Kings xvi. 33. and had his Prophets of the groves, chap. xviii. 19. so of the grove in Samaria we have mention, 2 Kings xiii. 6. and that the Israelites doing things that were not right against the Lord, set them up images and groves, ibid. chap. xvii. 9, 10. and made them molten images, even two calves, and made a grove, ver. 16. and that Judah left the Lord their God, and served groves and idols, 2 Chron. xxiv. 18. by comparing which and like places will here easily be understood what is meant when he saith, He will pluck up their groves, viz. that he will take away those parts of idolatry also, whether the words be taken with some as directed to the Chaldeans, or with others to the Israelites, the use of groves in the worship of their idols having been common to both.

So will I, (or and I will, for so in the Hebrew) destroy the cities. In the Margin is put, or enemies, and so the Chaldee Paraphrast takes it. The word עִרִיץ Areca, in the Hebrew, signifieth both these, cities; and enemies, and so is that meaning to be given to it, which the sense of the place requires, or shows to be most convenient. Here therefore according to their several judgments some take one, and some the other. It is not unfitly observed by a * learned Jew, that if here the words be taken as a menace, or denouncing evil, then it must necessarily to make congruous sense be rendred cities, but if it be taken as a prediction of good, then it may be rendred either way. To what may be said, that it is not here to be taken for cities (though diverse Interpreters so take it) because he had before said, I will cut off the cities of thy land, ver. 11. some answer, that † there are meant cities of defence, here cities of idolatrous worship, in which were their groves and idols temples.

15. And I will execute vengeance in anger, and fury upon the Heathen, such as they have not heard.

And I will execute vengeance upon the Heathen such as they have not heard.] On that former exposition of most Christians, which interpret the preceding words from ver. 10. as a promise of good unto the church and believers, this will kindly follow, as showing how how much contrary it shall be with such as receive not his doctrine and refuse to obey. Having so disposed of things for the good and security of his subjects, on his enemies he will execute vengeance. But then most of them render the last words which have not heard, or will not bear, hearken to his word, or doctrine, or because they would not bear the law, saith the Chaldee, the preaching of the gospel, say Christians, and so refer the relative which to the Heathen. But the words are capable of that rendring which Ours give, and is by ^z Some others also approved, by referring it to the vengeance spoken of, viz. which or such as they have not heard of.

* R. Solomon. † See R. Sol. and R. D. Kimchi on that place. * R. Tanch. † Christ. à Castro. See Ab. Ezra.

That ^a Jew which (as we saw) takes the foregoing words as a threat against Israel, on the Jews here doth not take גוים Goim, (nations, or people) for the Heathen, but for the people of Israel, or those nations and people, (viz. Israel and Judah,) that God would take vengeance on them for their refusing to hearken to him, making it a continuation of the commination.

That ^b other Jew which expounded Israel's being as dew, &c. of their being kind and profitable to them that dealt kindly with them, expounds this, that God will severely punish those that would not hearken to them to pity and show kindness to them. Such as make the Babylonians or Chaldeans the persons spoken to, and here threatned with destruction: by those ^c that will not hear, understand such of those nations under that empire as should oppose Cyrus, and refer to Isaiab xlv. 1, &c.

There is another ^d Translation of great note, which making the words from the tenth verse to the end, a promise of good by Christ to his Church, gives yet a different construction of them from what we have seen, viz. For it shall be in that day, saith the Lord, when I shall have cut off thy horses out of the midst of thee, &c. (i. e. have much afflicted thee, and so purged thee from thy wicked doings and the instruments thereof) that I will destroy thy adversaries, and execute vengeance on the nations which have not heard. But this construction seems much more harsh, than that which is commonly received, and by Ours given; although Ours seem to express much the same that those Translators would have, by putting ver. 14. So will I destroy, instead of what Others put, and I will destroy, especially if, as in the Margin, we read, their enemies.

CHAP. VI.

VERSE I. Hear ye now what the Lord saith, Arise, contend thou before the mountains, and let the hills bear thy voice.

2. Hear ye, O mountains, the Lord's controversy, and ye strong foundations of the earth: for the Lord hath a controversy with his people, and he will plead with Israel.

VOL I.

U

re-

^z Calvin, Drusius. ^a R. Tanchum. ^b Abarb. ^c Grot. ^d Jun. and Tremel. ^e Grot.
^f Abarbinel. ^g R. David Kimchi. ^h Abarb.

HEAR ye now what the Lord saith, &c.] Although it be not necessary perhaps to seek for a connexion between every chapter, or all other passages in the books of the Prophets, in as much as they spake them at several times, and so when they committed them to writing, set them down as they were spoken, without necessary dependence of every part one on another, and so this might be looked on, as ^a a new address (as the Prophet was by the Spirit moved,) to the People: yet of the coherence between it and the foregoing parts of this prophecy, we may not unfitly take an hint from a Jewish ^b Doctor to this purpose; that whereas God had sometimes threatned to them heavy judgments to the destruction both of Samaria and Jerusalem, Israel and Judah, and then again given them gracious promises, of victory over their enemies, and great tranquillity and prosperity, lest any should thence take occasion to suspect, that his ways were not equal, and he not constant in his purposes, but various and changeable, one while intending and declaring one thing, then another, and repenting him at one time of what he had said or done at another; he here bids the Prophet to declare the methods of his proceedings to them, by rehearsing what he had done for them, and their forefathers, and what just things no way grievous were required of them, and how they behav'd themselves towards him, and laying open what transgressions they were guilty of, that so it may appear, that he was always inclin'd to mercy and to do them good, but that they by the unequal temper of their behaviour, and perverse rebellious carriage, provoked him to use severity towards them, and to deal with them in judgment, that he might not seem a patronizer of wickedness; the cause was from themselves and not from any inconstancy in him, the change in them, not in him, who was still the same, the Lord, the Lord God merciful and gracious, &c. but that will by no means clear the guilty, &c. Exod. xxxiv. 6, 7.

For making this evident therefore, the Prophet thus begins and bespeaks them, Hear ye now, ye people of Judah and Israel, what the Lord saith, &c. The Lord saith it, and therefore it requires their due attention, the Lord saith unto him, Arise, (O Micah) contend thou before the mountains, &c. The Margin hath, with the mountains, for so the particle אִתְּ Eth, more usually signifies, but it is by the Hebrew ^c Grammarians observ'd here to denote as much as אֵל El, to, or before, in presence of the mountains. The mountains and hills (saith a ^d learned Jew) are dead inanimate things, and cannot be guilty of sin, why then should he reprove them? The sense then must be (saith he) rebuke and reprove the sin of this people with such vehemence, publickly, and with so high a voice, that even those insensible creatures the mountains and hills may hear it; as much as to say, Contend with or reprove this people in the presence of the mountains, and that so loudly and vehemently, as if thou would'st make even those things, that have no sense of hearing, the very hills, to hear thy voice.

^c Some render, with the mountains, and let these hills bear, i. e. those of Judea that mountainous country: and then the mountains and hills may be taken for ^f the inhabitants of them. ^g Others think them cited as if they were guilty, because on them they worshipped idols and committed abominations. Others again ^h both Jews and Christians, by mountains and hills take the princes and great ones to be meant, as sometimes in scripture they are by those names designed, and then the particle with, must in its usual sense be understood, (but the controversy seems more general with all people.) The Chaldee Paraphrase is cited by the ⁱ Jewish Expositors as rendering mountains by fathers, and hills by mothers; as if he should call on Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and Sarah, Rebecca, Leah and Rachel, in their graves, to hear how ill they had requited the Lord for all his goodness shewed to them, (and so in some ^k Editions of the Chaldee it is read: but in others, and those more common, otherwise, viz. mountains and hills, as in the Hebrew.)

But there is no need of taking mountains and hills in any other than their proper signification, ^l it being agreeable to the language of the Scripture ^m elsewhere, when God speaketh, or any thing is spoken from him, and in his Name, the more to affect the hearts of men, and make what is spoken to sink into them and be attended to, to call in heaven and earth and lifeless insensible creatures as witnesses against them, and judges between God and them, for the solemnity of the matter, and to show the justice of what he doth or saith, and how more senseless and stupid they are in not hearkning and obeying than any of those lifeless creatures, which obey all his will as readily as if they had ears and were of quickest hearing. As they speak loudly without voice to declare ⁿ the glory of God, and witness to his truth, so do they hear without ears when the Lord speaks. Israel therefore refusing to hearken to the Lord, out of these doth he raise up such as shall hearken to him, and call on them so to do.

Hear ye, O mountains, the Lord's controversy, and ye strong foundations of the earth. Instead of hills in the first verse, here in the second verse is put ye strong foundations of the earth (or, ye strong ones the foundations of the earth:) so are the mountains and hills called, as the strongest and firmest parts of the earth, and therefore ^o likened to the pillars or foundations thereof. ^p They that by mountains understand the kings and princes of the world, seem by these to understand their deputies and magistrates, who do as it were sustain the pillars thereof, Psalms lxxv. 3. But it seems most convenient, as declaring the majesty of God, to retain (as we said) the proper signification of the words, mountains and hills.

These being summoned (as fit witnesses for their constancy and stability) to hear, he declares what they are called on to hear, viz. the Lord's ^q controversy with his people, and his impleading them for matters between him and them. He that is sovereign Lord of all, and cannot do any unjust thing, nor could be accused of injustice in doing what he will with his own, much less in punishing them who have done otherwise than they should, in rebelling against him and transgressing his commandments, yet with wonderful condescension, puts himself as it were on equal terms with this rebellious people, and ^r chusing rather to manifest his justice and equity than the right and power of his dominion, calleth in all creatures to be witnesses and judges between himself and them, of the justice and even necessity of his proceeding with them. That he may before all be justified in what he speaks, and ^s cleared in his judging (or contending) even themselves being judges, he gives in his reasons, and calls on them to give in theirs, or any arguments they can produce for themselves in their behalf, according to what he elsewhere saith, Isaiah xliii. 26. let us plead (or ^t let us be judged) together, declare thou, that thou may'st be justified; if thou hast any thing whereby thou mayest justify thy self, produce it, and let it be heard.

3. O my people, what have I done unto thee, and wherein have I wearied thee? testify against me.

[O my people, what have I done unto thee, &c.] Thus he begins his plea with them, by calling on them to produce what exceptions they have against him and his service; for their forsaking it might seem to import, as if he had ill treated them, and been an hard master to them. He bids them therefore, if they have any thing to say for themselves against him in that kind, to produce it. O my people, what have I done unto thee, and wherein have I wearied thee? ^u Some for explication add, What evil have I done unto thee? viz. that thou shouldst thus behave thy self towards me, as thou dost: Wherein have I wearied thee? What commands have I given thee, or what have required to be done of thee, the doing of which might be a trouble and wearisomness unto thee? because they were apt to say, What a weariness is it? Mal. i. 13. So that to this expression, will be agreeable what we have in the New Testament, His commandments are not grievous, 1 John v. 3. and what our Saviour saith, Mat. xi. 30. My yoke is easy and my burden light.

Others much ^v differently expound the first words, not understanding evil, but good, What,

^c Jun. Trem. ^f Grot. ^g A. Lapide, Tirin. Tarnov. ^h R. Tanchum, Vatab. Ribera. ⁱ R. D. Kimchi. Abarb. and see R. Tanchum, and R. Solom. ^k See Bib. Reg. Buxt. Polyglot, &c. ^l Ainsw. in Deut. xxxii. 1. ^m Isaiah i. 2. Micah i. 2. ⁿ Psalms xix. 3. Luke xix. 40. Hosea ii. 21. ^o Compare Deut. xxxii. 22. and Psalms xviii. 7. ^p Abarb. ^q See Hosea iv. 1. ^r Grot. Pelican. ^s Psalms li. 4. ^t Vulg. Lat. ^u Aben Ezra, R. D. Kimchi. ^v R. Solomon, Abarbincl.

What, i. e. how much, good have I done unto thee? how great mercies shew'd to thee? And then the following words much as before: and wherein I have wearied thee by my commandments, what trouble thou hast been put to in doing them, testify thou and declare. The Chaldee paraphraseth the former part of the verse, what good have I said that I would do to thee, and have not done it? which meaning may agree with either of the foregoing: and the latter part thus, and what hard [or grievous] infirmity have I multiplied upon thee? * as if he had respect to his preserving them continually in health in all their travel through the desert: and so some Others understand this, not so much of God's not wearying them with his commandments, as of his ^v not having in any kind put them to hardship and difficulties in their coming out of Egypt, and travel in the desert, through which he bare them as on eagles wings, Exod. xix. 4. and Deut. xxxii. 11, &c. and led them through the deep as an horse in the wilderness, that they should not stumble, Isaiah lxiii. 13, &c.

But the first of these expositions, as to the whole verse seems more naturally to flow from the words, and may be compar'd with and confirmed by what he saith, Jer. ii. 5. What iniquity have your fathers found in me, that they are gone from me? &c. and ver. 31. Have I been a wilderness unto Israel, and a land of darkness? the meaning of which a ^z learned Jew thus gives, Have I put upon them any great difficulty, or burdened them with any hard command, that they are fled from mine obedience?

Testify against me.] He challengeth them to produce their grievances, if they have any against him, before those mountains and hills summoned in to witness between them. If they have no such things on their part to produce, he hath his great benefits conferred on them and their forefathers, by which he deserved and might justly challenge their faithful obedience, to produce on his part: which therefore, to convince them of their great ingratitude, he proceedeth to recite.

4. For I brought thee up out of the land of Egypt, and redeemed thee out of the house of servants, and I sent before thee Moses, Aaron, and Miriam.

5. O my people, remember now what Balak King of Moab consulted, and what Balaam the son of Beor answered him from Shittim unto Gilgal, that ye may know the righteousness of the Lord.

For I brought thee up out of the land of Egypt, &c.] For the particle כִּי Ci, so rendred, ^a Others render otherwise, as, 1. When, 2. But, surely, 3. Although, and the like: but the coherence is by none made plainer than by reading it For, as it plainly signifies.

I brought thee up, &c. and redeemed thee out of the house of servants, i. e. out of the house or place of ^b servitude or bondage, where thou wert a servant. The words are the very same, that are used in the preface of the ten commandments, both Exod. xx. and Deut. v. and there rendred the house of bondage, and hath the same meaning here.

Diverse ^c both Jews and Christians mention here another reason of this appellation of house of servants, viz. that Egypt may be called so in respect of the Egyptians themselves, who were inheritors of that curse laid on their forefather Cham, and his son Canaan, that he should be a servant of servants unto his brethren, Gen. ix. 25. But this (however otherwise true) seems here rather a nicety not much to be insisted on, ^d though this may seem to heighten the greatness of the benefit of his redeeming them thence, where they were in most vile bondage and low condition, servants to servants.

And I sent before thee Moses, Aaron and Miriam.] The Chaldee thus paraphraseth these words, And I sent before thee three Prophets, Moses to teach the tradition, (or way, so I suppose מְסִירָה Mesirab, rather is, than tradition which is מַסְוִירָה Maforab) of judgments, i. e. to give them laws; Aaron to make propitiation for the people; and Miriam to instruct the women. (Aaron hath the title of Prophet given him, Exod. vii. 1. and Miriam of a Prophetess, Exod. xv. 20. where she went before the women in singing praises to the Lord for their deliverance from the Egyptians; and they both seem to challenge that title, as belonging to them, as well as unto Moses, Num. xii. 2.) These he saith he sent before them, i. e. gave them for guides to them to go before them, to conduct, instruct, lead, and assist them, both in their going forth of Egypt, and in their passage through the wilderness.

^e Some by his saying, that he sent them before them, understand, that he before hand, before their going forth out of Egypt, sent them to give them the joyful news of their deliverance, and prepare them for it. These being both true, and the word comprehending both, both may be looked upon as meant, to the minding them of all those benefits, that God made these three his instruments of conferring on the Israelites, from the first beginning of his great work of his redemption of them out of Egyptian bondage, as long as they continu'd together amongst them, which was even till the time of the next great work or benefit here particularly mentioned, viz. what concerns the story of Balak and Balaam, and so all from their first moving to come out of Egypt, until they came to Shittim, all God's wonderful works and mercies towards them, as in the books of Moses recorded; for before what is mentioned of Balak, Miriam died, Num. xx. 2. and so did Aaron, Num. xx. 28.

The putting them in mind therefore of what was done as well after their decease as before, is ushered

* See Deut. vii. 15. viii. 4. Exod. xv. 26. ^y Ch. à Castro. ^z R. Tanchum. ^a 1. Jun. Trem.
2. Kimch. 3. R. Solom. Jar. ^b Chald. Greek, &c. ^c Kimchi, Abarb. Vatabl. and others. ^d See Christ.
à Castro. ^e R. D. Kimchi.

ushered in with a new address, O my people, remember now what Balak King of Moab consulted, &c. consulted, i. e. ^f what counsel he took, viz. how he might by any means bring about their destruction. The story of what was agitated betwixt Balak ^g King of Moab, and Balaam the ^h Soothsayer is recorded, Num. xxii. xxiii. xxiv. Balak finding himself unable to accomplish his designs on Israel by force of arms, thought to do it by bringing God's curse upon them, for which end he sends for Balaam (who it seems had then the repute of an holy man and great Prophet) to come and curse them, for I wot, saith he, that he whom thou blestest is blessed, and he whom thou curstest is cursed, Num. xxii. 6.

How willing Balaam was to have complied with him in this pernicious design, is manifest by his carriage in the relation of the history, but God would not suffer either of them to have their will. Balak hired against Israel Balaam to curse them, nevertheless the Lord their God would not hearken unto Balaam, but turned the curse into a blessing unto them, Deut. xxiii. 4, 5. Joshua xxiv. 10. Whenever by building altars and offering sacrifice he sought to procure a curse against them, the message that was put into his mouth to return to Balak was a blessing, which he could not chuse but utter. So that he being forced to it said, how shall I curse whom God hath not cursed, or how shall I defy whom the Lord hath not defied? Num. xxiii. 9. and, behold I have received commandment to bless, and he hath blessed, and I cannot reverse it, ver. 20. He confessed that no enchantment could prevail against Israel, ver. 23. and in fine, therefore instead of cursing them, plainly pronounceth blessings upon them, and curses and destruction to those who would have had them cursed and destroyed, Num. xxiv. 15, &c. So that Balak's design in getting Balaam to curse Israel ⁱ seems that which is intimated by, remember what Balak consulted; and Balaam's blessing them instead of cursing them, that referred to by those words, and what Balaam the son of Beor answered him.

But there is one thing more in that history to be taken notice of for the fuller understanding of what is here spoken, and that is, that though Balaam could not by his curses prevail to hurt Israel, yet he sought and taught Balak by another way to attempt it, viz. by seducing them to do that, which if done by them should certainly pull down God's curse on them, viz. fornication and idolatry. ^k This is by Some thought to be intimated in what he saith to Balak, Num. xxiv. 14. I will advertise or counsel thee. But though no such counsel is there more fully exprest, yet it is afterwards, chap. xxxi. 16. where Moses reproving the people for saving alive the Midianitish women, saith, behold, these caused the children of Israel through the counsel of Balaam, to commit trespass against the Lord in the matter of Peor, to which also reference is made, Rev. ii. 14.

where 'tis said that Balaam taught Balak to cast a stumbling block before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed to idols, and to commit fornication. That counsel of his is there called the doctrine of Balaam, and that may, not perhaps unfitly, be here included in what Balaam answered to Balak, as calling to mind, as a great sin of their forefathers, so together a signal mercy of God, in not suffering that counsel to prevail to the utter destruction of them, but to end in the punishment of part of them only (viz. twenty-four thousand, Num. xxv. 9.)

And this ^l Some look on as chiefly here referred to, joining with these words the following, namely, from Shittim to Gilgal, making the meaning thus to be, And what pernicious council Balaam gave for working mischief to them in their passage betwixt Shittim and Gilgal, viz. that in all that way (as far as his dominions extended) he should send into the camp of Israel of the fairest of his women, to entice them to fornication, and consequently to idolatry; that so by that means, which he could not do by any enchantments, he might prevail to bring God's curse upon them: which counsel if it had taken effect, had certainly done what he intended. For being begun to be practis'd in Shittim, we see how it provoked God to send a plague among the people to the destruction of twenty-four thousand, Num. xxv. 9. and had it been seconded or continued in their further march toward Gilgal, had probably brought destruction on the whole people before they could arrive there, but was defeated by God's so timely taking notice of it, and by the early punishment of those that were at first seduced, and afterwards by the ^m cutting off the Midianitish women; who were intended to be a snare to them. So that the plot was dangerously on Balaam's part laid, and God's great mercy in defeating it was very conspicuous, and worthy to be had in remembrance.

But Others do otherwise expound these words, ⁿ some taking by the words, from Shittim to Gilgal, to be denoted the several stations to which Balak took Balaam, that he might view the camp of Israel, and curse them, (viz. those named, Num. xxii. 41. and xxiii. 14, 28.) but ^o those places were not between Shittim and Gilgal, but eastward of Shittim to the west of which Gilgal was: and if it be said, that it is meant, that thence he might see their camp, as it lay between Shittim and Gilgal, it will be again answered, that the camp then ^p pitched in the plains of Moab, did not reach farther than Shittim, nor seems to have been extended farther towards Gilgal.

Others therefore, ^q both Jews and Christians, disjoining the words, from Shittim unto Gilgal from these, and what Balaam answered him, and repeating the word, remember, as again having influence on these, thus supply the sense; And remember those things which I did for thee in the way from Shittim to Gilgal, from from Sbittim in the plains of Moab east of Jordan, where they sinned, (in the matter of Peor, Num. xxv. 3, 18.) and deserved all to be cut off, had not God been merciful to them, unto Gilgal on the other side of Jordan in the promised land. At Sbittim they abode till after Moses's death. From thence after Moses's death Joshua conducted them over Jordan (the waters of which were, as formerly the waters of the Red Sea under the conduct of Moses, miraculously divided to let them pass through as on dry land) unto Gilgal, where they first encamped in, and took firm possession of that promised land, which ever since they had enjoy'd: and there God renewed his covenant with them by renewing circumcision, which had been omitted in their journeyings through the wilderness, and so rolled away from off them the reproach of Egypt; for which cause the place had its name Gilgal, (which signifieth rolling.) Josh. v. 9.

^f Abarb. ^g Num. xxii. 4. ^h Joshua xiii. 22. Num. xxxiv. 16. ⁱ Ribera, Menochius, Tirinus. Castro, and Ribera. ^p Num. xxii. 1. and xxv. 1.

^l Ab. Ezra, R. D. Kimchi, Abarbinel. ^k Ainf. on ^m Num. xxxi. 17. ⁿ Tanchum. ^o See Ch. 2 ^q R. D. Kimchi, Munster, Vatablus, Grotius, Abarbinel.

So that as in the former words they are put in mind of all the great things, that God did for them under the conduct of Moses, and in his time, summed up, Josh. xxiv. 6, &c. so in these of those under the conduct of Joshua and after his death: and so, in summ, of all that he did from his first beginning to redeem them from bondage, and bringing them out of Egypt through the Red Sea, through the desert and through Jordan, till he had settled them in the promised land: and so consequently of all that he did afterwards for them there, in driving out of their enemies and settling them in it till this very time, wherein they had so far provoked him by their unthankful and rebellious behaviours, that he thought of casting them again out of it, and threatned by the mouths of this and other Prophets so to do, except they should prevent it by serious and speedy repentance, and new obedience, which all the Prophets, calling on them in his name, could not persuade them to.

All these things with the notorious circumstances attending them, and variety of transactions, whereby God manifested his infinite wisdom, power, justice, mercy, and truth, in his miraculous preservation of them, and destruction of, and defeating the counsels of their enemies, in his punishing them sometimes for their rebellions, yet in great mercy sparing and preserving the main body of them, and not suffering any good promise, that he had made to their fathers to fail, till he had fulfilled all, do these comprehensive heads of the story expressed put them in mind of. There was no need of reciting all particulars, they being things that they could not be ignorant of, being recorded in the books of the law and Joshua, and by mouth from the fathers, (according to God's command) all along from the time that they were first done, related to them; only they laid them not to heart, to make that use of them as they ought to have done, thence to take occasion of continued thankfulness, expressed in faithful adherence and obedience to God; so that they might justly be thought and said to have forgotten them: and therefore are by a brief mention of these main heads put in mind of them, and bid to remember them, that so they might know the righteousness of the Lord.

Righteousness.] צְדִיקוּת Righteousnesses; a word of latitude, according to several acts in which "righteousness shews it self, as of giving or doing what is right and just, uprightness in dealing, justice in judgments, and in dispensing punishments, and rewards, mercy, and beneficence, fidelity, and veracity, and justice in a cause: and to all 'tis applicable according as the place where it is used requires, and is here therefore indifferently interpreted by 'Expositors; Some, his just dealings in all matters betwixt Israel and their enemies, and in what concerned them among themselves according to their different behaviour, when they rebelled and when they obeyed, when they sinned and when they repented; " Some, the great mercies of the Lord shewed to them, and benefits conferred on them; " Some, the faithfulness of the Lord in making good all his promises made to their forefathers, notwithstanding all those impediments, which stood in their way, through the enemies endeavours and their own rebellions and sins. Whichsoever of these be taken, the thing will be true, and the word may well be taken in its full latitude as it comprehends all these and ought of like kind, for examples of all its meanings and all that it can import, will be afforded in the histories pointed out, and they will instruct them to know the righteousness of the Lord taken in what sense or notion you will; yea, though we should not look back on all those passages from Egypt to Gilgal, but only on those from Sbittim to Gilgal; as some seem more particularly to refer these words only to them. So the Chaldee Paraphrase. Have not great things been done for you, from the plain of Sbittim to the house, or place, of Gilgal, that the righteousness of the Lord might be made known? * and some Christian Interpreters, who for making the words as they suppose the plainer, (though the usual reading seem more plain) render thus, that thou mayest acknowledge the righteous dealings of the Lord from Sbittim to Gilgal, and say, &c.

But though all these may (as we said) agree to the sense of the words, and be looked on as true, yet if we look to the words foregoing, wherein God saith that he hath a controversy with Israel, and calls on them, as it were to plead the case, and debate the matter with him, before witnesses, that it may appear on which part the right stood, or the fault lay, that he hath taken up a quarrel against them, and it will seem perhaps a closer and more natural way of making the inference, or giving the meaning to expound them, that ye may know (or that it may be known, for the word is only

* Josh. iii. 1.

* Moreh Nevochim. Nic. Fuller concord.

* Pisc. Tarnov. Dutch Notes; see R. Tanchum.

* Cal. Diodat. Grot. Drusus, R. Tanchum.

* Vat. Ribera Tirinus, Menoch. Sa. Diodat, &c. and Christ. à Castro.

* Junius and Tremellius.

only למען דעת Lemaan Daat, to know; or, for knowing, without expressing the person) the righteousness of the Lord, i. e. ⁷ that the right of the cause is on his side, and he is very just in what he doth now, in accusing thee of ingratitude, and threatening to punish thee for it, that there is no injustice in his doings (and so may it be compared with that expression, Psalms li. 4. above-mentioned.) Those great things done for them which he calls to their mind, and pleads, are manifest evidences on his part against them, to justify him: they having nothing to answer for themselves, or testify against him, what shall they do but as men wholly convicted, and in great confusion, say as follows.

6. ¶ Wherewith shall I come before the Lord, and bow my self before the high God? Shall I come before him with burnt offerings, with calves of a year old?

7. Will the Lord be pleased with thousands of rams, or with ten thousands of rivers of oil? Shall I give my first born for my transgression, the fruit of my body for the sin of my soul?

[Wherewith shall I come before the Lord, &c.] This abrupt, passionate, form of speech seems to require something to be understood, and supplied, whereby it may be joined to the preceding words, and that ² Some would have to be and mayest say: which then must be understood with some caution, not as if the Prophet should suggest to them words, which he thinks convenient that they should, or he would have them to say (because they are such as he could not but know were not to be said, being not agreeable to the ways of worship for making atonement, and pacifying God, by God himself in the law prescribed, who would not be pleased with any other things than what he himself chose, being not profited by any, nor accepting of any, but what himself approved) but rather mentioning them as such, which probably they would be ready to say, being convinced of God's righteousness in his plea, and having nothing to testify against him, or answer for their own justification: as if they should say, We confess God's righteousness, and acknowledge all that he hath said to be true; and that he hath better deserved at our hands, than we have repayed him, and would be glad therefore by any means, and on any terms to make our peace with him. If offering those ordinary oblations, which the law required (which as speaking in their person he may seem to intimate they would say they had not failed in) will not suffice, what else shall we do? be it offerings of things never so expensive (as by those hyperbolical expressions of thousands of rams, and ten thousands of rivers of oil seems denoted) or things never so dear, or precious to us, our children, yea the dearest of them, our first born, all of these would we willingly offer for making atonement for our sins, whereby we have provoked him, and for appeasing him, if all would do.

Not much different as to the meaning will be what ^a Others supply, viz. If any of you (or every one of you for his particular) shall say, wherewith shall I come before the Lord, &c. On all hands it will be agreed that the words are spoken by the Prophet, as in the person of the people (agreeable to what their behaviour shewed to be the thoughts of their hearts) as a reply to what God hath said in his plea against them for evidencing his own righteousness, and their great ingratitude, whether we look on them as an acknowledgment, that they are convinced of their own guiltiness, and desire to acknowledge their sins, and repent of them, which they would testify by any means, if they knew what would be accepted, or suffice in that kind: tacitly implying that he had not wearied them in any service, but ^b that there was nothing so wearisome, or troublesome, or expensive, which for pleasing him they ought not to do, or would not willingly do; or whether as a justifying of themselves, ^c That all was true indeed that God had said; and as for themselves if they had been defective in their duty, and so displeased him, it was through ignorance, because if they might be informed what would please him, were it never so great a matter, they would willingly do it.

However it be, the Prophet by putting this question in their name in these terms, ^d makes way for informing and instructing them in the true means of pleasing God, which, as in answer to their question, he declares in the following words. But before we come to those words, wherein he positively sets down, what things God required, and was to be pleased with, we must necessarily suppose a denying the things in this question on their parts expressed to be pleasing, or acceptable to him, viz. multitude of oblations and sacrifices above what he required in his law, as if by the greatness and preciousness of them their pardon were to be bought out. Offerings and sacrifices were indeed in the law of God's own institution, but those all of such nature as God might, for all that he had commanded, justly ask, wherein have I wearied thee? They were neither so costly, nor so many, as that they had reason much to be aggrieved at; they were all of such things as were at hand easy to be gotten, and of the store wherewith he had blessed them, so that ^e if any were poorer than others, in many of them regard was had to his poverty. And that they might know, that it was not the value or great price of the offering that he looked after, appears, in that for greater sins oblations ^f of lesser value were enjoined, and for ^g some great sins none at all; that thereby the heinousness of them might appear. And to think therefore, that by adding to the sacrifices, which God had prescribed in the law, as by changing single beasts into thousands of the best sort, or instead of beasts to offer, to sacrifice, the dearest of their children; could be no safe rule to go by in seeking to appease the wrath of God for their sins, and present themselves acceptable in his sight ^a. They were not to add to, no more than to diminish from what he commanded, Deut. iv. 2. and xii. 32. Therefore did their offerings even of such things as he allowed and required to be offered at any time please him, because offered in obedience to his commands, and of such things, for such ends, and in such a manner, and with such a mind in them rightly prepared and disposed according to his will in his word declared, not for any thing otherwise of intrinsic goodness in the things themselves, or the value or multitude of them which he esteemed. And for this cause, because they thought otherwise, and neglecting those other circumstances, whereby the offerings were to be made acceptable, and were never without them, thought to please him with sacrifices, and oblations, as if the bare offering them and external performance, were as much as he required, and a sufficient performing of their duty, whereby they should gain his favour, is it that we often hear him reproving them even for their legal sacrifices, and rejecting them with indignation, as things which he delighted not in, but even loathed and hated, as Isaiah i. 11, &c. lxvi. 3. Jer. vi. 20. Amos v. 22, &c. and as things that though by them he thought good under the law to exercise them in obedience to him, and ⁱ to instruct them and bring them to repentance and faith, yet were not ^k his prime and main intention, nor things which merely of themselves could please him; as appears, Jer. vii. 21, 22, &c. Here therefore is most true what ^l Some say, though it seem not the proper construction, or interpretation of the words, Shall I give, or offer in sacrifice my first born? This would be my transgression, (it would be a very great wickedness and not fit for me to do;) or shall I offer for a sacrifice the fruit of my body? this would be the sin of my soul; and how shall I do this great wickedness? It is certain, that however with the greatest zeal and shew of desire to be reconciled to God, they should have pretended, and been willing to have done any such thing, (and ought if he had required to have been willing) yet this (as the case stood) had been but more and more to provoke, not to appease him, by offering such things never by him required, as though of the greatest esteem in their own eyes, yet were to him an abomination; ^m however in their idolatrous worships they were commended and looked on as most meritorious acts. And therefore this question, for what end soever put by the Prophet in their person doth so necessarily include a negative answer [No, thou shalt not come before the Lord with such things; he will not be pleased with thy giving such things] that taking it as granted, he doth not farther insist on it, but proceeds in positive terms, to instruct them what is pleasing to God, and what good for them to do, and required, that they may in acceptable manner come before him, and that they may find acceptance with him.

⁷ The word righteous is so used, Gen. xxxviii. 26. Deut. xxv. 1. Jer. xii. 1. ² Junius Tremellius, Grot. and see R. Tanchum. ^a R. D. Kimchi, Aben Ezra, Ch. à Castro. ^b See Abarinel. ^c See Paræus. ^d R. Tanchum, Corn. à Lapide. ^e See Levit. v. 11. chap. xii. 8. and chap. xiv. 21. ^f Moreh Nevochim. lib. 3. cap. xlv. Grot. on Levit. iv. 3. ^g Grot. de satisfactione, cap. x. and on Psalms li.

8. He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?

He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good, &c.] This is an answer given by the Prophet to the question in the preceding words, put as in the person of the people, or any of them, and gives a full resolution to the main of the question, viz. what it is wherewith the Lord would be pleased, though not such as perhaps they who would put the question in such terms as it is put, did, or would expect, for they make their question concerning things without themselves, by what in that kind they might please him, as taking it for granted that by such things God was to be pleased: not making question of any thing within themselves, or how their own hearts and minds were to be disposed, and their conversation was to be ordered. But the answer respects only this, with exclusion of the other, as without this not worth the mentioning, and of no value, yea rather abominable in the sight of God. Their whole flocks and herds, yea their dearest children would they part withal to make satisfaction for their sins, ⁿ but mention not the parting with those sins, or rectifying their inward man, and amending their ways. This in their eyes was a great offer, a way to gain acceptance, but he shews them that in this they were clear mistaken, God looking to them and their behaviour, not the greatness, or costliness of their offerings; and therefore that if they would in acceptable manner come before him, and have him pleased, they must bring with them, not what seems good in their own eyes, but what he hath shewed them to be good, and hath required, so that without that it is in vain to talk of, or pretend to offer any other gift, though never so costly, or of things without themselves, never so dear to them.

This, except willingly, they could not be ignorant of, so that they might have made themselves answer, or not needed at all to put this question, for he had shewed it to them, and declared it in his law, wherein he had plainly set down all that he required of them. Yet doth the Prophet summarily repeat it to them, and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, &c. What but these things? so as that all other things required are but in order to these, or with supposal of these, and without these neither good nor required; so where he seems to reject those sacrifices which otherwise the law enjoined, as by them offered, he doth explain what was the main thing by him intended, and required, so as that without it the outward performances signified nothing. So Isaiab i. 11, &c. when he had shewed that the multitude of their sacrifices to him was to no purpose, &c. he saith, Wash ye, make you clean, put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes, cease to do evil, learn to do well, seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, &c. So Jer. vii. 22, 23. telling them that he spake not to their fathers concerning sacrifices, he adds, but this thing commanded I them, saying, Obey my voice, &c. And so Amos v. 22, &c. telling them, that he will not accept their burnt-offerings, &c. that they may know, wherewith to be accepted, he adds, ver. 24. But let judgment run down as waters, and righteousness as a mighty stream. To the same purpose, Hosea vi. 6. saith he, I desired mercy and not sacrifice, and the knowledge of God more than burnt-offerings: as Samuel told Saul, 1 Sam. xv. 22. Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt-offerings and sacrifices as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams.

^a Prov. xxx. 6. ⁱ Calv. ^k Moreh Nevochim. lib. 3. c. xxxii. See Abarb. ^l And so the Syriack and Arabick Translations. ^m Jer. vii. 31. ⁿ See Calv.

These and the like places all aim at the same thing that the words of the Prophet here, though the terms be different, all shewing that the offering of a man's self to God, by forsaking his sins, and ordering his conversation aright before him, is that which is good and acceptable in his sight, and required more than, and preferred before, all oblations, and outward pompous ceremonious performances or shew of worship to him; and all speak that which was before said in the law (and is noted in the Margin of our Bibles in this place,) And now Israel what doth the Lord thy God require of thee, but to fear the Lord thy God, to walk in all his ways, and to love him, and to serve the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, to keep the commandments of the Lord and his statutes, &c. Deut. x. 12, 13. There being put the same question that here, what doth the Lord require of thee? but, with what follows as in answer to it, shews the duty required in both places to be the same, and the words to aim at the same thing, though in sound they differ.

Now the whole of that duty is here comprehended in three parts, or summed up under three heads. First, To do justly. Secondly, To love mercy. Thirdly, To walk humbly with God. To which will easily be reduced all the commandments of the law; those concerning our duty to our neighbour, and our behaviour towards him to the two former; those concerning our duty to God and our carriage before him to the last. To do justly, to give to every one, whether superiors, equals, or inferiors their due, to do in all things what is equal and right, not oppressing any, nor defrauding them, in dealing with them in any kind, not to hurt them by word, or deed, nor injure them in their persons, estates, or good name, or any thing belonging to them.

It comprehends (saith a ^p learned Jew) all those commands, which are concerning a man's behaviour, or dealing, between a man and his neighbour. ^a Another, saith that what it imports is justice and equity, and implies the taking away all fraud and injuriousness between men, and likewise comprehends the avoiding such greediness in following the desires, or lusts, as is hurtful to the soul, and such excess in pursuit even of such things as are needful, as is hurtful to the body, in as much as משפט Mishpat, judgment, right, or just dealing, is the bringing of every one that hath right to his right.

^r Some Christians so far extend it as to comprehend all that is due from a man to God, to men, and to himself, that in all these he give to each what is his due and right, and perform what justice requires. ^s Others restrain it to a man's doing justice, or judgment in judging himself impartially for his sins, not indulging to them, or sparing them for his own sake, or the love he hath to them, but condemning them in himself, and himself for them, and so labouring by judging himself, by casting away his sins and repenting of them, to prevent that he be not judged of the Lord.

In all these ways the word may be perhaps not unfitly applied, and in other like which it may in its latitude comprehend, and so (as ^t Some will have the meaning to be) to require obedience to God in all that he requires to be done (all his commandments being true, just and righteous, and the perfect rule of justice.)

But comparing these words with those that follow, ver. 10, 11, 12. we may think doing justly to be more particularly here referr'd to what is required in mens dealings between themselves, and others, or their behaviour in their dealing with them, and so are a summing up of the duties of all the commandments of the second table, containing our duty towards our neighbour, and requiring the performance of them, according to the rule of justice.

And if there be ought, which the rule of charity may add in the performing of them, above what men willing to do no more than in rigour of justice they may think required of them, that is shewed in the next words to be amongst that good which God also requires of them: viz. To love mercy, not only to give to every one what they might in justice ^u according to mens laws and known right require, but to be kind, merciful, pitiful, exercising all acts of charity and beneficence, which the letter of the law would not force them to, whereby they might be in any kind helpful to any, and remitting of their own right for the good of others, not being harsh, cruel, hard hearted toward them, or exacting upon them; and this willingly, cheerfully, and out of choice, and without expecting recompence from them, as the

^o See Psalm l. 14.
^f See Tarnovius.

^p R. D. Kimchi

^q R. Tanchum.

^r Tirinus.

^s Ribera, Ch. à Cañro.

^t לפני משורת הרין Abarb.

the word love imports. And this also refers to the commandments of the second table, as the meaning of them is summed up by our Saviour, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thy self, Mat. xxii. 39. Mark xii. 31. agreeable to that comprehensive rule of his, All things whatsoever you would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them, Mat. vii. 12. and to that precept of the Apostle, To do good, and to communicate forget not, for with such sacrifices God is well pleased, Heb. xiii. 16. Such he here requires. For the question being put concerning what sacrifices would be acceptable to God, the answer mentioneth not any such as were named, as by them intended, but shews this ^a to be good, and required.

These two heads seeming thus to refer to, and comprehend the duties of the second table, the third comprehends those of the first, viz. And to walk humbly with thy God [or to humble thy self to walk, or in walking with thy God.] To walk with God is to frame the life and conversation in respect to God, or for what concerns a man's behaviour before him, or towards him in all things, that may concern a man betwixt him and God, or pertain to his duty towards him: so the sense here seems to require that it be understood, though elsewhere it may seem to signify to adhere to God, and ^a to please him, as Gen. v. 24. it is said Enoch walked with God, which by the Apostle is interpreted he pleased God, Heb. xi. 5.

In, or for, such walking, it is required of a man, that he humble himself. This humbling himself or humility is requisite and is to be shewed, in his doing, in his suffering, and in his assent, or believing. 1st. In doing, by his ready taking on him his yoke, and submitting to all his commandments without grudging, or resisting (^a contrary to that stiff-neckedness so often complained of in the Jews) and not looking on his own performances as profitable to God, or deserving ought ^a from him, but saying when he hath done all, I am an unprofitable servant, I have done what was my duty to do (as our Saviour teacheth us to say, Luke xvii. 10.) ^a contrary to pride, or confidence in his own doings, and requiring an abasement of himself, out of consciousness of his own ill deservings, and a reliance only on God's mercy and goodness for acceptance, and so working out his salvation with fear and trembling, Phil. ii. 12.

Secondly, In suffering, viz. ^b that he take in good part whatsoever God shall please to lay on him, and humble himself in the sight of God, James iv. 10. and under his mighty hand, 1 Peter v. 6. and in whatsoever he shall suffer according to the will of God, committing the keeping of his soul to him in well doing, as unto a faithful creator, 1 Peter iv. 19. without grudging and repining against him, as if he suffered more than he deserved.

Thirdly, In his assent, and believing, by not replying in any thing against God, Rom.

ix. 20. not murmuring, not disputing against any of his commands, Phil. ii. 14. but readily assenting to all that he hath said, or required to be believed, as undoubtedly true, and to whatsoever he hath commanded, as necessary to be obeyed, and performed, however contrary the one may seem to man's reason, or the other to his interest, ^c not raising doubts, or scruples against either, and acquiescing in his revealed truths and will, without searching after the hidden things of God, or things too high for men to comprehend.

Others (most ^d of the Jews) render the word (according to a signification of it used in their Rabbins) to walk in secret, i. e. in sincerity, and uprightly, as heedfully in secret, where no eye of man sees, as in publick in the sight of all, so making it their end to please God and approve themselves to him, not to make a Pharisaical shew before men, or gain applause from them. Such behaviour as our Saviour commends in alms, prayer, fasting, and consequently all such acts of piety, as require, not men, but God, which sees in secret, to be Witness to, and Judge of them, Mat. vi. 1, &c.

This little differs from the former meaning; they necessarily go together, sincerity and humility, and they cannot be one without the other, both excluding all pride, and ostentation, and stubbornness, and contradicting.

There are other Translations which render ^e to walk solicitous with God, ^f Others to be ready or prepared to walk with God. We need not go to prove, that the word hath these significations, as well as the two former, for as long as it signifies either of the former, either of these will be included in the meanings, and not ill express it: for whosoever walketh humbly, or sincerely with God, will be very solicitous in the performance of his duty, that he avoid all things offensive to God, contrary to his will, or word, and be very diligent also in serving him, ready to assent to all that he shall say, and to submit to all that he shall require his obedience in.

The words however taken, manifestly (as we said) refer to the commandments of the first table, comprehending, as ^g a learned Jew notes, the acknowledging of one God, and the loving him with all the heart, and with all the soul; and so plainly agree with that sum of that table given by our Saviour in the forecited Mark xii. 29, 30. The Lord our God is one Lord: And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength. The performance of which, together with the other (summing up the second table) which there follows, but is here put in the first place, (as they cannot be separated by any that will please God, and walk uprightly with him) the scribe there saith, agreeable to what is here intimated, is more than all burnt-offerings and sacrifices, which were never required, nor accepted,

^a See Hosea vi. 6. above cited.

^x Ribera.

^y Aben Ezra.

^z Ch. à Castro.

^a Calvin.

^b Heb. xii.

⁵ Tarnovius.

^c Ababinel.

^d R. D. Kimchi,

R. Tanchum, Ababinel.

^e Vulg. Lat.

^f Greek, Syriack, and Arabick.

^g R. Sol.

cepted, but as subservient to these necessary duties, at all times and at all places good and required, whereas those were not in themselves absolutely good, nor required, nor accepted, but with regard to time and place and other circumstances, yea, when not rightly offer'd, ^h abominated, even such as were otherwise permitted by the law, how much more such which ⁱ God commanded not, neither came into his heart, such as some in the foregoing verse mentioned. Now the Jews, or Israelites, as appears by the following verses, stood guilty of the neglect and breach of all these duties of doing justly, ver. 10, &c. of loving mercy, ver. 12. of walking humbly, sincerely, or carefully with God, ver. 16. and so long as they continued so, it was in vain for them to enquire with what sacrifices they may come before the Lord, or he may be pleased and appeased. If they should offer all things most dear to them, they shall not be able to appease him, or turn away his wrath: He continues to cry out against them for their sins, and threaten them with his severe judgments, as ^k the following part of the chapter declares.

9. The Lord's voice crieth unto the city, and the man of wisdom shall see thy name: Hear ye the rod, and who hath appointed it.

The Lord's voice crieth unto the city, and the man of wisdom shall see thy name: Hear ye the rod, and who hath appointed it. That there is difficulty in this verse appears by the different expositions that are given of it, according to the several judgments of Interpreters. The plainest amongst which seems that, which is given by divers both Jews and Christians, agreeable to what our Translators read in the text, which a learned ^l Jew thus expounds; By the city is meant either Samaria, or Jerusalem: and whereas in the text is said only wisdom, there is to be supplied man [the man of wisdom] will see thy name, i. e. will apprehend the greatness of thy power, and learn it; and that which he cries, or proclaims, is what is said, Hear the rod, i. e. take notice of the punishment, and know who hath stirred it up, and prepared or ordered it, using the name of rod for punishment, because punishment is inflicted by it, or it is an instrument of punishing. ^m Another much to the same purpose, The Lord's voice, that is, the word of the Prophet prophesying in the name of the Lord, cries to the city, that is, the people of the city, viz. Jerusalem, or Samaria, calling on them to return by repentance; but when I the Prophet, says he, proclaim thy words in the midst of that city, only he that is a man of wisdom among them will see in the midst of his heart thy glorious name, and that it is meet to bow before it when the Prophet mentions it, and mentions his word; but other men will not see: and that man of wisdom faith to them, Hear the rod, i. e. the rod of punishment, saying, hear how grievous this decree is, and hear who hath appointed this decree to bring it, for he that hath appointed it, can bring it to pass, as he hath appointed it, because there is power in his hand.

These explications seem to give the meaning of the words in the plainest sense, and most agreeable to the letter of the words, of any; yet will it be expedient for the judging of this, to take notice of others given by Interpreters both ancient and of great authority.

The Chaldee Paraphrase thus expounds them, ⁿ With their voice the Prophets of the Lord cry unto the city, and the teachers fear the name [of the Lord.] Hear, O king and rulers, and the rest of the people of the land.

A Jewish ^o Rabbin notes, that he interprets not according to the letter: yet need we not therefore with ^p Some, who approve the sense by him given, conjecture that he read the words in the Hebrew text, otherwise than they are now given: he might take the liberty of a paraphraser, to give more at large (not tying himself close up to the words) that which he took to be the meaning. Only we may observe, that what those before rendred ^q to see, he will have to signify fear; and so do Others also (as we shall see;) and what is by them rendred rod he seems to take for scepter (as it seems elsewhere taken) as Psalms cx. 2. and so to denote the king, or ruler to whom it belongs, and then perhaps he might take the following words to signify, And he who (or whosoever) espouses, or owns it, i. e. acknowledges himself a subject to that scepter, or to those that hold it, which are the rest of the people of the land. This seems nearer than to introduce a different reading (as Grotius doth for ומי יעראב Umi yeadab, reading ומי יעראב Rame veadah.) But this man hath the liberty of a paraphrast.

Among those that only translate, the LXX. or Greek render, The voice of the Lord shall cry to the city, and shall save those that fear his name. Hear, O tribe, and who shall adorn the city? The Vulgar Latin, The voice of the Lord crieth unto the city, and salvation shall be unto them that fear thy name. Hear, O tribe, and who will approve it?

In these it is manifest, that what is in the first mentioned Translation rendred wisdom, viz. תושב Tushbiab, is taken for salvation, or safety, not because they read the word in the Hebrew otherwise than now it is, as ^r Some think, but because they took it to signify salvation, as it is elsewhere also rendred in the Greek, as John xxx. 12. and Prov. ii. 7. both in the Greek and Vulgar Latin. That likewise which is rendred see, they take to signify fear, as the Chaldee doth, the words that signify the one and the other being very near in sound, and differing only in the last letter, for as ייראב yireb, with ה He, in the end doth signify nify shall see, so יִירֶא yire with yod in the end signifies those that fear, or are fearing. And it was anciently an opinion of * a Jew of note, that the ה He or H in the end was but substituted for i or yod (as quiescent letters having the same sound are not unfrequently put one for the other without change of the signification) and the word had the signification of fear, and the sense to be, they will learn wisdom, that fear thy name. Though Aben Ezra thought he was out, yet many we see of great authority are of the same opinion with him, so far as to take the word in the signification of fear.

^h Prov. xxi. 27. ⁱ Jer. vii. 31. ^k See Aben Ezra, of this way of connexion. ^l R. Tanchum. ^m R. D. Kimchi. ⁿ Or perhaps, the voice of the Prophets of the Lord cry unto the city. ^o R. Solomon. ^p Grot. ^q Viz. ומי ייראב yirah. ^r Capellus, Crit. fac. p. 277. See Buator. Vindic. p. 682.

Then as to the word מַטֵּה Matteh, which is rendred rod, they preferring another signification, which it elsewhere often hath, render it tribe. The last word also which we render appointed it, the Greek rendring shall or will adorn, may seem to refer it to another root, viz. as if it were a future tense from עָדָה Adah, to adorn; yet it may be probable enough that they might think the word יָעַד yaad, which more usually signifies to appoint, order, or prepare, might so far extend it self, as to signify also to adorn. And the Latin gives to it the signification of approving, and the Syriack of testifying to, rendring the whole verse, The voice of the Lord upon the city preacheth doctrine to those that fear his name, Hear, O tribe, him who witnesseth; although these also may seem to refer the word to another root, as a more † modern Translator, who gives it the same signification, doth seem to Some to have done, viz. † to that root from whence is עָדָה Ed, a witness, and is by them blamed, in regard that no such form, as the word is now read in, can thence be regularly deduced. But the author of that modern translation shews them to be out in their conjecture concerning his reason of so rendring it, seeing he in a ‡ Dictionary by him compiled, doth to the root or verb יָעַד yaad, for which they supposed him by mistake to have taken another, give in the first place, as the prime of all, the signification of witnessing, as he will have a word from the same root also to signify, Job ix. 19. as the Vulgar Latin there also so rendreth it: so that if he be mistaken it is not because he mistook the root, but because he gave to the root a signification that they think it hath not, but he thought it to have.

Farther yet, by reason of the different acception of the words, much variety is there among Interpreters, both Jews and Christians. As for the Jews, * one of good antiquity who translated the Scriptures out of Hebrew into Arabick, renders the words, The voice of the Lord of the worlds crieth or proclaimeth to the city, and he that hath wisdom [or understanding] will proclaim in thy name بِسْمِكَ besmekā, or will declare thy name, Hear the rod, and who hath threatned it [or with it.] The greatest difference in this is, that the word rendred, shall see, he seems to render shall shew, or declare, or make known, although otherwise the word which he useth ينادي yonadi, in another way of construction, viz. not with the preposition Be, but with an accusative case may signify shall, or will know, or see, as well as to make known or declare; and in which sense he took it may be doubted.

Another of good note (viz. R. Solomon Jarchi) thus expounds the words to this meaning, The voice of the Prophets of the Lord to the city, who preach to them repentance, and the Prophet crieth or preacheth to them [תוֹשִׁיבֵי תוֹשִׁיבֵי Tusbiab] wisdom, [even the Prophet] which sees thy name, that sets his heart to understand and see thy ways, [so that תוֹשִׁיבֵי Tusbiab, wisdom, is referred to the word crieth going before]: Incline your ear, and hear the rod of revenge or punishment which shall be upon you or chastise you, which the Prophets warn you of, and hear who it is which hath appointed that revenge (or punishment) whether he hath power to make good what he hath decreed. This exposition differs but little from what we saw in the other Jews, and takes the words much in the same signification.

But another, † a learned man, and of some antiquity, differs much in the acception of one word, viz. לָעִיר lair, which Others render to the city, and interprets it to awaken or stir up, viz. to repentance: and that the word may so signify, and (as to the present verse, if taken by it self) would make a good sense, is no doubt, but that the construction of the words so ordered, as to refer to it in ver. 12. require that it should be a noun, and signify to the City, it being there said the rich men thereof; or of it, i. e. the City called unto and spoken of; and none else of them therefore follow his opinion.

There is yet ‡ another Jew of great name among his nation, yet of later standing than any of the aforementioned, and who had seen what they said (and perhaps the ancient Latin too) who cavils against the first mentioned interpretation, and then gives another much different from it, and all the rest. His cavils against that interpretation are, that there is no need of saying the voice of the Lord crieth to the city, if it be understood that the Prophets of the Lord spake and preached concerning (or against) the city Jerusalem or Samaria, seeing it is known that this whole book is prophecies of the Prophet. Then that if the word יִירֶא yireeb, shall see, be referr'd to the noun תוֹשִׁיבֵי Tusbiab, wisdom, it ought to have been תִּירֶא Tireeb, in the feminine gender, as the noun is. Then that wisdom hath not eyes to see with, and a name is not a thing to be seen: and if it be said that here is understood אִישׁ Ish, the man, which is of the masculine gender, it will yet be to be objected, how it can be said that the man of wisdom shall see his name; it should be rather said, shall hear (or, hear of) thy name. The exposition that he, rejecting this, himself gives, taking the word מַטֵּה Matteh, which we render rod in a clean dif-

* R. Japhet in Aben Ezra and R. Tanchum. † Munster. ‡ See Tarnovius. † Munster in his Hebrew Dictionary יָעַד testificatus est. * I suppose R. Saadiah, though he put not his name. † R. D. Kimchi says his father so interpreted it. ‡ Abarbanel.

different signification, which it is also capable of, is to this purpose: That those of Judah and Jerusalem above all ought to do justly, and all that God requires, because the city Jerusalem was that to which above all other cities the voice of the Lord cried, i. e. to which the privilege of prophecy was even peculiarly belonging; and thy name, O Jerusalem, intimates or imports wisdom, making the words יִרְאֶה יְרֵאֵה שְׁלֹם yireeb shalem, of which he says the name of Jerusalem is compounded, viz. from what Abraham said, the Lord, יִרְאֶה yireeb, will see, and shalem, as the city was called in Melchisedek's time, and יִרְאֶה תוֹשִׁיָּה yireeb Tusbiab, shall see wisdom, to import the same thing, and citing in confirmation of his opinion what their Doctors say, The air of Jerusalem makes wise. Hear ye,] both he that perverteth or turneth aside the voice of the Lord, and declineth or turneth aside himself from doing those things which are in the foregoing verse shewed to be good and required; and he that hath espoused or addicted himself to wisdom, or that godly course; or else, and him that hath appointed it to come upon them, so that the meaning is, He that perverteth the voice of the Lord, and turneth it contrary to what it commands, he is truly a wicked person, and worthy of much punishment, but he that espouseth or taketh to himself wisdom shall be delivered from it. This is the import of his words, in which his cavils or objections against the former interpretation, are frivolous. To the first he cannot himself dissemble that there is an answer before-hand given by supplying the man, which he cannot deny to be allowable here as well as in אֲנִי תַפְלִיל Ani Tephillab, I am prayer, i. e. a man of prayer, Psalm cix. 4. and as for the other, viz. that it were proper to say shall bear, not shall see thy name, it seems capriciously sought, that by disparaging that interpretation he might make way for his own; for he well knew that the word signifying see, is not restrained only to the sight of the eyes, but taken as well for the sight of the mind, ^a to perceive, to understand, to be aware of, to take notice of, to observe, to consider, and the like, yea even to bear also, and what is the office of other senses, as well as of the seeing, or else why may he not as well quarrel at what is said, Jer. ii. 31. See ye the word of the Lord; and Exod. xx. 18. and all the people saw קוֹלוֹת Koloth, the voices, or, thunders, and, see the smell of my son, Gen. xxvii. 27. As for his own exposition, it is so far fetched and so harsh, that few we may suppose will embrace it: and we had not need to have mentioned it, but for the great name and credit of the man, lest any should think that so famous an Expositor had said something better than Others, which had not been taken notice of. It is his custom to censure Others, and to strive to bring something that Others had not said, but not always better, as manifestly here.

There is yet difference betwixt modern Christian Interpreters, some taking the words in the same way and order of construction as they are in the text of our translation; and the difference betwixt them is from the different significations that they take the words in. The first word תוֹשִׁיָּה Tusbiab, which is rendred the man of wisdom [by supplying the man] ^b Others making the same supply, render the man of safety, or salvation shall see thy name. ^c Others without that supply, wisdom shall, &c. Of the proper signification of the word more shall be said by and by.

Then the word rendred shall see ^d Others render shall fear, which one thus explaineth; When the voice of the Lord crieth to the city it is wisdom (or the part of wisdom) if any shall (or for any to) fear thy name, i. e. revere or dread thy majesty. They seem to think it more proper to say one shall fear thy name, than shall see, &c. yet in this is no impropriety, seeing having those acceptions which we have before seen; and to say they shall see his name in the Prophet that cries in his name, i. e. perceive that the name of his God is in him, that the word is not the word of man, but the word of God, and evidenceth his power and majesty; is very intelligible language, and will amount to as much as to fear, and necessarily produce it. But it cannot be doubted that the word יִרְאֶה yireeb, more regularly and grammatically signifies shall or will see, than fear.

Farther, the words rendred who hath appointed, ^e Some of them render who calls for it, ^f Others who attests it, or bears witness to it, and the like: but these are without difficulty reconciled.

^g Others do beside the different acception of some words clean invert the construction, in the middle part of the verse, putting that last which Others put first, and rendring it, and thy name shall see, or doth see that which is, i. e. as some of them explain it, whatsoever is done in the city, in as much as all things are open to thine eyes, and thou seest all the wickedness that is committed in the city, or the very being of whatsoever is, as it is, and whatsoever is most secret and hidden in it, therefore thou criest unto it, i. e. the inhabitants of it, and reprehendest them, and threatnest them for their evil doings, and they ought to hearken, those reprehensions and threats ought to be heard, hearkened, and attended to.

That which makes them chuse thus to place the words in the construction, and to prefer this rendring before the other, seems to be, because that they suppose it to be more agreeable to analogy of grammar, because in joining יִרְאֶה yireeb to תוֹשִׁיָּה, and rendring it wisdom shall (or will) see, the noun rendred wisdom is the feminine gender, and the verb shall see the masculine; but to this we suppose a sufficient answer hath been already given by saying that אִישׁ Ish, a man, or the man, which

^a See R. Tanchum on Jer. ii. 31.

^b Munster.

^c See Christ. à Castro, and see Ar. Mont.

^d Ar. Mont.

^e Grot. ^f Jun. Tremell.

^g Munst. Calvin.

^h Jun. Tremell. Capell. Tarnov. Dutch Notes.

ⁱ See Tarnovius and Buxtorf. Vindic. p. 682.

of the masculine gender is here understood, and so the verb answers to that. And it would be easy to illustrate it by other examples besides that already cited out of Psalms cix. 4. in which the thing expressed implies and denotes the person in whom it is, or to whom it pertains, as Prov. xiii. 6. wickedness overthrows sin, i. e. the man^k of sin or sinner, and Prov. xx. 1. wine, for a man of wine, with other like taken notice of by^l Grammarians. And again, it is not unusual to find a verb of the masculine gender coupled with a noun of the feminine form, as in אמר קהלת Amar kobeletb, if that be to be accounted a feminine, Eccl. i. 2. and vii. 8. A gift destroyeth the heart. The noun מתנן Mattanab signifying gift is feminine, and the verb יאבד yeabbed, destroyeth, masc. with many Others also which^m Grammarians observe: so that here seems no objection in prejudice to that translation.

As for the signification of חשיב Tusbiab, which in our text is rendred wisdom, and they render that which is, it will be convenient to speak something, because it will have influence on all the translations for adjusting them. It is taken to come from a verb ישב yashab (though not in use, but יש yesh put for it) which signifies to be or exist, or be in being, or have existence, and this noun thence derived to signify primarily being, existence, solidity, or firmness, and thence to be translated to signify the law and wisdom, and any good and right action, because, saysⁿ Kimchi, the law and wisdom remain firm and permanent when all other things turn to nothing. It is sometimes translated by our Translators wisdom, as here, and so Job vi. 13. and xii. 16. and Prov. xviii. 1. sometimes sound wisdom, as Prov. ii. 7. and iii. 21. and viii. 14. sometimes substance, as Job xxx. 22. or as in the Margin wisdom, sometimes enterprize, or as in the Margin any thing, Job v. 12. sometimes the thing as it is, Job xxvi. 3. or that which is, as Job xi. 6. and here in the Margin; sometimes working (or work) as Isaiah xxviii. 29. These are most, if not all, of the places in which this word occurs in the Scriptures, in which how it is by other Translators rendred who pleases may see, and judge which comes nearest the signification of the root. It is enough to our present purpose to see how Ours have done it: and then when it shall be observed that it is equally agreeable to grammar rules, which of the two nouns be put first in the construction, whether the noun חשיב Tusbiab, which the first interpretation puts foremost, as it stands in place so in construction, rendring the man of wisdom shall see thy name, or שמך Sheméca, thy name, which the last puts first in the construction, Thy name shall or doth see that which is, it will be left to the reader to chuse which he will to follow: for among all the translations cited, these two seem the simplest and least forced. ° Divers, as we said, prefer the latter; our Translators, that the reader may have his liberty, give both, the one in the text, the other in the Margin; by putting the first in the text they seem most to incline to that, and upon due consideration it may seem reason to agree with them in it to this sense, The voice of the Lord by the Prophet crieth unto the city to stir them up to repentance, and who so is wise will, O Lord (and cannot but) see thy name in that Prophet, and acknowledge him to be the messenger, and the word in his mouth to be thy word, and not his own, while he crieth, ^p Hear the rod, and who hath appointed it, hear what severe judgments are threatned against you, and who it is that threatneth them, he that is able to bring to pass whatsoever he says, that so being aware hereof you may seek to make your peace with him by timely repentance; for as the case stands, you are in manifest danger. There are grievous sins with you to provoke him to use great severity, and the judgments that he hath determined to bring upon you, except you prevent him by breaking off your sins by repentance, are very severe. That God's justice and righteousness may [in all this controversy, ver. 2.] appear, both their sins contrary to what God requires of them, ver. 8. and his judgments that he denounceth against them, are in the following verses declared, ^q all that he might bring them into the right way, and they might escape the danger being warned of it.

Vol. I.

Z

10. Are there yet the treasures of wickedness in the house of the wicked, and the scant measure that is abominable?

Are there yet the treasures of wickedness in the house of the wicked? &c.] Such difference is there between Interpreters in the rendring of this verse also, that it cannot but seem strange, till the reason and ground of that variety be looked into. That rendring which our Translators put in the text is agreeable to what the Chaldee Paraphrast, the ancientest of Jewish Interpreters hath (understanding in him as well as in the Hebrew in, viz. in the house, or at the house, otherwise his words may sound, Is there yet the house of the wicked, treasures of wickedness?) and to what an ancient Arabick translation done out of the Hebrew hath, and some of the best^r Hebrew Grammarians, as well skill'd as any in their own language direct to, and diverse modern^s Interpreters follow. But our Translators give in the Margin another rendring also, viz. [Is there] yet unto every man an house of the wicked? The difference betwixt this and the former is from hence, that what is in the former rendred, are there, is

^k Aben Ezra. ^l See Glaff. Gram. p. 488. ^m See Buxt. Gram. lib. 2. cap. 10. ⁿ R. D. Kimchi here, and in Rad. where Elias Levita says according to R. Levi Ben Gersom, that this noun properly signifies any right, or good way, or law, which it is convenient for a man to conform himself to, and that therefore the law and wisdom are denoted by that name חשיב Tusbiab. ° And see Diodat. and the Dutch Translation. ^p It would not be far from this to render, with a modern Jew, The voice of the Lord crieth, and the man of wisdom which sees thy name (i. e. the Prophet) crieth, Hear, &c. Aben-dana in Michlal Yophe. ^q See Calvin on ver. 6, &c. ^r Abu Walid, R. Solomon, D. Kimchi. ^s Munster, &c.

is in this rendred every man; and that interpretation of the word is by many likewise, both Jews and Christians abetted, viz. the rendring of the word by man, and then making the construction so as it is in the marginal rendring, or [Is there] yet a man of a house of the wicked, &c. any that hath, or, hath any man, or, every man 'an house gotten by wicked means, and treasures heaped together by rapine, injustice, and like ways, &c. or to like purpose. Another, every man in the city is not only wicked by himself, ^u but hath also scant measure. Another, ^w O man, is there yet in the house, &c. Some by the same word take to be signified not barely a man, ^x but a man of greater degree and dignity, and expound it, Is the man of renown and dignity, or great place among them, (or without an interrogation, the man of, &c. is, &c.) yet in the house of the wicked, taking part or going shares with him in raking together by fraud and oppression, and for this means using false and scant measure, which is abominable, hateful, and displeasing unto the Lord? ^y Or, notwithstanding all that the Lord hath cried, his house is still as the house of the wicked, filled with treasures wickedly gotten, &c.

^z A modern Jew takes it to signify the man, i. e. says he, that man of wisdom, viz. the Prophet, spoken of in the foregoing verse, and then in reference both to the preceding and following words thus expounds it, The man of wisdom that sees thy name, crieth aloud to them in the streets and open places, Hear the rod, and who hath appointed it; and besides this he goes into the houses of the wicked to reprove them for their doings, and to warn them, and yet they give not heed unto him to turn from their evil ways; that is it which he says, yet the man is in the house of the wicked, as much as to say, while as yet the Prophet is in the house of the wicked, wherein are treasures of wickedness and scant measure, which is abominable, crying with (or uttering) the voice of the Lord, and reprovng him for his iniquity, and saying unto him, Shall I count them pure, &c. and threatening him with evil from the Lord, saying, thou shalt eat but not be satisfied, &c. even then this very while, while the man, the Prophet, reproves and warns the wicked in his house, the statutes of Omri are kept, and all the works of the house of Abab, and ye walk in their evil counsels, and leave the good counsel of the Prophet, and will have none of his reproofs. This exposition, as novel and differing from all others; I thought good to set down at large, that the reader might judge of it; perhaps he will find some harshness in it.

Another acception of the word we have yet in some versions very ancient, and of great authority, in which it is rendred fire. So the Greek, coupling it with the preceding words according to their version, who shall adorn the city? Shall fire and the house of the wicked treasuring up treasures of wickedness? &c. ^a So the Vulgar rendring it, as yet there is fire in the house of the impious, treasures of iniquity, and a lesser measure full of wrath. So the Syriack also, and the printed Arab, who follows here the Greek, take it to signify fire; and a ^b learned Jew also, who expounds it, There shall be yet, or perpetually, a fire in the house of the wicked, by reason of the treasures of wickedness, &c. i. e. those treasures unjustly gotten shall be as perpetual fire to consume him, and all that he hath. This of his expounding it will be convenient to observe, that it may not be thought necessary to say, that those others which take the word in this signification did read otherwise than is now usually read in the Hebrew, viz. חַיִּיב Haifb instead of חַיִּיב, for it is certain that he did not, and why should it be thought they did? That he did not we shall presently see, in giving the reason of this variety of rendrings: the reason is a seeming ambiguity in one word, viz. חַיִּיב Haifb, in which י ba makes not in it self ought as to the signification, but as it is subservient to the following syllable יֵשׁ Ish, either as a particle of interrogation or admiration, according to Some, ^c who say that the vowel patbach which it hath, shews it here to be; or as an article put before a noun according to Others. Then the word חַיִּיב Ish written only with aleph, having the vowel Chirek, that is (i) under-writ, for being a consonant in the Hebrew language (though put as answering to A the first letter of our alphabet, which is it self a vowel) hath no sound of it self, but according to the vowel that is joined with it, and therefore as having here the vowel Chirek (i. e. i) it is read חַיִּיב Ish, so if it had the vowel Tzeri (i. e. e) it would be read חַיִּיב Esh, which undoubtedly signifies fire, and the ^d fore-mentioned learned Jew thinks it, though read with Chirek, or i, to have here the same signification, as other words that he instanceth in, viz. ^e חֵן chen, and חֵין chin, בֵּן ben and בֵּין bin, have the same signification when written with tzere, i. e. e, and when written with Chirek, i. e. i, the first grace, the second a son, and so therefore he would have it to be rendred fire, as likewise Others (as we said) not because they read it otherwise than it is now usually read. But Others think the difference of the sound and vowel to import a difference in the signification too, and therefore looking more to the sound than the letters, take it here to be the same in signification with the word חַיִּיב, which sounds, as this doth Ish, and signifies a man, ^f though that be usually written with another letter, viz. yod [or i] between ח and י, which serves only to make the vowel longer, and otherwise makes no difference in the sound, for that it is not unusual to have have that letter omitted in the expressing the vowel without altering the signification. And that so it is both here and also 2 Sam. xiv. 19. the only other place where the word is found thus written; and in both they would therefore have it signify man (and there our Translators seem so to have taken it.) Others, thirdly, seeing it is neither written as אש Esh, fire, nor אִישׁ man, take it to have a different signification from either of them, viz. the same with the word ישׁ yesh, and to denote that which in our language, is agreeing to it in sound, is; or is there, or in the plural number are there: so both here and in that other place (2 Sam. xiv.) will they have it ^z to signify: (and by the way it may be observed, that in that place the Greek and ancient Latin so render it, though here otherwise, It is not (i. e. not possible) to turn.) And for confirmation of this makes not only the authority of the ancient Chaldee Paraphrast, who, as we said, so here renders it, but the word also which he in that dialect expresses it by, viz. אִיב Iib, which (as also the same ^b in the Syriack dialect) seems made from this, only by changing שׁ sh into ת t, as is usual in words taken in those dialects out of the Hebrew; as also ايس Ais ⁱ in the Arabick here used in the ancient MS. translation, which all write this word with Aleph in the beginning, as here it is written, and use it to signify is. (It may be observed also that אישׁ ^k written full, with all the letters that it usually hath when it signifies a man; is by some of the Jews said to signify is, or are, or there be, Prov. xviii. 24. and so there rendred by the Chaldee and Syriack Interpreters.) This rendring hath as good authority, and as probable proofs for it as any, and therefore do we look on it as well preferred to be read in the text by our Translators, seeing it makes the clearest sense of any; and so the words of this verse are (as indeed according to any of the translations) a reproof of those spoken to, or of, for notorious injustice, and sins, contrary to what God requires in the first place, ver. 8. viz. to do justly, and that whether spoken ^l by way of question, or admiration, that after so much calling on, and warning, they should persist in their wickedness, and continue to do such things as they are charged withal; or whether as if God, in the person ^m of a Judge, did question and examine them concerning those things, that so their guilt, and his justice in punishing them, might be made manifest. The things they are charged with are, that they retain still in their houses treasures of wickedness, goods gotten by ill and unjust means, and that for lucre's sake they keep scant measures, whereby to give forth in their selling less than they should, and as it is added in the next verse, wicked or false balances, and deceitful weights, ⁿ light ones to sell with, and heavy ones to buy with. For the scant measure our Translators put in the Margin measure of leanness, to shew that the word so signifies literally in the Hebrew, but by that every one will easily perceive to be meant that which is scant, or less than it should be, not of just bigness: and such measure is said to be abominable, hateful to the Lord, and highly provoking him to anger, as also are false balances and deceitful weights, as Prov. xi. 1. A false balance is an abomination unto the Lord, and Prov. xx. 10. Divers weights and divers measures, both of them are alike abomination to the Lord. And so false balances are not good, ver. 23. So Amos viii. 5. they are reprov'd for making the Ephab (which is the word here rendred measure, it being the name of the measure chiefly ° of dry things) small, and the shekel great, and falsifying the balances by deceit. All these are contrary to the express commandment of God, Levit. xix. 35, 36. Ye shall do no unrighteousness in judgment, in mete-yard, in weight, or in measure: just balances, just weights, and a just Ephab, and a just hin shall ye have; and Deut. xxv. 13, 14, 15, 16. Thou shalt not have in thy bag divers weights, a great and a small, nor in thine house divers measures, &c. For all that do such things, and all that do unrighteously, are an abomination unto the Lord thy God, they cannot be in themselves pure or justifiable, nor will God in any wise justify them, or account them just, as in the next words follows.

^a Grot. ^u Abarbinel. ^w Abu Walid. ^x R. Tanchum. ^y Ab. Ezra. ^z Abendana in Michlal Yophe. ^a Doway Translat. ^b R. Joseph Kimchi, R. D. Kimchi's father. See Kimchi in lib. Rad. in חַיִּיב. See James v. 3 See Ribera. ^c Kimchi. ^d Kimchi Rad. in חַיִּיב. ^e Job xli. 12. though it be there written חֵין. ^f It is a Rabbinical descant of Abarbinel, that perhaps it is here written without that letter, to intimate that in the house of the wicked man, shall be a fire not blown, Job xx. 26. which shall consume it.

11. Shall I count them pure with the wicked balances, and with the bag of deceitful weights?

[Shall I count them pure with the wicked balances? &c.] In the Margin our Translators put, or, shall I be pure with? &c. The word אִיב Ezceb, in the form that it is here put, may seem most regularly to signify I shall be pure or just intransitively; and if so here taken, must be understood, as if the Prophet should speak in the person of any of the people, ^p or to shew what every one of them ought to say with himself, the question importing a denying of the thing, and to be as much as to say, I cannot certainly be pure or just with such things, and so implying, As I would be counted pure therefore, I ought to put them from me, or else I shall justly be punished by God, or ^q as Some think the letter ה He prefixed, signifies rather an affirmation than a question, a report of what every one of them did say, Certainly I shall be pure, though I use false balances, &c. or with a supply of, Wilt thou say I shall be pure, &c. or as if the Prophet should speak in his own person, Should I, though a Prophet, and taking heed to the rest of my ways, be pure if I used false balances, &c. no surely; much less then, they who are otherwise also wicked, and add this to their many other transgressions hereafter mentioned, with which alone it were im-

^z See R. Sol. Jarchi, R. Isaiah, R. Levi on the 2 Sam. xiv. Golius in אישׁ. ^k See Kimchi. Rad in אישׁ and Schindler. in Rad. Vatabl. ^m Calvin. ⁿ Chald. Kimchi, Grotius. ^o Grot. ^p R. D. Kimchi. ^q R. Tanchum. Abarbinel.

^b See de Dieu on the place.

ⁱ See Kamus and

^l R. Solomon Jarchi, Kimchi on this place, and

^o Grot. ^p R. D. Kimchi. ^q R. Tanchum.

impossible they should be looked on as pure or innocent.

The Chaldee, and Greek, and Syriack changing the person, Shall they, or he, be justified, seem to have had regard to the meaning more than to the word, which is in the first person, Shall I, &c.

* Others, both Jews and Christians, as Ours in the text, take the word here to signify transitively, and to be spoken as in the person of God, Shall I justify or account them pure, and deal with them as so? [†] A Christian Interpreter of great note, who takes the words in the same signification that Ours do, yet proposeth another meaning, which he says will perhaps be preferable, to this purpose, Are there yet, &c. i. e. yet a little while and the treasures of wickedness shall not be found in the house of the wicked, &c. for they shall be violently taken from them, for God will not justify them, nor defend them in such doings, but will severely punish them for them. But the former sense seems plainer.

12. For the rich men thereof are full of violence, and the inhabitants thereof have spoken lies, and their tongue is deceitful in their mouth.

For the rich men thereof are full of violence, &c.] These doings of theirs, here charged on them, are ^u contrary to that second head of those good things which God requires of them, ver. 8. viz. to love mercy, for to that is violence (such as he described, chap. ii. 2.) apparently contrary. For, or ^w as for the rich man, &c. or, so it is that the rich men thereof are, &c.

[Thereof] i. e. of the city mentioned, ver. 9. are full of violence, i. e. ^x have their houses filled with goods taken away from others by violence and oppression, or are wholly given to violence and oppression, even they who have enough of their own, and need not to take from others; and the inhabitants thereof, the other inhabitants thereof, saith a learned ^y Jew, that have not so much power in their hands, for any advantage to themselves, spare not to lie and speak deceit.

^z Another expounds this of the inhabitants thereof in general, that they speak against God, or falsely concerning him, saying, The Lord seeth us not, or the Lord hath forsaken the earth, as those, Ezek. viii. 12. and ix. 9. or as he says, Hosea vii. 13. they have spoken lies against me, and so he makes what is here spoken contrary to that third thing required, ver. 8. viz. to walk humbly or sincerely with God: but of their sinning, contrary to that, he seems more clearly to speak ver. 16.

13. Therefore also will I make thee sick in smiting thee, in making thee desolate, because of thy sins.

2

Therefore also will I make thee sick in smiting thee, &c.] Having declared some of those sins for which he cried unto the city, he now in part describes that rod which he had them to hear, those punishments with which he appointed to chastise them.

I will make sick thee, O city, or inhabitant of the city, so ^a supplying the person which in the Hebrew is not expressed; in smiting thee, I will so smite thee as to make thee sick. As thou by using violence and oppression hadst made sick the heart of the poor oppressed, so will I by my ^b grievous and severe punishments make thee sick, or afflict thee, by a grievous stroke, and by bringing desolation on thy sins, or on thee for such thy iniquities, [or as ^c Some according to another signification, to cause men to wonder and be astonished at my severe punishing thee for thy sins.] Instead of I will make thee sick, several ancient ^d Interpreters render, I also will begin to smite thee, or I have begun to smite thee, and so also some more ^e modern; the occasion of which seems a likeness between חלל Chalal and חלה Chalah, the roots of those verbs, whereof one signifies to make sick, the other to begin: so that they thought the same signification to belong to both. For so Munster in his Dictionary shews himself to have done, putting this word, as he says, according to the opinion of some under the root חלל Chalal, yet reading it, as it is usually now read, whereas more regularly it should belong, as Others put it, to חלה.

14. Thou shalt eat, but not be satisfied, and the casting down shall be in the midst of thee, and thou shalt take hold, but shalt not deliver: and that which thou deliverest, will I give up to the sword.

Thou shalt eat, but not be satisfied, &c.] He here more particularly ^f reckons up some of those punishments with which he will strike them, and make them sick, and to languish or be wasted even to desolation. And for punishment of their greediness of heaping up more than enough by unlawful means, he threatneth that they shall eat, but not be satisfied, viz. the curse of God going along with what they eat, it shall ^g not satisfy nor nourish with wholesome nourishment, but shall, as the Chaldee and some other ^h Jews add for explanation of the following words, breed in thee ⁱ evil diseases, and pains in thy bowels, which shall bow thee down, and cause thee to couch and stoop. It is not meant, says ^k one of them, of want or scarcity of what they might eat, but that the digestive faculty in them should be vitiated, weakened, and corrupted, that it should not perform its duty, and so, though they eat, they should not be satisfied. Both these are elsewhere called the break-

* Vulg. Lat. See R. Tanchum, Munster, Jun. Tremel. Grot. [†] Calvin. ^u Abarbinel. ^w R. Tanchum.
^x R. D. Kimchi. ^y R. D. Kimchi. ^z Abarb. ^a Vatab. ^b Abarb. ^c Kimchi. ^d Greek, Syr.
 Arab. Vulg. Lat. ^e Munst. ^f Abarb. ^g Kimchi. See Drus. ^h See R. Solomon, and see Tainov.
ⁱ Vers. Syriac. ^k Abarbinel.

breaking of the staff of bread, viz. the not giving virtue to nourish, and taking away sufficiency. But ^l Others understand it of scarcity and want of what may satisfy them; that which they have to eat shall not be sufficient for that purpose: and so where the very same words occur, Levit. xxvi. 26. it seems to be understood: and the following words, thy casting down shall be in the midst of thee, ^m Others take as a description of a differing punishment from the former, expounding in the midst of thee, not of their bowels, but of their city or own country, in that thou shalt be brought low before thy carrying into captivity, there thou shalt with many evils, which shall bring thee down, be afflicted in the siege; or, the cause of your destruction shall not be so much from without from Others, as from within your selves, ⁿ your own sins shall pull it on you, or, ^o though no enemy from abroad should infest thee, there shall befall thee evils at home, as in thy own bowels, by which thou shalt be consumed, and brought down through the curse of God upon thee. These senses are not so different, but that they may all be comprehended in the words.

Thou shalt take hold, but shalt not deliver, &c.] What they shall take hold of, and what not deliver, or what is the meaning of these phrases, is questioned. The ^p Jews for the most part expound it of taking hold of seed or conception, and not delivering to be not bringing forth a mature birth, but miscarrying by abortion, not being safely delivered: as if he should say, Thy women shall conceive and be with child, but shall miscarry, and not bring forth. The word תסג Tasseg is such as may be rendred either in the second person masculine, Thou shalt take hold, or in the third person feminine, she shall take hold, and so the other verb תפליט Tapblit, either thou shalt not deliver, or she shall not deliver: and ^q some learned men like well that it should so be taken in the third person she, i. e. the woman, or thy wife. But this need not nicely to be insisted on, as making a difference; for if it be said of a nation or inhabitants of a city, Thou shalt conceive, but not bring forth, it will easily be understood to be meant, thy women in thee, and so, and that which thou deliverest, i. e. those children which thy women bring forth, or are delivered of, will I give up to the sword to be slain by the enemy, and so will the second person be kept, as in the other words, Thou shalt eat, &c. Thy casting down, &c. thou shalt sow, &c.

^r Another Jew, who makes the sense much the same, yet refers this word תסג to another root, so as to signify shalt encompass or shut up, meaning their wombs should through corrupt humours be as shut up. (So it is said, Gen. xx. 18. that God had closed up all the wombs of the house of Abimelech.) But this, though coming to the same purpose, yet as to the derivation of the word seems far fetched.

VOL I.

A a

^s Others by that which they should take hold of, think meant their goods, or part of them, if they could: but it is manifest that what is spoken of must be persons from what follows, that they shall be given up to the sword. ^t Others, therefore, understand it of their children. ^u Others rendring the word a little differently, Thou shalt overtake the enemies, which lead away thy sons and daughters into captivity, but shalt not rescue them, and if thou rescue any of them, their end shall be to be destroyed by the sword. ^x Others yet, understanding the things spoken of to be their wives and children, and what is most precious to them, yet interpret the verb in a far different sense, viz. Thou shalt remove them out of the way, and hide them, to save them if thou canst, but shalt not be able to save them from the enemies hand; and what thou savest for a while, I will at last deliver to the sword: and it is manifest that the word is used in both these significations, whether written with ס Samech or ש Shin, as we said, chap. ii. 6. ^y Others make the person spoken to, the land or city, that shall endeavour to hold fast and keep safe her people, but not be able to do it.

15. Thou shalt sow, but thou shalt not reap: thou shalt tread the olives, but thou shalt not anoint thee with oil; and sweet wine, but shalt not drink wine.

Thou shalt sow but shalt not reap, &c.] The like judgments are threatned, Levit. xxvi. 16. and Deut. xxviii. 30. and forward to ver. 38, 39, 40, 41, &c. Amos v. 11. Hagg. i. 6. ^z Sweet wine, i. e. grapes to make sweet wine; for they are them that are trodden, not the wine it self. Abarbinel goes particularly to adapt the judgments to their sins against what is required, ver. 8. but not so fully to the purpose.

16. ¶ For the statutes of Omri are kept, and all the works of the house of Abab, and ye walk in their counsels, that I should make thee a desolation, and the inhabitants thereof an hissing: therefore ye shall bear the reproach of my people.

For the statutes of Omri are kept, &c. In the Margin our Translators put, or He doth much keep the statutes, &c.] The reason is because the word ישתמר yishtammer is such as may signify either passively it is kept, or it shall be kept, for it is the future tense, but that is used to signify the present, and sometime also the time past, especially when it hath the letter ו V before it, which signifies and; or else be doth warily keep or shall keep it. And whereas the verb is of the singular number, and the noun joined with it (according to the first rendring) of the plural, that is easily salved by an usual observation in such cases, by understanding every one of the statutes, which would

^l Ribera, Grotius.
Ezra, R. D. Kimchi.

^m Kimchi, Dutch Notes.

ⁿ Calvin. ^r Abarb. J.D.

^w R. Sol. ^x Jun. Tremel. Pise. Tarnov. ^y Calvin.

^s Ribera, Menoch.

^t See Cant. vii. 2.

^z Kimchi.

^o Calvin.

^p Ab. Walid, Ab.

^q Diodat.

^r Ribera, Sa.

would be the singular, and so it is by the ^a Jewish Interpreters salved: and so in the second rendring, He doth much keep, &c. to make it agree with what precedes spoken to them in the second person, and with what follows and ye walk (in the plural number and second person) may be supplied, ^b every one of you doth keep.

A learned ^c Jew here observes, that when a nation or people is spoken to, they are sometimes spoken to or of, in the masculine gender, sometimes in the feminine, sometimes in the singular number, sometimes in the plural; and we may add that it is likewise not unusual to ^d change persons without interruption in the sentence, so as that the same person may seem to be spoken of, as absent, and to, as present in the same sentence: and this being observed, will keep the reader from being troubled with such seeming difference, where it occurs; and therefore the Vulgar Latin and Syriack, though not observing the third person used in the original, but rendring in the second Thou hast kept, may be thought to have given the meaning well enough. What ^e Others give for the meaning, literally rendring the word in the future, The statutes of Omri, &c. will be kept, as if it were by way of prediction, and he should say, that notwithstanding all that had been or should be said, or done to them, they would continue still in their perverseness, and run on in their wicked idolatrous courses; seems not so proper to the place, wherein they seem charged with sins that they were already guilty of, rather than to tell them what God saw they would do, till they had pulled upon themselves utter destruction.

The sins that they are here accused of, are the keeping the statutes of Omri, and the works of the house of Abab, and walking in their counsels, by which what is meant will easily be discerned, by looking into the history of those two Kings of Israel, as set down in the 16th Chapter of the first Book of Kings, where is shewed how both Omri and his son Abab set up and established such ways of idolatry, as Jeroboam had brought into Israel; and did even worse things to the perverting and extirpating the true worship of God, and from them did the Kings of Judah learn to do the like, and establish, as by a law, the like wicked ways and things as they did, among the Jews also: for so of Jehoram, King of Judah, it is said, that he walked in the way of the Kings of Israel, as did the house of Abab, 2 Kings viii. 18, 27. of his son Abaziah, that he did evil in the sight of the Lord, as did the house of Abab, as also, 2 Chron. xxv. 6, &c. and xxvi. 3. so of Abaz, 2 Kings xvi. 3. so of Manasseh King of Judah, 2 Kings xxi. 3. so that whereas there is difference betwixt Interpreters, whether the things here spoken be meant of Samaria or Jerusalem, or Israel or Judah, or both, from the words themselves there is no certain direction, for determining either on the one side or the other, except there were some way to shew whether this particular part of the prophecy were spoken before the taking of Samaria, or after it (as ^f Some think it was) inasmuch as our Prophet prophesied in the days of Jotham, Abaz, and Hezekiah (in the 6th year of whose reign Samaria was taken, 2 Kings xviii. 10.) both concerning Samaria and Jerusalem; and it is manifest that both kingdoms were guilty of these sins, of keeping the statutes of Omri, and all the works of the house of Abab, and walking in their counsels, as it is said of Abaziah, that he walked in the ways of the house of Abab, because his mother was his counsellor to do wickedly; and that he did evil in the sight of the Lord, because they were his counsellors, after the death of his father to his destruction, and he walked after their counsel, 2 Chron. xxii. 3, 4, 5.

As for these sins, they are manifestly contrary to what is required in the third place, ver. 8. viz. to walk humbly or sincerely with God. Whereas he required that they should acknowledge him alone the only true God, and worship him in those ways by himself prescribed, they forsaking him, set up and worshipped false gods, according to the statutes and ways by those wicked kings introduced, and followed therein their counsels, directions and prescriptions. What heavy judgments on their so doing should ensue the next words declare, viz.

That I should make thee a desolation, and the inhabitants thereof an hissing, &c. Therefore ye shall bear, &c.] Here is that change of persons and numbers and genders, which we before mentioned. Thee in the second person singular, inhabitants thereof (i. e. of that city) in the third person and feminine gender, and ye shall bear, the second person plural masculine, all spoken of the same person, viz. the city or the inhabitants thereof.

That I should make thee.] That doth not here denote the final cause or intention, as if for this end God would have it so, that they should do such things that he might bring them to destruction, or that it was ^g their intention by so doing to pull on themselves destruction, but to shew the necessary consequence from their wicked doings to his judgments, that seeing they continued perversely in such their doings, it would necessarily follow (justice so requiring) that they should by him be so punished, and he would make them a desolation, or as the Margin ^h an astonishment, which will necessarily follow on the other, viz. when all that behold how a nation lately so flourishing was made desolate, should be astonished (as Jer. xviii. 16. and xix. 6.) (the word indifferently signifying, and so including both) and the inhabitants thereof an hissing: That they that see what is befallen them, shall hiss at them in token of scorn and derision. The like expressions

^a Aben Ezra, Kimchi, R. Tanchum. ^b See Pise.

^c Vatabl. Calvin, Ch. à Castro.

^d Abarb.

^e See Pise.

^f Druf. Tarnov.

^g R. Tanch.

^h Glass. Gram. sacr. p. 910.

ⁱ See

pressions are used in several other places, as Deut. xxviii. 37. 1 Kings ix. 7, 8. 2 Chron. xxix. 8. Jer. xxv. 9, 18. and xxix. 18. and xlix. 17. and li. 37. Lam. ii. 15, 16.

Therefore ye shall bear the reproach of my people.] As to the signification of these words, Interpreters do not at all differ, yet in the giving of the meaning of them in other words do much differ, ¹ Some thus expounding them, Reproach, in lieu of that reproach wherewith ye have reproached my people, i. e. the poor innocent oppressed ones [which the violent oppressing rich and great men have reproachfully and contumeliously used] the reproach which the Heathen shall cast upon you shall be a recompence or punishment of that. ² Others, That reproach wherewith in my law I threatned my people if they should forsake me; and those whom I had chosen to my self for a peculiar people, and done so great things for, as are called to their mind, ver. 4, 5. justly deserve for their unthankfulness and rebellions against me. ³ Others, ye (O ye rich men, ver. 12.) shall bear the reproach of having pulled all those evils on my people; they shall lay the reproach and shame on you for it. ⁴ Others looking on this as spoken to the kingdom of Judah and Jerusalem, after that Samaria was taken, and the Israelites, or ten tribes carried captives, take it as a threat that the like should befall Jerusalem as had befallen Samaria, and that the same reproach which the ten tribes (whom they think meant by my people) had suffered, the other two should also ere long bear, and shamefully be led into captivity, as they already were, and their kingdom also be laid waste. ⁵ Or that they should not think to wear out the shame of their evil doings among other nations, but should still continue to be reproached, for that being the people of God, they had forsaken him, and by their evil doings had provoked him to cast them out of his land. ⁶ Some by reproach understand those greater punishments which they should bear, for that having been by God owned for his people, they had not esteemed as they ought their privilege, nor behaved themselves worthy of it; (compare Amos iii. 2.) or as the Reverend Diodati expresses it, the ignominious punishment for having profaned the name and title of being my people and church by your sins, according to what is said, Ezek. xxxvi. 20. And when they entred unto the Heathen whither they went, they profaned my holy name, when they said to them, these are the people of the Lord, and are gone forth out of his land (and see Rom. ii. 24.) and Others perhaps otherwise give the meaning; so that the words plainly signifying as they are in our translation rendred, it will be left to the judgment of the reader to take that exposition, which he conceives to give the most genuine and fullest meaning of them. What additions to, or difference from other translations are in this verse found in the Greek, and ⁷ such as follow them, will not be to our purpose much to insist on, or inquire into, that intended by us being to see what expositions the Hebrew, as now read (of the sincerity and incorruptness of which reading we make no doubt) will admit, that so the reader may take his choice, seeing & they that make it their business to adjust and justify that version; give no good account of it; only whereas some, because they render not of my people, but of the peoples, think they read not my Ammi, as is now read, which usually signifies my people, but אממי Ammin, which most frequently is used for peoples; it is by ⁸ Others manifestly proved that there is no necessity to say so, in as much as plural numbers, though more regularly ending in ם M, yet often are without it.

C H A P. VII.

VERSE I. Wo is me, for I am as when they have gathered the summer-fruits, as the grape-gleanings of the vintage: there is no cluster to eat: my soul desired the first-ripe fruit.

WO is me, for I am as when they have gathered the summer-fruits, &c.] The Prophet in the former part of this chapter (whether in his own person, or in the person of the church, and company of the true worshippers of God, as the state of things in those times which he describes stood) sadly complains of the great and general corruption of those times, which hath made ⁹ Some to think, that he rather spake by way of prediction of things as they should be in the following times of Manasseh, than as they were in the days of Hezekiah, that good king and great reformer of religion, under whom he seems to have spoken these things: for he prophesied in the days of Jotham, Abaz and Hezekiah. But if we consider that Abaz was a very wicked king, and promoted to the utmost both idolatry and all abominations of the Heathen, and the ways of the Kings of Israel, 2 Kings xvi. 2, 3, &c. we may well think, that not only in his time (in which also our Prophet lived and uttered part of his prophecies) but in the succeeding times of Hezekiah also (at least till the reformation by him made) there were great corruptions of manners among the people, as well of Judah as Israel (to both which it is said he prophesied) as appears out of the history, and the great need there was of a reformation, both of their worship and manners, and the great pains and care that Hezekiah was put to in effecting it, as appears, 2 Kings xviii. 4. and 2 Chron. xxix. 3, &c. and his declaration of their great wickedness, and the heavy judgments that they had thereby pulled on Judah and Jerusalem, expressed there, ver. 8, 9. in much like terms as we have here, chap. vi. 16. viz. that the Lord delivereth them to trouble,

¹ R. Tanchum, Ab. Ezra, D. Kimchi, Vatabl.

² Abarbinel. ³ Id. and see Calv.

⁴ Calvin.

⁵ Jun. Tremel. Tarn. &c.

⁶ Arab.

⁷ Nobilius, Capellus, p. 251.

⁸ See Buxt.

⁹ vind. p. 626. and Not. Miscel. ad Port. Mosi, c. 4. p. 60. Aven. Gramm. p. 422.

¹⁰ Grot. Stokes.

ble, to astonishment, and kissing, &c. So that as our Prophet Micah even in the times of Hezekiah prophesied, and spake to all the people of Judah, saying, That Zion should be plowed like a field, and Jerusalem should become heaps, by which means Hezekiah was moved to fear, and besought the Lord, and to the utmost of his power sought to reform what was amiss, and the Lord repented him of the evil which he had pronounced against them, Jer. xxvi. 18, 19. so may it be perceived, that in the times before Manasseh, there was occasion enough for the Prophet to utter this complaint. But whatever the times that he particularly speaks of were, the corruption of them it appears was very great, which he thus both bewaileth and describeth,

Wo is me, for I am as when they have gathered the summer-fruits, &c.] Or as in the Margin, as the gatherings of summer, as likewise the Syriack version hath it. Some of the ancient translations otherwise. The ^b Greek, as be that gathereth ears let fall in the harvest; the ^c Vulgar Latin, as be that gathereth in Autumn the clusters of the vintage, and modern ^d Interpreters also differently, as when the summer-fruits are intercepted or taken away (so that a traveller seeking such wherewith to refresh himself, can find none.) These all, however they differ in the expression of their meaning, yet seem not much to differ about the signification of the words in the Hebrew, but all do take the first word, אִסְפוּ Asphe, to have in it the signification of gathering, and the second, קִיץ Kaits, the signification of summer or summer-fruits: and in the intention of the expression they likewise, as they are usually expounded, seem to agree, viz. that it is to denote the paucity of godly men then among them, that there were no such remaining among them, as were to be accounted of. So that if the words be looked on, as spoken in the Prophet's own person, it will seem a complaint much like that of Eliab, 1 Kings xix. 10. That he, even he was left alone, that truly and sincerely worshipped God, and he could scarce find any other: or a bewailing of his condition that it was his lot to live or prophesy in such a time, wherein ^e there were very few good and pious men to be found. It was as hard and rare to find them as good figs or grapes ^f after the time of in-gathering or vintage. Which makes him wish that he had lived in those former times, when there were such as were like the first ripe fruits, excelling in their kind, and they not a few, but as a full harvest or vintage. Or if as spoken in the person of the people of God, or his church, or nation (as a learned ^g Jew speaks) which seems most convenient and agreeable to the place, then will it be a complaint of that church or company of the paucity of truly pious men in her, as rare and hard to find, as good fruit after the summer-fruits are diligently gathered in, or clusters of grapes after the vintage: few will be found, and those not very good. For so we may well suppose the quality and imperfection of those that are to be found to be in these words complained of, as well as their paucity for number. This the fore-mentioned learned Jew well suggests to us by his saying, that by the gatherings of the summer, or summer-fruits, are meant or signified such fallings or fruits as are gathered up by the poor, which either falling in time of gathering, and so being fouled, sullied, marred, or stained, or otherwise nought, the owners think not worth the taking up, or gathering them in, but leave them behind for who so will to take them up. ^h So that here by this similitude seems intimated not only, that there were but few good men left, but that those few also that went for such, and had some good thing in them, yet came far short of those good men in former ages, as short as fallings or refuse fruits left behind, of those that were carefully gathered for their goodness, or some few sower grapes left on a vine do of such a cluster as a man would chuse to eat. (So R. Solomon observes, the Chaldee Paraphrast by the gatherings of summer-fruits to have understood while he renders the last figs ill refuse figs.) Better might be desired, but scarce found, that is it which he says, my soul desires the first-ripe fruit, i. e. such truly virtuous men as the primitive times did produce, such as excelled other men, as far as the first and kindly ripe fruits do such after-growing, unkindly fruits as come not at all to maturity and perfection. That by first ripe fruit such of the best sort and most grateful in their kind are meant, is manifestly more agreeable to the use of the like expression, Hosea ix. 10. and to the sense of the place, than with ⁱ Some to understand it of unripe fruit, not yet come to maturity: as if the Prophet should say, that seeing the scarcity of good men and difficulty to find them, he was content even with such as he could find, for he rather with earnest longing doth desire better than he could find. What reason he had for his complaint thus made in his own or the Churches name in figurative terms in the next words he farther explains, saying,

2. The good man is perished out of the earth; and there is none upright among men: they all lye in wait for blood: they hunt every man his brother with a net.

The good man is perished out of the earth (or as in the Margin) the godly or merciful man.] Our English word good well answers to the Hebrew word in the original, חַסִּיד Chasid, which signifying both a holy godly or pious man, or a kind merciful man, hath occasioned some little difference betwixt Interpreters: ^k Some rendring it the holy or godly man: ^l Others the kind or merciful man. To both these is the Hebrew word applicable, and so is our

^b Druf. ^c Doway Transl. ^d Jun. Tremel. Pisc. Tarn. ^e Abarb. ^f Compare this expression with Isaiah xvii. 6. ^g R. Tanch. ^h So Jer. xxiv. good men are represented to the Prophet by good figs, and evil men by evil figs. ⁱ Hierom. Pelican. See Christ. à Castro. ^k Vulg. Latin, Greek. ^l Jun. Tremel. Pagnin. Tig.

our English to such a one as hath regard both to his duty to God, and expresses that in an holy and godly conversation, and to his duty to man expressing that in acts of charity or mercy and doing good to others; both these in observance of the commandments concur to the making up חסיד Chasid, a good man; they will not, where there is sincerity, be separated, and such the Prophet desires to find, but can find none of them, they are perished out of the earth or land, (for of that part of the earth, that country where he lived of Judah and Israel he speaks:) such have formerly been, but now are dead and gone, and 'tis in vain to seek for them, for there is none upright among men, among such as are now living in the land, i. e. ^m scarcely any to be found. For that we may so understand it as to the greater part, and not precisely, that there was not any one single such man on the earth, we may observe what the Lord answered to Eliab, complaining in like manner that he was left alone, and there was none that feared God, 1 Kings xix. 14, 19. and Rom. xi. 3, 4. and so is this complaint like those which we have, Psalm xii. 1. and xiv. 3. and Rom. iii. 10, 11, 12. which at least import the great paucity and scarceness of good and upright men, which are so few in respect of those which are otherwise, that it may in respect of the generality be said there are none such, they are lost among the multitude. That he hath just reason to say so, he farther makes evident by describing the contrary behaviour of the generality, viz. ⁿ That they all lay wait for blood, and hunt every man his brother with a net.

Lie in wait for blood.] i. e. to take away the lives of men, or, as ^o Some, to spoil them of their substance, and what they have, which is to them as their blood, and wherewith their life is sustained: probably both are comprehended in the name ^p bloods (for it is the plural number) and coveting of other mens goods and rapine, often endeth in cruelty and murder. That men greedy of gain may obtain their prey they will not spare to take away the life of the owners thereof, ^q Prov. i. 19. and by all crafty cunning and hidden means do they seek, and take occasion to effect this.

They hunt every man his brother with a net.] As a hunter, fowler, or fisher that spreads his net, uses all arts to get his prey into it, that he may catch it, and destroy it, so do these use all possible arts, whereby they may ensnare any, by whose destruction they may gain ought to themselves. This rendering is plain and proper, and the meaning of it perspicuous; yet do some (and those of the ancientest Interpreters) render otherwise, viz. they hunt every man his brother to death or destruction, ^r so the Chaldee, Syriack, and Vulgar Latin. The reason of this diversity is manifest to be from hence, because the word חרם Cherem signifies a net and also destruction, and it cannot be thought that they who rendred it according to one signification, were not aware of the other, because in other places they use it, but took that which they thought here most agreeable to the sense and meaning of the place. So they that here render it destruction or death, Hab. i. 15. render it net. Here they thought, it seems, that of destruction more agreeable to what goes before, They lay in wait for blood, and tending to the same sense. They that render with a net, understand the preposition ב Be (as if it were בחרם) they that to destruction, the letter ל L, as if it were לחרם Lecherem. The Greek rendering the words they afflict with affliction, or straiten with straitning every one his neighbour, seem rather to have given the meaning, than to have attended to the literal signification of the words. They that seek after various readings, might perhaps say, that here instead of יצודו yatsudu, they hunt, they seem to have read יצורו yatsuru, they straiten, or afflict, and instead of חרם Cherem, a net, הרב Hereb, much, or some other word: but such conjectures are no safe or sure way of solving difficulties, or reconciling differences. The meaning will be otherwise well enough made up, by saying, that by straiten with straitning, or afflict with affliction, they would express what is by the Prophet in figurative terms expressed, inasmuch as the hunter's intention by laying his net, is to bring those creatures, which he would catch, into a strait, that so he may have them at his pleasure, and use them how he will.

3. ¶ That they may do evil with both hands earnestly, the prince asketh, and the judge asketh for a reward: and the great man uttereth his mischievous desire: so they wrap it up.

That they may do evil with both hands earnestly, the prince asketh, &c.] In these words, wherein he farther taxeth the great corruption, avarice, and cruelty, of such especially who were in authority, and ought to have done justice, and seen it done, and those that were rich and potent, there is some difficulty. A learned ^u man well versed in the language of the Scripture, confesseth that this place did long and much perplex him, that he could not satisfy himself in the interpretation of it, and perhaps was not at last satisfied. And such different expositions are brought of it, that the reader who takes notice of them, will perhaps be put to use his best judgment and discretion, to choose which he may prefer and satisfy himself with. The former part of the verse, in which is the chief difficulty, consists briefly of these words, על הרע Al Haraa, for evil, or to do evil, נפיים Cappaim, hands, or both hands, להיטיב Libeitib, to do or make good, or to do well. From the understanding of these words, and joining them in construction one with another, and either taking them, so as to make a distinct period of themselves, or

VOL. I. B b

^m See Estius, Doway Bible, Grotius. ⁿ See Hosea iv. 2. ^o Christ. à Castro, Vatablus. ^p See Note on c. iii. 10. ^q See Diodati's Notes on Prov. i. 19. ^r So Vers. Tig. ^s See Druf. and Schindler in חרם.

^t ἑκατέρωθεν ἐκτελεῖ. ^u Drusius.

or in conjunction with the following words, the prince asketh, &c. ariseth that diversity of interpretations: the more ancient Translations thus rendring, viz. the Greek, for evil do they prepare (or make ready) their hands, and so the Arabick following them; the Vulgar Latin, the evil of their hands they call good. The Chaldee Paraphrase, they do evil with their hands, and do not do good. The Syriack accordingly, their hands are prepared (or ready) to do evil, and they do not do good. Among more modern Interpreters there is yet more variety. Of the Jews * Some thus expound the first words by themselves, also, For the evil (or for a reward of the evil) of your hands, do ye hope that he will do good unto you? (or, as a MS. copy reads, that I will or shall do good unto you?) * Others taking the Letter ל L prefixed to the last word, to import here, as sometimes it doth, for, or instead of, thus, for the evil of your hands, because it is to you instead of doing good, is, or shall this come: or as † another expounds it, For evil two hands, i. e. two portions, instead of doing good, i. e. they render double of evil, for, or instead of, good. This seems very obscure, and would be plainer thus, for doing, or to do evil, i. e. They do of evil twice as much as they do of good, or double evil to what, or instead of what, they should do of good.

‡ Others will have the words to be thus expounded, They set themselves as for the evil that is in their hands, that they may do it well, i. e. confirm it, or do it effectually or thoroughly, that they may take bribes: so that in their opinion the meaning of the word, to do well, is to do firmly and thoroughly. Against which † another of them excepts, because it is improper to say, a man may do ill well; but to that may seem an easy answer, that the doing it well, imports not any goodness in the thing that is done, but earnestness and putting to force in doing it: which in other † languages is not unusual to say, that a man doth such a thing well, when he thoroughly and earnestly doth it, though the thing it self be not good. And therefore do Ours with other † modern Translators and Expositors take this meaning. The meaning which he that excepts against this, gives, is, When any desires to have any evil, that is in the hands of any, or is done him by the hands of any, rectified, any wrong or injury done to him redressed by those that are in authority, they to do him right, require bribes and gifts; so that the remedy shall be worse to him than the damage that he hath suffered, and desires to have made good to him, and will cost him more. This meaning doth a late learned † man likewise give, viz. that it cannot be obtained of those that are in authority and place of judicature, to defend and do right to an innocent oppressed man against him that is of wicked hands, without giving them bribes and rewards; so that the words may run, to do good or right against him that is of wicked hands, the prince asketh, &c. or, Is good and right to be done against him that is of wicked hands? (i. e. if right be to be done, &c.) or the hands are (i. e. ought to be) for doing good, or right, against evil, or interrogatively are the hands for doing right against evil? but they abuse their hands, instead of doing right with them, they use them only to take bribes, the prince asketh, &c. But there seems no reason to depart from that sense which our Translators follow; understanding by earnestly, fully, with diligence, and the utmost of their power. It seems well to agree to the words, except we shall think it a plainer way to render it, for evil (or to do evil) two or both hands [viz. † are ready] or they hunt with both hands, but to do good, the prince asketh, &c. that the meaning may be, They are ready with both hands, i. e. with all their might to do evil, they have two hands for that, but must be hired and largely bribed to do good. Whereas the Chaldee (as likewise the Syriack) renders, and do not do good, a learned † man thinks that instead of להטיב Leheitib, which signifies to do good, he read לא הטיב Lo hetib, in two words, which signifies he hath not done good, but there is no necessity to say so, but rather that he read it as it is now usually read, and took the letter ל L to import, as we said some think it to do, as much as, for or instead of, and so gave the meaning of it in equivalent terms; for to say they do evil and do not do good, is all one with, they do evil instead of doing good.

The prince asketh, and, &c.] Here are three sorts of persons accused of combining together for the perverting of justice, described by their several titles, the Prince, the Judge, the Great One. First, † the Prince, i. e. either King or chief Ruler, or the Magistrate, he that should oversee all, and look that judgment be impartially done, even he looks after bribes, and requires presents from those that seek for justice. † Others by the Prince understand such as are in chief authority under the King, who, because it were a shame for him to ask, do ask gifts for him. Secondly, the Judge, he that should determine the cause and pronounce sentence according to right, without respect to persons in judgment, Deut. i. 17. and not take any gift, Deut. xvi. 19. he is † for a reward, or asketh a reward, and is swayed by what he hopes to gain, or that which shall come to his † share of the money given, not by the merits of the cause. And the great man, i. e. say † Some, he that is great in the King's court, † Others the Advocate, the Pleader, or he that is to set things in order for a legal proceeding, and to inform the judges, and instruct those that have suits in law, and order their plea to the best advantage. † Others, any great, potent, or rich man. He uttereth his mischievous desire, or as in the Margin, the mis-

* R. Solom. see Abarb. Kimchi, and Miclal Yophi. Notes. † Lud. de Dieu. D. Kimchi.

* Ab. Ezra, from R. Marinus. and see Abarb.

† Abarb.

‡ See Druf.

† Grot. Stokes.

† Grot.

† Abarb.

† Kimchi.

† R. Tanch.

† R. David

† Jun. Trem. Tig. Druf. Tarnov. and see Dutch

† Abarb.

† Kimchi.

† R. Tanch.

† R.

D. Kimchi.

† Idem.

† Abarb.

† Calvin, and R. Tanch.

mischief of his soul, i. e. either the mischief which he hath conceived within himself, or as ° Some, that which shall be, or prove mischief to himself, or as divers ^p ancient Translations, the desire of his soul. If the great man be taken in either of the two former significations, the meaning will be, either, that these three one under another, jointly conspire to set justice to sale, not as right, but as their own gain and advantage shall require, and be advanced by, though it will end in the destruction of their souls; or as ^a Some, (though perhaps not so appositely to the place) that whatsoever the Prince, though never so illegally, requires from any, both the judge and the great man do further his desire in it, and care not what, how contrary to law, right, and justice, soever they say, or pronounce in his behalf for effecting his designs, out of hope of advantage to themselves too, and that they may share in the gain. But if it be taken in the third signification, then the meaning will be, that the great or rich man, who hath in his mind or desire to get any thing by wrong from any other ^r poorer or weaker than himself, and who hath done wrong in any kind, seeing both the prince and judge have both their hands open to receive gifts and bribes, is not afraid or ashamed to utter what mischievous design he hath in his mind, being sure of their assistance in whatsoever he desires; and so how unjust soever the cause be, yet by their mutual compliance, they make it firm on his side, or so wrap it up and involve it, that the right shall not appear. The verb יַעֲבֹתוּ yeabbetuba, rendred they wrap it up, being in the plural number ^s seems to include the three sorts of persons mentioned, viz. the prince, the judge, and the great man, shewing that they all conspire in that which is done. The signification of it may be taken either from עֲבֹת Aboth, first, as it signifies a cord strongly twisted, whence is said, Isaiab v. 18. that draw sin, as with a cart-rope, and so it will be to twist strongly together, so as it cannot be easily undone or broken; and so the meaning will be, that the matter however weak in it self, as being altogether unjust, is by these three twisting it up made as firm and strong as a ^a three-fold cord, that it shall prevail against right, and not by any that hath better right on his side be dissolved; or, secondly, as it is spoken of a tree or bough with many thick branches or leaves folded, and as it were twisted one with another, and so to signify they branch out or divide into many branches the matter (as some learned ^w Jews expound it) or probably, they make intricate the matter, as thick branches of trees complicated and wrapped together, so that men may not easily discern between the right and the wrong, nor distinguish one from the other. Agreeable to which meaning seems the rendring of the Vulgar

Latin, they trouble it, i. e. confound, or, make confused the matter: and this signification is agreeable to that of the word عَمِت Abaita in Arabick, to mingle together or confound, in which language likewise عَمِت Apbatba, with change of the b into p or pb is to twist or wrest, although in this signification also it may be understood as the former, to make difficult or hard to be solved. Then the pronoun affixed to that verb which signifies it, is regularly applicable, so חָוֹת נַפְשִׁי Havoth Nafsho, ^x rendred his mischievous desire, or mischief of his soul, i. e. that mischievous unjust design which the great rich man hath conceived in himself, and now utters, that by the assistance of the prince and judge whom he hath gained by promise of bribe, it may be justified and made to prevail against any that oppose it.

This signification of mischief, or naughtiness, or calamity, or destruction, or the like, is agreeable to the often use of it in the Scripture; that other, which some ancient Interpreters (as we said) give it, is confirmed by the frequent use of the same word حَا Hawa, in the Arabick tongue, in that notion of desire.

[In the Francfort Edition of the Greek Bible 1597, it is observed in the notes or various lections, that this verse, &c. in the Greek differs much from the original Hebrew, and so it doth both from that and all other Translations (except such as were out of the Greek) that it will be in vain to seek to reconcile them; it being there read, and the judge speaks peaceable words, it is the desire of his soul, and I will take away, &c. But it is more our business to see what the Hebrew will bear, and what renderings best agree with it.]

4. The best of them is as a briar: the most upright is sharper than a thorn-hedge: the day of thy watchmen, and thy visitation cometh; now shall be their perplexity.

The best of them is as a briar, &c.] Of them, whether of those forenamed, the prince, the judge, and the great man (as ^r Some) or more ^z generally, of all the whole multitude of the people, of the present generation (agreeably to what was said, ver. 2.) is like a briar, or thorn; and he that is the most upright among them, is as a bough of thorns ^a out of an hedge made of thorns, or sharper (as is well supplied) than a thorn-hedge. Both these words rendred briar and a thorn-hedge are joined together, Prov. xv. 19. and there rendred an hedge of thorns. So mischievous are they, that there is no dealing with them without receiving hurt from them, as he that ^b meddeth with thorns, or handleth, or goes through a thorn-hedge, cannot escape either having his hands pricked, or his flesh or clothes rent, or receiving some mischief.

The day of thy watch-men and thy visitation cometh, &c.] The word מְצַפֶּה Metzappeh,

as

^u Kimchi, R. Tanch. ^p Chald. Greek, Syriack and Latin. ^q Ribera, and Christ. à Castro. ^r See chap. ii. 1, 2. ^s Aben Ezra refers it to the people that hear it, and readily confirm it with their suffrages. ^t See Ecclef. iv. 12. ^u See Grotius. ^w Ab. Walid. and R. Tanch. ^x R. Tanch. ^y Abarb. ^z Vatab. in fol. ^a Chald. R. Tanch. Vulg. Latin. ^b Compare it with 2 Sam. xxiii. 6.

as likewise צופה Tzopheh, (from the same root signifying to look abroad, or about, to spy, and sometimes to look for, or expect, &c.) properly signifying a watch-man, one that is set in some eminent place to look about and spy what he can discover, as the approach of enemies, or other comers to a place, or any likelihood, or occasion of danger, and give report thereof to the inhabitants, that they may be aware of it, is in the Scripture applied to Prophets from the likeness of their office, who were also anciently called seers, 1 Sam. ix. 9. as Ezek. iii. 17. and xxxiii. 7. as for the same reason it may be attributed to other ^c teachers or governors, who have oversight and care of people, or ought to watch for their good, and take care, or warn them to take care to prevent any evil, that they may see coming on them: and of such governors, is the word by some understood. Now what titles or epithets soever did belong to true Prophets, no doubt, false Prophets did pretend to and take to themselves, and those that were deluded and seduced by them would attribute to them. Accordingly is this name here understood by some of true Prophets, by some of false ones. Those that understand it of the true Prophets, thus give the meaning; The day of thy watch-men, i. e. which the Prophets, whom God gave as watch-men to thee to warn thee of the danger and destruction, which, if thou shouldst continue in thy sinful courses, would certainly come upon thee; did forewarn and tell thee of, is now (because thou obstinately goest on in them) ^d come, is now at hand, and thy visitation, the time that God will visit and punish thee for thy iniquities, is (according to their words) come.

Now (suddenly) shall be their perplexity, either of those ^e mentioned, the prince, the judge and great man, and such as before indulged all liberty and freedom of wickedness to themselves, and perplexed others, or, more ^f generally, as if he had said to the people, now shall your perplexity be, now shall you be brought to confusion; such change of persons being not unusual in speaking to, or of any. Those that understand it of the false Prophets, give it either thus, 1. The day of thy false Prophets, who made thee trust on lies, thou shalt now see what it will prove, whether good or bad. For behold the day of visitation for thine iniquities is come, now shall be their perplexity, i. e. ^g the perplexity of those false Prophets: or as ^h Others explain the same meaning, in the day wherein thy false Prophets said that all things should be happy and prosperous unto thee, shall thy visitation come, i. e. God shall punish thee, and now shall they be perplexed in mind, i. e. God shall punish them for the injury done by them to the poor. And to this interpretation seems reduceable the Chaldee Paraphrase, and ⁱ Others explaining it, in the day that thou didst expect or look for good, the day of the visitation of thy wickedness cometh. Or else, 2ly. ^k The day of thy false Prophets, the day wherein they shall be punished, shall come; for shortly shall come the day of thy visitation. To which is reduceable the exposition of others, who explain it in the day of, i. e. ^l when thou shalt see the day, that is, the destruction of thy Prophets, know that thy punishment is come: (where by Prophets I suppose he must mean false Prophets.) The like way of construction follow ^m they, who (as we said) understand by watch-men, the governors, princes, or magistrates. To either of these expositions agree the words, as in our translation read. But a ⁿ Jew of later standing, who had seen what those antienter said, pretends to give a properer meaning of the words, and denying the word which is rendered watch-men, to be put here as a title either of true or false Prophets, will have the words thus rendered (as still having respect to those afore-named, the prince, the judge, the great man, joining together in seeking for bribes and gain, and setting justice to sale.) In the day (or all the time) that they are looking after, (for so sometimes the word may signify, viz. to expect or look for,) or expect thee to bring to them gifts or rewards: heed shall be given to thee, cognisance of thy cause shall presently be had, and no longer: when they have gotten all they can, and they expect no more from thee, thou mayst seek for justice, but no regard shall be had to thee, or notice taken of thy cause. But now the land being laid desolate, they shall be in perplexity, and have no more occasion of spoiling in matter of judicature. This man (as hath been elsewhere said) loves to go different from others, and to pretend to understand the words better than they did: but however his meaning may please any, his construction of the words here seems harsh. Another ^o Jew antienter than he (but whose works have never yet been printed) taking the word watch-men, in its more literal sense, thus expounds it, The day cometh, or is at hand, that thy watch-men (those that are set on high places, to spy or discover afar off what is coming and give report thereof) ^p shall say, thy visitation cometh, i. e. the enemy or thy punishment cometh. Or else, saith he, the day of thy watch-men, i. e. the enemies who expected or waited for thy destruction, i. e. the time that they waited for, and the day wherein thou shalt be visited with punishments for thy evil doings. Now shall you be brought to perplexity and confusion. With this man (as to the first way) agrees also a Christian ^q Interpreter of good note, who expounds it, The day of war, when thou shalt set watch-men on thy walls, cometh, suddenly shall men be in a hurry or tumult. If this meaning please any, the words in our Translation may be accommodated to it also.

5. ¶ Trust

^c Calv. Paræus. ^d Ab. Ezra, Druf. Grot. Rib. &c. ^e Ab. Ezra. ^f R. Tanch. ^g R. D. Kinehi.
^h Vat. edit. 4to and 8vo. ⁱ R. Solomon Jarchi. ^k Vatab. in fol. and Munfl. ^l Lud. de Dieu. ^m Calv.
 Par. ⁿ Abarb. ^o R. Tanch. ^p So al'o may Ab. Ezra's words be understood. ^q Castilio.

5. ¶ Trust ye not in a friend, put ye not confidence in a guide: keep the doors of thy mouth from her that lieth in thy bosom.

Trust ye not in a friend, put ye not confidence in a guide, &c.] The word אלוף Alluph rendered a guide, is ¹ elsewhere put to signify a prince, a great man, a chief man, or leader, &c. and so is by ² Some here taken. Against which a learned ³ Jew excepts, as not well agreeing to this place, where he complains of the defect of faithfulness, and friendship amongst men, and the falseness and fraud that was amongst those who were of nearest relation, and had greatest ties of friendship betwixt them: and thinks therefore the word here to be much of like signification with the foregoing, friend, and to denote a companion, or familiar friend and acquaintance, with whom a man hath used most familiarly to converse. Which is the mind also of a learned Christian, viz. ⁴ Lud. de Dieu. Another learned ⁵ Jew, understands it of an elder brother, viz. as he that ought to be the leader and director of the rest of the family. ⁶ Another takes it to signify here an husband, who is by that title elsewhere called in respect of the wife, viz. אלוף Alluph, the guide of her youth, ⁷ Prov. ii. 16. that so as in the next words, the husband is counselled not to trust his wife; so in these, the wife should be cautioned not to trust her husband, ⁸ to shew the great corruption of the times, when man and wife must beware of one another. This exposition may seem perhaps too nice, though of a serious man. To any of these significations, will our English word, guide, well fit, whether any superior by whom we ought to be faithfully directed, or any equal, whose advice we would take and trust, and repose our selves with confidence in.

That Jewish Doctor, Abarbinel, who, as before we said, loves to go different from other Expositors, here by a friend, understands, the judge before mentioned, by a guide, the prince, and that these he forbids to put any trust in, yet withal warns a man not to speak ill of them, or curse them, not so much as in the greatest privacy, betwixt himself and his wife, according to what is said, ⁹ curse not the king, no not in thy thought, and curse not the rich in thy bed-chamber. Which exposition of his, as we can see no reason to follow, though some ¹⁰ Christians follow it, so much less, those allegorical ones, which he brings out of former Rabbins, enigmatically applying the words to the evil concupiscence, to God, and to the foul, and the like; which it will be much besides the purpose to rehearse, much more to make use of.

Keep the doors of thy mouth from her that lieth in thy bosom.] i. e. Utter not even to thy wife that which thou wouldest have to be kept secret, lest she divulge it to thy prejudice: for so wicked and false are all, neglecting all obligations, that even she that is one with thy self, will deceive and betray thee.

VOL. I.

6. For the son dishonoureth the father; the daughter riseth up against her mother, the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law; a man's enemies are the men of his own house.

For the son dishonoureth the father.] Not only those that are equal with a man, but those also that are inferior to him, and depend on him, and are by all laws of duty most bound to respect him, and to endeavour to preserve his safety and reputation, cast off all the respects that they owe by the laws of God and nature, as in these relations here mentioned: and are ready to do him all disgrace, despite and mischief. So that he need fear not only enemies from abroad; in his own house and family he shall find them; even among those from whom he might expect the greatest love and respect. Much the same expressions in which the Prophet here bewails the corruption of his times, doth our Saviour use in declaring such perilous times as should be under the gospel also, ¹¹ Mat. x. 21, 35, 36. And his counsel to be wise as serpents, and harmless as doves, and to beware of men (there ver. 16, 17.) agrees well with our Prophet's caution here, not to trust in any of them. By the enumeration of these several instances is made good what was said, ver. 2. the good man is perished out of the earth, and there is none upright among men, and that may seem sufficient for the connexion between these and the preceding words. Yet others (not unfitly) make these words to follow as a more full explication of that perplexity which, ver. 4. he said should be upon or among them, viz. that so great it should be, as should make them forget all bonds of relation, all duties owing from one to another, and every one shifting for themselves, and looking after their own concerns and safety, take no care of, nor shew any respect to those, whom they owed most to, but so behave themselves towards them, as if they were strangers and enemies, so that there was need of cautioning them that would be safe, not to put confidence in any of them. (What some would have this caution to import, that they should not trust or put confidence in their false Prophets, ¹² who by fair speeches would deceive them, and with feigned words make merchandise of them, may by way of inference be accommodated, viz. ¹³ If the nearest relations shall not be faithful, much less will it be safe to put trust in those whose end is to deceive; but is not that which the letter seems to aim at.)

7. There-

¹ N. Fuller Conc. MS. ² Græc. Vul. Lat. Lyra, Vatab. ³ R. Tanch. See Chal. Par. and Syriack. ⁴ On the place, and on Psalm lv. 13, 14. ⁵ R. D. Kimchi. See Munst. Vat. Grot. ⁶ Ab. Ezra. See Christ. ⁷ Castro. ⁸ See Jer. iii. 4. ⁹ See Abarb. ¹⁰ Eccles. x. 20. ¹¹ Ar. Mont. See Ch. à Castro. ¹² Mark xii. 12. Luke xxi. 16. Compare 2 Tim. iii. 1, 2, 3, &c. ¹³ Rom. xvi. 18. 2 Pet. ii. 3. ¹⁴ Lyra, see Christ. à Castro, Ribera, Pellic.

7. Therefore I will look unto the Lord: I will wait for the God of my salvation: my God will bear me.

Therefore will I look unto the Lord, &c.] The times being so corrupt, and such danger from all sort of men, no fidelity in, no security from, even those who ought to be a man's greatest helps, and supports, what shall a man do? whither shall he betake himself for refuge? The Prophet speaking as of himself, in the person of any ^f godly and prudent man, or of the true ^g Israel, or God's people, or Jerusalem, or in the ^h person of that nation in captivity, leads by his example the way, and shews that God alone is to be trusted on in such times of difficulty, who is a rock of salvation, a sure refuge, and in his due time will not fail to hear and answer them, who wait on him, as shall be best for them; he will not fail or frustrate their expectation, they shall not in vain rely on him.

The Prophet having hitherto denounced judgments, now (according to the custom of the Prophets) ⁱ draws towards his conclusion with consolatory words and promises.

8. ¶ Rejoice not against me, O mine enemy: when I fall, I shall arise; when I sit in darkness, the Lord shall be a light unto me.

9. I will bear the indignation of the Lord, because I have sinned against him; until he plead my cause, and execute judgment for me: he will bring me forth to the light, and I shall behold his righteousness.

Rejoice not against me, O mine enemy, &c.] It will easily be conceived that the Prophet here speaks in the person of the church, or nation of the Jews, looking on her self, as now under hard pressures, and in that captivity under the hand of her enemies, which the Prophets had foretold, and bid her to expect; and in that regard comparing her self to a poor, distressed, dejected woman, and her enemies to a proud, imperious, insolent dame, insulting over her, as quite cast off, and given up irrecoverably to destruction, and destitute of all hope. Who is her enemy that she speaks to? Babylon, say ^k many, more particularly, ^l which led her captive, and triumphed over her. Others understand it rather of Idumæa, or the Edomites, who are every where set forth as the most inveterate enemies of Israel; that had ^m a perpetual hatred against them. And though they themselves were not able to do them so much mischief as others, yet they made it up in spite, and whenever any calamity befel them, rejoiced greatly at it, and insulted over them, and did the best they could to help against them. Obad. ver. 10, 11, &c. That both of these may be here well joined under that title, may appear by what is said respecting of them both. Psalms cxxxvii. 7, 8.

Nor will it be inconvenient to take in with them any other that did shew like hatred to the Jews at that time, and rejoiced at their calamity, all those her enemies, whose behaviour towards her is described, Lam. ii. 16, 17.

Some of the Jews will have particularly to be meant ⁿ Rome, or the Romans (whom they usually call Edomites, and under that name comprehend other Christians) whom they look on as their ^o greatest enemies, and expect and pray for their destruction more earnestly than for that of the Mahometans or any other, and have much less kindness for. But there is more than expression of their hatred to them in this their interpretation, for from this granted they would make an argument to persuade, that the Messiah is not yet come: at whose coming they expect that these their enemies shall be totally destroyed. That which she saith to her enemy is, Rejoice not against me? &c. She represseth the enemies taunts, and takes comfort to her self from her assurance that things shall not always continue in that condition with either of them, as they now are, but there shall be a change, to her for better, by the mercy of God to whom she will turn by repentance, and stedfastly cleave, and to her insulting enemy who contemned God and despitefully used his people, for the worse, by his justice in due time exerting it self, though for a while conniving at them, or making use of them for the correction of his children, and bringing about his ends for his own glory, not to give them cause of boasting of themselves, and their own might. Of such God's method in correcting his people, and taking vengeance on those whom he makes use of as his instruments for that end when they grow proud and insolent, see Isaiab x. 5, 12, &c. and xxxiii. 1. Jer. xxx. 8, 10, &c. and other like places. As for her self she saith, when I fall I shall rise, ^p when, if, or though, I fall from my dignity, be deprived of power, or fall into calamity, I shall by God's help be restored and raised again.

I shall arise.] The word is of the preterperfect tense, and word for word signifies, I have risen, to shew the certainty which she hath of it, ^q according to the usual expression of the prophetic style, speaking of those things, which by virtue of God's promise or word are to be expected, as of things already done or come to pass. This is the usual and received exposition; but there is among the Jews one, who thinks it more convenient to take the words, I have fallen and I have risen, as they are in the form, so in the signification of the preterperfect tense, thus, Rejoice not against me, O mine enemy, because of my captivity, in which I now am, as thinking that I shall not come out of it any more, seeing the wrath of God is kindled against me, for behold I have formerly many times fallen into captivity, as in Egypt and Babylon, and have risen or recovered from those falls, and returned

^f Druf. Grot. ^g R. D. Kimchi. ^h R. Tanch. ⁱ R. Kimchi. ^k R. Solom. Hierom. and many others. ^l Jer. l. 11. ^m Ezek. xxv. 5. ⁿ See Vatab. Edit. 4to and 8vo. ^o D. Kimchi. and especially Abarbinel, of whose opinion see also on chap. v. 5, 6. ^p R. Tanch. ^q R. D. Kimchi. ^r Abarb.

ed from those captivities, and so shall it now be, That although I sit in darkness, the Lord shall be a light unto me, and, after this darksome night, shall arise (to me,) a bright light; as at other times it hath been, because this my fall hath not been a thing that hath come by chance, but by the providence of God for punishment of my sins, to which is a determined time, and therefore when I arise he will redeem me. 'Tis true, that I do in this my captivity, bear the indignation of the Lord, because I have sinned against him, but this is not to be perpetual, but still he hath pleaded with me his controversy, and inflicted on me that punishment which I ought to bear according to mine iniquities. And so likewise is to be understood, and execute my judgment, i. e. that judgment which it was due to execute on me. And when he hath made an end of doing this, then shall he bring me forth to the light, from the darkness of my captivity, and then shall I behold his righteousness, viz. the righteousness and mercies that he will exercise towards me. To this purpose he. But though a convenient meaning might be made of the words by interpreting those words in the preterperfect tense, and from help formerly afforded from God, faithful penitents may have assurance upon unfeigned repentance of finding the like again, when any calamities befall them, and they may to that purpose make use of these words on occasion: yet we cannot here go along with that Doctor in as much as he seems to drive at a false end, (as we have already said on this present verse) and taking the deliverance from the Babylonish captivity, which seems here particularly intended, only by the way, looks for the completion of this prophecy by a deliverance and restoration from the captivity or exile that they are now since Christ's time under, by a destruction of the Romans or Edomites, as he calls them (as we said) which he hath not from these words any ground to expect.

When I sit in darkness, &c.] Darkness is often put in Scripture to signify adversity, misery, calamity or trouble, as on the contrary light, for prosperity, joy and happiness. Here the unhappy condition of captivity may seem called, and compared to, darkness, by reason of the withdrawing of God's providence, or its seeming to be intercepted, in comparison of what appears of it, in the time of salvation, although it in it self be still remaining, and shall, that darkness being dispelled, again with much lustre shew it self to the comfort of the penitent and patient sufferer. The Lord, who now seeming to be withdrawn from him, hath left him as in darkness, shall again lift up the light of his countenance upon him, and be a light and comfort unto him. In assurance of this she saith, I will bear the indignation of the Lord, i. e. she will patiently bear the punishment, that he hath seen fit to inflict on her, as being sensible that she hath justly deserved it, (saying, because I have sinned against him;) and will expect, till being reconciled to her, he shall plead her cause, and execute judgment for her sake on her enemy, who being by God made an instrument for correcting her, insulted over her, as if she were worse than her self, and used the occasion put into her hand to wreak her own spite, not to execute God's command. When he hath thus performed his whole work of chastisement upon her, then will he return in mercy to her, bring her forth to light, restore to her comfort, and the joy of his salvation, and she shall behold his righteousness, which he will exercise toward her in delivering her, and recompensing vengeance on her enemy; or his goodness, loving kindness, and faithfulness, the word including all. Having thus declared her own condition, and what she assures her self of, she proceeds to declare what her enemy is to expect,

10. Then she that is mine enemy shall see it, and shame shall cover her which said unto me, Where is the Lord thy God? mine eyes shall behold her: now shall she be trodden down as the mire of the streets.

Then she that is mine enemy shall see it, and shame shall cover her which said, &c.] She that now * insults over me, as if I were utterly forsaken and cast off by God, and derides me for still putting my trust in him, who, she thinks, either cannot or will not deliver me, seeing the good hand of God upon me, in my gracious restoration, shall in that strange alteration, which she shall see in things concerning me contrary to her desire, whereby the Lord will approve himself still my God; have enough to cover her with shame, by being frustrated in her expectation, but much more from what shall befall her self: for from the height of her pride shall she be cast down into the lowest and basest condition, to be even trod down and trampled upon with all contempt, as the very dirt and mire of the streets. And whereas now she cannot please her eyes more with any thing than her looking on my misery, then, on the contrary shall my eyes behold and look on her in her despicable condition, to their full satisfaction. See the like use of the word, Psalms liv. ult. and lix. 10. and Micah iv. 11. The word rendred she shall see, as taking it for the third person future feminine, Others take for the second masculine, as likewise the following verb, and thus render the words, as in the Margin, and thou wilt see her that is mine enemy, and cover her with shame. But the former is the more received interpretation, and there is no reason to depart from it.

This prophecy, if applied to Babylon and the Chaldeans, was then fulfilled when Babylon was taken, and their empire destroyed by the Medes and Persians, Dan. v. 30, 31. and it is observable, that that great turn of their fortune was made in that very night, when Belshazzar with his nobles did insult afresh and lifted

* R. Tanch. Compare Lev. xxvi. 44. Psalm xxii. 7, 8. and xlii. 10. and Mat. xxvii. 43.

* R. Tanch. Tarn.

* Druf. R. Tanch. See the like taunts, lifted up themselves against God, and his people that trusted in him alone, and praised their own gods of gold and silver, &c. as 'tis in that chapter, ver. 2, 3, 4. ^z They that apply it to the Idumæans, look on it as made good, either when they were taken also by the Chaldeans, not many years after Jerusalem, or after the return of the Jews when they were overthrown by the Maccabees, lib. 1. cap. v. 3, &c. Of destruction threatned to them, see Jer. xlix. 7, &c.

Some of the Jews (as we have intimated) would have us look on it as a prophecy not yet fulfilled, but hereafter by the destruction of the Romans, by whom they were since carried out of their country, and such, under whom they are still thence detained, to be fulfilled. By their false principles on which they go, they are necessitated so to do: their ancestors having denied and rejected Christ when he came, and God having rejected them so long since for it, which they are resolved not to acknowledge, but to persist still in like obstinacy, they have nothing to pretend as a colour for it, but that those prophecies of a temporal deliverance from the hands of all their enemies, to be wrought (as they would have it) by the Messiah, are not yet made good. And these enemies they will have particularly to be the Romans, (on whom they bestow the name of Edomites) and so passing over the Babylonish captivity, before which our Prophet spake these things, and their restoration from it, (of which he plainly prophesied that, which was by what fell out in their carrying to Babylon, and the destruction both of their other enemies that then insulted over them, and of Babylon it self afterward, and their restoring to their own country again, evidently and signally made good;) fix new times, and uncertain periods, that so they may still foster their error, and keep up their posterity in a vain hope of having those, and the like prophecies (which have long since been according to the true intent made good) yet fulfilled according to their own groundless desires, as they have kept themselves for many hundred of years past.

To this purpose is it what a ^a Doctor of great note among them expressly saith, that the enemy here spoken of, and bidden not to rejoice, is Rome the wicked, under whose power their captivity had been prolonged above a thousand years (when he wrote this, and some hundreds of years are past since.) This I particularly take notice of, because the name Rome is here in some editions of that author left out, and in a Manuscript so blotted out as yet to appear, by order it seems of the Inquisitors. Although by the epithet, which is left behind, viz. the wicked, is sufficiently understood what they mean, to warn such as look into the Jewish writers that they do consult several editions or manuscript copies if they have them at hand, if they would see what the Jewish writers say in such places where they meddle with Christians. By the same means is it, I suppose, that in another of their Commentators, R. Solomon Jarchi, in some copies manuscript and printed is put, mine enemy, i. e. Babel and Rome, but in others is put Babel and Persia, in others Aram. In this digression it may likewise be observed, that in some editions of the Chaldee Paraphrase is here put, ^d Rome mine enemy, though in other editions the name Rome is not found. And it may well (according to the conjecture of a learned ^e man) be thought to have by some latter Jews been put in, for adding authority to their opinion. For if Jonathan, the author of the paraphrase on this, and the other Prophets were so ancient, as he is taken to be, it is not probable that it was ever put in by himself, though in those paraphrases of other books which were not so ancient, it be no wonder to see such glosses of their own, agreeable to their own opinions, put in.

11. In the day that thy walls are to be built, in that day shall the decree be far removed.

12. In that day also be shall come even to thee from Assyria, and from the fortified cities, and from the fortress even to the river, and from sea to sea, and from mountain to mountain.

13. Notwithstanding the land shall be desolate, because of them that dwell therein; for the fruit of their doings.

[In the day that thy walls are to be built, &c.] That there is no small difficulty in this and the following verse, appears by the irreconcilably different expositions which are by Interpreters given of them, in respect both to the person spoken to, and the things which are spoken concerning that person. As to the person pointed to by the word or pronoun thy, on stating of which much depends the understanding of what is either promised; or threatned, some will have to be meant Jerusalem, or the nation of the Jews, God's church or people; Others, on the contrary, the insulting enemy before mentioned, whoever she be. If Jerusalem or the people of the Jews be meant, then will it be a promise of good to them, which according to ^f Some will be to this purpose. In the day that the Lord shall again build up thy walls, (or there shall be a day wherein thy walls shall be built up and) in that day shall the decree be far removed (or ^g that day shall far remove the decree) i. e. say ^h Some, the decrees and exactions of thy enemies whereby they exacted tribute of thee, or tyrannically ruled over thee, and oppressed thee: or as ⁱ others, the decree made for hindring thee to be rebuilded, viz. the decree made by Artaxerxes, Ezra iv. 21. these shall be

^z Ch. à Castro, Menoch. Tirin. ^a R. D. Kimchi. ^b Edit. Buxt. ^c Last Venice edit. fol. ^d Ed. Venet. Bomberg. ^e Pet. fig. Of divers things foisted into the text of the Targum, (or Chaldee Paraphrase) or altered in it, see Buxt. Lex. in רומי and רומ and רומ. ^f R. Tanch. Vul. Lat. ^g Calvin and Schindler. ^h Chal. Paraph. Ab. Ezra, and R. Tanch. ⁱ Chr. à Castro.

be no longer in force against thee, but thou shalt be freed from them, and enjoy thy liberty. * Others, the decree shall be far extended or go far abroad, i. e. the decree of punishment to be brought on thine enemies. In that day also he shall come unto thee, &c. i. e. say ¹ Some, be, i. e. any of thy dispersed, captive, exile children that shall be in any of the places after named, shall come home and return unto thee: ^m Others, there shall be, that shall come unto thee from all those parts, viz. such shall be the glory of Jerusalem again after her restauration, that ⁿ many of all nations shall flock unto it. Not far from this is that exposition of ^o some Jews, That day shall certainly be, and in it shall be subject unto thee the inhabitants of those nations, [i. e. I suppose, such of them as shall join themselves to the Jews, and join with them in serving their God, not as if all those nations should be subjected to them.] This restauration of Jerusalem (as is by ^p Some observed) was made good, and the prophecy corporally and typically fulfilled after the seventy years of the Babylonish captivity, ^q when the Jews had liberty again to return to their country, and build their city and temple: but spiritually and principally, when the kingdom of Christ was after his coming spread through the whole earth, and the decree went forth far abroad, i. e. the doctrine of the gospel; that decree mentioned, Psalms ii. 7, 8. by virtue of which, he was to have the beathen given him for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession, and by the doctrine of the kingdom they were to be called in to him from all parts. Surely that this higher manner of the fulfilling this prophecy, by building the spiritual Jerusalem, i. e. the church of Christ, may well be attended to, and chiefly looked on by Christians, and so compared with what is said, Amos ix. 11, &c. that God would raise up the tabernacle of David which was fallen, and close up the breaches thereof, &c. and so applied as that is, Acts xv. 16, 17. is not to be controverted: but we rather at present look after the plain literal fulfilling of it, which it long since so fully had, that we may on good grounds say, that the Jews in vain and without reason look for it as yet to come.

If the word יִרְחַק yirchak signify to go far abroad, and be divulged, as we have seen ^r Some to interpret it (though ^s Others question it, because it more usually signifies to be removed, or put far off) then might it, being applied to the decree of Cyrus, Ezra i. or of Darius, Ezra vi. be expounded thus, Then shall the decree for thy restauration be sent or promulged far and wide, and by virtue thereof thy children from all those parts where they are captives, shall come unto thee, though literally understood; and not only of the promulging of the gospel, according to that exposition formerly given.

VOL. I.

D d

Again, it may be considered whether, by the decree, may not be understood, the decree of God by his Prophets denounced, concerning the destruction of Jerusalem, the captivity of the Jews, and the laying their land desolate for their evil doing, and so the promise to be, that when God in mercy shall see time to restore again Jerusalem, that then the decree shall cease, be as it were laid aside and reversed, and then shall her exile children come again to her from all parts, though their land, mean while, by virtue of that decree, shall be desolate, &c.

By the decree, ^t Some who more spiritually interpret the words, understand human laws and traditions contrary to God, which shall give place to God's, and be removed to make way for that, and that then diverse of all nations shall come in unto the Lord. These ways of expounding the words are there, if they be looked on as spoken to and of Jerusalem, as our Translators by citing in the Margin, Amos ix. 11. seem to do, and not without good reason. But Others, as we said, will have them directed to the enemy, and then is there farther variety of expositions. ^u Some by the enemy meaning Babylon or the Chaldeans, and thus giving the meaning, it will be a day, i. e. a long day, or long time ere thy ruins shall be repaired: In that day of thy being trodden under, the power of sending abroad decrees among the nations ^v shall be far from thee, (according to that expression, Nahum ii. 13.) In that day be, i. e. Cyrus, shall come unto thee from Assyria, and to thy fenced cities, and shall subject to himself the places, or regions here described.

And the land, i. e. Chaldea, shall be desolate with it's inhabitants, because of their many impieties and slaughters, and rapines, by them formerly committed. This sense is given by a great learned ^x man, but seems somewhat harsh. ^y Others taking the words as referred more generally to the enemy, (without particularly designing who is meant) thus, At that very time when thou shalt establish thy kingdom, and rise up with all thy might against me, the decree of God shall be far and wide extended, and his judgment shall come on thee, who hast so contumeliously used me, from Assyria, &c. i. e. from one nation to another, till all mine enemies be destroyed. A learned ^z Jew, likewise taking it as spoken to the enemy in that large sense, looks on it as a threatening from the Jewish nation to them, that she shall be revenged on them for their insulting over her, saith, that the meaning may be, At the time that you shall think to plaister or make up your buildings, the decree of God shall be far removed from you, concerning it, i. e. he shall determine the contrary. That day shall certainly be ere long, and shall appear made good in the countries here named, by their being taken by Nebuchadnezzar, or afterwards: Assur or Assyria being being in the first place named as Israel's enemy, that at that time prevailed over them, and led them captives, &c.

^r * Lud. de Dieu. ^s Id. and Chal. Paraph. ^m Calvin. ⁿ See chap. iv. 1, 2. ^o R. Tanch. ^p Tarnov. ^q See Ezra i. and Neh. iii. ^r L. de Dieu, Tarn. ^s Calv. ^t Pelican. ^u Grot. ^v Wat. Thy tribute shall be far removed, or denied thee. ^x Grot. ^y Breu. ^z R. Tanch.

Others of the Jews, who look on the words as directed to the enemy, more plainly speak out their mind, that by the enemy they mean the Romans or Christians: so ^a One of them, therefore, speaking concerning the enemy saith, In the day that thou thinkest to build up thy walls with the spoils of Israel, when thou shalt come with Gog and Magog into the land of Israel, in that day shall the decree be far removed, i. e. that day shall be to thee to the contrary, and thy decree, which thou determinest over the nations, and Israel which thou rulest over, shall be far removed: that day shall come even to thee, That day of the salvation of Israel is a day of the Lord, and to thee, the enemy shall come to destroy thee, from Assur, &c. and the land shall be desolate, viz. the land of the people ^b with them that dwell therein. ^c Another thus expounds it, that the sons of Edom, i. e. the company of Christians shall come up to conquer Jerusalem, which, since Titus destroyed it, had been in their hands, and was taken from them by the Ismaelites, or Mahometans. The kingdom of Edom (saith he) shall go up thither to build their walls; but the matter shall not succeed according to their thoughts, for in that day the decree shall be far removed, that is to say, The decree which was in their hands, i. e. the custom of taking it, as at other times they had done: and how that decree shall come to be removed (or altered) he sheweth, saying, that is a day and it shall come unto thee, i. e. that is a day, a peculiar signal day, a day unto the Lord, and to thee, O enemy, shall it come, even to thy neck shall it reach. And so he mentions that against the kingdom of Rome shall come the kingdoms of Assyria, and of the sons of the East, that is it which he says from Assyria, and the fortified ^d cities, which he supposes to be Chaleath and Chabor, by the river Gozan, and the cities of the Medes, of which Joseph Ben-Gorion says, that the people of them Alexander the Macedonian did shut up within the mountains that they should not come forth. These the Prophet saith shall now come forth against this enemy, and by saying from מצור Matfor, or the fortrefs even to the river, he intimates that the ten tribes also which were there in restraint and captivity, shall come against them, and the other people which are in the North-East even to the river, viz. Euphrates, which is between Jerusalem and Babel shall all come up against them.

And because the Christians shall some remain in ships on the sea near the land of Israel, and others be on the land, therefore he first reckons up the people that shall come against them by land, from Assyria, and from the fortified cities, and from the fortrefs, and then prophesies that there shall come against them that are on the sea, strong nations also by sea, which is that which he saith, and from sea, i. e. on the sea shall they come from sea, and then from mountain to mountain, as much as to say, also of the inhabitants of the mountains shall come against them: and so in fine, the land of Israel in which the war shall be, and multitude of people shall be gathered together, shall be desolate because of them that dwell therein, viz. those nations which live in it for making war one with another; and all this shall be for the fruit of their doings, by which they did evil to Israel. And whereas the ^e Chaldee Paraphrast interprets it of the land of the nations, that that should be desolate by reason of the slaughter and destruction of the inhabitants, that also, says he, is true.

Thus have we from him a long story as punctually told us, as if he had with his eyes seen it already acted, and as confidently affirmed as if his exposition were as authentick as the text it self, and had been dictated to him by the same spirit, as the words thereof were to Micah: but such is it as the words afford no ground for. Consider when Micah prophesied, and what happened after, of the taking of Jerusalem, and the captivity of the Jews, and their restauration, and coming from all parts again to Jerusalem, after the land had for seventy years been desolate for their sins; and that if there be any thing beyond this in an higher sense to be looked after, it was fully made good in the setting up the church, the kingdom of Christ, and by so many nations being called into it by the preaching of the gospel; and it will easily appear that this prophecy hath in the utmost extent of it been long since so fulfilled, as that these Jews looking for a farther completion of it, by freeing them in such a way as they fancy from their present condition, will (as we before intimated) evidently appear to proceed only out of obstinacy to maintain and make good their groundless supposition, that the promised Messiah is not yet come, but yet to be expected as a temporal Saviour, whose kingdom should be of this world.

Beside these ways of expounding, some taking the words as directed to Jerusalem, or the nation, or church of the Jews, others to their enemies, there is yet another, which seems to part them between them, given by one of their ancients Commentators, viz. R. Solomon Jarchi, who taking the first words as referred to the enemy, which said, Where is now thy God? as if she also said to Jerusalem, The day wherein thy walls should be built, which thou expectest, the decree of that day is far removed, i. e. the time of it shall be prolonged, it shall never come: then makes the following to be the Prophet's answer to this purpose, That day which you mock at, saying it is lost, it is come to nothing, is a day reserved, and kept with God, and shall not be frustrated, and shall come even to thee, O enemy, to waste (or destroy thee) from Assur, which was the first, or chief of those that did us

^a R. D. Kimchi.
such thing exprest.

^b מלחמה.

^c Abarb.

^d 2 Kings xvii. 6.

^e In the copies that we have there is no us mischief, and the fortified cities, i. e. and unto the fortified cities, which Jonatban the paraphrast calls Churmani the great; (perhaps Armenia) and the strong city or fortress is Rome, as he saith, who will bring me into the strong city, Psalm lx. 9. and cviii. 10. and they say in the Midrash of Elleb haddebarim Rabba, (i. e. the great allegorical exposition of Deuteronomy;) that is, Rome, &c. This we give at large out of a manuscript copy; because in the ordinary printed copies, both the name of Rome and other words are wanting. And the land shall be desolate, i. e. (saith he) the land of the nations.

It may seem tedious that we have reckoned up all these ways of expounding these words; but perhaps it was necessary, lest any finding any of them omitted might suspect that it had in it something apposite, or of moment for understanding the text, which was not taken notice of.

Having now the chief of such interpretations as are given, any may use his own judgment, and I suppose none will seem plainer, and more agreeable to the words, than the first, taking the words as spoken of, or to Jerusalem, or the nation, or church of the Jews, that to her is promised, that there should be a day, wherein her walls should be built, and in that day her exile children should come again to her from several places of their dispersion; though it should not be till after the land, for the evil of their doings, should be desolate, and they be removed from it; before the making good of this gracious promise, that judgment or punishment afore threatened should take place for chastisement of them for their sins. The particle ו rendred notwithstanding, by it self signifies simply and: but according as the words, among which it is placed, be construed or understood, will have other meanings, as here according to our translation, notwithstanding, i. e. though these things be promised; yet before they come to pass, the land shall be desolate, &c. or, these things shall be, though the land be made desolate; or as in the Margin, after that the land hath been desolate these things shall be.

As for the places named in the 12th verse, there is no small difference in assigning them, Interpreters according to their exposition of the other words, seeking to fit them to it. They that look on the words as a promise of an happy restauration of the Jews; take them as a description of those places in or about Assyria, and beyond it, where they were detained, and from whence they should return; whether מצור Matzor be taken for the name of a place, or for any fortified city, and the whole country to be denoted, both that of it which was about its rivers, and on or about its mountains, or else a description of the land to which they should return to possess it; by all its borders, both for length and breadth; there being in both these countries ^a places to which the words may be applied. ¹ They that look on them as a threatening destruction to Babylon or the Chaldeans, take them as a description of those places and countries which Cyrus, King of Persia, should subdue, and take from the Chaldeans, by the strong cities, understanding Babylon, Borsippa, and other like; by the river, Euphrates; by from sea to sea, from the Persian gulph to the Syrian, or that part of the Mediterranean sea; by from mountain to mountain, from mount Taurus to mount Carmel. ^k Others look on them as a description of the countries of those enemies of the Jews, which bordered on their land, as Egypt (designed by the words from sea to sea) and the Idumeans (or Edom) Moabites and Ammonites denoted by from mountain to mountain, i. e. mount Hor, about which these countries did lye, which Nebuchadnezzar should also take. According to these and the like grounds, do they appropriate the descriptions here given to different places. All that we can say is, that without doubt, when these words were spoken it was well understood what places were meant by the descriptions given of them; but now so long after, whatsoever can be said, is but by conjecture, and cannot be certainly affirmed, so as to conclude for one opinion, to the silencing and taking away pretence of probability from all others.

Having been thus long on these words, we shall not dismiss them without taking notice of what is said in the Dutch Annotations (as translated into English on ver. 13.) viz. that by the land they rendring it, this land, is to be understood the land of Canaan, and what is said, it shall become a desolation, this happened first in the time of the Babylonian devastation, and afterwards in the time of the New Testament, and continueth so to this very day. In this note seems to be some confusion, for it seems to make these two desolations, viz. that occasioned by the Babylonians, so many years before Christ, and that by the Romans, after Christ, to be one continued desolation, or both in this one prophecy to be prophesied of, whereas the long distance of time, and the restauration of Jerusalem after the first devastation and the condition of the Jews coming between, shews them to be of different and distinct consideration as to the letter of what was spoken, though what was spoken of one, may in another sense be applicable to the other.

Again, what Drusus saith, that by some the 11th and 12th verses are understood as of denunciation of punishment to his people for their sins, and then, ver. 13. is to be understood of Israel; I know not by whom it is, or how made out. I suppose they must then understand the words as spoken to the Jews or Israelites, In the day that thou thinkest to build up thy walls and fortify thy self against thine enemies, thy decree (or determined purpose) shall be far removed, or frustrated. In that very day wherein thou thinkest to secure thy self, shall the enemy from all parts, and into

^f R. Tanch. ^g Tarni.
Tanch. and R. D. Kimchi.

^h See Deut. xi. 24. Ezék. xlviii. 13, &c. Joel ii. 20.

ⁱ Gröt.

^k See R.

into all thy quarters come unto thee, and the land shall be by them made a desolation, &c. The words taken by themselves might bear this sense, but as here they stand considering what went before, ver. 8, &c. When I fall I shall arise, &c. expressions of assurance of comfort and salvation, and what follows to the same purpose, ver. 14. to the end of the chapter; it will appear, that if they be looked on as spoken of God's people, they are consolatory, and a promise of good, though; that those who continue in their wickedness may not snatch at them, and thence take occasion to encourage themselves in evil; it be added, (to shew that these things shall not be made good to them, but upon repentance, and after they have been chastised for their sins, according to the prophecy going before to that purpose) notwithstanding the land shall be desolate, &c. or (this shall be) after the land hath been desolate because of them that dwell therein for the fruit of their doings. If they be looked on as comminatory, they will more properly seem to belong to the insulting enemy; as declaring what shall betide her for her pride and insolency, and like behaviour.

14. ¶ Feed thy people with thy rod, the flock of thine heritage, which dwell solitarily in the wood, in the midst of Carmel: let them feed in Bashan and Gilead, as in the days of old.

Feed thy people, or as in the Margin, rule, &c.] The word being used in both senses, the first simply; the second figuratively. A learned ¹ Jew notes that these words uttered in form of a prayer, are a good promise, and declaration (or prophecy) of what should be, according to the usual custom of prophecies, that God would keep them by his providence. On the contrary it is by ^m another noted on Psalms lxi. and cix. that the imprecations and curses there used, are not properly curses by him wished against his enemies, but rather denunciations or foretelling of such evils, as God would send upon them, which he directed him, as elsewhere other Prophets, in such forms to utter. That which the Prophet either for the people, or in the name of the people asks (and by asking shews that God will so bring it to pass) is, Feed thy people with thy rod. The word, as it more generally signifies a rod cut from a tree, to be carried in the hand, so is figuratively used, sometimes for a scepter, sometimes for a shepherd's staff, with which he guides or directs, and orders his sheep. And according to his using it in driving, ordering, or directing them, is his behaviour towards them, expressed, (and so the behaviour of princes or governors, who are usually compared to shepherds towards the people, or those that are under them, likened to a flock or sheep.) So in the Arabick tongue, by one ^a that hath a smooth, soft, or gentle rod, or staff, is expressed, one that gently rules and guides his flock; by one that hath ^o a rough and hard staff, one that roughly or harshly behaves himself towards them; according to which, Psalms ii. 9. that which we render, thou shalt break them with a rod of iron, is rendered by ^p Some, thou shalt feed or rule them with an iron rod; to express severe dealing toward those spoken of. Contrary to which is that, Psalms xxii. 4. Thy rod and thy staff, they comfort me. ^q It is an instrument both for direction, and correction, to guide, and to restrain, as the shepherd sees to be needful. And so by it here will be meant God's care over them for their good and preservation, by directing them to what is good for them, and keeping them from evil, his watchful and peculiar providence over them, who are called by a note of peculiarity his people, the flock of his heritage, as elsewhere, the Lord having taken Israel to be unto him a people of inheritance, Deut. iv. 20. and chosen them to be a special people unto himself above all people that are on the face of the earth, chap. vii. 6. For the Lord's portion is his people, Jacob the lot of his inheritance, chap. xxxii. 9. so therefore every where in Scripture called, and owned by him, viz. as his people, and so also his flock, Isaiah xl. 11. and Ezek. xxxiv. 8. and several other verses: and so his people, and the sheep of his pasture, Psalms c. 3. and so our Saviour calls his church, his sheep, John x. 27. and his flock, Luke xii. 32. These he prays (saith Abarbinel) that he will feed or govern henceforth with his own rod, and not with the rod of the enemy, because they are, says he, the flock of thine heritage.

Which dwell solitarily in the wood, in the midst of Carmel, &c. These words being concise, it hath caused diversity of expositions, of which before we give farther account, we may observe that the particle in, viz. in the wood is not expressed in the original text, but supplied as understood: and, again, concerning Carmel, that it is a name of a mountain. ^r Two mountains are observed to be called by this name, one in the northern part of Judea, near the sea, in the confines of Affur and Zebulun, of which is mention in the history of Elijah, 1 Kings xviii. 19, 20. and ver. 42. and in the history of Elisba, 2 Kings ii. 25. and iv. 25. The other more southerly in the mid-land near Hebron in the lot of the tribe of Judah, of which is mention in the history of Saul, 1 Sam. xv. 12. and in which it is said that Nabal's possessions were, 1 Sam. xxv. 2. and to this mountain they refer usually what is spoken by the Prophets, concerning the pastures of Carmel, as Jer. l. 19. Amos i. 2. and here: although, as a learned ^t man observes, they may aptly enough be referred to that that Carmel which Elijah did frequent. A learned ^u Jew observes, that this name was given to the mountain or place so called, as being a place of fields, and trees, for that the word doth otherwise signify a place of trees, fruits and fields (abounding in corn or grafs) and therefore is so rendred elsewhere a plentiful or fruitful field, as Isaiah xvi. 10. and xxix. 17. and xxxii. 15. and Jer. iv. 26. and xlviii. 33. (so in our Translation; for in divers others the name Carmel is retained as a proper name.) The name also signifies a full green ear of corn, as Levit. ii. 14. and elsewhere. We may by the way also note that the word עץ yaar, rendred wood, is also elsewhere sometime joined with this word Carmel, as Isaiah x. 18. the glory of his wood, and of his Carmel, which Ours render of his forest and of his fruitful field, and xxxvii. 24. the forest of his Carmel, as if in Carmel were a wood or forest. Basban also and Gilead were places noted for plenty and richness of pasture; a land for cattle, Numb. xxxii. 1. Deut. xxxii. 14. and elsewhere often. Again, we may observe that several ^w Interpreters do differently distinguish the words, some joining the words in the midst of Carmel, with those that go before, others with those that follow. These things being observed, we shall the better perceive the grounds on which they that give different expositions go, and how to discern or judge betwixt them.

¹ R. Tanchum. and see R. D. Kimchi. ^m R. Saadiah, or who else it is that translated the Psalms into Arabick, with some notes upon them, MS. See Note on Hosea ix. 14. ⁿ ضعيف or لين العصا or صلب العصا or شديد Zamachshari in lib. Afas. ^p Græc. Syr. and Vulg. Lat. ^q Nic. Fuller. Concord. ^r R. Tanch. ^s Bochart. de Animalibus, p. 1. lib. 2. c. 48. ^t Ibid.

Among the several expositions we have these, 1st. That of the Chaldee Paraphrast, Feed thy people with thy word, the people of thine inheritance, in the age (or world) which is to be renewed; (he means, perhaps, after their return from captivity) they shall dwell (or let them dwell) alone, which were solitary in the wood, and they shall dwell (or let them dwell) in Carmel, and they shall feed (or let them feed) in the land of Mathnan, i. e. Basban, and Gilead as in the days of old. In reference to this, and other expositions may be observed that it was foreprophefied as a blessing, that Israel should dwell alone, &c. Numb. xxiii. 9. and Deut. xxxiii. 28. in safety and security, without dependence on other nations, or fear from them, or mixture with them. 2^{ly}. That of a learned Jewish ^x Expositor, which dwell, i. e. that they may be alone in their land, and no other people with them. In the wood, in the midst of Carmel, i. e. Let them dwell in the wood as in Carmel, which is an inhabited place, of fields, vineyards, and trees; as if he should say, they shall then dwell (or let them then dwell) confidently or securely in the wood, which is a place of hurtful beasts, and not be afraid of them, as a man that dwelleth in the midst of Carmel where there is no cause of fear, as he saith, Ezek. xxxiv. 25. They shall dwell safely in the wilderness and sleep in the woods. 3^{ly}. ^y Another of them, feed, them which dwell solitarily (separated to the service of God, after that the other nations are cut off) as [in] the wood (or forest) in the midst of Carmel; so let them feed in Basban and Gilead, i. e. all those other countries being free to them in their possession and occupation, none hindring them, as woods on the mountains are free to all that will, to feed, or gather wood in them; so let those rich places be free to them. 4^{ly}. ^z Another, O Lord our God; feed thy people Israel with thy rod and staff, not with the rod of the enemy, because they are the sheep of thine heritage, and therefore, them dwelling alone in the wood, in the midst of Carmel, feed, so as that these sheep may obtain to dwell securely alone, and no other dwell with them in their wood in the midst of Carmel, thereby denoting the land of Israel, and Jerusalem, because Carmel was a place of good fields and vineyards, and so shall the land of Israel become again good, fruitful, and green, or flourishing. Let them feed in Basban and Gilead, which are countries on the other side of Jordan, (as in the days of old) when Reuben and Gad, and half the tribe of Manasseh were in them.

These expositions have we from the Jews. Amongst Christians is yet farther variety. ^a Some to this purpose giving the meaning, Feed thy people, &c. those which now being scattered among strange nations, the Chaldeans and others without any pastor or guide, are as if they dwelt solitarily in a wood exposed to dangers, do thou feed again in the midst of Carmel, and bring back, that they may feed again in Basban and Gilead in their own countries, as in the days of old, i. e. in security and prosperity under thy protection, as their fore-fathers did. This much agrees with the Chaldee; and to the same sense are the words, as in our Translation read; perspicuously paraphrased by a learned and famous ^b Bishop of our church, In this mean time, viz. of the desolation of the land, O God, take thou care of thy people, Oh do thou feed and govern them by thy gracious protection, lead thou this flock of thine heritage, which now dwell solitarily in the wilderness of their captivity, into the midst of thy fruitful pastures of Carmel, let them feed in the rich fields of Basban and Gilead, as in former times. Others, though not differing in the signification and sense of the words, yet diversly pointing them, ^c make part of them the words of the prophet, part the words of God, as if the Prophet having said, Feed thy people with thy rod, &c. which dwell solitarily in the wood, God should answer in the midst of Carmel shall they feed, and in Basban and Gilead, i. e. they shall be brought back from their captivity, and possess their rich land again, as formerly from their coming to it out of Egypt till their captivity. Or as some ^d Others, the Prophet's words are, feed thy people, &c. which now dwell in their captivity, as in a wood, (feed them, I say) in the midst of Carmel; and God's answer, they shall feed in Basban and

Vol I.

E e

^u R. D. Kimchi in dict. that it shall be so with them. Hall's Par.

^w See Chr. à Castro.

^y R. Tanch.

^z Abarb.

^d Tirin.

^a R. D. Kimchi, taking it as by way of promise from God

^b Pelican. Calvin. Chr. à Castro, &c.

^c Ribera.

^d Bishop

and Gilead to the same sense that before. ^c Others, feed them dwelling in the wood of their captivity among the Chaldeans, as securely as if they were in the midst of Carmel; then adding by way of assurance, when thou hast brought them back they shall feed in Babban, &c. ^e Others, that dwell solitarily in the wood, i. e. without mingling themselves with other nations, that they may serve thee alone, &c. These all agree in this at least, that they make the first words to be the words of the Prophet by way of petition to God, and so including a prophecy of what shall be accordingly. But there is a learned ^f Commentator, who looks on them all, as the words of the Prophet to Israel, bidding them, and so comforting them with assurance that they should, feed their own people, their own sheep, as they had, for the time of their captivity, fed their enemies sheep, served them; but should hereafter be their own men, look in safety, security, and liberty after their own affairs in their own land. But this exposition is not so agreeable to the words, as that we should forsake that wherein others agree to follow it. However, in this all hitherto agree, that the words contain a prophecy of the Jews return from captivity to their own land, and that they should there be in security under the protection of God, live in plenty and prosperity, and be supplied with all things good for them, as sheep in those rich pastures under the conduct of a good and careful shepherd. ^h Others take other ways, looking on the words as the words of God the Father to Christ, bidding him to take care of his church, and to feed them with evangelical food: or, ⁱ at least, as the words of the Prophet to Christ, praying him that he would bring Israel into his church, and feed and guide them, though destitute of help, like sheep in woods. ^k Others, as the words of God to the pastors of the church, Christ's fellow labourers, prescribing to them how they should take care of the flock, of which he had made them overseers, under the type of the ancient church. ^l Others, as the words of the church to Christ, the chief shepherd of the church praying him that he would feed his people, i. e. his church scattered all abroad upon the earth, and hated by the children of this world, (with his staff) i. e. his word and spirit, those his flock of sheep, as they are often compared, that dwell alone as a separated people, not intermixed with the rest of the world, with Sects and Hereticks, (for which reason they are also often persecuted and driven into solitudes) and yet living in safety and confidence against all enemies, and hell gates under the protection of their shepherd, &c. But though these are pious meanings, yet we look on as more apposite to our purpose, and giving the natural meaning of the words, the former expositions, and among them, that ^m Paraphrase, which as we said, is agreeable to them, as in our Translation read, making the persons, speaking, spoken to, and of, the Prophet, God, and the nation, or at least the church of the Jews, implying (as we said) a prophecy, or gracious promise of return out of captivity to their own land, and that under the protection of God, taking care of them as his people, his flock and sheep, they should enjoy all things necessary, and conducing to their well being in abundant manner, set forth by a similitude of sheep feeding in those rich pastures named. Although withal it cannot be doubted that all these good things promised to the Jews are in a higher manner made good to the church of Christ, and all faithful believers rescued from sin and satan, and brought back into his fold; who, as he saith, shall be saved under his protection, and go in and out, be kept in safety and security, and find pasture, i. e. spiritual food for their souls of his word and sacraments, and all things conducing to their comfort and eternal good. And to this ultimate fulfilling of this prophecy under Christ, doth the Chaldee Paraphrase seem to point, making them as a prayer to God that he would feed his people with his word, in the age that was after to be renewed, as above was said. This paraphrase is said to have been composed some thirty years before Christ. This place will be well illustrated by comparing it with another, promising the same blessings in very like expressions, Jer. l. 17, 18, 19.

15. According to the days of thy coming out of the land of Egypt will I shew unto him marvellous things.

According to the days of thy coming out of the land of Egypt, &c.] These words are generally looked on, as spoken in the person of God, in answer to that former petition of the Prophet, Feed thy people, &c. assuring him that he will so do; and that he may not doubt of it through any seeming difficulties, puts him in mind of those former great things which he had done for their fathers in bringing them with his mighty power out of Egypt, with mighty signs and wonders. He that could do that, can do this; his power is still the same; of that they cannot doubt, and he assures them he will do it; though considering their forlorn condition, how low, and weak they are, how many and potent their enemies, and what great obstacles are in the way, it cannot be done without shewing unto them marvellous things, like those of old, such as shall be wondrous in their own eyes, and in the eyes of all that behold them: so that they shall say among the Heathen, The Lord hath done great things for them, Psalm cxxvi. 2. yea that in some respects that which God would do, in their bringing back from Babylon, and their other dispersions, and their wonderful restoration, should be rather more marvellous, than what he did in the days of their coming out of Egypt; appears by what is said, Jer. xvi. 14, 15. Behold, the days come,

saith

^c Ch. à Castro.

^e Ibid.

^f Sanct.

^h See Chr. à Castro.

ⁱ See Diodat. and Pise.

^k Jun. Trem.

^l Dutch Notes.

^m Bishop Hall's Par.

saith the Lord, that it shall be no more said, The Lord liveth that brought up the children of Israel, out of the land of Egypt; but the Lord liveth that brought up the children of Israel, from the land of the North, and from all the lands, whither he had driven them, and I will bring them again into their land that I gave unto their fathers. With much the like words, chap. xxiii. 7, 8. which seem to make as if in, and for effecting the latter deliverance, even greater marvels were wrought and greater power shewed than in the first. For what reasons it may be so said, will not be to our present purpose to enquire, our present words representing them as alike marvellous; and they were both manifestly ⁿ types of that greater deliverance by Christ wrought, and those more marvellous things by him done, for the delivering of his people from the power of hell and the devil. And so may we look on the words both here, and in those places of Jeremy, as directing us to that wonderful deliverance, for a fuller and higher completion of these prophecies, than was either by the deliverance in bringing them out of the Egyptian bondage, or Babylonish captivity, though more immediately the words point at those, and in this the expressions of the Jews themselves will concur, viz. that the final completion of these prophecies, is to be by what should be done by Christ or the Messiah. So Kimchi on Jer. xvi. 14, 15. saith, that what is there said shall be made good in the days of the Messiah, (as likewise Abarbinel, as being the opinion of their ancient Doctors.) But mean while, though thus far in words they agree with us, yet in the application of them to the matter spoken of, there is a vast and irreconcilable difference. For we say, that as for any temporal deliverance by these words foretold, it was made good in a marvellous manner by bringing back the dispersed Jews from the Babylonish captivity. But as for that more marvellous delivery, by this typified and given them to look for under the Messiah, it is wholly spiritual, (his kingdom being not of this world) and hath been accordingly fulfilled by rescuing his people (and those as well Gentiles as Jews) from a worse captivity under a more potent enemy, than either the Egyptian of old, or Babylonian afterward, even the devil, and the power of hell. But the Jews, that they may look for, by virtue of these prophecies, a temporal restitution from the captivity they are now under, since their rejecting of Christ, passing by that deliverance from the Babylonish captivity, as a small thing, though God set so signal a character on it, apply the words to that which they yet expect, without any grounds of a promise to be wrought for them, by their Messiah's subduing all nations to them, especially the Christians, whom they hope to see totally cut off, as hath been above said, and his making them lords over them in this world. We have already seen those marvellous things done, and still doing, which make us expect no other of a different kind, which would indeed be less than what hath been already done. Thy coming out of Egypt.] ^o Thine, O Prophet, or people, in thy fathers. I will shew unto him.] i. e. the people of Israel. The change of persons spoken to in Scripture is frequent, and doth not alter the meaning: all is meant of the people.

16. ¶ The nations shall see and be confounded at all their might, they shall lay their hand upon their mouth, their ears shall be deaf.

The nations shall see, and be confounded at all their might, &c.] These again seem to be the words of the Prophet, describing the effects of those marvellous things that God would work: so unlikely was it that the Jews being in that low and servile condition, which they were brought to in the Babylonish captivity, should be restored to be again a kingdom, and flourishing nation, that the nations seeing what marvellous things God had shewed in restoring them, could not but wonder, and be confounded to see all their own might, which they trusted in, brought to nothing; and those whom they so much despised to be advanced to that height, and power, that they are not able to hinder or hurt them; ^p Some by their might, understanding the might of the enemies themselves, ^q Others, the might of the people that are saved. And the manifest signs of their confusion, and consternation should appear, in that they should lay their hand upon their mouth; be silent and mute, as not knowing what to say, nor daring to speak against God or his people, nor able to contradict what they saw. With this expression may be compared, chap. iii. 3, 7. and Exod. xi. 7. Joshua x. 21. Judges xviii. 19. Job v. 16. and xxi. 5. and xl. 4. Psalms cvii. 42. And that their ears should be deaf: so ungrateful should be the things that they heard, as that they should be astonished by hearing them, and being not able to bear them, even stop their ears against them, as wishing themselves even rather deaf than to hear such marvellous things, as God had done for those whom they hated. This their confusion is also expressed in the next words.

17. They shall lick the dust like a serpent, they shall move out of their holes like worms of the earth: they shall be afraid of the Lord our God, and shall fear because of thee.

They shall lick the dust as a serpent, &c.] Those insolent enemies, who erst while so proudly insulted and triumphed over God's people, and magnified their own strength, shall now be brought to the lowest, and most abject condition, as if they were worms and no men: which is elegantly set forth by these expressions, They shall lick the dust as a serpent: so cast down shall they be, so humbled as not to be able to raise up themselves, and so through fear behave themselves, as if they were condemned to the same posture and food, ⁿ Tarnov.

^o R. Tanchum, Calv.

^p So the most.

^q Jun. Trem. Tarn. Stokes.

^r Gen. iii. 14.

food, with that accursed creature. The like expression have we, Psalms lxxii. 9: Isaiab xlix. 3. And they shall move out of their holes like worms (or creeping things) of the earth. The word ירגזו yirgezu, rendred, move; is such as is taken usually to signify a trembling motion, or motion with perturbation, whether spoken of a bodily moving from a place, or of the mind being moved with some passion, as of fear, or anger, or the like; the effects of which are commonly seen in the trembling motion, or gesture of the body also. It is therefore by Some rendred, they shall be disturbed: by Others, they shall be moved with fear, or tremble, or the like. The word in our Translation includes the latitude of the word, any motion with its circumstances of fear, and disturbance, or the like, which it seems here to intimate. The word מסגרות Misgeroth rendred holes, being from a word that signifies to shut up, or shut in, properly denotes a place wherein any is so shut in, or remains, any inclosure, and may therefore be applied to a dwelling place, a castle, or hold. It is used elsewhere for a prison; as Psalms cxlii. 7. and Isaiab xxiv. 22. and by some of the Jews taken for chains, as whereby prisoners are restrained, Psalms xviii. 45. where Ours render it close places, as likewise, 2 Sam. xxii. 46. still the same notion of the word is retained, and so in this place, whether it be rendred (as by Ours) out of their holes, with respect to the worms, or creeping things of the earth; their holes being to them the places wherein they are inclosed; or as by Others in respect to the men (the enemies) that are compared to them, their mansions, or strong holds, wherein they shut themselves up for security; it will be necessarily suggested to us that as worms, or like creeping things move themselves with confusion out of their holes, when the earth is disturbed about them: so the enemies of God's people should in confusion, and tumultuously, with fear and consternation, leave their mansions, and strong holds, wherein they thought to be secure, not able to lift up themselves against God, and those by him sent against them, or made to prevail over them; so that they shall deliver up to them the places wherein they trusted. The words are still an expression of great confusion, disturbance, and consternation, which shall befall them; and the reason of that consternation to them is in the next words given, because they shall be afraid of the Lord our God, &c. This is the import of the usual expositions, which are among themselves easily reconcileable. But there is a Doctor of the Jews, who here (as often as we have elsewhere intimated) takes a different way from Others, and will have the word rendred, holes, to signify captivity, (although that also would be from the same notion) and the sense to be, that the enemies of Israel, being cast down wounded, shall tremble, by reason of, or in revenge of the captivity which they brought on Israel, God now taking vengeance on them, for the evils they did to those his people in their captivity. But his exposition is so harsh, and violent, that few, I suppose, will follow it. Another, by reason of their own restraint, they shall be afraid of the Lord our God, and shall fear because of thee; so submissively and humbly shall they behave themselves, through fear of God, who hath done such marvellous things in exalting those, whom they erst while trod upon, and triumphed over, and casting them themselves with all their might down to the ground; so may these words be looked on, as the cause of that great consternation in the former described, or else they may be looked on as an effect, or farther description of their consternation, that they shall now be really afraid of God, whom before they despised and reproached, and with fear and crouching address themselves to him, as forced to acknowledge that there is none besides him.

And shall fear because of thee.] Here is a change of the persons; as if with admiration addressing his speech to the Lord, he now on a sudden spake to him, of whom he was speaking. Except, with Others, we should look on it as a turning to Israel, or the people of God, for whom he did such marvellous things to the confusion and consternation of their enemies. As if he said they shall be afraid of the Lord, whom they see to be our God, and they shall also fear thee, whom before they insulted over, saying to thee, where is the Lord thy God? ver. 10. now seeing him to own thee in so signal a manner by those great things that he doth for thee. The scope of his words will be still the same, viz. to set forth both the goodness, and the greatness of God, manifested in the marvellous things, which he doth for the delivery and exaltation of his dejected people and destruction and bringing down of their proud enemies, both which, viz. the goodness and power of God, he proceeds also to admire and magnify in the following verse, in another regard, viz. the taking away that which was the cause to them of their former misery, (see ver. 9.) that so it may not prevail to keep them still miserable.

18. Who is a God like unto thee, that pardoneth iniquity, and passeth by the transgression of the remnant of his heritage? he retaineth not his anger for ever, because he delighteth in mercy.

19. He will turn again, he will have compassion upon us: he will subdue our iniquities; and thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea.

Who is a God like unto thee, that pardoneth iniquity, &c.] Some, that they may with greater emphasis give the meaning of the word

^a Abu Walid Kimchi. ^b Nic. Fuller Concord. ^c Greek, Vulg. Latin. ^d Munst. Tigur. ^e כִּנְיָ.
^f Aben Ezra, R. Tanchum, &c. ^g Grot. ^h Abarb. ⁱ R. Solomon Jarchi. ^j Jun. Trem. R. D. Kimchi.
^k As Pharaoh, Exod. v. 11. and Senacherib, 2 Kings xix. 10. and here, ver. 10. ^l R. D. Kimchi, Druf.
^m Jun. Trem. and so an Arab. MS. Version.

word ^ל El in our Translation simply rendred, God, render it, a mighty God: and sure the mightiness both of his power and mercy is so evidently exerted, and made manifest in the following acts mentioned, as that the Prophet by his question here put, denying (as that is the manifest force of the expression in form of admiration, or interrogation, and so therefore by ^g Some rendred negatively,) that any besides him can do those things, asserts him to be the one only true God, and that there is none among all that were ever worshipped by the Heathen to be compared to him, and that he, and only he, is infinite in mercy and power, and so able to do such things. The acts mentioned are, that pardoneth iniquity, with the others subjoined, as concomitant, or farther explications of it. This is a title or property which God challengeth to himself; and whereby he proclaimeth himself that he is a God pardoning, or forgiving iniquity, Exod. xxxiv. 7. and Numb. xiv. 18. where the words in the original are the same that here, and this was always accounted the property of God alone: so say they, Mark ii. 7. [^h He giveth repentance and spareth or taketh away punishment.]

And passeth by the transgression of the remnant of his heritage.] Passeth by, i. e. winketh at, and doth not rigorously enquire into it to take vengeance for it to the uttermost, but as one that ⁱ passeth by a thing that he will not take notice of, doth not impute to the remnant of his heritage their transgressions; those (say Some, both ^k Jews and ^l Christians) who shall be left remaining of the Jews at that time when God shall restore them from captivity. Above, chap. iv. 7. God promiseth to make her that halted a remnant, the people of his inheritance shall not so be destroyed, though they be chastised, and though the wicked be cut off from among them, but that an holy seed, a ^m remnant shall be preserved, and saved, Rom. ix. 27. and to these is the promise here made, not to all in general. He that is a God forgiving iniquity, will yet by no means clear the guilty, i. e. saith the Chaldee, the guilty that will not repent, or turn, and be converted, as he saith in the same place, Exod. xxxiv. 7. but to those that turn to him he will shew mercy, as is here described, and they for their paucity in respect to the others, who perhaps would call themselves his people, but go contrary to him, are called the remnant of his heritage, and of these he doth not say that they are altogether ⁿ innocent, and without sin, but supposing their repentance intimated, ver. 9. that he will pardon, or take away, their iniquity, and pass by their transgression, because they are his heritage, not for their deserts, but of his own free mercy, it being his property not to retain anger for ever, to be implacable in his wrath, because he delighteth in mercy; so is his nature oft described, as, besides the forecited places of Exodus and Numbers, in many others. I am merciful, saith the Lord, and I will not keep anger for ever, Jer. iii. 12. and see Psalms ciii. 8, 9. though they have nothing in themselves to deserve it, yet saith he, I, even, I am he that blotteth out thy transgressions for my own sake, and will not remember thy sins; Isaiah xliii. 25. This property of mercy (as all others) in him is unalterable, and therefore as he hath formerly shewed mercy to his people, so will he again ^o do, he will turn again, he will have compassion upon us, which according to the ordinary use of that word, turn, ^p may either be expounded, he will again have compassion upon us, as he hath formerly used to have, or else with respect to what went before. He retaineth not his anger for ever.] He will after he hath chastised us, for our iniquities, by which we have provoked his wrath, in mercy ^q turn again from his wrath, he will not in anger shut up his tender mercies, Psalms lxxvii. 9. but will ^r turn us to himself, and turn himself to us, and have compassion upon us, according to what is said, Jonah iii. 9. with like use of the word, ^s who can tell if God will turn, and repent and turn away from his fierce anger, that we perish not? and Zech. i. 3. Turn ye unto me, saith the Lord of Hosts, and I will turn unto you, &c.

He will subdue our iniquities.] The word subduing, or bringing down or under, which is ^t usually applied to the bringing under enemies, is here well applied to sin, the worst of enemies, and the subduing of which is a token of greater power than the bringing under any bodily enemies: in the subduing these will the greatness both of God's mercy, and power appear; in sin is considerable both the power whereby it prevaleth on men, captivating, and intralling them to it self, and the ^u evils which it pulls on men, or punishments, that it makes men liable to; the taking away both these, the word subduing will include and require, and both these will God do for his people, by giving them grace and power to resist sin, and shake off its yoke, and by taking away the punishment thereof, and freeing them from it. The same is meant by ^v those that render and expound he shall put their iniquities under his feet, as things that he will not look upon any more, but put out of sight, and mind, quite suppress, or not suffer to rise up and come in sight. In the New Testament are several expressions which agree to this, and make for illustrating it, as, destroying the body of sin in God's children, that they should not henceforth serve it, Rom. vi. 6. that it should not reign in their mortal bodies, ver. 12. nor have dominion over them, ver. 14. that God shall bruise or tread Satan under their feet. He will so subdue, and put under their iniquities, that they shall not farther have dominion over them, nor ^x rise up in judgment against them. To express further the cer-

VOL. I.

F f

^g Chald. Syriack. ^h Ribera. ⁱ Grot. ^k R. D. Kimchi. ^l Druf. Rib. Menoch. ^m See Calv. Isaiah vi. 13. and ii. 11. Jer. xxiii. Ezek. vi. 8. Joel ii. 32. ⁿ See Abarb. and Kimchi. ^o See Calv. on ver. 19. ^p Druf. Grot. and Others. See Psalms lxxi. 20. Return, and quicken, i. e. quicken again. ^q Druf. ^r Psalms lxxx. 3. and Zech. i. 3. ^s Joel ii. 14. ^t Druf. ^u R. Tanch. ^v Grot. Vat. ^x Dutch Notes.

certain, and utter abolition of them, he adds, Thou wilt cast all their sins into the depth of the sea.] Those things which are so drowned in the bottom of the sea, and covered by it, are looked on as out of sight, out of mind, out of regard, no more likely ever to be taken notice of again. ^y Some here think an allusion to be had to a custom used amongst the Jews, who when they would have any thing to be away out of memory or regard, and from further use, would destine it to be cast into the salt sea, or sea of Sodom. Of which custom, or expression, some examples out of their writings are brought by the learned Doctor Lightfoot in his Centuria Chorographica, chap. 5. (and see him on Mat. xviii. 6.) but whether any such custom among them was in our Prophet's time, may be questioned. Others think him to allude to the drowning of Pharaoh and his host (the Egyptians) in the Red-Sea, of whom it is said; The sea covered them; they sank as lead in the mighty waters, Exod. xv. 10. of whom he said; chap. xiv. 13. See the salvation of the Lord, which he will shew you to day, for the Egyptians whom ye have seen to day, ye shall see them again no more for ever. Especially he having said above, ver. 15. According to the days of thy coming out of Egypt, I will shew unto him marvellous things. But however without looking after allusion to any particular custom, or history, the scope of the phrase, according to the customary expression of all nations and languages; will be manifest, so as to signify, that God will blot out their iniquities, (as he speaks, ^z Psal. li. 9.) cover them; and no more suffer them to be in his sight, or remembrance to provoke him to anger, or to rise up against them for their destruction. Here again (as hath been observed,) and in the following words, is a ^a change of persons, the third, and the second, He, and thou promiscuously used, as sometimes speaking of God, sometimes to him, yet without making more difference in the sense, than if he had in all the verbs used the same, either the third or (rather as a ^b learned Jew thinks) the second: which makes that some ^c Translators have not thought necessary so exactly to set them down, as they are in the original, but to put one in the place of the other, the sense being still the same, as to any that peruse them will appear.

20. Thou wilt perform the truth to Jacob, and the mercy to Abraham, which thou hast sworn unto our fathers from the days of old.

Thou wilt perform the truth to Jacob, &c.] That which gives him assurance, that God will do for them those good things mentioned, is God's faithful promise made from of old to them, in their fore-fathers, which he had confirmed by his oath, and to it put his seal, which the Jewish ^d Doctors do not unfitly say, is truth: so that by these ^e immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, established, it could not fail, but give always firm consolation to those who had right in it. And from it therefore doth the Prophet here give assurance, that God will so as he described, have mercy on them; neither their enemies, nor sins shall be able to hinder it, because so it was necessary that he might perform, and in so doing should perform the truth to Jacob, and the mercy to Abraham, which he had sworn, &c. That by Jacob, and Abraham, are meant, not only their persons, but their posterity, is on all hands agreed, the promises pertaining to, and having been made good, more to their posterity, than their persons. Here is usually made a question concerning the different meaning of truth, and mercy, and why one is said to be performed to Jacob, the other to Abraham. The ordinary answer, both by divers ^f Jews, and ^g Christians, is, that the good promises of God as made to Abraham at first, were mercy, mere mercy, but in respect to Jacob, truth. God's truth was engaged to make good to him, and his posterity, as heirs to Abraham, what of free mercy was promised to him, and his seed: which is an easier exposition, and more agreeable to the words, than what Rab. Solomon gives, viz. as if the promise which he should make good to Jacob, were the reward of Abraham's goodness, which he shewed in teaching his sons to keep the way of the Lord. But here ^h other questions are also started, as, why Isaac is not here named as well as Jacob and Abraham, and why Jacob is named before Abraham: but whatever pleasing or probable answers are, or may be given to these questions, it seems not convenient at all to make them. For this would be to question why the Holy Spirit by the Prophets spake as he did, and not as men would think fit he should have spoken, as if they were fit to teach him, or prescribe a method to him. We shall not therefore insist on them, only we cannot but take notice, what occasion that fierce Jewish Doctor, Abarbinel, takes in his answer to the first of those questions, of venting (as on all occasions he doth) his malice against Christians, while he thus saith, “Because from Abraham came Ismael, “and the Assyrians, which shall hereafter be “at peace with Israel, therefore he saith, “that when God shall perform the truth to “Jacob, i. e. the truth of those things which “he revealed to him in the vision of the ladder, Gen. xxviii. 12, &c. wherein, he “saith, God shewed to him all that concerned “both the captivity, or dispersion of his “posterity, and their restoration therefrom, “in the redemption, or restoration of his “seed, He will shew mercy also to Abraham, “in that the Assyrians, the sons (he saith) of “Keturah, which came from him, and the “sons of Ismael shall receive the law of God, “and

^y Arius Mont. Ribera, &c.

^z See Jer. 1. 20.

^a D. Kimchi. So the Pronouns, us, our, their.

^b R.

Tanchuin. ^c See Græc. Vulg. Lat. Syr. and Arab.

^d Talmud Sabbat. c. 5. p. 55. Ikkarim, part 2. c. 22.

Buxt. Lex. mag. in QOR Aman. ^e Heb. vi. 17, 18.

^f R. D. Kimchi, R. Tanchuin.

^g See Chr. 2

Castro. ^h Abarb.

“ and shall be subject, or submit themselves “ to Israel. But he makes no mention of “ Isaac, because Esau, who came from him, “ shall have no portion, or inheritance in the “ law of God, nor in the peace of Israel, for
 “ there shall be none left remaining to Esau.”

This is his precise determination of the question, in which his aim appears to be, to cut off the posterity of Esau from any lot, or part in those blessings promised of old to Abraham, and from all mercy. But though Isaac be not named, yet was not his son Esau then in his grand-father Abraham's loins, as well as other of his posterity, and so under him comprehended as well as they; though Jacob (as to the land of promise) carried away the blessing of the inheritance: and so did Isaac from Ismael, and the sons of Keturah? And what is here to exclude him more than them? Besides the promise made to Abraham is of larger extent, reaching to all nations, and families of the earth, Gen. xii. 3. and xviii. 18. and xxii. 18. Among those all sure those of the progeny of Esau also must be included. And though Isaac be not here expressly mentioned, yet is he according to the judgment of the Chaldee Paraphrast, who adds his name, manifestly comprehended, and understood, and to him the like promise was made, as to Abraham, that in his seed should all the nations of the earth be blessed, Gen. xxvi. 4. ¹ With him he did establish also the blessing of all men and the covenant, so that though he made it rest more peculiarly upon the head of Jacob, and the right of primogeniture being transferred to him, his posterity enjoyed the promised land; yea, and as for spiritual blessings they had the preeminence also, in that they had the ^k Oracles of God committed to them, his law to direct them for obtaining the promised blessing: and to them did ^l pertain the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises; yea, and that of them according to the flesh, Christ, that promised seed, ^m in whom the blessing was to be extended to all the nations, and kindreds of the earth, came: and therefore at his coming, he was first sent to bless them, Acts iii. 26. And it was necessary that the glad tidings thereof should first be published to them, Acts xiii. 32, 46. yet was there by virtue of the promise made to Abraham, and repeated to Isaac, mercy also, and a blessing for all other nations that should come in. Why shall Esau's posterity be excepted against, and utterly excluded, even Isaac's sons, to whom he gave also a blessing, though inferior to Jacob's, whenas the word all is general without limitation? and we see Amos ix. 12. a promise of the reception of the remnant of Edom also, as well as of other nations. But what do we plead for Esau's posterity, when it is manifest that the Jews quarrel is not here against them that are really so, but against those whom he, with others of them, is pleased to bestow that name or title upon, viz. Christians, without any ⁿ reason at all, but what is absurd, ridiculous, and altogether false. Only, the Edomites, or Esau, were a name most hateful to them, (contrary to the plain command, Deut. xxiii. 7. Thou shalt not abhor an Edomite) and therefore to shew their irreconcilable hatred to them, they would call them by that name. We have no reason to take it to our selves, nor acknowledge it: but with greater reason than they who are ^o Israel only after the flesh, do all true Christians (of what nation soever, and from whomsoever descended) challenge to themselves the name of Israelites, to be the ^p Israel of God, and being of the faith of Abraham, to be the children of Abraham, Gal. iii. 7. and so to have right to the truth, which God had by oath confirmed to Jacob, and his mercy to Abraham, to whom was before preached that gospel, in thee shall all nations be blessed, ver. 8. for the promise was not to Abraham, or to his seed through the law, but through the righteousness of faith, Rom. iv. 13. and is sure to all the seed, not to that only which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham, who is the father of us all, ibid. ver. 16. On refelling his calumny therefore in calling Christians, Edomites, or Esautes, and excluding us in that notion from any part in that mercy to Abraham, we shall not longer stand, it having no other ground than the inveterate malice of those who have refused their own mercy towards those, who have embraced and laid hold on it. That we may return therefore from this digression to the words of the Prophet, we may from the words, and concessions of him, who hath occasioned it by this question and answer to it, take advantage for our summing up of what is given us to understand from them; as, 1. That the mercy in them mentioned, belongeth not only to Israel after the flesh, but to those of other nations also, as he allows to the children of Ismael and Keturah, who shall come in to God, by the obedience of faith, and so become of his Israel, being of Israel's faith. 2ly, That the mercy here promised was to be made good at, and by the coming of the Messiah, which is meant by the time of redemption, or restoration by him mentioned. Thus therefore as to the scope of the words, we conclude, that these words, as a conclusion of the former Prophecy concerning the restoration of the Jews, and the confusion of their enemies, contain an assurance of a temporal or corporal deliverance to them, and were accomplished when God remembering his covenant made with their fore-fathers, accepting of their conversion, pardoning their sins, and blotting out their iniquities, did free them from the Babylonish captivity, and bring them back into the promised land; but that the expressions are such as giving to expect all that by virtue of God's truth to Jacob, and mercy to Abraham, and oath to their fore-fathers, was to be expected, seem to include a promise of Christ,

¹ Eccles. xlv. 22. ^k Rom. iii. 2. ^l Rom. ix. 4. ^m Gal. iii. 16. ⁿ See the reasons in Buxtorf's Treatises, at the end of Cozari. ^o 1 Cor. x. 18. ^p Gal. vi. 16.

Christ, that seed of Abraham, in which all the kindreds of the earth were to be blessed, with all the benefits of his redemption, and so were by him fulfilled in an higher manner, not of giving to the Jews any victory over all nations, and earthly possessions, and dominion as they fondly expect, (as we have above shewed, and the author we have last mentioned, here plainly intimates in his words cited) but of rescuing all that come in to him, and lay hold on his redemption, both Jews and Gentiles of all nations, out of the hands of worse enemies than the Babylonians, even sin and Satan, and making them citizens, not of the earthly, but of the heavenly Jerusalem, heirs of the kingdom of heaven, and conferring on them all spiritual blessings. This also being comprehended in these words, was fully made good by Christ's taking on himself the seed of Abraham, and coming into the world for the work of our redemption, and setting up his kingdom among men, and calling them without exclusion of any nation or condition, into his church. Thus to understand the words of Christ, and his kingdom we learn, both out of the hymn of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and of Zachary, in the first chapter of St. Luke, in both which much like the same expressions are used as here: and in the first it is said, that by God's sending of Christ, he had holpen his servant Israel in remembrance of his mercy, as he spake to our fathers, to Abraham, and to his seed for ever, ver. 54, 55. and in the other, that God had visited, and redeemed his people, and had raised up an horn of salvation for us, in the house of his servant David, as he spake by the mouth of his holy Prophets, which have been since the world began; That we should be saved from our enemies, and from the hand of all that hate us; To perform the mercy promised to our fathers, and to remember his holy covenant; the oath which he sware to our father Abraham, that he would grant unto us, ver. 68, &c. In Christ therefore was that which is here mentioned, God's truth to Jacob, the mercy to Abraham, which he had sworn unto the fathers from the days of old, performed: in him fully, yet so as to be still in performing unto the world's end, by his calling into his church, both Jews and Gentiles, and offering his salvation to them, and blessing them with all spiritual blessings, which salvation that the Jews will not acknowledge but reject, and him that brought it, to expect only a temporal restauration by one whom they fancy yet to come, is their meer groundless obstinacy, envying the extent of God's boundless mercy promised in the seed of Abraham to all nations, for which we pity them, and desire God that he would open their eyes, that they may see, and acknowledge, and lay hold on his salvation, which he hath prepared before the face of all people, a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of his people Israel.

Thus much as to the words of this Prophet. We may only add an observation, which the forementioned Jew takes from an ancient Author of theirs, viz. that there is not any denunciation of hard things to Israel, which is not concluded with promise of mercy. Among other instances (as out of Moses, Hosea, Joel, Amos, Jeremiah) he brings this conclusion of Micah's Prophecy, in which after several judgments, he shuts up all with words of comfort. And very remarkable in that kind is indeed this conclusion, which to shew how greatly God delights in mercy, is uttered in words giving assurance of mercy, not only to Israel after the flesh, upon their repentance, but to all that shall in Christ, the promised seed, by faith lay hold on his promise made to Abraham, and in him to all the kindreds of the earth, so that the Gentiles also reading it, cannot but glorify God, and rejoice with his people, and sing unto him that hymn which the Apostle shews to be fitted to them, viz. O praise the Lord all ye nations, praise him all ye people, for his merciful kindness is great towards us, and the truth of the Lord endureth for ever, praise ye the Lord.

^a Acts iii. 25. ^r Heb. ii. 16. ^s Mercer. on Amos ix. 13. ^t Luke ii. 30, &c. ^u Abarb. out of Siffre, in which Book it is, p. 60, at the beginning of his Exposition of Deut. xxxiii. and see Yalkut. ^v Rom. xv. 9, 10, 11. Psalm cxvii.

The LORD's Name be praised.

A
C O M M E N T A R Y
O N T H E
P R O P H E C Y
O F
M A L A C H I,

By EDWARD POCOCK, D. D.

Canon of Christ-Church, and Regius Professor of the Hebrew Tongue, in the University of OXFORD.

T O T H E

Right Reverend FATHER in GOD

T H O M A S

Lord Bishop of EXETER.

My LORD,

AMONGST the encouragements which I have had to proceed in explaining some of the lesser Prophets, have been your Lordship's persuasions, which deservedly ought to have with me the force of commands. The same have given me boldness to recommend this part of that Work to your Lordship's Patronage: by whose countenancing of it, others will be encouraged to look into it with hopes of receiving some benefit by it. That which is presented to your hands is an Exposition on Malachi, the last of the Prophets, as in order, so in time: and even for that reason by me chosen to fix my thoughts on, before others, because nearest, therefore, in conjunction with the Gospel; to which it leads us by the hand, and delivers us over: for that begins where he ends; so that from that, looking back, according to our Saviour's own direction to search the Scriptures of the Old Testament, which testify of him, for confirmation of the New; and to see how, what in this is recorded as done, was in that foretold as to be done; we presently light on those things concerning Christ and his forerunner John the Baptist, with report of which the Gospel begins, so clearly set down by this last of the Prophets, as that we cannot but admire that the Jews of those times did not at the appearance of them in their offices, without more ado, confess, That what Malachi prophesied, was now come to pass, and acknowledge, That both Elias, the Lord's messenger, whom he would send to prepare the way before him; and the Lord of the Temple, whom they sought, even the Messenger of the Covenant, whom they delighted in (they that were to come) were come, and they were to look for no other: and no less is it to be wondred, that their posterity should, even to this day, continue in the like obstinacy, and shut their eyes against these manifest truths; notwithstanding they have long since seen fully executed in their nation all those heavy things which in this Prophecy also were denounced against such as should not embrace them. Yet do they, taking no notice of these things, perversly still stand out, and seek all ways, by false glosses, absurd misinterpretations

The E P I S T L E.

tions and misapplications of these Prophecies so long since fulfilled, as if they were things yet to come, to elude them, and deceive themselves and their posterity. Their cavils I have endeavoured, as God hath enabled me, to remove; and so by asserting the place for Christ's birth designed by Micah, and the time for his coming by Malachi, to clear the way for the better understanding of all such other Prophecies as foretold of other things in and by him to be fulfilled, and by the exact accomplishment of which the Gospel proves him to be the Christ. These I thought convenient, therefore, to begin with, as the Gospel doth, as preceding in execution divers others that were before them uttered. The due fulfilling of these, and the nature of them being vindicated from the glosses of the Jews, the other will be better understood; and such cavils also as are brought in the expounding of them, be easier removed, the being and coming of him whom they concern being established. What I have done in this kind, or any other which may conduce to the true meaning of this Prophet, I must humbly submit to the judgment of your Lordship and others. Whatever the Work be, I desire it may be a testimony of my dutiful respects and gratitude to your Lordship, in many years enjoyment of whose love and friendship I have been formerly happy, and now more in that I see that the change of your Lordship's condition to an higher degree of dignity in the Church, hath nothing altered your affections, of which I have real proof in your Lordship's favour shewed to some of mine for my sake. Long may your Lordship continue in health and happiness, to be an instrument of promoting God's glory and the good of the Church. So are the hearty prayers of,

My LORD,

Your LORDSHIP'S Most Humble Servant,

EDWARD POCOCK.

A

COMMENTARY

ON THE

PROPHECY

OF

MALACHI.

CHAP. I.

VERSE I. The burden of the word of the Lord to Israel by Malachi.

THE burden of the word of the Lord to Israel by Malachi.] Whereas there is nothing elsewhere spoken of this Prophet in Canonical Scripture, it hath given occasion of several conjectures concerning him. His name being interpreted signifying, my angel, or my messenger, hath made ^a Some to think, that he was an angel appearing in form of a man, for the delivery of God's message to the people of that time. But this opinion by ^b Some ancient Christians of great authority entertain'd, is by Others that followed, deservedly rejected, as having no solid grounds. If any will make any inference from the derivation of the name, he may rather think him design'd as a ^c man of holy, angelical qualities, or in office resembling an angel, rather than a natural angel. A man therefore he is taken to be; but who is that man? An ancient Jewish ^d Doctor would make him the same with Mordecai, but having no ground for it, is not by Others followed. That wherein ^e more of them agree; and among them the Chaldee Paraphrast also, is, that he was the same with *Esdra*s; to which divers Christians also seem to incline. ^f But the arguments brought to prove it, on examination are no way convincing: and therefore the truer and more probable ^g opinion is, that he was a distinct Prophet, call'd by this name Malachi; a name well agreeing to, and attesting his function, as a Prophet sent by God in his message. He prophesied after the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity, and the rebuilding of the temple, and was the last of the Prophets that God sent to them, leaving them for the future to expect the coming of Christ, and to long after it, for farther manifestation of his will. Of Christ and his forerunner John Baptist, he most evidently prophesied; and till their coming God left them for directions to the law of Moses, chap. iv. 4. The authority of this prophecy is asserted in the New Testament, where it is cited; Mat. xi. 10. Mark i. 2. Luke i. 16. and vii. 27. Rom. ix. 13. and elsewhere. ^h The tradition of the Jews is, that prophecy remained among them forty years under the second temple: in which time Haggai and Zachary; and Malachi prophesied: of which Malachi was the last: and so his prophecy concludes the books of the prophets; it ends with the promise of him, with the history of whom the Gospel begins, viz. John the Baptist, and his preaching repentance.

His prophecy is here called מַסָּכָה, Massa, The burden of the word of the Lord, by which name prophecy is ⁱ elsewhere often called, and usually glossed where it occurs, a burdensome prophecy, such as denounces heavy things. ^k But I suppose this nicety, as concerning the signification of burden, and burdensomeness is not to be insisted on in the interpretation of the word. My ground is; because the Israelites seem reproved for so using or understanding it, Jer. xxiii. 34, &c. As for the Prophet, and the priest, and the people, that shall say, The burden of the Lord, I will even punish that man and his house. Thus shall ye say every one

VOL. I.

H h

to

^a See the Prologue to Mal. in Bib. Mag. in Mal. ^e Talmud Megillah, c. i. p. 15.

^b Hierom. Præfat. in Mal.

^c Chr. à Castro.

^d See Abarbinel

^f Ribera. ^g R. Ab. Ezra, Kimchi, R. Tanch. Abarbinel.

^h R. Tanchum.

ⁱ Zach. ix. 1. and xii. 1.

^k Drusius on Nah. i. 1.

to his neighbour, and every one to his brother, what hath the Lord answered? and what hath the Lord spoken? And the burden of the Lord shall ye mention no more, for every man's word shall be his burden: for ye have perverted the words of the living God, &c. Here seems a prohibition for taking the word in that sense: The occasion of which, according to the exposition of divers of the best ¹ Jewish Interpreters, was thus. Whereas the word Massa (taken from a ^m root that signifies to bear, carry, take up, and the like) is of ambiguous signification; and signifies (among the rest) sometimes a burden, sometimes what is born, or carried, or delivered from one to another, whether a thing, or word, and so was used for a prophecy or message from God, (as often in Scripture) and for other speech or doctrine (as Prov. xxx. 1.) the Jews looking on the messages received from God, and delivered to them by the Prophets, as things grievous and burdensome, when they enquired of the Prophets concerning them, used this word, and meant it in the worst sense, in scoff, or contempt of them. God therefore seeing the evil meaning of their hearts (though otherwise their language seemed to be such as was usual for signifying that which they enquired after, and to have no harm in it) discovers their hypocrisy to the Prophet, and charges them with perverting his word in their use of it, and therefore forbids them any more so to abuse it, but if they would enquire of the Prophet to do it in other words, viz. what hath the Lord answered? or what hath the Lord spoken? which was as much as was by that word meant, when it was used by the Prophets, and should have been meant by them when they used it, but was perverted and abused by them to another meaning. Hence taking directions we conceive that here (as in other places) the word is not strictly to be taken in the harsh signification of a grievous or heavy burden, but rather as a burden (if we may take the word in a gentler sense) or message taken or received from God to be delivered to the people. That it doth not always import heavy or burdensome words or messages may appear by its use, Zach. xii. 1. where it is prefixed to the promises of good things to Israel, not heavy things against them: as likewise Lament. ii. 14. where the pretended prophecies of their false Prophets are called מַסֵּאוֹת Massa'oth shav, which is rendred false burdens; whereas they appear to have spoken to them not heavy but pleasing and flattering things, as he there complains that they did not discover their iniquities: so that both real and pretended prophecies are so called whatsoever they contained.

The word therefore being of such latitude, we need not here press its signification of what is burdensome, but in its larger notion looking on it, take it as sufficient for the meaning of what is here delivered, that it is the ^p message or import of the word of the Lord: a prophesy from him received, and by his commission delivered, by the hand or ministry of Malachi, to Israel. Which name, as before the division of the two kingdoms of Judah and Israel, it was common to the twelve tribes, though afterwards it became a peculiar title to the ten tribes: so here it is given to the two tribes, and to all of the other who join'd themselves to them in their return from Babylon. These having had late experience of God's great favour in turning their captivity, and restoring them to their own land, and again settling his worship among them, should have been very careful in reforming their ways, and sincere in their obedience: but it was otherwise. Many enormities, and actions contrary to God's law, and displeasing to him, and signs of their great ingratitude to him, and unmindfulness of his benefits, were found among them: for which therefore, seeking still their good, he sends this his Prophet to reprove them, and to exhort them to repentance; and for the comfort of the godly among them, to give them assurance of the coming of the promised Messiah in his due time, to set all things right for their good: as will in order appear in what follows of this prophecy, which thus begins,

2. I have loved you, saith the Lord: yet ye say, Wherein hast thou loved us? was not Esau Jacob's brother? saith the Lord: yet I loved Jacob.

3. And I hated Esau, and laid his mountains and his heritage waste, for the dragons of the wilderness.

I have loved you, saith the Lord.] Here seems intimated a reproof of Israel for their great ingratitude and unkindness to the Lord, whilst he tells them, that certainly they ought to have loved him, since that he had first loved them, and ought therefore to have found grateful returns of love from them: but how contrary behaviour he found from them, he shews in that question, which he says, that instead of a ready acknowledgment of his love, they were ready to put; implying little less than an absolute denial of his kindness, Yet ye say, wherein hast thou loved us? So that he sees it necessary by a particular instance or proof in the next words, to make evident wherein he had shewed his love to them. Was not, &c.

The scope and sense will be much the same, if with ¹ Others we interpret those words, yet ye say, by, And if ye say, wherein, &c. it will still intimate their ingratitude, and that they were ready so to say; and that it was necessary to prevent or answer that perverse question, by confirming by that instance given what he had said, I have loved you, viz. with greater love than ordinary, and shewed to you greater tokens of love than to others. Another learned ¹ Jew reads the question put something differently: not wherein, as if they utterly ⁿ Gen. xliii. 34.

¹ R. D. Kimchi, R. Tanchum, Abarbinel.

^m נַסֵּא Nasa.

^o See R. Sol. and the rest.

^p The vision of the word of the Lord. Syr. Arab. The prophecy of the word of the Lord. Another Arab.

^q Chald. Paraph. and Arab. Vers. MS. R. D. Kimchi, R. Tanchum.

^r Abarb.

utterly denied God's love to them, which was manifest to all, but wherefore hast thou loved us? as if they should intimate that there was some reason for it, why he should love them; viz. in requital of their father Abraham's love to him; so that it was not a free love and mercy to them, but a love (as it were) of debt, due to them for Abraham's sake, and then the instance given shews how perverse this thought of theirs was. For if it had been only so much love as was due in requital of Abraham's love to him, why then had not Esau, who was descended as well of Abraham as Jacob, had as much right to it, and as great a share in it as Jacob; his posterity, as they? Whereas by God's loving Jacob, and hating Esau his twin-brother, 'twas made manifest that there was more in it than so; and that his peculiar love of Jacob, and especial favours to his posterity, were not for Abraham's desert alone, but of free grace and mercy to them, and therefore deserved all possible returns of love, gratitude, and obedience from them. This he makes to be the meaning and connexion of the words, which though in his way it may seem plain, yet is there no need to leave the former interpretation for it.

Was not Esau Jacob's brother? saith the Lord; yet I loved Jacob, and I hated Esau.] This the Lord gives as an instance of his free love to the Israelites, the posterity of Jacob, that whereas Esau and Jacob were twin-brothers, one as well as the other descended from Abraham, both sons of Isaac, by one mother, twins, born at the same time, yet he loved one, and did not love, or hated, the other, and so derived that love and hatred to their posterity, and accordingly shewed to them the tokens and effects thereof. The Apostle St. Paul in Rom. ix. 11, 13. improveth this argument from hence, that this love to the one, and hatred to the other was declared, when those children were not yet born, neither had done any good or evil. So that it could not be said one had deserved better than the other, and therefore his love to one above the other must needs appear to be of free grace and choice, electing one and rejecting the other; and the distinction or difference that he made between them may be illustrated by the several advantages that by his love one had over the other in several matters concerning both their spiritual and temporal estate. But the literal explication of the words here intended, requires no more than the view of the particular effect of his love to Jacob's posterity, and hatred to Esau's here instanced in, viz. the utter desolation of Esau's country, and the restitution of Israel's, when he had given them both into the hand of their enemies to be punish'd for their sins; that punishment proving to the one for their utter destruction, to the other but as a fatherly chastisement to make them sensible of their errors, and to amend them, that so they might again be reconciled to him, and taken into favour. Of Esau, therefore (or his posterity, the Edo- mites) he says that he declared his hatred to him (or them called by his name) in that he laid his mountains and his heritage waste for the dragons of the wilderness.

His mountains.] In Deut. ii. 5. we read that God gave mount Seir unto Esau for a possession, and so again, Joshua xxiv. 4. so that though the occasion of his going first thither out of the land of Canaan be expressed, Gen. xxxvi. 7. to have been because their riches (viz. his and his brother Jacob's) were more than that they might dwell together, and the land could not bear them both, yet it appears to have been by God's designation and appointment, that so Esau might take that country, which is described by naming its chief mountain, which was Seir, for his possession, and to his posterity, and leave Canaan to Jacob, which his posterity had after for their possession.

Mountains] here put in the plural number, intimates that in it were more mountains, or that it was a mountainous country. We need not here insist on that note which 'Some make, that God's giving at first to Esau a craggy, mountainous country, and reserving for Jacob's posterity the more pleasant country of Canaan, was then a sign of God's love to Jacob, and hatred to Esau, however true it be. That which is here given us to look on particularly as a sign of his hatred to him, being that those mountains, and that heritage, that he then gave him, and his posterity had hitherto possessed and flourished in, he had now laid waste, and dispossessing them thereof, gave it to be inhabited by the dragons of the wilderness.

Dragons.] So the Latin, and so the most, if not all latter translations; and so divers of the "Jewish Expositors seem to take it. But another learned Jew" excepts against this rendering, and saith, that the creatures by this name meant are not Serpents but Jackales, a wild howling beast that lives abroad in desolate places: and that whether the noun be put תַּנּוּת Tannoth in the feminine form (as here) or תַּנִּים Tannim in the masculine, as Micah i. 8. and elsewhere; it is all one as to the signification. Compare this with Psalms xliv. 19. where is, The place of Tannim: and that with Psalms lxiii. 10. where we read, A portion for Foxes, (for Foxes and Jackales are not far different in kind or nature.) The name Jackale, or Chakale, according to the Turkish pronunciation, is borrowed from the Persian language in which is written شغال Shegal, and is plainly from the Hebrew שׁוּעַל Shual, which is put in the places cited, and elsewhere, for a Fox, and may seem therefore to comprehend both those kinds. These Jackales will prey on dead bodies; yea, dig them out of their graves, if not well covered. So that these words, Psalms xliv. 19. may have this sense, Thou hast caused or suffered us to be smitten in open, waste, uninhabited plains, the place or habitation of Jackales, where such wild beasts prey on the slain bodies, none hindring them: and and so will it, in sense, be much like what is said, Psalms lxxix. 2.

A * Jew that in that place of Micah, in his translation into Arabick, so renders Tannim (the masculine) as the other would have it, viz. Jackales; بنات اوي Benat Awi, yet here renders Tannoth (the feminine) by البوم Al-bume, Owls, why I know not. Concerning the word, see it more largely discoursed there on Micah. But however there be this difference concerning the kind of the creature by this name signified, all tends to the same purpose; namely, to denote that their land should be so laid waste as that none but such creatures, as live only in waste desolate places, should for the future inhabit it, and there should not be men to affright them, or keep them thence. An expression, the like to which is elsewhere also used to signify the utter desolation of a place that was formerly well peopled and inhabited, as Isaiah xiii. 21, 22. and xxxiv. 13. and Jer. ix. 11. and x. 22. and li. 27. And therefore several ancient Translators seem to have thought it sufficient to give the meaning of the words by such expressions which might import, that this country should be laid wholly and utterly waste, without particularly giving the signification of this word: as the Chaldee who renders it, into wasteness of the wilderness (or a waste wilderness); the Syriack into habitations of the wilderness; the Greek into houses of the wilderness, which the printed Arabick version following by a plain mistake of the second letter of the word (reading δωματα for δωματα) renders, into gifts of the wilderness: not that they are to be supposed to have read in the Text otherwise than we now do, ^γ but because (as we said) they thought it sufficient so in more general terms to give the scope of the words.

A learned ^z man conjectures the Greek Interpreter (or Interpreters) not to have read, as it is usually in the Hebrew לחנות Lechanoth, but לחנות Lechanuth, which signifies a Shop, an Inn, a place where people sit and abide to work, or buy, sell, or rest, or the like: but it is hard to follow such conjectures as require a change of the received reading in the Hebrew text: and here seems no need of it, if we would justify the Greek Version. If what was before said will not suffice, it will be easier and more probable to say that they took Tannoth to signify habitations, the same that Neoth elsewhere, as Jer. ix. 9. and Joel i. 19. marg. and perhaps it might antiently be used in the Hebrew tongue in that signification, as well as it (or what is very like it) is still in the Arabick dialect, which is of so high affinity with it, that learned men, even the Jews themselves, often have recourse to it, for finding out the signification of some words which are of feldom use in the Bible; and in that תנאח Tenaah, or in Hebrew letters תנאח signifies a manfion, or habitation.

Like threats of destruction to the children of Esau, the Edomites, are elsewhere also denounced, as Jer. xlix. from ver. 7, to 22. and Ezek. xxv. 13. and the whole 35th chapter, and in the Prophecy of Obadiab, which is particularly directed against them; and Joel iii. 19. and all those things which are there spoken of them, we cannot doubt were punctually fulfilled on them, because by God spoken, the least tittle of whose words cannot fail, but as surely be all performed as if it were already done, when spoken; although remaining histories should not leave on record every circumstance, when or how it was done and made good; at least their being no more taken notice of, may seem a part of fulfilling these prophecies, that they should be small among the Heathen, and despised among men, Jer. xlix. 14. that he should not be, ver. 10. be as though they had not been, Obad. ver. 16. ^a yet will from story appear, what is here said to have been made good on them by the Chaldeans, and what followed by the Jews in the Maccabees time. For this prophecy is said to have taken place, or been made good by the destruction of the Edomites about ^b five years after the Jews were led captive. From which devastation it appears by the words, that they flattered themselves with a recovery, as well as they saw the Jews after 70 years captivity to be restored, but God shews that what they promise themselves in this kind should be in vain. So he adds,

4. Whereas Edom saith, We are impoverished, but we will return, and build the desolate places; thus saith the Lord of hosts, They shall build, but I will throw down; and they shall call them, The border of wickedness, and the people against whom the Lord hath indignation for ever.

Whereas Edom saith, we are impoverished, but we will return and build the desolate places, &c. ^c Some give the sense thus, “ If Edom “ shall say, Though we are now become poor “ and low, and our land laid waste, yet we “ will again return, and build the waste places, “ as Israel have done: ” which seems nearer than what ^d Others of the Jews give, “ From “ the beginning we have been poor, but “ henceforward, being we are enriched with “ the spoils of Jerusalem, we will return and “ build up our waste places.” Another Jewish ^e Doctor looks on the manner of speech to intimate as if they should say, ^f “ It is not his “ hand that smote us, but by (accident, or) “ the fortune of the world we have come (or “ fallen) several times into a low condition “ and poverty, and so have our land laid “ waste, but we will (or shall) again return “ and build our desolate places.” This differs not much in sense from the first (which is clearest) only in that he undertakes to give the grounds

of

* MS. Arab. ^γ Buxtorf. Vindic. p. 641: ^z Capell. Crit. Sac. p. 255. ^a Grot. on Ezek. xxv. 14. and Josephus, and the Books of the Maccabees. ^b Grot. when Nebuchadnezzar overcame also the Moabites and Ammonites, Josephus, l. 10. c. 11. ^c R. D. Kimchi. ^d R. Sol. Jarchi. ^e Abarb. ^f See 1 Sam. vi. 9.

of their thoughts; but whatever was the ground of their saying thus with themselves, God's answer to them is, They shall build, but I will throw down] their striving to recover themselves shall be all in vain, he will so notoriously frustrate all their endeavours in that kind, that all people seeing how ill things succeed with them, and how irremoveably heavy God's judgments and curse lye upon them, shall call them, The border of wickedness, a land of sinful people, cursed for the sins of its inhabitants; a people against whom the wrath of God is so incensed and continued as never to be appeased; so that instead of that recovery of prosperity, which they promised themselves they should still grow poorer and poorer, and at last be utterly destroyed, as it is at this day, wherein there is no memorial of them, no people owned by that name, except such, as we have elsewhere shewed, as are by the malicious Jews out of mere malice, without any ground, so called, viz. Romans; and in general, Christians: and therefore they expect this prophecy yet on them to be fulfilled, as Abarbinel, minding nothing but the destruction of the Christians.

The word רששני Rushshashnu rendred we are impoverished, is by other ancient Translators rendred, are destroyed: as by the Greek and Latin. And so a learned Jew, both here, and on Jer. v. 17. observes two significations to be fastned on it, viz. according to Some, we are impoverished; according to Others, we are cut off; or destroyed. And so in Micah Yophi on this place, out of Kimchi, on Jer. v. 17. The sense according to either will be indifferent.

5. And your eyes shall see, and ye shall say, the Lord will be magnified from the border of Israel.

And your eyes shall see, &c.] So evident, so fully shewn are these tokens of God's love to you, and hatred to Esau's posterity, as that your eyes, you being restored to your country, and theirs continuing desolate, shall see them, and you shall say [must needs say] The Lord will be magnified (or is magnified, or, be the Lord magnified) from the border of Israel,^b which still shall be called by their name; whereas the country of Edom shall be looked on as an accursed land, and called The border of wickedness.

From the border.] In the Margin, upon, or from upon; and it is noted there that so it is in the Hebrew, and so it is מעל Meal. But it is by a learned *Jew*ⁱ noted that מ Me, or the first letter, or the preposition prefixed which signifies from, is sometimes redundant in such cases, and that it may be all one, as if it were without it, only על Al, upon, above, or over. The same learned Jew farther adds for explication of the sense, more words, which because his book is not printed, nor common, it will not be amiss to give, or the meaning of them, which is, [That the meaning of these words together in connexion with the former is, Ye have or (shall have) assurance of his love to you, and providence over you, when you see that you your selves are returned to your own land, and have power of building and inhabiting it, but they have not power to do the like, but they build, and I throw down, and ye therefore praise (or shall praise) and magnify my name for it, saying, The Lord shall be magnified on the border of Israel, that is, his greatness shall be always manifest upon (or over) you; or else it may be supplied thus; The Lord shall be magnified, who protecteth the border of Israel, or the like. Or the meaning is said to be, It would have become you that you should so do, and have continued so to do (viz. to have taken due notice of this, and to have said, The Lord be magnified, &c. but you have done the contrary; as in what follows is declared. Or, saith he, in the opinion of Some, the words from the border of Israel, are to be joined with, and ye; as if it were thus to be construed, And you that reside on (or dwell in) the border of Israel, shall say, The Lord be magnified.] Thus he, which we the rather take notice of, because it will arm us against what another Jew saith that this may be interpreted, And your eyes shall see the destruction of Edom in the end of days (or the last days) and then ye shall say, The Lord be magnified from the border of Israel, that is to say, In all the world shall his name be magnified; according to what is said, Then will I turn to the people a pure language, that they may call upon the name of the Lord, to serve him with one consent, Zeph. iii. 9. He seems to look upon this prophecy as not yet fulfilled, but hereafter to be fulfilled by the utter destruction of Edom, (which certainly hath been long since destroyed) and settling Israel again in their land. They willingly catch at any thing whereby to cherish themselves in their fond error of expecting a Messiah yet to come, who shall restore to Israel a temporal kingdom, and subdue under them all their enemies, and cut off those whom they please to call Edom; by which name we have shewed whom they mean. He runs in this the same way that Abarbinel doth. Yet here Abarbinel, though he promise to himself a farther fulfilling of it in that way, yet could not but confess it be already fulfilled, viz. under the second temple, and that restitution of Israel from their Babylonish captivity, and the destruction of Edom in those times, and therefore saith, Perhaps this promise was spoken concerning both times, viz. that so long since past, and that which they expect yet to come. The verbs being in the text in the future tense, as of what was then to come, will not advantage those who would make that use thereof, as if it were yet to be expected: for though their eyes had already seen Edom subdued, and their mountains laid waste, yet there was there that which they were farther to see and admire, viz. that the Edomites should again strive to recover themselves, and rebuild their waste, as Israel had done theirs, but through the continued indignation of the Lord upon them should never be able to do it.

^a R. Tanch.^b R. D. Kimchi.ⁱ R. Tanchum.^k Marginal additions in Micah Yophi.

What we read, The Lord will be magnified,¹ Some read Great is (or, be) the Lord, the Lord^m doth magnify himself over, or upon, the border of Israel, viz. by taking especial care of it. ⁿ Your eyes shall see from the border of Israel, and you shall say, The Lord doth magnify himself. The Chaldee expounds it, And ye shall say, Let the glory of God be multiplied, for he hath enlarged the border of Israel, which ^o Some well like of, and so it will well agree with what Drusus observes the word לְגַד meal properly to signify beyond; but these small differences make no great alteration in the sense and scope.

The inference from what hath been said is plainly this, That seeing God had in thus declaring his peculiar love to them above others, whom he might for the same respects, they also being the seed of Abraham, have made objects of his love, as well as them, certainly they ought to have requited him with more than ordinary love, and testified it by their obedience to him, which seeing they did not, they are justly reproveable. To shew the justness of his reproof of them, and aggravate the unreasonableness of their ingratitude and perverse behaviour towards him, he in the following words proceeds farther to explain his benefits and relations that he stands in, to them, for which tokens of his love to them they ought also to have shewed such respects to him, as those relations required, but did not. He adds therefore,

6. ¶ A son honoureth his father, and a servant his master, If then I be a father, where is mine honour? and if I be a master, where is my fear? saith the Lord of hosts unto you, O priests, that despise my name? and ye say, Wherein have we despised thy name?

A son honoureth his father, and a servant his master, &c.] God had all along shewed such fatherly love to Israel and paternal care over them above all other nations, that they could not but acknowledge him their Father: not only by a common right, as he is Father of all, as Creator of all, but by a peculiar right, as having adopted them unto a greater privilege, and nigher relation of sonship than others: and so had he by his peculiar guidance and protection, direction, and government of them, shewed himself a Lord and Master to them, that they could not deny him by a particular right of title to be so to them. This they could not, they would not deny, but rather so challenge him to themselves in these respects^p, as if he were not so at all to other nations, either a Father or Master to them. The word If, therefore doth not put or suppose it as a thing which they doubted, or such as in words they would deny, but such as while with their mouths they confessed, or could not but confess, they did not in their deeds make good, but rather contradicted: for if they did look on him as a Father, why did they not then duly honour him? or if as a Master, why did they not reverence and fear him? and so includes a reprehension of them for not attesting to their outward profession by their respective behaviour, but by that shewed their heart not to be right with him.

For a son honoureth his father, and a servant his master.] It is their duty so to do; and they transgress not only their duty, but the ordinary custom: they who do not so, are unnatural sons, perverse, ill-natured servants: unworthy of those appellations, not doing what they require and suppose will be performed by all that are called by them: and such the questions here put, where is mine honour? and where is my fear? shew them to have been; as neither yielding to God that honour which from sons is due, and is ordinarily performed to a father; nor that fear which servants owe, and usually shew to a master. The question imports a denial, viz. that they did not this their duty: and because they would perhaps deny themselves to be peccant in what is objected to them, he proceeds by peculiar instances to convict them as guilty; directing what hath hitherto been said more generally, as to all the people, more particularly to the priests, who gave ill example in this kind to them, and should have taught them better.

Saith the Lord of hosts unto you, O priests, that despise my name.] This reading couples these words with the foregoing part of the verse, though that seem spoken more generally to all the people, and this doth not exclude them, though^q particularly directed to the priests, as those who should have prevented such ill behaviour in the people, but now seemed to be occasions to them of despising God's name by their despising it first; as if his speech to the priests began at, A son honoureth his father, &c. Others putting a stop after where is my fear? or after, saith the Lord of hosts, will have what is spoken peculiarly to the priests to begin at, The Lord of hosts saith, or speaketh, to you, O priests, who despise my name, viz. The Lord accuseth you for despising his name. This punctuation seems to follow the Latin in some copies; and^r Others understanding, To you, O priests, who despise my name, I say these things. But this nicety seems of no great import. That which the priests are accused of is, that they despise his name, and have him in contempt; which is^s contrary to that honour which as a Father; and that fear and reverence, which as he is a Lord, or Master, is due unto him. This were manifestly a great fault; they seem not to think otherwise, or to justify it in themselves, but rather would justify themselves as not guilty of it, and therefore to say, Be it far from us, we have done no such thing, wherein have we despised thy name? ^t surely in nothing that we know of. He answereth them therefore in the next words,

¹ Drusus. ^m Tarnov. ⁿ Jun. Trem. ^o Grot. ^p See how some of them explain Deut. iv. 19.
^q See Christ. à Castro. ^r See Abarbinel. ^s Drusus. ^t R. D. Kimchi. ^u Drusus.

7. Ye offer polluted bread upon mine altar, and ye say, Wherein have we polluted thee? in that ye say, The table of the Lord is contemptible.

Ye offer polluted bread upon mine altar, &c.] Of bread to be offered to God we read of two sorts, the one called the shew-bread, to be set on a table before the Lord, of which mention is made, Exod. xxv. 30. as likewise of the table on which they were to be set in the foregoing verses, and directions for ordering this bread are given, Levit. xxiv. 5, &c. Of other bread, called, a meat-offering, to be brought to the altar, and part thereof to be burnt on the altar, either as a voluntary oblation, we read Levit. ii. or else as a necessary and commanded oblation, of which is mention, Exod. xxix. 40. and Numb. xxviii. 5, &c. Of the former of these sorts, viz. the shew-bread, will ^w Some have the bread mentioned understood. Against which ^x Others object that this bread here is said to be offered on the altar, whereas that was set on a table for that end ordained. But if there be no other difficulty, a sufficient answer to this may seem, what is given by Some, viz. that altar here is taken for table, as manifestly elsewhere table is the same that altar (as Ezek. xli. 22.) and here in this very verse what is called altar is likewise called table. Yet do ^y Others choose to understand bread here rather of that meat-offering that was offered with the daily sacrifice, which was the second sort that we mentioned, and was part of it burnt on the altar: but both these go on the same grounds, that bread here is taken in that proper notion by that word לֶחֶם Lechem usually understood: but Others look on it as in a larger signification, as it peculiarly denotes, not only bread properly so called (and usually by that name understood) but any food, or flesh, or meat that is eaten, as well as bread: and so those parts of the sacrifices, which were burnt on the altar, are called לֶחֶם, the bread of the offerings made by fire unto the Lord, ^z Levit. iii. 11, 16. (that is, as Ours in a word of larger signification render it, The food) accordingly, as ver. 12. in this chapter, in a more general term he calls what is offered on this table אֹכֶל Oclo, the food thereof: and so those parts also of them which the priests did eat, seem called, The bread of their God, Levit. xxi. 22. Looking on it therefore in this larger notion (not as signifying only bread, which usually in the Hebrew and Syriack languages it is taken for, nor only flesh, as in the Arabick, but as it comprehends both, yea all food or meat,) they take it here to denote any sacrifice or oblation offered to God on his altar, which was as his table, and what was thereon offered and burnt, called his food or meat: ^a so that under the name of polluted bread may come those blind and lame, and sick sacrifices in the following words mentioned: yet ^b Some like not this. We need not trouble our selves in deciding the controversy between these differing opinions, or dispute which is to be preferred. An easy way of reconciling them, and composing the matter seems that which is by a learned ^c Jew suggested, viz. That there is no doubt but that the names altar and table may be indifferently used for signifying either the altar, or the table of shew-bread; and by polluted bread may be understood either bread properly so called, or else the flesh of the sacrifices; and then whether by this variety of words he understand still the same thing, or else diverse, viz. the shew-bread by some of them, and the sacrifices by others, the scope will be the same, viz. to shew the contempt they had of his service, and that not in one particular kind only, but in all; and to make good the accusation against them, by instancing whether in one kind or more, and passing from one to the other. Two faults ^d they seem here accused of; the first, that they accounted that holy enough, which was not so, viz. offerings that were polluted, that is, not so ordered as God had commanded such things as he would accept of as holy, to be ordered, and therefore reputed in his sight as unclean. Secondly, in accounting that contemptible which was in it self to be revered, and looked on as holy, viz. the table, or altar of the Lord. ^e As for the first, viz. those offerings, there was the pollution or defect in the things themselves manifest. As for the second, the fault was in themselves, in their evil and contemptuous thoughts, in that they said, or would be ready to say, at least thought in their minds, which was in his sight, or ears, as much as if they openly spake it, though perhaps they were not so impudent as openly to profess it. By doing the first they are said to despise his name, in despising and setting light by his ordinances, and the manner by him prescrib'd for the right performance of them; by the second, they are said to pollute him in contemning that which was hallow'd to him, as despicable; the contempt of that God looks on as redounding to himself.

The question as in their person put, wherein have we polluted thee? (as if they should say, though the bread or things that we offer be polluted, yet what pollution or dishonour doth thence arise to thee?) and then God's answer, In that ye say, The table of the Lord is contemptible, plainly shews it, viz. that he looks on it, as if they did, as far as in them lay, pollute him himself. The contempt offered to his table or altar, or that whereby they declared themselves to look on it as contemptible, seems to consist in this, that they thought any thing though not qualified with those conditions that the law required, good enough to offer to him on it. Why they did so contemn it ^f Some give reasons, as that it was, because there was not in the altar, now under the second

^w Hierom. and Others.

^x Druf.

^y Grotius, Riber.

^z And see Numb. xxviii. 2. Levit. xxii. 25.

^a See Abarbinel and Tarnov.

^b Ribera.

^c R. Tanchum.

^d See Abarbinel.

^e R. Tanchum.

^f Hierom.

second temple, that richness and splendour, and therefore neither (as they thought) that holiness that was under the first temple, ⁸ or in that the things offered were but few, and so their gain or income but small, or (as some ⁹ Jews) because there was offered on it fat and blood, and such things as they looked on as despicable, not considering why God requir'd them, or that it was enough, that he commanded. But these are but conjectures: no ground for them in the text. It was manifestly a sign of irreligion, and disrespect to God, and his worship in them, shewed in this instance of their dealing with his table, and the things thereto belonging, (both here included together, the offerings and the altar) for which they are therefore reprov'd as contempters of God; which their contempt is farther illustrated in the next verse.

8. And if ye offer the blind for sacrifice, is it not evil? and if ye offer the lame and sick, is it not evil? offer it now unto thy governor, will he be pleased with thee, or accept thy person, saith the Lord of hosts.

And if ye offer the blind for sacrifice, is it not evil?] This question put, though with a conditional particle, If, intimates that they did presume to offer such things: therefore instead of, If, ¹ Others put That you do offer, &c. is it not evil? or, ² In as much, or, whereas ye offer, &c. is it not evil? Do you not hereby manifestly profess your opinion that the table of the Lord is contemptible? as if they were the words of God, and so is the consequence of these words on the former evident. But ³ Others read without an interrogation, And when ye offer the blind, &c. it is not evil, viz. in your opinion; or ye tell the people that bring them to you to offer for them, that they are not evil, (as if they were their words,) they are good enough to be offered on God's altar; clean contrary to God's command, Levit. xxii. 22, &c. Deut. xv. 21. And by this doing likewise they said, or shewed that they thought the table or altar of the Lord contemptible, and that they despised him; for had they had any respect unto him, any reverence for his altar, they would not have presumed to offer thereon to him such things, as they would not think to find acceptance for (or with) from any among men, who was in place or honour, and whose favour they would seek. So saith he, Offer it now to thy governor, will he be pleased with thee? &c. Certainly not. Thou wouldst not think that he would accept thy person with a present so disgraceful, so dishonourable, for him to take. He would look on it as a great disrespect of his person, and disregard of his honour, and therefore be much displeased with him, that should shew so little esteem of him. How much more shall the Lord, the great governor of the world, from whom they have all that they have, and who hath no need of any thing that they have, look upon it as a great contempt to himself, ⁴ if they should presume to offer to him, what they would not dare to offer to one, though in dignity and authority above them, yet a man like themselves? especially seeing he had commanded the contrary, and declared that he would have no such oblation brought to his altar. For ⁵ those that were not able to bring greater gifts, he had ordained less, and of smaller value, yet still (as a learned ⁶ Jew observes) required that all of those offerings should be of the perfectest in their kind, lest such things as were offered to him and his service should become contemptible; as here it is shewed that it was come to pass among them, and he complains of them, and reproveth especially the priests for it. For though the people were much in fault for presuming to bring such illegal and undue oblations, yet much more ⁷ the priests in receiving them from them, and offering them; who should have taught them what to bring, and denied to receive what was not fit, when they brought any such, and to have refused to offer it: in that they did not this, but rather tell the people it was good enough, they shewed disrespect to God and contempt of him. He reproveth them for it, and expects they should repent of it. So the Prophet shews in subjoining verse the 9th.

9. And now I pray you, beseech God, that he will be gracious unto us: this hath been by your means: will he regard your persons? saith the Lord of hosts.

And now I pray you, beseech God, that he will be gracious unto us, &c.] A learned ⁸ Jew thus gives the connexion of these words with the preceding, "He shews them the remedy against their disease, stirring them up to repentance, and that they would make intercession for Israel, that so wrath might be removed from them, and they might find mercy (as he saith that he will be gracious unto us) for that belonged to the priests, how much more, when their fault or sin was cause thereof, (viz. ⁹ of God's wrath toward them, or curse on them) seeing the matter was in their hand, and they occasioned it, and might have hindred it, as he saith; this hath been by your means, or from your hand." Thus he; and then the words that follow, will he accept your persons, must thus be supplied, except you so do, viz. repent, and make supplications to him, but shall continue to do as you do, will the Lord accept your persons? To the same purpose do Others, both ¹⁰ Jews and Christians expound the words, as to denote, that if they did sincerely repent, and seek by prayer for mercy from God, he would yet have mercy on them; but if not, they ought not to think, that he who is no acceptor of persons would accept any of them,

or

⁸ Chr. à Castro, Grot. Pelicanus. ⁹ Kimchi, and Abarb. ¹⁰ Chald. ¹¹ Syriack, Jun. Trem. ¹² D. Kimchi, R. Tanchum, and see Druf. ¹³ R. Tanchum. ¹⁴ See Levit. v. 7, 11. ¹⁵ Maimonides in Moreh, l. 3. c. 46. ¹⁶ See R. David Kimchi and Abarinell. ¹⁷ R. Tanchum. ¹⁸ Joel ii. ¹⁹ Kimchi. ²⁰ R. D. Kimchi, Ribera, Chr. à Castro. Menoch. Grot.

or spare to reprove them for their doings. Or as "Some of them, that they should thus earnestly pray, to see whether God, though much displeased, would yet accept them, and be gracious to Israel; which is agreeable with the old Latin Translation. "Others prefer to look on these words as ironically spoken, to this purpose; Now therefore behaving your selves thus wickedly in God's service, do what is farther, your duty, ye priests, to whom that office belongs, beseech the Lord that he will be gracious unto us, for the evil is come upon us by your means, and now see whether ye (being such as ye are) can prevail for your sakes to have it removed. God hath constituted you intercessors for the people, and promised to accept of your intercession, while you behave your selves in your office as you ought; but will he now accept of your persons, and hear you for them, or for your selves? surely ye will find your selves much deceived if you think he will: your office so ill performed will not make you acceptable.

That he will be gracious unto us.] Here is * observed, that the Prophet, though not guilty of those sins which he reproves, yet saith not unto you, or unto the people, but unto us, as joining himself in the number, either out of modesty, or humility, or sympathizing with them in the evil, which should come upon them. So Moses, Exod. xxxiv. 9. praying for the people that had sinned, saith, Pardon our iniquity, and our sin, though he had no part therein; which way of speaking he learnt from God himself, who finding fault with the people, joins with them Moses, who was not guilty of that fault, How long do ye refuse to keep my commandments, Exod. xvi. 28.

10. Who is there even among you that would shut the doors for nought? neither do ye kindle fire on mine altar for nought, I have no pleasure in you, saith the Lord of hosts, neither will I accept an offering at your hand.

Who is there even among you that would shut the doors for nought? &c.] (or that doth shut, &c.) Having shewed the great fault of the priests, in their negligence in his service, and not taking care for the right ordering of things in it according to the law, here he seems to aggravate it, in that they receive abundant wages, for what they should do, and are well paid for it, even for their least services they do, as the very shutting of the doors of the temple, and kindling fire on his altar. Did he require their service for nought, as justly he might, then they might have some pretence for their negligence; but now being so plentifully rewarded by the portions in performing their several offices allowed them, sure if they would not out of love do it, yet in justice they ought to be careful in performing what was required of them, according as the law required it to be performed; and seeing they are not; he is justly displeased at them, and hath no pleasure in them, neither will accept an offering at their hand. This seems to be the connexion, and the meaning of the words according to the rendring which our Translators give. But I have heard exceptions taken against our Translators for it; but those that blame them for it, should consider that they go not alone in it, but have the consent both of other approved Translations and learned Expositors, who seem to embrace it, out of choice and deliberation, not because they saw no other, or were not aware that the words were by Some, or might be, otherwise expounded. For to the same sense the ancient Latin renders them, and so Junius and Tremellius among the modern, whom together with Ours they must tax, as likewise those Expositors, which go the same way, which are many and learned. Yet if any like not this; nor be moved with those authorities, another exposition, by many likewise both Jews and Christians given, is this, Who is there also among you, i. e. I would there were any, that would shut the doors against you, that you might not bring in such illegal and unacceptable oblations, nor kindle fire on mine altar in vain, or to no purpose, or profit to you, for I have no pleasure in you, saith the Lord of hosts, neither will I accept an offering at your hand: Any offering, though it were in it self good, you being such as you are, much less such illegal offerings; these services were even better let alone, than be so performed as they are by you. This sense being agreeable to the Chaldee Paraphrase, and given by several Jewish Expositors, sure those who, as we have seen, follow the same way that our Translators do, and likewise our Translators themselves, so learned, attentive, and diligent men as they were, could not be ignorant of, however they chose to follow what they have done. The reader seeing, and considering both (or if he find any other) may take his choice too. He may only observe that in Ours the word, for nought, is for making the sense plainer twice repeated, whereas it is in the original only once, and that in the last place; and it is so likewise repeated in the translation of Junius and Tremellius. Some of the Jews, though to this purpose which we have said, giving their own meaning, yet tell us of another exposition or gloss given by some of their ancient Doctors, as making it to include an argument à minori ad majus to this purpose. Two things there are which a man will not refuse to do, yet have no reward for them. If one man say to another, Shut the door after thee or me, or light this candle for me, he for doing it, asks, or takes no reward: but who among you hath shut my doors for nought; neither have

Vol. I.

K k

ye

* Grot. " R. Solomon Jarchi, Abarb. Druf. Tarnov. &c. Dutch Notes. " R. D. Kimchi, Vat. Druf. Hierom. Cyril. Ribet. Menoch. Tyrin. Grot. Castalio. Dutch Notes, Tarnov. " The word כִּנְיָם Chinnam; signifies both, for nought and in vain, &c. The Chaldee paraphraseth it, That you might not offer on mine altar an abominable offering. " R. Sol. Jarchi, R. D. Kimchi, Abarb. R. Tanch. " R. Sol. Jarchi, Abarbinel, Yalkut. (We chiefly follow R. Solomon's reading as being plainest;) out of Torath Cohanim.

ye lighted mine altar for nought, how much less have you done for nought any of those things which use to be done for reward? Therefore I have no pleasure in you. They give no farther explication of their Doctors meaning: it seems to make for the first exposition.

11. For from the rising of the sun, even unto the going down of the same, my name shall be great among the Gentiles, and in every place incense shall be offered unto my name, and a pure offering; for my name shall be great among the Heathen, saith the Lord of hosts.

For from the rising of the sun, even to the going down of the same, my name shall be great among the Gentiles, and in every place incense shall be offered unto my name, and a pure offering, &c.] If God will have no pleasure in those whom he had chosen for his people, and will not accept of offerings from them, whom by his law he had instructed concerning such offerings as he would accept, and refused all others, what then will be do unto his great name? what people will he find, or make use of to magnify his name, and to bring to him such offerings as he may accept? Thus might the Jews be ready to reply, but this objection doth he prevent, in these words, by shewing that the greatness of his name doth not depend on their magnifying it. The whole world, from one end to the other, shall give witness to it, and celebrate it, though they despise it; and though they offer polluted bread on his altar, so that he will accept no offering at their hand, yet he shall not want acceptable offerings: in every place incense of a sweet savour, and a pure offering shall be offered unto his name; ^d so that he hath no need of them, nor will be at a loss in his worship through their denying it to him. The Jews differ among themselves in the expounding of these words, ^e Some taking them to include a supposition, thus, All the people of the world, from the rising of the sun even to the going down of the same, if I had instructed and commanded them as I have commanded you, would readily have obeyed, and my name should have been magnified among the Gentiles, while every where they would have offered to it incense and a pure offering, and not have polluted it as ye do, by offering polluted bread on mine altar; ^f so that I should not have been at a loss. But the text expresses no such supposal or condition. Others therefore, without any such supply, interpret it as a description of what was done, and that say some by Israelites, though not by these spoken to, and reproved for doing otherwise in their own land, yet by such of them who were dispersed in other parts of the world, among the Gentiles, who did in all places where they were, magnify God's great name, whose daily prayers and constant devotions, and study in the law, were

by God looked on and accepted as incense and a pure offering. To this purpose speak ^g Some of their more ancient Doctors: and it is agreeable to the Chaldee Paraphrast, who gives this sense, "For from the rising of the sun, unto the going down thereof, my name is great among the Gentiles, and at all times that ye do my will, I will receive your prayers, and my great name is sanctified by you, and your prayers are as a clean offering before me, for my name is great among the Gentiles, saith the Lord." But this is evidently liable to exceptions, in as much as Israel is not mentioned in the words, but what is said shall be done, is said shall be done among the Gentiles, and so consequently by them. And for this reason is it by one of their own Doctors excepted against (viz. Abarbinel) and he with ^h Others find out another way, by which they say, it was then done among and by the Gentiles themselves, viz. in as much as though they did worship idols, or the host of heaven as inferior Gods, and as mediators between them and the chief God, yet him, and the magnifying of his name they still chiefly intended, and ultimately directed their worship and all their oblations, the purest they could think of, with pure zeal to him the chief and God of gods, the Cause of causes; as they learn him to be (as he saith) from (i. e. by) the continual motion and constant rising and setting of the sun, and so in ⁱ serving their idols aimed at serving him. So that the words may be a reproof of them, who would not learn even from the Heathen to magnify his name, but contrary to what even they did, polluted and profaned it. ^k Others yet, something differently, make the meaning to be, that in reproving Israel for contempt of his worship and sacrifices, he saith, My name is great among the nations, and magnified by them, and their magnifying of my name, is accepted by me, as if they offered to me incense and a pure offering, for as much as it is not sacrifice that I require for it self. And therefore as long as ye honour not my name, which without doubt is great among all nations (however out of greater respect to me they fancy to themselves mediators in their approaches to me) I will not accept you. These two last interpretations, what are they less than even an excuse or apology for (if not a commendation of) idolaters and idolatry, as from the mouth of God himself, and so then blasphemy against him, who in the law and Prophets all along, hath shewed them and their ways to be all most abominable to him, such as he utterly seeks to root out, and will have his people have nothing to do with. And can he be thought here to say that he accepts of what is done to idols, as a magnifying of his name, or what sacrifices are offered to them, as a sweet smelling savour, or acceptable sacrifice offered to himself? Unworthy certainly is this exposition even of Jews

^c Josh. vii. 9. as some of the Jews expound those words. R. Tanchum. ^d See Mat. iii. 9. ^e Aben Ezra, R. D. Kimchi. ^f R. Tanchum. ^g See Yalkut, and R. Solomon Jarchi. ^h Maimon. Moreh. l. i. c. 36. and see R. D. Kimchi, and R. Tanchum. ⁱ R. D. Kimchi, in rad. and Michlal Yophi. ^k See R. Tanchum, Aben Ezra, R. D. Kimchi in rad. and see Akidah.

Jews themselves, or any that acknowledge one God, and his name only great, and how jealous he is of the honour of it, so that he will not be called by any name common with idols; Hosea ii. 16. Another exposition yet some of them give, viz. that this is said in respect of all kings of the nations, which brought their offerings to Jerusalem, and did honour and adorn the sanctuary of the Lord with their presents, in the time of the second temple, which offerings are called a pure offering. But how doth this agree with the words, which do not say that in Jerusalem, but in every place, incense and a pure offering should be offered to his name?

In sum, none of these expositions given by the Jews come up to the words of the text, nor have we therefore recited them, as if any of them were to be followed, but to shew how, that we may have a full meaning of them, and see how they are made good, they are of necessity to be understood, as Christians take them, for a prophecy of what should be done at, and after Christ's coming, when by the preaching of the gospel the knowledge of God should be communicated to all nations, and his name should become great unto the utmost parts of the earth, be acknowledged by remote nations, who before knew him not, and by them all and every where he should be adored and worshipped with acceptable service; the Jews, who despised his name, being rejected, the Heathen shall succeed, who shall acknowledge the greatness of it. This, however improbable in the eyes of the Jews, who thought it incredible, that ever he would own any other people but themselves, or be owned or magnified by any other, or would choose any other place for his worship than Jerusalem, he will certainly effect, and therefore for the better ^m assurance thereof repeats it, for my name shall be great; that, which by you, a handful of men, is now despised, shall be great among the Heathen, by all acknowledged as such. These words were, when spoken, spoken of what should after be, but by Christ's coming into the world were made good: so appears it by what he saith in his discourse with the Samaritan woman, who thought of no other place where men ought to worship God, but either the mountain of the Samaritans (mount Garizim) or Jerusalem, John iv. 21, &c. Woman, believe me, the hour cometh, when ye shall neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem worship the Father. And, the hour cometh and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and truth, for the Father seeketh such to worship him. God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. The consideration of which words will give us the true import of these, and compared together they illustrate one the other: for his saying that God did no longer confine his worship (i. e.) the outward performance thereof, by such rites and ceremonies as were ordained, to Jerusalem, or any other single place, what is that, but the verifying of what is here said, that his name should be great among the nations, from the rising of the sun even to the going down of the same? And what he saith, that the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth, not only there, but every where, sheweth that as his name should be great and magnified among them, by their acknowledging him as Father, so what is to be meant by that incense and pure offering which they should offer unto his name, viz. not such as are literally signified by those words, and were then to be ordered according to the prescription of the law, but such worship as though expressed by the names of those carnal things under the law, then in continual use and known to all, yet is indeed spiritual, ⁿ joining the soul with the external performances, agreeable to the nature of God who is a Spirit; of which those ordinances of worship under the law were types and shadows. And indeed the change of the place necessarily imports a change of the worship, or things offered for expression of it; for the incense, and other offerings by the law prescribed, were not to be offered any where else but in the temple at Jerusalem, after that was there settled for the place of his worship, Deut. xii. 13, 14, 26. Those therefore that he will have in every place to be offered to him are manifestly of another nature; though called by those names, which then included generally all the external worship of God under the Old Testament, while the Jews were God's peculiar people: they, now ^o figuratively understood, denote the whole spiritual worship of God under the New Testament, since the calling of the Gentiles, and people of all nations unto God's church, the kingdom of Christ. The incense therefore of the Gentiles converted to Christ, and by the gospel instructed in the true knowledge of God, and taught to celebrate his great name, and their pure offering, are devout prayers, Rev. v. 8. holy praises, thanksgivings, and alms-deeds, and works of charity, Heb. xiii. 15, 16. their whole selves, Rom. xii. 1. Divers of the ancient Christian Fathers look on the words as an express and undoubted prophecy of the Christians solemn worship of God in the Eucharist or Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, called the Christian Sacrifice, to which how they are applicable, is shewed at large by the learned Mr. Mede in his discourse on these words: where he gives to note that under the name of the Christian Sacrifice, by the ancient church was understood, not the mere sacrament of the body and blood of Christ, but the whole sacred action, or solemn service of the church assembled, whereof this sacred mystery was a prime and principal part; and therefore defines it to be An oblation of thanksgiving and prayer to God the Father through Jesus Christ, and his sacrifice commemorated in the creatures of bread and wine, wherewith God had been first agnized, viz. by them sanctified ⁿ Dr. Hammond on John iv. 24.

¹ Aben Dana in Michlal Yophi, out of Meor einaim. & Vatab. in 8vo.

^m Calv.

^o Calv.

sanctified by being offered and set before him as a present to acknowledge him the Lord and giver of all.

This whole service duly performed is (as at large he there shews) deservedly stiled incense and a pure offering, both in respect that it is purely or spiritually offered, and in respect of the purity of the conscience, and affection of the offerers, thoroughly persuaded of the greatness of God, and in respect of Christ, whom it signifies and represents, who is a sacrifice without all spot and blemish: and by this being offered to his name in every place, he saith, the time should come, when it should be great, magnified, and acknowledged as great among and by all nations, though the Jews did now profane it, as he makes the connexion by rendring that, though, which our Translation renders, but. But the sense will be much alike in reading but, viz. to this purpose, the time shall come when from the rising of the sun, &c. my name shall be great among the Gentiles, who yet have not true knowledge of me, but will, when I shall see due time to reveal it to them, readily embrace it. Mean while it ought to have been so among you, and duly magnified by you, to whom I have from of old revealed it, and given you ordinances and ways of worship, by observing of which you should have magnified it, but you on the contrary have by despising those ordinances, and perverting those ways of worship, profaned it.

When these words were spoken, and thence forward, (as all along before, since the giving of the law,) till the time of this diffusing the knowledge of God and his name, and this alteration and reformation of his worship here spoken of, the Jews had for their direction the law of Moses, and ought duly to have attended to it, as they are warned, chap. iv. 4. but they did in all things go so contrary to it, as that neither they, nor any service they did, were acceptable to God. So notoriously, so obstinately peccant, were they both priest and people, that he sees it not sufficient to have once reprov'd them, by reckoning up to them their faults, but again repeats them, that so they may be sensible how greatly they have offended him, how displeasing it is to him, that they should continue to do such things, having been warned of them, and that it is worse than what the Gentiles, when he shall call them, will do.

12. ¶ But ye have profaned it, in that ye say, The table of the Lord is polluted, and the fruit thereof, even his meat, is contemptible.

But ye have profaned it] viz. my name, so ver. 6. they are said to despise it, and ver. 7. to pollute him, contrary to acknowledging of it as great, or magnifying it. If they shall be ready to ask as before, wherein have we profaned it? he tells them wherein, viz. in that they say the table of the Lord is polluted, so ver. 7. ye say that the table of the Lord is contemptible. Their ordering of the things that pertain to it, as common despicable things, and without due reverence, shews that they esteem it so, and is as much as if they openly said so in express words, though perhaps they were not so impudent as openly to utter them.

The table of the Lord is polluted] his altar not so highly to be regarded, as a sacred thing, or with so much care and reverence to be approached; and the fruit thereof, even his meat, is contemptible, viz. his meat, or its meat, or the meat thereof; for the affix is the same that in the former word, and may therefore be referred to the same person or thing: and it will be all one whether we refer it to the table or to God; for as the table or altar is his, so all belonging to it is his, the fruit thereof his, the meat his. But then it may be questioned what is meant by the fruit of the altar, and his meat, (or its meat) whether that which was offered on the altar as God's part of the sacrifice, or that which he had out of the sacrifices (by his right) given to the priests, as a reward for their serving at his altar. The words so rendred, as we read, are indifferently applicable to both; and therefore in as much as both those may be called the fruit thereof, and his (or its) meat, as well what God took to himself, as that which he allotted to the priests; they are capable of a double meaning, as they are looked on with respect, either to the one or the other; 1st. With respect to the first, as if their saying or thoughts of their heart were, the fruit thereof, (i. e.) that which is allotted to the altar to be offered on it, and his meat (or its fruit, its meat, i. e. which is its meat) is contemptible, viz. being the fat, and the blood, gross and despicable things (as some of the Jews expound it) and therefore not to be had in such great esteem, and with such care to be ordered, as the law requires. 2^{dly}. With respect to the second, or the portion of the priests, as if they said, the fruit thereof, or of its meat (or as for its fruit, the meat thereof) that which is taken of it for meat or allotted to us for our provisions, for our eating, is contemptible, little, and of small value, not worth so much care and pains as we must take in our waiting on it. Thus according to this rendring. But there are among the Jews who render it otherwise as to the word נִיבֹ Nibo, which Ours, with many Others render the fruit thereof, reading his word or saying. And here they differ in telling us whose word they mean; Some making it the word of God, as if they said, The table of the Lord is polluted, and his word concerning the meat thereof, viz. by which he commands such gross things as fat and blood to be put on it, for his, or its meat, is contemptible. [This would be strange impudence in them to have said, yet thus Abarbinel among the Jews expounds it, and Montanus among Christians fol-

So R. D. Kimchi makes that word and this here the same in sense. Cyril, Ribera, Sa, Calvin. Aben Ezra. R. D. Kimchi, and Abarbinel. R. Tanchum. Pise. Abarb.

follows him, as in many other things.] * Others make it the word of the priest, or him that sacrificed, or others of them, as if it founded, Ye say the table of the Lord is polluted, his Word or Speech, or that which he, viz. the priest, continually hath in his mouth is, that his meat, or its meat, viz. God's or his table's, is contemptible, being fat and blood, gross, nauseous things: Although Some take the ground of their complaint to be, because the altar it self still devoured the fat, and left nothing to them but lean contemptible meat. That the word נִיב Nib, may be taken for word, or speech, in a figurative signification is no doubt, as it is the fruit of the lips, that which is put forth by them, as it is used, Isaiah lvii. 19. yet that it should be so taken here, there is no necessity; yea both the sense and ^z construction will be more harsh if it be. And though there be Doctors of great authority among the Jews that would have it so taken, yet ^a Others are there neither of less learning, nor authority, who think it ought to be taken in the more proper signification of fruit. And so it appears to have been taken by most of the ancient Translators. For so while the Chaldee expounds both the words, this and the other rendred meat put together, as denoting the same thing, the gifts of it; it is manifest that he took them both, as denoting the same thing, viz. those offerings which were brought to the altar. And so the Greek likewise while they render, the meats (or food) that are put thereon, whom the printed Arabick likewise follows, and the Syriack including both in one word, its meats, agreeable to what a learned ^b Jew notes, that as if the two words were synonymous, or words denoting the same thing, the putting both doth but double or repeat the same thing. ^c Another expounds the meaning of the words so put together, so as to import, either, the fruit of its meat, though the affix its or thereof be joined with the first of the words, as well as the latter; or else so as he before, taking them for synonymous, Its fruit, its meat, i. e. its fruit, and its meat (or its fruit which is its meat.) And as for the word that we speak of, it's manifest that the author of the ancient Latin Version took it in the same meaning, whilst he renders it, that which is laid thereupon, which is that which is meant, by the fruit thereof: but then he differs from all the rest, in rendering that which is by Ours rendred his meat, by, with the fire that devoureth it; taking אכלו Oclo, that which is eaten or devoured, to be as much as אכלו Ocelo, i. e. that which devoureth it, which being the fire on the altar, he expresseth it by name, though in the original it be not expressed; as if they should say, that the altar and all belonging to it were contemptible, ^d or that that which was offered at the altar were contemptible, because serving for no other use, than to be devoured by fire. In the Hebrew concordance the word is put under both significations, as being doubtful, which is to be preferred: but when all is done, that which Ours follow, so as at first expounded, seems clearest.

Vol. I.

L 1

13. Ye said also, behold, what a weariness is it? and ye have snuffed at it, saith the Lord of hosts; and ye brought that which was torn, and the lame, and the sick: thus ye brought an offering: should I accept this of your hands? saith the Lord.

Ye said also.] Proceeding in his reproof, whether of the ^e priests, or ^f people, or rather both ^g jointly, for their perverse behaviour in his service, he objects to them that they said, Behold what a weariness is it? and ye have snuffed at it, (or as in the Margin, whereas you might have blown it away, &c.) Of the words so read as they (appositely to the original) are in the text of our Translation, a plain and easy meaning may be thus paraphrastically given; that they said, or so behaved themselves, as if they plainly said, What a deal of toil and labour are we put to in ordering the offerings of the altar, and the things pertaining thereto, and our selves in respect to them, according to what the law nicely requires? And that they therefore snuffed (or puffed) at it, in token of indignation and dislike, or displeasure at it: and therefore, or besides this, the priests to save themselves that labour, and (the people) that cost and charges, which according to the prescription of the law they should be at, took any illegal ^h thing, whether torn, or lame, and sick, for a sacrifice; and ⁱ brought with it their meat-offering, as if this were sufficient to put off God with it. But he (though nothing profited by what they offer, yet in respect of his commandment, which they were bound to obey, and that reverence and honour, which he required to be shewed to his name and altar) shews that he takes due notice of what they do, and how they do it, and will by no means accept or take it at their hands: Should I accept this of your hands? saith the Lord. The question imports a negation. This exposition seems plain, and very agreeable to the words, and is warranted by the authority of learned Interpreters. As first, of a Jewish Doctor, R. Tanchum, an Author as dextrous in expounding the Scripture as any among them. He tells us that the word מַתְּלָאב Mattelab being compounded of מַה Mah, which signifies, what, and תְּלָאב Telaab, which signifies, labour, affliction (or ill accidents) signifies, What affliction or misery is this? and that their meaning is, (he taking it as spoken of the priests) what a toil or wearisomness is it (that we are put to) in purifying and hallowing our selves for eating this small pittance or portion? So as that the words are a reproof of them,

* R. Solomo Jarchi, R. D. Kimchi, and see Abarb. who differently cites R. Solomon's words from what is read in him. ^y Pelic. Oecol. ^z See Calv. ^a Abu Walid, Aben Ezra, and R. Tanchum. ^b Aben Ezra. ^c R. Tanchum. ^d Chr. à Castro in his Paraphrase. ^e Oecolamp. Ch. à Castro. ^f R. D. Kimchi, Abarb. ^g Calv. ^h Levit. xxii. 20, &c. ⁱ Abarb.

them, for their looking on it as a toilsome thing, that they should make or keep themselves clean for eating of the holy things, and their rejecting it therefore, and contemning that portion; which is expressed by what he saith, and ye have snuffed (or puffed) at it. והפחתם אותו Vehippachtem oto, the proper signification of which word (saith he) is, ye blow it (or at it) the meaning whereof is, ye look on it as contemptible (or express contempt of it,) as he that blows on his hand in token of contempt of a thing, or when one takes a thing in his hand, and blows (or puffs) at it. Other expositions also he mentions, but prefers this as most agreeable to the words and place. And thus much have we mentioned of his words, because his book is not yet printed, and because it makes for confirmation of the meaning that we gave, only that he restrains the reproof more particularly to the priests; and what concerned their ill behaviour; whereas we rather extend it both to priest and people. And so do also among Christian Expositors, Calvin, and Lud. de Dieu, who saith, the sense of the words is, you complain that you are wearied with the burthen of my commandments, and too much oppressed, in that ye are bound to offer to me none but of the best and soundest cattle; and therefore ye snuff at it, and for your own ease offer to me any corrupt thing.

Having the sense that we gave thus warranted, we might well acquiesce in it, but that our Translators in the Margin reflecting on another rendring, give us to look into that too, and the grounds of it; which while we do, it is no little wonder to see how differently these words, which may (as before expounded) seem plain, are by Interpreters understood, and so made difficult. That which in our Margin is reflected on, seems to go on these grounds, which Some, both * Jews and Christians, suppose here intimated; viz. that they brought a lean beast for sacrifice on their shoulder, and then that they might make people believe that it was fat and fleshy, they would cry, what a labour or wearisomness hath it been to me to bring this heavy beast? and would puff and blow at it, ¹ as if they had been heavy burdened with it; whereas it was indeed so lean and light, that with an easy breath or blast they might have blown it down. This is that which the Margin in our Bibles seems to point at. ^m Others, supposing the same, differently render the last words, and ye threw it on the ground by way of contempt (or indignation) which Kimchi also would have to be the meaning of the Chaldee Paraphrast, ⁿ though the word that he useth, otherwise signifies, ye strangled or choked it. ^o Others on the same supposition render them, and ye blew it up, viz. by blowing puffed it up with wind, that it might seem fat. And besides this, ye bring that which is stolen or torn, or lame or sick things, that have such blemishes in them, as by the law make them unlawful for offerings; and together with them you bring your meat-offering. And shall I accept this of your hands, the sacrifice being illegal, shall I accept the meat-offering brought with it? By no means.

^p Others will have it supposed that what they thus brought, and pretended themselves wearied with bringing, was some stolen cattle taken by force from the owner; and so render the words which we render; and ye have snuffed at it, by, and ye have grieved him, viz. the owner for his loss. ^q Others, and ye have deprived its owner of it, or caused it to go from him by force. Of this the forecited R. Tanchum making mention, prefers that already cited before it. And whereas they that embrace it would confirm it by what follows, and ye brought גזול Gazul, that which was stolen, so rendring that which Ours render torn; he saith that these words have no reference to that. Whether either of these things supposed were true or no, here is nothing in the words, that proves them so. ^r Others do yet give other rendrings, R. Solomon Jarchi makes the word, which is rendred in Ours, and by Others, what a weariness is it, to signify a lean cattle, as if they said, Behold it is a lean beast, but we are poor, and are not able to bring any choice ^s vow: and then renders the words והפחתם אותו Vehippachtem oto, and ye have grieved him, which Ours render, and ye have snuffed at it. And he notes that this word is one of the eighteen that are called תקון ספרים Tikkun Sopherim, the correction of the Scribes, and that אותו Oto, him, is put instead of אותי Oti, me, and that for ^t reverence to God, (because he or his name should not be joined in the first person with a verb of so ill signification,) the person in the pronoun was chang'd, and instead of grieved me, put, grieved him: but this is a groundless thing, and so to some of the more learned ^u Jews themselves seems. And here again R. Tanchum notes that they are far from the truth, who refer the pronoun it, or him in this place to God, as if it were spoken of him, that they did afflict, or grieve him: yet Diodati seems to like it. Aben Ezra expounding the word, as before, what a toil or wearisomness is it, gives another reason of their saying so, viz. as if they said it by reason of the curse and famine, that was in the land, so that there was not bread (or food) to put on the table (or altar:) as for the following words, he doth not sufficiently explain his meaning, saying only that הפחתם Hippachtem is from the signification of פיה Piach, Ashes, Exod. ix. 8, 10, viz. that which is as ashes, and there is not what is sufficient on it, perhaps he means, Ye put on the altar, what is no better than ashes to be blown away; or, and ye look on it, or make it as ashes, nothing worth. This is all that is in the printed copy of him that we have:

* R. D. Kimchi. ¹ Kimchi's Father, Jun. Trem. Vatab. Dutch Notes, and Tarnov. ^m R. Kimchi.
ⁿ See Lud. de Dieu. ^o Abarb. ^p R. D. Kimchi, Miclael Yophi. ^q Abu Walid confirming it by the use of the same word, Job xxxi. 39. caused to go away or expire. ^r Deut. xii. 11. ^s And of this reading S. Jerome takes notice. ^t Aben Dana in Miclael Yophi. ^u Aben Ezra, see Buxt. Lex. in תקן.

have: but Abarbanel seems to have had a copy that had more in it, whence he gathers, that he understood this word in the signification of grieving. But besides that composition of the word מַתְּלָאֵב Mattelaab, according to which it is rendred, what a weariness or labour, there is yet another given by Others, according to which it signifies as much as Mittelaab, from labour, (which * Kimchi shews to be justifiable by other examples, without thinking that those that give this signification read the word with another vowel, than it is ordinarily read, viz. Mittelaab with i, instead of Mattelaab with a, (as * Some think they did.) And this exposition follow many ancient Interpreters, as the Chaldee, what we bring is of our labour; and much alike the Greek, the Syriack, printed Arabick, and Vulgar Latin which hath, Lo! of labour; which perhaps might be so understood, as to sound much one with what a labour, or how great labour is here, but ^z is usually expounded, Lo, what we bring is of labour, or affliction, viz. the best that is left us by reason of our late affliction in our captivity, which hath impoverished us, and the wearisomness we and our cattle endured in our tedious way home. And so saying puff at it, or make it fit for nothing, but to be puffed at by me (and so the Greek changeth it into the first person, and I have puffed at these things) or as by ^a Others, Lo, what we bring is gotten by our labour, not given to us by the people; 'tis out of those tenths, which should belong to us, and so the price of our toil and labour. Thus by reason of the different reading given in the Margin of our Bibles have we looked (perhaps more than enough) into the most of other rendrings, which we have met with, out of any of which, or perhaps altogether, will not be made up any meaning so facile and agreeable to the words without any force or straining, as that in the first place set down. ^b [Their saying, what a weariness is it, seems contrary to what God saith, Micah vi. 3. wherein have I wearied thee.]

And ye have brought that which was torn, &c.] By what hath been said, appears the word נָזַל by Some to be rendred stolen, by Others, torn, viz. by wild beasts, or the like, the latter of which divers prefer, and ^c Some except against the former, as improper for the place: yet I doubt whether the word will elsewhere be found in the signification of torn: however either of these would make the thing ^d unfit for an offering to the Lord, as likewise those defects or blemishes after named; as appears out of Levit. xxii. 20, 22, 24.

Thus ye brought an offering, &c.] viz. ^e these illegal things for an offering, or (according to others as we have seen) together with these your Mincha, or meat-offering, as if all were done according to the law, but it is contrary to it, and therefore shall not be accepted at your hands, The Lord hath said it.

14. But cursed be the deceiver, which bath in his flock a male, and voweth and sacrificeth unto the Lord a corrupt thing: for I am a great King, saith the Lord of hosts, and my name is dreadful among the Heathen.

But (or and) cursed be the deceiver, &c.] Having reprehended them for their misbehaviour in other daily sacrifices, he farther proceeds to reprove them for their misbehaviour in matter of vows, or such offerings as being not otherwise liable to, they did by vow oblige themselves to. Concerning such we have what the law requires, set down Levit. xxii. 18, &c. the oblation for a vow was to be a male without blemish, ver. 19. perfect, ver. 21. whatsoever was otherwise should not be accepted, ver. 20, 21, 23. But to that pass it seems were these people now come, that there were of them such who deceitfully dealt with God (rather indeed with their own souls) in this kind. Out of pretence of piety, and greater devotion, they would by vow bind themselves to offer an oblation to God: but when they came to perform their vows, would deal deceitfully, and instead of a male, a perfect beast, bring a corrupt thing, an imperfect one, with such blemishes as made it illegal, and that (which aggravated their offence) when they had in their land such as the law required, and might duly have made and performed their vow: ^f which had they not had, their pretence for bringing such as they brought, though not fully such as the law required, yet the best they had, might have been more plausible, and been at least a seeming excuse, and lessened their fault, although it had been more agreeable to the law, if they had not had what had been fit for a vow, not to have vowed at all, Deut. xxiii. 21. but now having vowed, and having wherewith to perform that vow according to the law, and yet dealing deceitfully with the Lord by offering in place of what they had vowed, and what they had in their power to pay, a blemished illegal thing, as if he could by such false dealing be deceived, must needs shew great contempt of him who is a great King the Lord of hosts, and whose name is dreadful among the Heathen, and therefore expects accordingly, to be revered as is his due, which seeing they neglect to do, they that think so to deceive him, to his dishonour, and the contumely of his name, shall receive that reward which shall shew that he takes notice of their doings, and instead of that blessing which by guile they thought to get from him, pull on themselves his curse.

Cursed be the deceiver, &c.] נֹכֵחַ Nocel, the fraudulent, ^g hypocritical, false, or deceitful dealer, who makes a shew of one thing, and doth, or intends another, or doth not what he would seem to do, as here, pretending devotion to God, when his heart is not sincere

* In radie. מַתְּלָאֵב.

* Capel. Crit. p. 222.

^y Doway Bibl.

^z Jerom. Ribera, Tirin. Menoch. &c.

^a Grot.

^b Out of Aben Dana in Micah Yophi.

^c Calvin.

^d See Isaiah lxi. 8.

^e Drus.

^f Abarb.

^g R. Tanch.

sincere with him, nor doth in sincerity, and to the utmost of his power what he would make shew of doing, as if he could deceive God in doing in his service otherwise than he required; and yet be accepted by him. It is from the root נָצַח Nacal, which signifies to think or deal deceitfully. The Greek (and printed Arabick following it) rendring it, He that is able, seem to respect another root, viz. נָצַח Tacal, which signifies to be able.

[Which hath in his flock a male.] i. e. a perfect male,] ^a the sense requires it, though that epithet be not here added, because the law admitted no other for a vow, Levit. xxii. 19, 21. and so by a corrupt thing will be denoted whatsoever is otherwise, ⁱ whether not a male, or if a male, such as is not perfect, but had such blemishes or defects that made it illegal. He that thus dealeth is cursed, because he shews disrespect to, or contempt of the great Majesty, and dreadful name of God, the great King, who will maintain his own honour with more jealousy than an earthly Prince. (See ver. 8.) and requireth sincerity in those that would seem to honour him, and that they testify their due reverence to him in their serving him, by doing what they do according to the rule of his commandment, and to the utmost of their power. The consideration of this his greatness ought to have made them, and ought to make all very careful, sincere, and faithful in the performance of any duty and service to him, to do the best they can do, that it may be a holy, perfect sacrifice acceptable to him.

My name is dreadful among the Heathen.] How much more ^k then ought it to be so among you, whom I have loved and chosen for my peculiar people, should you despise me, and not dread my name, and shew by your doings that you truly reverence it? His saying that his name is dreadful among the Heathen, though spoken as of the time then present, and was then and always true, (it being by his ^l judgments made oft conspicuous to them) yet because they had not generally then a clear knowledge of him and his name, it is by ^m Some not unfitly looked on, as a Prophecy of what should after be, by the making it more clearly known to all nations by the preaching of the gospel.

CHAP. II.

VERSE 1. And now, O ye priests, this commandment is for you.

AND now, O ye priests, this commandment is for you.] Having before reproved both priests and people for such faults and enormities, as they were both guilty of, and the things which follow likewise concerning them both, that the priests might not excuse themselves, as less guilty, by casting the fault on the people, who brought such illegal things, seeing they could offer no other than were brought (or by such like excuse) he here addresseth his speech to them by name, and tells them this commandment, ^a that which he is commanded now to speak, or this commandment, viz. ^b either that which hath been already spoken concerning a due care in offering such things only to God, and in such manner as are according to the law, and looking to it that his altar be not polluted, profaned, or contemned, ^c or else that which shall now be spoken concerning other enormities, which they ought to reform, and are severely threatened, if they see not to it that they be duly reformed. To them is this peculiarly directed, to shew them that they are chiefly accountable for what was done, ^d not only by themselves, but by the people also. Because matters concerning God's worship, and observance of the law were committed to their charge, they were to teach the people how to perform them, and to hinder them from performing them in wrong manner: if they brought offerings which were illegal, they should have refused them. ^e To them therefore peculiarly is this command, that they offer not such things on God's altar; and if they take not due care of it, are threatened as follows.

2. If ye will not hear, and if ye will not lay it to heart, to give glory unto my name, saith the Lord of hosts, I will send a curse upon you, and I will curse your blessings: yea, I have cursed them already, because ye do not lay it to heart.

If ye will not hear, and if ye will not lay it to heart, &c.] If ye will not hear so as to lay it to heart, so hear as to take due notice of what is said to you, and that you may obey, and do according to what is commanded (^f being not forgetful hearers, but doers of the work,) that so you may give glory to my name, give to me the honour due unto me, by worshipping me with holy worship, offering duly to me such clean and perfect things, and in such manner as in my law I require, (contrary to that despising his name, chap. i. 6. and polluting him, ver. 7. and profaning his great name, ver. 12. for which they are there reprov'd) I will even send a curse upon you. The ancient Latin reads, I will send upon you, want, or poverty, which not unfitly expresseth the meaning, according to that notion which the ^g Jewish Doctors give of it, that it imports subtraction or diminution of good, and so is contrary to בִּרְכָה Beracab, blessing, which imports increase and addition of good, at least it expresseth the cause, which is God's curse, by its effect, viz. want which it causeth.

Upon you.] ^h All of you, both those that bring such illegal abominable offerings, and you, O priests, that receive and offer them, say Some: so that though the speech be addressed to the priests more particularly, who should

^h R. D. Kimchi.

ⁱ R. Tanch.

^k R. D. Kimchi.

^l Tarnov. and Chr. à Castro.

^m Calv. Vatab.

Edit. 4to and 8vo, and Sa.

^a Rib. Menoch.

^b Tarn.

^c Vatab.

^d R. D. Kimchi, and Abarb.

^e R. Solomon Jarchi.

^f James i. 25.

^g R. Tanch.

^h R. D. Kimch. Rad. in בִּרְכָה and אֲרָר.

ⁱ R. D.

Kimch. Druif. Calv.

^j

should prevent such miscarriages, yet the curse thereby provoked is such as is denounced to all; only the particular appellation of them warns them; that they should not escape by casting the fault on the people that bring such things, but that they shall be looked on as guilty in the first place, and so the curse take hold on them in eminent manner. Others look on these words as particularly concerning the priests; and those that follow, to concern the people. It will be a safe way to look on all as concerning both, though chiefly the priests in the nine first verses.

And I will curse your blessings.] In expounding what is meant here by blessings, is some difference betwixt Interpreters. Some, to this purpose explain them, your blessings, i. e. where-with you blest, or pray for ^k your selves or the people, ^l as the priest's office was to do, those shall be turned into curses or have the issue of curses, as to all those things that they blessed them in. So we have a contrary expression, Deut. xxiii. 5. of turning a curse into a blessing. This exposition ^m Some look on, as slender or not full enough, and understand it of all the benefits and good things which by God's blessing they did enjoy, and wherein and where-with he had blessed them, as plenty, peace, health, or the like, of which he threatens, they should not find joy and profit in. Consonant is this to what some also of the Jewish Expositors give. So R. D. Kimchi, who finding fault with ⁿ One before him, who restraineth here blessings to the signification of offerings or gifts, which it sometimes hath, expounds it, the blessings wherewith I have blessed you since the building of the house: as if he said, Seeing you have despised me in your offerings, I will turn the blessing into a curse. And so Abarbinel, The meaning is, That, I will turn to you the blessing wherewith I ^o blessed you, since the foundation of the temple was laid, into a curse. And what this turning the blessing into a curse means, we may see by reading the 28th chapter of Deuteronomy here cited in the Margin of our Bibles, wherein are described the blessings for obedience, and curses for disobedience. Much like in meaning is what R. Solomon Jarchi saith, I will curse you in all which hath need that I should blest to you, your corn, and wine, and oyl. Another learned ^p Jew gives an exposition; wherein he seems to comprehend, at least to point at, all these, thus explaining what is said, I will curse your blessings, that inasmuch as the priest's office was to pray or intercede for the people, and to teach them their duties, he threatens, seeing they despised his offerings, and neglected to direct the people to what was fit and right in that kind, that he would curse what they blessed, [or wherein they should be blessed] so as that the punishment should extend to all, in that there should fall a dearth or scarcity on their corn and cattle, and they should be straitned as concerning what they should offer to God; and the priest's dues should be few also.

Yea I have cursed them already,] them, i. e. your blessings. The words thus read, shew that they should not deceive themselves in hope that the evil threatned should be delayed, or put off; but if that they would take notice of it, the curse was already gone forth against them, and had begun to seize on them, from the time that they began to despise his name, and he saw that they did not lay it to heart to observe his ordinances: so some of the ^q Jews. And to this purpose ^r divers understand it. Others read it, yea I will also (or certainly, or farther) curse them, or it, i. e. the blessing, or every one of your blessings. [So they render it, because though the foregoing noun be plural, the affix is of the singular number and feminine gender, which way of construction is of constant use among the Arabians, and seems not to have been unusual to the Jews in those times.] So as that the repeating of the threat may add a confirmation to denote the certainty of it. And this reading divers ^s ancient Translations, and other ^t Expositors follow. R. Solomon Jarchi seems something more nicely to expound the words, while he observes, that the words at first put with a condition, If you will not hear, and if you will not lay it to heart, &c. I will send a curse, &c. and here repeated without the condition, intimate as much as if he should say, But there is no need of suspending the curse on that condition: for certainly you will not hear nor lay it to heart, and therefore from this time will I curse your blessings. The cause of this curse already gone forth, or certainly threatned to come, is because they do not lay to heart, what God hath spoken, and commanded concerning his service to observe to do accordingly: ^u such contempt of his word he will not bear.

3. Behold I will corrupt your seed, and spread dung upon your faces, even the dung of your solemn feasts, and one shall take you away with it.

Behold I will corrupt, (Margin reprove) your seed, &c.] The word גַּרַם ^v Gaar here used, is noted to signify both, to rebuke or reprove, and also to corrupt or destroy [with this difference, that in the former signification it hath the preposition בְּ be following it; in the second only the noun, thing, or person of which it is spoken, without a preposition (as here it is.)] The sense here will be much one in whether signification it be taken, the rebuking or re-proving it will import the hindring it ^x from growth and increase: and so will the corrupting it, hinder it likewise. And so the words include a curse on the fruits of the earth, a threat of ^y dearth and scarcity. Your seed.] In the Hebrew, To you the seed, or as ^z Others, The seed because of you, or for your sakes (be-cause

Vol. I.

M m

cause

^f Abarb. ^k Tarn. ^l Grot. Jerom. ^m Calv. See Druf. and Lud. de Dieu. ⁿ Abu Walid. ^o Haggai ii. 18, 19. ^p R. Tanch. ^q Aben Ezra, Kimch. and Arab. ^r Cal. Tarn. ^s Chald. Greek, Arab. Vulg. Lat. and Arab. MS. ^t R. Tanch. Ribera. ^u Calv. ^v Abu Walid, R. D. Kimchi, in rad. ^x Abarb. ^y Calv. ^z Druf.

cause of your wickedness :) but this makes no great difference. * Others by seed here understand, posterity, as if he should say, I will curse or destroy your posterity : but however this would be a different meaning, yet the reading in the Hebrew will still manifestly be the same. A greater difficulty will be how to reconcile to our reading that of Others, and that ancient, who instead of seed, read arm or shoulder. For though the consonant letters of the word זרע Zera, that signifieth seed, and זרוע Zeroa, which signifieth an arm or shoulder, be both one, yet they differ in the vowels ; so that there will be nothing to be said, but that either they took them in these different forms to signify the same thing, whereas now they are usually distinguished according to the difference of their sound, or form, according to the vowels, in signification also ; or else that they read the word as to the vowels otherwise than it is now ordinarily, and with joint-consent read in the Hebrew text. This difference is ancient, for the Chaldee and Syriack (both ancient) take the same reading and signification that we now do. But the Greek and Vulgar Latin, with such as follow them, the other. What occasioned at first these different readings or rendrings will be hard to say after so long time, and as hard to compose them, there being on both parts such as eagerly defend them. They who prefer that signification, which the Greek and Vulgar Latin give, (of which the first hath) Behold I separate to you the shoulder, the other, ^b Behold I will cast forth to you the arm, think this best to fit this place, as best ^c agreeing with what follows, and spread dung upon your faces, the dung of your solemn feasts, both having respect to those dues, or portions, which the priests had out of the sacrifices that were offered, to whom were allotted the ^d shoulder and the maw, which they will have here denoted by the dung, which is contained in it. So that by his saying he will cast to them the arm ; ^e Some will have to be meant, that he will with indignation, as it were, throw it at them, as one angry with them, not out of favour as a blessing from him to them. But then it may be questioned on what ground the word גער Gaar is rendred, I will cast forth to, the significations of it elsewhere used, being, as hath been said, to rebuke, or reprove, or else to corrupt and destroy, which observed hath made ^f Some that follow the reading, which we are speaking of, to enlarge the signification of the word projiciam, I will cast forth to, and to explain it by I will cast forth from, or take from you ; but then they change the meaning of the words, as if he should say, I will take from you the arm, i. e. your strength and sustenance, which you had by those portions of the sacrifices allotted to you, or by other means, as if the arm were spoken of their own arm, or did include both their own, and that, i. e. the shoulder of the sacrifice. This meaning is far from the former,

and will scarce be made to accord with it : it may perhaps be easier reduced to that which the Greek hath, I separate to you the shoulder, although the Greek Father Cyril, otherwise expound that, saying, that I do separate, is to be understood, I have separated to you, (viz. allotted to you by the law) that part, which custom I command again to be observed (saith he) as if they neglecting the former command, not being content with that part, had taken of the flesh of the sacrifice what liked them best. But what is there in the words, that may be a ground for this supposition, and supply of the sense ? Besides, what warrant or example is there, for rendring the word גער Gaar, by separate ? Which makes another Greek ^g Translator render it according to the known signification, Behold I rebuke you with the arm. But in all these there is more of harshness and difficulty than will easily be solved. If that make for liking the reading of shoulder, rather than seed, because another part of the sacrifice allotted to the priests is intimated, and joined with it in the next words, (as hath been said :) the like reason will as much make for, and be applicable to the rendring it, seed, inasmuch as here is before made mention of the Mincha, or meat-offering, which was offered together with the sacrifice, and was made of flower, and of which after a part burnt on the altar, the remnant was the priests : and besides that the first fruits of their corn, wine, and oyl, &c. they were commanded to give to the priests as well as the shoulder, and two cheeks, and maw of the sacrifice, Deut. xviii. 3, 4. and so the corrupting of the seed will be an evident cursing of their blessing, a punishment to them ; inasmuch as by these means the people shall not have for the ^h Mincha, or meat-offering, what to bring, nor plenty of first fruits for the priests to receive. So that the corrupting of the seed ⁱ, in respect to the Mincha, will have as good connexion (if it be to be stood on here) with what is said of the scattering on their faces the dung of their solemn feasts, in respect to the sacrifice, as the casting forth to them, or throwing at them the shoulder, (or what else they will have meant by that expression) by way of threat or denunciation of a curse.

All things therefore being considered, there seems no reason, why the ordinary reading in the Hebrew text should be questioned, or not be preferred before any other, that can be pretended, and none therefore why we should not embrace our Translation, which is agreeable to it. That exposition of a ^k learned man who would take in both those notions, which we have mentioned, viz. seed and arm ; thus, as if God should say, I will repel with my arm that gift, which with your hand stretched forth you offer unto me, and will cast back in your faces the seed of which it is made : or as ^l another correcting him would have it rather, I will cast forth that (your) arm, with which you

* See Chr. à Castro. Dutch Notes, Stokes.

Menoch. Grot. ^f Lyra, Chr. à Castro. Tirin.

ⁱ Abarb.

^k Arias Mont.

^l Christ. à Castro.

^b Doway Transl.

^c Riber.

^g Aquila. See Nobil.

^d Deut. xviii. 3.

^e Rib.

^h See Joel i. 13. and ii. 14.

you offer me a gift, and scatter the cake it self, or feed on your faces, may be admitted perhaps as a wide paraphrase, but will little help in determining the reading or literal rendring.

And spread (or scatter) dung upon your faces, even the dung of your solemn feasts] i. e. of your sacrifices slain at such times. ^m Because at their solemn feasts many sacrifices were killed, and offered, therefore is the same name חג Chag, which signifies a feast, used also for sacrifice, as Psalms cxviii. 27. Bind (חג Chag) the sacrifice unto the horns of the altar: and in the same notion, Exod. xxiii. 18. the fat of my sacrifice, חגי Chaggi, and therefore in the Margin is put feast, and so Isaiah xxix. 1. Spread dung upon your faces, even the dung, &c.] Instead of dung the Greek read, the maw, which some ^o Expositors, both ancient and modern, look on as the thing signified, by naming that which is contained in it, by way of greater reproach. So that there is no great reason why a late learned ^p man should hence gather, that the Greek did read otherwise than we now do in the Hebrew, viz. כרש Cereesh for פרש Pereesh. And we may observe that though the word Cereesh may signify the maw, panch, or belly, as Jer. li. 34. yet that is not the word used for the maw, where it is assigned to the priests, but קבר Kebab, Deut. xviii. 3. but here it will be more emphatical to take the word Pereesh in its proper signification of dung, though in a figurative expression, the meaning of which may be given in different manners, but all will tend to the same scope or meaning; and spread dung upon your faces, even the dung of your solemn feasts.] Your holiest of your sacrifices, those that you offer on your solemn feasts, being such illegal ones as you offer, shall be in my sight as dung, all as despicable, as loathsome ^q as dung; and I will be so far from accepting them at your hand, that I will reject you, and what you offer, with as much contempt as if I took the dung in the panchies of your sacrifices, and threw it in your faces; ^r or I will look upon you as loathsome, and make you appear to be as loathsome in your most solemn professions of holiness and devotions, as if I had took the very dung of your sacrifices, and threw it in your faces, which were the greatest note of disgrace, that can be shewn, and so would make all men look on them with contempt, as on such whom God had by such an open affront shewed himself to loath and abominate, and exposed to the scorn of all, as things no more to be regarded than to be taken away, and cast forth with dung. R. D. Kimchi so expoundeth the words, as if God said to them, As you have contemned me in your sacrifices, so will I shew contempt of you in or by them, by casting back in their faces that which is most despicable in the beasts, viz. their dung, as if he should say, I will make you a reproach or contempt by reason of famine, in that I will corrupt your feed which you sow, and ye shall be in want of bread, and shall be for a reproach to the nations, which are round about you; for so shall they be in famine (according to the expressions used, Joel ii. 19. and Ezek. xxxvi. 30.) and behold you shall be for a reproach and contempt, as if I had thrown dung on your faces. Abarbinel so explains it, as if he should say, that those sacrifices that they offered before his face, he would cast back in their faces, as a lord that rejecting a gift brought to him by his servant, casts it back in his face. Whatever variety there is in applying the words of the expression, the scope of the whole is manifest, ^s that he declares that he will not accept of, or be pleased with what they bring, inasmuch as it is contrary to what he required; but with indignation reject both it and them.

And one shall take you away with it, in the Margin, or it shall take you away to it.] These words, added to the former, are an aggravation of the contempt, that he will pour on them, or a declaration of the issue of it to them. If it be read as in the text, the meaning according to ^t Some will be, That they shall be so filthy, all as bespread with dung, that he that taketh away the dung shall also take them away with it, finding no difference between them, or take them away with him: an expression of extreme vileness and contemptibleness. ^u Others reading, one shall take you away with him, or to himself, by that one, think understood, The enemy, as if it were said, and the enemy, or an enemy, shall take you, being by me set at naught, and rejected as dung, or what is most vile, and I loath, away, &c. and so will it be the issue of God's rejecting them. And ^v Some by that enemy will have particularly meant the forces of Antiochus, or (as ^x Others) the Romans. If it be read as in the Margin, it shall take you away to it, then will it be, ^y It, i. e. the dung cast upon you, shall so cleave unto you, cover you, and make you filthy, that you shall be reputed as it, and no better esteemed, but as ^z despicable, and loathsome, ^a deprived of all dignity and respect. A learned ^b Divine, because it is not expressed who or what shall take them away, looks on it as to signify as much as, And ye shall be taken, and born unto it, as if it were every one, or any body shall bear you to it, making the sense thus, Think not that your faces shall escape that dung, which I threaten to scatter on them: if you seek to avoid it, every one shall carry you to it, that you may be sprinkled with it. [He quotes R. Solomon Jarchi, as making to his purpose. According to the printed copy, which reads ישא, they shall take or bear you to it, it might indeed seem so to do; but in a manuscript copy it is ישא Yissa, it shall take you to it, and so is the same that is read in the Margin of our Bibles.] R. D. Kimchi gives an exposition, which though it be not a literal version, is plainly enough the result of the meaning, viz. your iniiniquity shall bear or carry you to this contempt, measure according to measure, or proportionably to your doings; ye have contemned me, and ye shall be contemned or contemptible. The Greek, Syriack, and printed Arabick understand it, as if it were God that should take them away, rendring it as in the first person, And I will take you away together, or I will take you away with it, viz. with the dung.

^m R. Tanch. ⁿ See Abu Walid in נקף. ^o Hierom. Rib. Grot. &c. ^p Capell. and see Schindler in פרש. ^q Menoch. ^r Druf. ^s R. Tanch. ^t Jun. Trem. Pisc. ^u Aben Ezra, R. Tanch. ^v Grot. Tirin. ^x Stokes. ^y Pareus, R. Solomon MS. ^z Lyra. ^a Calv. ^b Lud. de Dieu.

The Dutch Notes have as a second exposition, The punishment shall take you away. The Chaldee paraphrasing it, “I will reveal the confusion of your wickedness upon your faces, and will take away the magnificence of your solemnities, and your part shall be restrained from it, (or your part of it shall be restrained;) may confer somewhat as to the meaning in general, but makes not much to the literal interpretation.

4. And ye shall know that I have sent this commandment unto you, that my covenant might be with Levi, saith the Lord of hosts.

And ye shall know] Others, for ye know, Others, and know ye. That the word וידעתם Vidaatem, may either of these ways be rendred, will not be much questionable, by reason of the usual change of tenses as to their signification in the Hebrew tongue, the preter-tense (of which the verb here is) being frequently (especially with the letter ו, as here prefixed) put in the signification of the future, and the future signification used sometimes as imperative, or bidding to do, ye shall do, for do ye. But according to such different rendring will the meaning of the following words be necessarily made, something (though not greatly) different. If it be rendred in the first way (as Ours and many Others render it) then the meaning will be to this purpose, And (or then) when this contempt hath been poured out upon you, this punishment inflicted, shall ye know, that this commandment for not contemning me, this threat of punishment for your breaking my commandment, and dishonouring of me by offering illegal sacrifices, is sent unto you from me, that you repenting you of such your misdoing, my covenant which I made of old with Levi (the tribe of Levi of which you are) might stand firm, and you might not run on in your wickedness, to the abrogating of it, and causing me to deprive you of the blessings and privileges annexed to it: Or, that my covenant made with the tribe of Levi, which you have neglected and broken, may be observed and made good on my part, by my calling you to account for it, and vindicating it on my part, by dishonouring you, because you on your part violate it, by not honouring me, as in that was required at your hands. This from me is not a breach of it, but a making it good, being on your part broken.

They that follow the second rendring, give their exposition thus, as if God for shewing of his justice in denouncing such punishments as he threatens to them, did appeal even to their own conscience, inasmuch as they had his commandment, notwithstanding all which they did so transgress that covenant made to, and observed by, those their progenitors, as to provoke him to this just displeasure against them.

They that embrace the third, thus, Know ye that I have not sent this commandment to you, viz. that you should honour my name, but because my covenant was with Levi, which was publickly made before all Israel, (speaking this in reference to the rods which they laid up in the tabernacle of witness, Numb. xvii. 7.) and therefore it was meet that you should confirm (or keep inviolable) this covenant, as a learned ¹ Jew gives the meaning, or as a ² Christian, Know ye that I have sent to you this commandment by my Prophet, because my covenant is with Levi, by virtue of which covenant I convent you for not observing, not only that general covenant which I made with the people, but that peculiar one with the Priests and Levites, Numb. viii. 14. &c. and xviii. 19. The meaning according to this reading is perspicuous. There is a difference in it from the former rendrings, not only in the first word, but also in translating the word ליהויה Libyoth, because it was, which they translate, that it may (or might) be, or to be.

¹ Some of the Jewish Expositors look on these words as directed to the people, to stir them up to shew reverence and respect to the Priests and Levites, as was due by virtue of God's covenant made with Levi, the whole tribe separated for attending on God's sanctuary and service, and more peculiarly belonging to the Priests as chief among them, and then ^m the meaning of the words, I have sent this commandment unto you, to be, I have commanded you in the law so to do. But the connexion of the words requires that it be rather looked on as spoken to the Priests for reproof of them, and that whether by commandment be meant the commandment given of old in the law, as some understand it; or as Others, the message now sent to them by the Prophet to reprove them for the breach of it, and to call on them to reform their misbehaviour in God's service, to a due and better observance of which they were bound by virtue of his covenant made with Levi: which their misbehaviour is aggravated, and his justice in punishing them vindicated, by mentioning that covenant both in respect to the nature of it, and that observance of it which was found in their predecessors, and their contrary dealing, both to the tenour of the one, and example of the other, as is in the four following verses declared.

5. My covenant was with him of life and peace, and I gave them to him, for the fear wherewith he feared me, and was afraid before my name.

^c Jun. Trem. ^d Abarb. and Grot. ^e Glass. Gram. p. 655.
Menoch. Dutch Notes, Stokes, Bishop Hall's Paraph. ^f Calv.

^g Grot.

^h Aben Ezra.

ⁱ R. Tanch.

^j R. D. Kimchi, Vat. Munst. Rib. Tirin.
^k Jun. Trem. and Tarn. ^l Abarb.

My covenant was with him of life and peace, &c.] With him, i. e. with him that is here meant by Levi, that whole tribe; or more particularly ^a Aaron and his posterity, to whom the priesthood was appropriated, among whom Phinebas was eminent for his zeal towards God and his worship, and who, ^o Some think, is here particularly pointed out. One, saith a learned ^p Jew, saith that Aaron is the person here peculiarly spoken of; Another that Phinebas is meant. But he concludes that both are here meant, and not only they, but as many of their posterity as were holy priests, as they ought all to be, they are all comprehended under the common name of Levi their father, and so spoken of as but one person, all meeting in the same stock, all separated to one holy function; and so as many as were such as he here describes are together the Levi of God, to and with whom he saith his covenant was, My covenant was with him of life and peace, and I gave them to him for the fear wherewith he feared me, &c.

The meaning of the words, thus rendred, seems plain and good, and this rendring is backed by good authority, both of ^a Jewish and ^r Christian Interpreters; yet by ^v One of great authority too is it excepted against, as if it corrupted the sense, but he again is by ^y another sharply reprov'd for his exception. Seeing therefore there is difference betwixt Expositors in their interpretations, it will be convenient to see how the words barely and literally sound in the original Hebrew, as they lie, without any alteration, addition, or subtraction, that so we may better judge of those differences, and of the grounds of them. The words then thus sound, My covenant was with him life (or of life) and peace, and I gave them to him fear, and he feared me: which words, though when they were spoken, they were agreeable to the then common use of speaking, and doubtless well understood, yet will now scarce make a full and plain sense, put into another language, without something added or altered in them. For this reason therefore our Translators (and those who go the same way) add the word, for, (in for the fear) and change and for wherewith (in wherewith he feared me) which supply (as we said) by a man of great note is excepted against, as marring the sense. The meaning that he gives is this, My covenant was with him of life and peace, and I gave to him fear, and he feared me. (And in this rendring concurs the ancient Latin translation, and much like the Greek, and I gave to him to fear me with fear, which the printed Arabick, that followeth them, explains, My covenant was with him, to (or for) life and peace, and I gave him fear, that he might fear me.) And by fear ^a he understands a rule, according to which he should serve God, and by what is said, and he feared me, that he observed that rule, kept that law, prescribed to him; (and in this some ^w Others agree with him, and the Chaldee seems to have led them the way, who interprets, and I gave them the perfect doctrine of my law that he might fear me, &c.) But he that excepts against this Exceptor warns, that while he excepts against this supply, he leaves out that which is expressly set down in the text, viz. the pronoun, them, for it is said, וַאֲתָנֶם לוֹ Vaettenem lo, and I gave them to him, fear, and he feared me; which he ought not to have left out, but to have shewed to what, them, is to be referred; what pointed to by it. So that he affirms that rendring to be imperfect, and that, for, ought to be supplied to make the sense clear, viz. I gave them, i. e. life and peace, to him, for or because of the fear with which he feared me.

Having taken notice of this difference that we may the better judge of it, and see farther into the meaning of the words, it will not be amiss to look also what Others, who follow neither of these ways, say. ^y There be therefore who likewise supply the word, for, but in another sense than Ours and those who agree with Ours do, rendring not, for the fear, but, for a fear, not as if the promises of the covenant for life and peace followed on that fear, but as if that covenant were to effect and produce fear. Though they both concur in this, that fear and reverence of God and his name, and a right performance of worship to him, is a necessary condition for obtaining and receiving those benefits and privileges by virtue of God's covenant to be expected. A learned ^z Jew hath on these words this note, which because his book was never yet printed, we shall more at large set down. My covenant was with him of life and peace, &c. that is, "I covenanted with them, to give to them as "a reward of their obedience to me, life in "this world, and security (or safety) from "evils, or if you will say, happiness in this "world, and happiness in the world to come, "which is true peace: and ^a Some say the "meaning is, I have made a covenant with "them concerning (or with) such precepts or "commands, by which they shall receive (or "shall be received or obtained) life and peace. "And what he saith, and I gave them to him, "fear, is said in respect to those precepts, "that he should fear to transgress them, or to "let slip the receiving of them. And Others "say that what he saith, and I gave them, is "meant of Israel, viz. I gave them to be "governed by him, ^b that they should reverence him, and fear him. Then saith he, "he proceeds, and saith, that he did so, "viz. as I commanded him, which is that "which he saith, and he feared me, &c." thus he. Then concluding, "This is spoken "of those ancient righteous men, who bear "the office of the high priests, exciting those "who in those times bear it, that they should "imitate

^a Kimchi, Abarb. Druf. ^o Grot. ^p Aben Ezra. ^q Kimchi. ^r Vatab. in 4to and 8vo. Jun. Trem. Druf. Tarn. ^s Calv. ^t Druf. ^u Calv. ^w Grot. ^x Whether did he think מורא Mora to signify Doctrine, as if it were from מורא Yarah. ^y Dutch Notes. ^z R. Tanch. ^a See in Aben Ezra. ^b So Aben Ezra, I gave them that they should fear him, and he should fear me.

“ imitate (or be like them) by their diligence
“ in their obedience, and a good conversation.”

R. Solomon Jarchi thus expounds the words, And I gave them to him fear, that he should receive them in [or with] fear, and so he did. And he feared me, &c. which words may suggest to us another rendering, viz. My covenant was with him of life and peace, that I would give them to him [in, or with, or on] fear, viz. if he should fear me, [for so I suppose ואתננ Vaettenem may be rendred, that I would give them, as the conjunction Va, is sometimes rendred by, that, see Psal li. 16. ואתננ Veettenab, that I should give it, as in the Margin of our Bible.] The same author thinks this here to respect that covenant which was made with Phinebas, inasmuch as it is said of him, Numb. xxv. 12. Behold I give unto him my covenant of peace, though to his posterity also it was entailed, as there follows, And he shall have it, and his seed after him. And there be some of the Jews that look upon it as more signally made good to him, in that his life was prolonged to him above three hundred years, as they gather from that he was alive in that time when the war was between the Israelites and Benjamites described, Judges xx. where, ver. 28. it is said, And Phinebas the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron, stood before it [i. e. the Ark] in those days, which from the place which that story hath in that book, being the last transaction recorded in it, they conclude to have been the space of above three hundred years after the first mention of Phinebas. And this some Christian Interpreters also mention with some seeming assent. But a learned Jew but even now cited, viz. R. Tanchum, in his commentary on the book of Judges, looks on this conclusion concerning the length of Phinebas his life from these words, as very groundless, and thinks that very passage, that Phinebas was then there, to be an evident proof that that transaction, though placed last in that book, yet was before several other things therein put before it, and not long after the Israelites entering into the promised land. [Probably by the penman of that book set down, where it is as a story by it self, and not having dependence on others, that he might not interrupt the series and connexion of the history.] The same also he says to be done in that story of the Danites, and Micah, Judges xviii. both he thinks to have been before that of Jephthi; and that the like also may be observed in other places where the penmen of the books of Scripture, for reasons best known to themselves, and to avoid interruption in what they were about, placed such things after others in their writing, which were done before them. The opinion likewise of Others, who say that Phinebas lived yet longer, and was Eliab, he there confutes as very absurd. And in Aaron this may be said to be fulfilled, who lived an hundred and twenty and three years, Numb. xxxiii. 39. But it will not concern our present purpose to examine such things; sufficient it will be to us from the present words, to be instructed that God did, to those comprehended under the name of Levi, as well as Others, as Aaron, Eleazar, and Phinebas, make good on his part his covenant to them of life and peace, and all conducive to their prosperity and happiness in the best manner, and still would to as many as should keep covenant in fearing, reverencing, and obeying him, as those their ancestors did. If these now find it to be otherwise with them, it is from their own, not his breach of covenant, by which they fondly expected to have him bound up to them, while they would wickedly break it, and deal falsely in it towards him.

A late very learned man gives this exposition of the words, that whereas they literally are, My covenant was with him of life and peace, and I gave them to him fear, &c. the sense is to be made up, by supplying either, and, viz. And I gave them to him, and fear, or else with, viz. And I gave them to him with fear, that the sense may be, My covenant was with him, or I made a covenant with him of life and peace, And as I promised them by covenant to him, so I gave them to him: nor gave I them alone to him, but also my fear, or them with my fear; and so follows, and he feared me: this he prefers before those renderings above-mentioned, either, and I gave them to him for a fear, or for the fear where-with he feared me. Thus we having set down how the words simply run in the original, and most of what is said, and perhaps of what may well be said for exposition of them, the reader may judge what he thinks will best make for the meaning of them; he will find that which our Translators give, backed with the authority and consent of men of good judgment and learning, and to give a plain and perspicuous meaning.

And was afraid before my name.] The same with the former, and he feared me, ^a doubled or repeated. ^b He was broken or contrite, i. e. humbly and with fear or reverence behaved himself before ^c me and my name: with ^d great awe and reverence approached to the performance of my worship and holy duties, ^e not as ye who despise my name, (chap. i. 6.) ^f Others interpret it, he was broken, or grieved when he saw my name profaned, as in the matter of the golden calf, Exod. xxxii. and the Midianitish woman, Numb. xxv. ^g Others, he was bruised for my name's sake, i. e. hath undergone, and suffered all kinds of troubles and hardship for my name's sake. There are ^h Some of eminent note, who expound these last words, (as if they were contrary to the former) of Levi's being broken, brought down, deprived of the promised life and peace, because they did not sanctify the name of God according to the covenant: but this is disapproved by ⁱ Others, because he here speaks in commendation of the former good priests, and doth not speak this of the impiety of the pre-

2

^a R. D. Kimchi, yea and some say that he was Eliab. ^b Abarb. ^c Vatab. and Pareus. ^d Ch. à Castro.
^e L. de Dieu. ^f Aben Ezra. ^g R. Tanch. ^h Abarb. ⁱ Grot. ^j Abarb. ^k Pisc. ^l Dutch present wicked priests, nor concerning what had befallen or should befall them.
Notes. ^m Jun. Trem. ⁿ Tarnov.

6. The law of truth was in his mouth, and iniquity was not found in his lips: he walked with me in peace and equity, and did turn many away from iniquity.

The law of truth was in his mouth.] In his mouth, i. e. the mouth of ^a Aaron, or Eleazar, or Phinebas, or any, or all of those ancient holy priests successively, (the genuine Levi) was the law of truth. God's Law is the truth, Psalms cxix. 142. the true doctrine of this law did he teach the people, and instruct them in the true meaning and intent thereof, that according to that right rule, they might frame all their actions, nothing of it did he conceal from them, nor teach them any thing contrary to it, or false: this was in his mouth, nothing contrary to it found in his lips. A learned ^r Jew thus expounds it, He gave answer (or pronounced sentence) according to the truth in it self, and did not respect the person of any in it, nor alter (or pervert) it for any worldly respect. That is it which he saith, and iniquity was not found in his lips, he did not mean one thing in his heart, and say another with his mouth, say ^r Others of them. He did not take bribe, saith ^r Another, nor respect persons. Some of their ancients ^r Rabbins more particularly instance, the law of truth was in his mouth, i. e. he did not pronounce that unclean, which was clean, nor that clean, which was unclean, and iniquity was not found in his lips, he did not pronounce unlawful, that which was lawful, nor pronounce that lawful, which was unlawful.

He walked with me.] That we may know what is meant by walking with God, may be compared with this place, Gen. v. 22, 24. where it is said, Enoch walked with God, and chap. vi. 9. where it is said, Noah was a perfect man and walked with God, ^r and Gen. xvii. 1. where God saith to Abraham, Walk before me and be thou perfect, and Heb. xi. 5. where it is said, that Enoch had this testimony, that he pleased God. By which we may understand, that to walk with God is so to walk, as in all things to endeavour to please him, in a due observance of all his will, and according to the rule of his commandments, as always in his presence, and therefore fearing to offend him in any thing, or to depart from, or transgress, his righteous laws; with respect in all things to him, and his glory. How Levi so walked is expressed in the following words, in peace and equity.

In peace.] ^r Some understand this of peace with God; as that by so walking, and doing what was right, he kept in peace and friendship with God, and ^r did not provoke him by disobedience: so ^r that whereas God's covenant was with him of peace (ver. 5.) he did observe it on his part, that so God might on his. ^a Others, of peace with men, ^b Others, with both: and no doubt both must go together; and he that will have peace with God, must, as far as in him lies, live peaceably with all men, Rom. xii. 18. And a ready way to have peace with God is to keep peace with and among men. Live in peace, and the God of love and peace shall be with you, 2 Cor. xiii. 11. so, blessed are the peace-makers; for they shall be called the children of God, Mat. v. 9. but keeping peace with God is necessarily included in the forementioned, walking with God, and these words describing the manner of that his walking, and having reference to what follows likewise in description of him; that he (by such means) turned many away from iniquity, seems to respect not only his conversation with God, but before and towards men, whom he was to bring, likewise with himself, near to God. To this purpose that Jewish Doctor, R. Tanchum, saith, that here by peace are meant his moral virtues, and the right ordering his conversation among men with gentleness, because by that means will be occasioned peace among all. Then by מִשְׁכֹּחַ Mischor, restitution, is meant the rectitude of works pertaining to religion and equity. So before him Aben Ezra, another of them, in peace, saith he, that is, with Israel; and in restitution (or equity) i. e. by doing my commandments. And that thus by peace those more ancient did understand, may appear by that saying, in that authentic ^r book, wherein the sayings of their fathers, or ancient sages are recorded, where is set down as a saying of Hillel, an ancient Doctor, who is thought to have lived something before Christ's incarnation, Be of the disciples of Aaron, who loved peace, and followed peace, and who loved men, and brought them near to the law. In which saying he manifestly seems to have had respect to this text of Scripture, and is by Abarbinel cited in his explication of it, who then for explaining what is said, and in restitution, adds, he rectified or directed them in their ways (which seems to agree with the Greek version which hath, in peace, directing he walked with me.) In explaining this word R. D. Kimchi a little differs from the other forementioned Jews, as he likewise doth in his exposition of the former word, as we before intimated. The whole of his exposition of both is this, In peace; Because he did cleave to me to do my will according to what is said, he shall make peace with me, Isaiah xxvii. 5. And in restitution (or equity) because he walked in the ^r ways of men (as the printed copy hath it,) or in the ^r matters of men, or concerning men (as a Manuscript) in a right way; and in both he was with me: ^r for in these things I delight, viz. to exercise loving kindness, and judgment, and righteousness in the earth. Then proceeding to explain the next words, And he did turn many away from iniquity, he saith, because he taught the law continually to all, and many

heark-

^a See R. Solomon Jarchi and R. Tanchum. ^r R. Tanch. ^b Kimchi and Abarb. ^c Aben Ezra. ^d Yalkut.
^e See Micah vi. 8. ^f R. D. Kimchi. Druf. Ribera, Grot. and Dutch Notes. ^g Tarnov. ^h Calv. ⁱ Aben Ezra, and Varab. ^j Menoch. ^k Pirke Aboth, c. 1. §. 12. ^l See Heb. xii. 14. ^m בִּרְכֵי. ⁿ בְּרִבְרֵי.
^o Jer. ix. 24.

hearkened unto him, and he converted them from iniquity. In explication of the same R. Tanchum saith, Because by such truths, as he taught them, and his gentle behaviour towards them, and what they saw of his righteous works, which he exercised, they were necessarily directed, and returned from their rebellions without difficulty, being both by his doctrine and example wrought on. Aben Ezra's note is, Because when the priest is upright, many will be upright. Some of the Jews (as was before said) restrain the things here spoken to Aaron, some to Phinebas, and apply them particularly to ^b things done by them in their times; but the words seem more generally spoken, so as to concern any of those holy priests of their race, who succeeded them in their office, and rightly did, as they, behave themselves in it; as where it is said that Aaron and his sons offered upon the altar ^c of burnt-offering, &c. 1 Chron. vi. 49. it must necessarily be understood not of Aaron in person alone, and his sons then living, but of any of his race that succeeded in his, and their room.

7. For the priest's lips should keep knowledge, and they should seek the law at his mouth: for he is the messenger of the Lord of hosts.

For the priest's lips should keep knowledge, &c.] ^k Some render, do keep, ^l Others, shall keep, ^m Others, did keep. The word in the original, יִשְׁמְרוּ Yishmeru, being the future, properly signifies shall keep, but the Hebrews having not that variety of moods and tenses that some other languages have, do by one tense and of one mood express that which those other languages do by different, and that causes this variety of renderings, though most of them mean the same thing. They that render do keep, cannot mean as if the priests then spoken to, did so; for they are reprov'd for the contrary: neither would it be to the purpose in hand, to understand shall keep, so as if hereafter only the priest's lips should so do. They therefore that either of those ways render it, or follow them, explain themselves to mean what our Translation more clearly expresseth; as also some of the ⁿ Jews expound it, viz. that they should so do, or ought so to do by virtue of the office that the priest did sustain; it was their duty so to do, and men might expect it from them. And so the connexion betwixt these and the foregoing words will be, that those former holy priests did behave themselves so as they are commended for doing, because they considered what was their office and duty, and that they might accordingly perform it. That it was their duty so to do, and a command laid upon them for it, viz. to know the law and instruct others in the meaning of it, and to teach them his will, is clear out of the law, Levit. x. 11. That by a perpetual statute they should teach the children of Israel all the statutes which the Lord had spoken to them by the hand of Moses. And so Moses saith of them, They shall teach Jacob thy judgments, and Israel thy law, Deut. xxxiii. 10. And that the people should seek the law at his mouth, go to him as the interpreter thereof, to know what was the right meaning and intent thereof, that they might accordingly do it in an acceptable manner, and were to stand to his sentence and judgment in any difficult point thereof; is likewise plain out of the law, Deut. xvii. 8, 9, &c. and xxi. 5: and out of the Prophets, Ezek. xlv. 23, 24. ^o And Hag. ii. 11. they are bid to ask the priests concerning the law, for (saith he) he is מַלְאָךְ the messenger or ambassador of the Lord of hosts, one appointed by God to declare his message, his will, and commands unto the people, and direct them in the ways thereof. It is the same word that signifies an angel; and an angel hath that name from his office or employment, of being sent on God's message (from מַלְאָךְ in the Arabick Dialect in use, and signifying to send.) So from his office doth the learned Grotius note, a Bishop in the Revelations, chap. 2, &c. to be called ἄγγελος. And the words by which here the office of the priest under the law is described, well agree to the office of such who are employed in the ministry of the gospel, and the teaching of that. St. Paul saith of himself and others in like employment, that they are ambassadors for Christ, 2 Cor. v. 20. (so that he that heareth them, heareth him, Luke x. 16.) that a bishop is the steward of God, Titus 1. 7. and ought to hold fast the faithful word as he hath been taught, [or in teaching, marg.] that he may be able by sound doctrine, both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers, ver. 9. that he ought to be able to teach, 2 Tim. ii. 2. and apt to teach, ibid. ver. 24. with many more things which might be said in parallel places to these words, in which the priest's office and duty, and so the people's duty, in respect to him, are described. But it will not be to the understanding of the present words to insist thereon, only this by the by, because of the title here given him.

That which from what hath been said, makes to our purpose, is to shew the connexion of the present words with the preceding, according to those who render or expound them, that the priest's lips should preserve knowledge, &c. as shewing that what was before said, that he did, or concerning his behaviour, was that which his duty required, and by conscience thereof he was moved to do, and did in observance thereof accordingly do. They that render, The priest's lips did preserve knowledge, and they did seek the law at his mouth, because he was the messenger of God, make it a continuation of the description of the behaviour of those ancient holy priests, and how they walked worthy of their office, and performed all that it required of them. Either of these supposeth and includeth the other; the holiness of the office importing a holy conversation, and a holiness of their conversation, adorn-

^b See R. Solomon. ^c R. Tanch.
D. Kimchi. ^d See Ecclus. xlv. 17.

^k Druf.
^l R. Tanch.

^m Vulg. Lat. &c.

ⁿ Piscat. Grot.

^o R. Tanch. R.

adorning and setting forth the holiness of their office which required it, and of the rule by which they framed it. And so by a commendation of those of old, for their walking worthy of their office, shews how culpable these at present spoken to, were in regard to their behaviour, contrary both to their duty, and to the examples of their predecessors, which he describes in the next words.

8. But ye are departed out of the way: ye have caused many to stumble at the law: ye have corrupted the covenant of Levi, saith the Lord of hosts.

But ye are departed out of the way, &c.] But ye, contrary both to your duty, and to the examples of your pious ancestors, are departed out of the way, which the law prescribed for you, as well as it did for them, to walk in, and they did diligently keep to and observe. They by their instructions directed, and by their good examples led men in the right way of God's commandments, and turned them from iniquity; but ye have caused many to stumble at the law, (or as in the Margin, to fall in the law.) Ye have been occasion of ruin to them in things concerning the law, either by teaching them what is not agreeable to the law, or not teaching them the right meaning of it; or by your example contrary to it, ye have caused them, who thought they might safely be guided by your instructions, and do as they saw you do, to transgress the law, and run on in false and evil ways to their destruction; or, which will be agreeable to the words in the Text of our Translation, (which Others also give) give occasion to them by your wickedness to disdain God's service: (agreeable to that expression, Rom. ii. 24. The name of God is blasphemed through you: and 1 Sam. ii. 17. that through the sin of Eli's sons men abhorred the sacrifice of the Lord.)

The words spoken indefinitely give to understand, that in several, or many things, they went aside from, or contrary to the law of God, and were a cause of scandal or offence to the people. But if we enquire after particulars, the foregoing chapter shews, that they did so in what concerned God's offerings and sacrifices: and the verses following in this chapter, viz. 11, &c. that they did also in matters concerning marriage. And Some, therefore, for explication of this place, refer to Nehemiah xiii. from the 4th verse forward, where are several offences against the law taxed, which seem by the fault of the priests to have been occasioned, as the introducing strangers into the places belonging to the temple, and the profanation of the sabbath, and marrying strange wives.

Ye have corrupted the covenant of Levi, &c.] Agreeable to this expression is said, Neb. xiii.

29. They have defiled the priesthood, and the covenant of the priesthood, and of Levi. In ver. 4, 5. God mentioneth his covenant with

Levi. This covenant * required that they should sanctify and honour God by a due observance of his ordinances, and teaching and causing Others to observe them. By violating the conditions on their parts they have corrupted and made void that covenant, and must not therefore expect from him that life and peace (ver. 5.) and all those benefits which he had on his part promised on keeping covenant. They belong not to such covenant-breakers; and thence are those evils which have befallen, and shall befall them, contrary to what they vainly, without redressing their errors, and breach of covenant, did expect. So he had before threatened them, ver. 2, 3. and in the next verse farther declares.

9. Therefore have I also made you contemptible and base before all the people, according as ye have not kept my ways, but have been partial in the law.

Therefore have I also made you contemptible and base before all the people, &c.] Therefore because they have thus corrupted the covenant of Levi, &c. and by their ill administration of their office, had shewed contempt of God, and despised his name, chap. i. 6. Therefore, saith he, have I also made you contemptible, or as Some render, will I make you contemptible, &c. It will be to the same pass in such speeches, to speak in the same language of what is past, and of what is to come, that which hath not been yet done, being as certain when God hath said it, as if it were already past.

According as ye have not kept my ways.] So rendering to them according to their own dealings, and a measure for measure. It is that which God of old had declared, as the rule by which he would go in judging and dealing with those who ought to take care of honouring him, in looking to the due observance of his commandments, 1 Sam. ii. 30. Them that honour me will I honour, and they that despise me shall be lightly esteemed. The priests, by virtue of God's covenant with them, were to be highly honoured and respected by the people: and how zealously he would vindicate their honour, appears in that story of Corah, Dathan, and Abiram. But upon breach of covenant with him, if they find on the contrary disrespect and contempt, it is by his just judgment, and by his just judgment they shall so find, therefore have I also made (or will I make) you contemptible, &c. according as ye have not kept my ways, but have been partial in the law.] That contempt which they cast on him and on his law, by wresting it out of respect to persons, that so they might gain favour and respect from them, so honouring them more than him, and seeking to please them more than him; hath he, or will he, cast back on them, by making them contemptible, even in the eyes of them from whom they thought to find by that means respect; yea, made

VOL. I.

O O

* Compare Hosea xiv. the last words.

* Tarnov.

* Jun. and Trem.

* Diodati's Notes, and Vatab.

* Grot.

* See Ezra x. 2.

* Abarb.

* R. D. Kimchi. Abarb.

* Tig. Grot.

* R. D. Kimchi.

made or will make them base before all the people. To this purpose a learned ^b Jew expounds the words: and ^c Others agree with him, that by being partial in the law, is for men's sakes to approve of that which the law approved not of; and not to reprove men, when they did contrary to it, as in particular, in that out of respect to those great men that brought them, they did accept of, and offer illegal sacrifices, (as in the former chapter is shewed) and not reject or reprove them for bringing such things contrary to the law; whereas perhaps (as ^d Some add) from a poor man they would not have accepted them. But the words ^e seem more general, and to comprehend any wresting of the law, either out of favour to themselves or others, when in declaring the meaning thereof, or determining any thing according to it, they did not deliver the truth, but respect the persons, in whose case they were to deliver their judgment, and so accordingly interpreted it in favour or hatred unto them; and, as ^f Some think, more particularly in case of extortion and usury, they favouring the oppressors: and this in any kind was contrary to what the law commands, Levit. xix. 15. Thou shalt not respect the person of the poor, nor honour the person of the mighty; but in righteousness shalt thou judge thy neighbour. And Deut. i. 17. Ye shall not respect persons. And Deut. xvi. 19. Thou shalt not wrest judgment, thou shalt not respect persons. This is to be partial in the law: our Margin tells us, it is literally according to the Hebrew, ye have accepted faces: it is usually elsewhere rendred, to respect persons. These three expressions are in meaning all one: but our Margin gives us likewise another rendring, viz. Ye have lifted up the face against the law, viz. presumptuously done or taught what is contrary to it; which although by ^g some Interpreters followed; and the word נָשָׂא Nasa, doth doubtless signify as well to lift up as to accept, and the meaning be good; yet is by ^h One found fault with, because the common and received use of the phrase is to denote ⁱ respect of persons, and not elsewhere taken in that sense of lifting up the face.

10. Have we not all one Father? Hath not one God created us? Why do we deal treacherously every man against his brother, by profaning the covenant of our fathers?

Have we not all one Father? Hath not one God created us? &c.] ^k Some, especially they who render the former words by lifting up the face against the law, will have this verse to be the words of the priests or people, apologizing for themselves, against that which the Prophet in the following verses, accuseth them for, and reproveth them, viz. their contracting unlawful marriages with infidels, or heathenish women: as if lifting up the face against the law, which forbade them so to do, they should say, Why do ye tax us for our unlawful marriages with infidels? Was not Adam one common father to us all? Hath not one God created us all? Why do ye therefore charge us with treacherous dealing with our brethren, and profaning the covenant of our fore-fathers, in that we do promiscuously match with our heathen neighbours? as the learned Bishop Hall paraphraseth the words according to their meaning. And they in their Notes take notice of the grounds that these making their excuse do go on, viz. in that all being from one common Father, and all by one created, they are all equally lawful as for liberty of contracting marriages with them. And again, as it is no treacherous dealing therefore with their brethren, so it cannot be a profanation of the covenant made by God with their fathers, inasmuch as by this means they called others into partaking of the covenant, which was a most just thing. ^l Another going along with them, as to the first part of the verse, and taking for included therein all that they say, makes yet the latter part, viz. why do we deal treacherously, &c. to be the Prophet's answer unto them, by retorting on them their own words, and putting it to their own conscience, bidding them to ask themselves, why do we, that know God's command for not marrying with the Gentiles, deal treacherously every man against his [Jew] brother, by casting off his sister or daughter, whom we have married, to take in her place a stranger, so profaning the covenant of our fathers, by which God required that they should not pollute themselves with ^m such marriages, and they did faithfully keep it. But as for the first of these opinions, it is excepted against by a learned ⁿ man, as restraining so these words to the priests, to whom the foregoing words were spoken, whereas the things, now taxed, were common to all; and the second seems not much to mend the matter: both make the matter harsh, and require such an abrupt change of persons in speaking, as the words seem to give no ground for. They more plainly and clearly flow, if they be all taken as the words of the Prophet, proceeding in his reproof, but not of the priests only, as before, but of all. ^o They that in the preceding verse understand by their being partial in the law, their partiality in determining in behalf of oppressors and exactors, think that sin of exaction here especially taxed, and the iniquity of it shewed, in regard that they were all children of one father Jacob, and so equally free, and having equal right to justice, according to the law, without respect of persons, and by one God created, i. e. made his people: why then do we deal treacherously every man against his brother, in oppressing him, and by unjust usury exacting of him, which is a manifest profanation of the covenant of our fathers, or that law given to them, which forbade to lay usury on any of God's people, their brethren, as Exod. xxii. 25. Levit. xxv. 36. Deut. xxiii. 19, 20. And for their ground of this exposition and confirmation mation of it, they refer us to the history of the Jews, in those times about which this Prophet lived, as particularly set down in Nebemiah, chap. v. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, &c. where their oppression of the poor by usury, and exactions, is described, and a reformation thereof sought by Nebemiah. With these Others agree, who will have here all wrong dealing taxed. But Others, the Jews generally, and divers Christians, follow another way of exposition, which seems more agreeable and coherent to the following verses; and that is, (whether with respect to the foregoing words, as Some will, or without respect to them, as some of the Jews, who look on this as a beginning of a new prophecy, as One speaks, or a new matter of reproof, or a new section;) that these words are the words of the Prophet reproving them for what they did under the second temple, after their return from the Babylonish captivity, contrary to the law in what concerned their marriages; in which they were peccant in two regards. ^u 1. In taking wives that were of another nation and religion. 2. In oppressing and hard dealing with their Israelitish wives, either by dismissing them, or using them despitefully and contumeliously, and denying them what was due to them, in favour of those strange wives which they took with them, and preferred before them: in which kind how peccant they were, both people, and priests, and Levites also, is shewed at large, Exra ix. This sin the Prophet coming to reprove, argues, as Some observe, and aggravates the heinousness and unreasonableness thereof, in regard that it is the violation of the tie of a double relation, which should have kept them from doing it. 1. In that they had all one Father, were of one kindred and family, have we not all one Father? and so in violating the rights of that affinity, did deal treacherously every man with his brother. 2. In that they were all of one religion, the people of one God, all acknowledging and professing to serve him alone, and to observe his laws, Hath not one God created us? and so in doing, as they did, contrary to his law, profaned the covenant of their fathers, that covenant by God, who made them his peculiar people, made with their fathers; by virtue of which, ^a as he was one God, so they were to be one people separated to him, and not mingle themselves with the idolatrous Heathen, and particularly by making marriages with them, Deut. vii. 3. That this meaning may be made plain, it will be convenient to observe something concerning some of the words; as first, who is that one Father, which they all have. By him the Jews understand to be particularly meant Jacob, the more immediate father of the twelve tribes, from whom they all sprung: and ^z Others (many Christian Expositors) understand Abraham, from whom also they all came, with whom God first made that covenant, by virtue of which, they, as his seed, were accounted his peculiar people, and heirs of the promise. And of him that they were wont to boast as their father, we learn in several passages in the New Testament, as John viii. 38, 39. and ^a elsewhere. And Isaiah li. 2. God bids them to look unto Abraham as their father, whom he called [one, or] alone. So that in respect of either of these it may be said they had one Father. Nor will it make any difference as to what is thence urged or concluded here to them: it will be as to the purpose all one which of them be understood, as likewise if they should name also Isaac, who was between Abraham and Jacob. ^b Others think by this one Father to be meant God, it following, Hath not one God created us? and him may they truly so call; and we hear them saying in the forecited, John viii. 41. We have one Father, even God. And thus taken, it would make for inferring the same conclusion of not dealing treacherously, nor violating the covenant made with their fathers; but as it is ^c observed, would not bring it so close home, nor press it so far upon them, as if it be understood of their one Father in the flesh, in whom they were by God received into covenant, and made his peculiar people, distinct from other nations; and ought therefore, by so preserving themselves without mixture with other profane people, to observe that covenant without violation of it. If it should be understood of Adam, (as by ^d Some it is) this way of arguing would be yet wider and looser, and not much to conclude against that which seems here in the first place more especially spoken against, viz. their taking wives of other nations, although against those things joined with it, viz. their putting away the Israelitish wives which they had, or taking more strange wives with them; it so would firmly conclude according to our Saviour's way of arguing, Mat. xix. 4, 5, &c. Yet seems it most agreeable to the argument of this place, to understand either Abraham or Jacob.

^b R. D. Kimchi. ^c Abarb. ^d Munst. Vatab. Tirin. ^e Grot. Rib. Menoch. ^f Grot. ^g Jun. Trem. ^h Tarnov. ⁱ So here R. Tanch. ^k Jun. Trem. ^l Tarnov. ^m Exod. xxxiv. 16. ⁿ Pisc. ^o Grot.

Hath not one God created us?] It seems not ill observed by ^e Some, that the word of creating, is here not meant in that general signification, whereby it is common to all men, all being created by God alike, but in a more restricted signification of making, or framing, or constituting to be a select people to himself, wherein it was peculiar to Israel his chosen, whom for that purpose he brought out of Egypt, and did, as it were, form and model anew. In which sense it is likewise used, Isaiah xliii. 1. The Lord that created thee, Jacob, and so ver. 7. And in the New Testament in much like use, Eph. ii. 10. We are his workmanship created in Christ Jesus unto good works: for if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature, 2 Cor. v. 17. Or if it be used in the more usual sense, it will tend to the same purpose, and and conclude with the same force being thus understood, Hath not one God created us? i. e. Do not we, the Jews, all ' acknowledge one Lord, one God the Creator of us, and of all things, and profess to serve him alone, contrary to other nations, who do not so acknowledge him, but serve false gods? And how then should we all, agreeing in the true religion, and by it distinguished from others, violate those respects and duties which that religion binds us to observe one towards another, as brethren and partakers of the same covenant, which by dealing treacherously or falsely one with another, we do profane.

^p Lyra, and see Christ. à Castro. ^q Cyril, &c. ^r Ribera: ^s R. Tanch. ^t R. Ab. Ezra. ^u Id. and Abarb. ^w R. Tanch. Abarb. Hierom. Montan. Ribera, Ch. à Castro, Menoch. ^x Abarb. Deut. xxvi. 17, 18. ^y Ab. Ezra, R. Tanch. R. D. Kimchi, Abarb. ^z Cyril, and most Christian Expositors. ^a Mat. iii. 9. Luke i. 73. ^b Pisc. Diodati. ^c Calvin. ^d Lyra, vid. Ch. à Castro. ^e Ch. à Castro. Grot.

Every one against his brother.] The matter according to the exposition we are speaking of, rather ' seems to require, that it should be said his sister, viz. those Israelitish women, whom by taking Heathenish women with them, or instead of them, they injured. The word, brother, may therefore be taken, either so as to include the relation of kindred and family; (which was ^h accounted brotherhood) whether males or females, sisters as well as brothers: his wife is meant, (saith Abarbinel) as if it founded, a man against his wife, ⁱ or else while they so wronged their wives, they wronged those whose daughters or sisters they wronged, and dealt treacherously with them.

Why do we every man?] This intimates, that the fault spoken of, was very common among them, many guilty of it; yet not so, that we may think every one was guilty in that kind, nor the Prophet himself among them: though to shew how he, and all the rest that were members of the same body and community, were concerned in those sins which were by many among them committed, he speaks in general, and seems to include all, even himself too. We every man. There is nothing in the original that expressly denotes every, but indefinitely a man against his brother, or one against another. The Greek, therefore, as exempting the Prophet, render not we but ye.

The sin wherein they dealt treacherously, and by it profaned the covenant of their fathers, though not particularly expressed in this verse, yet is in the next verse set down in express terms, so as to favour the last exposition.

11. ¶ Judab hath dealt treacherously, and an abomination is committed in Israel, and in Jerusalem: for Judab hath profaned the holiness of the Lord which he loved, and hath married the daughter of a strange God.

Judab hath dealt treacherously, &c.] The people of Judab, or the Jews, together with those Israelites of the other tribes, which adjoined themselves with them in their return from the Babylonish captivity, are accused for treacherous and false dealing, and committing abomination, as in the other parts of the land, so in Jerusalem it self, the chief city ^k and place of the temple: where they should have been most careful of their behaviour, and given good example to others, even there they profaned the holiness of the Lord which he loved, &c. The Lord is holy, perfect holiness, his name holy, and all things more particularly related, or pertaining to him, holy. His law, covenant, and all his ordinances and institutions, holy; Israel his peculiar people, and holy people: the sanctuary or temple, and all things therein consecrated to him, holy; Jerusalem, the city of the great God, holy; yea, the whole land of his inheritance, holy; so that whosoever doth not observe those due respects, which to any of these belong, and preserve with religious care that holiness which belongs to them, may be said to have profaned the holiness, which he loved, commanded and required: and so is it differently expounded by ¹ Some, of one of these, by Others of another, as, of the temple, of the people, &c. But if we consider what is before said of their profaning the covenant of their fathers, and here joined in the accusation of them, that they married the daughter of a strange God, and what follows afterwards concerning their ill and false dealing with their lawful Israelitish wives, called the wives of their covenant; we may well assent to them, who by the holiness here said to be profaned, understand more especially his holy institution of matrimony among them, not so much in general, as it was a holy institution at first made in Paradise, as ^m Some think, but as so limited and restrained among this peculiar people of God, as that by observing his commands concerning it, they might sanctify him, and preserve themselves a holy nation to him, and ⁿ seek, and propagate a godly seed, by marrying within themselves, and cleaving to those wives as one flesh, and not mixing themselves with Heathens and Idolaters, by taking wives of their daughters, although by their neglecting his commandment, and breaking his covenant in this kind, all other things that had the impress of his holiness were at once profaned; his holy people themselves, by bringing in a mixed spurious generation of half Jews, half Assyrodites, Ammonites or Moabites, or the like; (Neb. xiii. 24.) his sanctuary or holy temple, by bringing into it such wives and such children; his holy covenant made with their lawful wives, while they either ^o put them away, or wronged them for the sake of those illegal strange wives, taken either into their places, or together with them; and so by necessary consequence his whole holy law, which he that willingly transgresseth in one part ^p is guilty of the breach and profanation of all; and so his holy name that was called on them, and himself, who was their God, and commanded them to be holy as he is holy: in sum, all the holy things of God, (as the Greek comprehensively renders it) all that holiness which he loved, delighted in, commanded and required.

^f R. D. Kimchi.

^g Ab. Ezra, Druf.

^h See Montan. Chr. à Castro, and Hierom.

ⁱ Munst.

^k R.

D. Kimchi, Calv. Grot.

^l Tig. Vatab.

^m See Ribera.

ⁿ Ver. 15.

^o See Hierom. Ribera, Pareus, on ver. 10. Ch. à Castro. and see ver. 16. infra.

^p James ii. 10.

Of these words, which he loved, we have in the Margin of our Bibles another reading, viz. which he ought to love: this is a translation which some^a Others of good account give, and explain it, which holiness Judab ought to have so loved, as not to profane it by placing their love on any other to the violating and profaning of it. And^b Others render it otherwise, as, which, i. e. which Lord, loved her, i. e. Judab. A^c later very learned man, which, i. e. which Lord, be, that is, Judab, had loved, viz. formerly, and was espoused to, but now profaned his holiness, and married the daughter of a strange God. The Spanish renders, Judab hath defiled the holiness of the Lord by loving and marrying [or in that he loved and married] himself to the daughter of a strange God. But among all, none seems more genuine, than that given in the Text of our English Bible, so understood as we have said, in that so it is opposed to what follows, ver. 16. where he saith, The Lord hateth putting away, and that any should take other illegal wives to his lawful wife, according to that exposition which there some follow, those things are contrary to that holiness here spoke of; as those he hates, so this he loves and requires.

The daughter of a strange God.] Of what nations they that then transgressed in this kind took wives, we read Ezra ix. 1, 2, &c. from which place, and this, is manifest, that the prohibition in the law, Deut. vii. 1. did not only make it unlawful to take wives of those seven nations there named only, but of any other heathenish idolatrous nation: and so the^d Jewish Doctors, by comparing the words of Ezra with that command there given, conclude. And such women of these nations, which had not one Father, (ver. 10.) nor acknowledged one true God that created them, as Israel did, are called daughters of a strange God. As those that acknowledge, worship, and serve the true God, are called his sons and daughters, Deut. xxxii. 19. so they that worshipped any strange God, are by like reason here called the daughters of that God: hence the^e Jews say, He that marieth a heathen woman is as if he made himself son-in-law to an idol.

12. The Lord will cut off the man that doth this: the master and the scholar out of the tabernacles of Jacob, and him that offereth an offering unto the Lord of hosts.

The Lord will cut off the man that doth this, &c.] So with Ours most Interpreters render it, as if the Lord here threatening to punish him that did such things, and transgressed in that manner spoken of, threatened to cut off and destroy him, whether such or such were his condition, as is here in the following words described. But a learned^w man well notes, that the word לְאִישׁ La-Ish, may according to the more frequent use of the letter or preposition, ל L, for a note of the dative case, be rather rendred to the man, i. e. from the man, than by omitting it, as Ours and Others do, simply the man, as threatening to cut off not so much, or not only his person, but those that were in such or such relation to him. And so the Chaldee Paraphrase renders it; The Lord shall destroy to the man that doth this, &c. Those that he threatens to cut off, whether we understand the person himself sinning, or those related to him, are in the next words thus described, the master and the scholar (whether he be so or so) and in the Margin of our Bibles, as another reading we have, or, him that waketh, and him that answereth, which (as a Jewish Expositor notes) is the proper signification of the words, though diversly interpreted by Others, ^x Some rendring, him that calleth, and him that answereth, seeming to take the word in an active sense, as^y Others do, him that wakeneth. ^z Others, the master and the scholar, ^a Others, the author and him that obeyeth; ^b the Lord and the servant, ^c priest or laic. The Chaldee, son and son's son, and the like: of which may be said, as that Jewish Expositor saith of the Chaldee, that they render^d by way of interpretation, or by giving the meaning, as they thought the words to import, not as they literally signify. And as to the following words, and him that offereth an offering, ^e Some expound as a description of the priests and their sons: as^f Others do the former words likewise, to be a description of the priests and other Levites, ^g officers about the temple, as porters and singers, and the like. ^h Others render, when (or although) he shall offer a gift to the Lord to make atonement for his sin. And so accordingly do they differently give their expositions of the whole; asⁱ Some, that the Lord will cut off both the man that transgressed in this kind, and also his abettors and defenders, though he would seek to expiate his fault by gifts and sacrifices offered to the Lord by^k himself or others. ^l Others that he would cut off from him, either himself that looked after such women, or from him that defended him, those sons begotten of them, yea though he offered gifts, &c. A^m late very learned man, having considered the different expositions of Others, gives thus his own opinion, that in this verse is threatened punishment to those that were guilty of that treacherous dealing in the precedent verse mentioned, viz. that God would cut off from them, 1. Such who would watch for (or over) them in (or with) prayers and admonitions. 2. Such as should answer them, when they should ask concerning the law. 3. Him that should offer to God such sacrifices as they brought. So that together he may be understood-

VOL. I.

P p

^a Jun. Trem. Piscat.^b Genev. in de Dieu.^c Id. L. de Dieu.^d Maimon. in Issure biyah, c. 12. §. 1.^e See R. D. Kimchi and Abarinel.^f L. de Dieu, and Vatab. 4to and 8vo.^g Ab. Walid. and R. Tanch.^h Munster. &c.ⁱ Vulg. Lat. and Kimchi in Rad.^j Tig.^k Calv.^l Stokes, ^m علي سيد التاويل.ⁿ Chald. R. D. Kimchi, R. Tanch.^o Castal.^p Diodati, Dutch Notes.^q Jun. Trem. Pisc. Grot.^r Jun. Trem.^s Druf.^t Piscat.^u Lud. de Dieu.

stood to threaten the priests, (spoken of in the former verses of the chapter) that they should be removed from their office, and likewise all the people (spoken of in the verse immediately foregoing) that they should be deprived of their priests. But to me there seems no more facile or conspicuous exposition than that given by that learned ^a Jew, at first mentioned, (agreeable likewise to what ^o Others of the same nation give) viz. that (he will destroy to or from them, or) they shall (be destroyed, or) perish: so that there shall be none left among them, to whom shall pertain (or agree) any of those epithets that import life, [such as are waking and answering, as if this were a ^p proverbial kind of expression to denote as much as any living soul, as if he should say, I will cut off every living soul, so that there shall be none in his house, that may call or answer, none at all living.] And this imprecation (or menace) saith he, comprehends the transgressors in this kind of all Israel; as he saith, (first) out of the tabernacles of Jacob, and then particularly applieth it to such of the priests as did so, saying, and him that offereth an offering to the Lord of hosts, (or, and of him that offereth,) viz. out of the habitations, both of the common people of Israel, or the laity, and also of the priests; which last exposition comes nigh to what the Greek hath, from or out of the tabernacles of Jacob, and from or out of those who bring an offering to the Lord Almighty: although in the rendring the words immediately preceding, they be very wide from any yet mentioned, rendring until he be brought down, which ^q Some ascribe to the reading it differently from what is now read in the Hebrew: but whether so, or that they did it by way of interpretation (as we before said of Others) thinking it a proverbial speech, and that to be the importance of it, which they set down, though not in a literal rendring, it will not concern us to enquire; our business chiefly being to see what meaning the Hebrew Text as now read (which we doubt not to be the true and incorrupted reading) will naturally bear, and to adjust with it our English Translation, and sometimes, as occasion gives, Others also, from it, as now read, derived.

Out of the tabernacles of Jacob.] The Chaldee Paraphrase rendreth, Out of the cities of Jacob. From the ancient and frequent use of living in tents or tabernacles in those countries, and the long custom of their ancestors of living in such, was the word afterwards used for any habitations, cities, or houses in which they dwelt: and sometimes ^r for the congregation or company of the people themselves that dwelt together in them. So that by cutting off these sinners out of the tabernacles of Jacob, may be understood the extirpating them out of the land, the dwellings, or the ^s congregation of Israel. ^t Some thinking this spoken more particularly of the Priests or Levites, think by this expression to be meant the casting them out of the temple, or from the altar, so that they should not be admitted or suffered any more to serve there. But this seems to be too narrow a restriction of this menace only to the priests, which (as appears out of the foregoing verse) is denounced against all Judah and Israel. And though it appear out of the forecited books of Ezra and Nehemiah, that some of the priests were guilty in this kind by taking strange wives, yet was the sin more general, and so the punishment menaced seems extended to all of all sorts that had so done, whether priests or lay-people. By ^u Some the word tabernacles is thought used to put them in mind of their unsettled condition.

2

13. And this have ye done again, covering the altar of the Lord with tears, with weeping, and with crying out, insomuch that ye regardeth not the offering any more, or receiveth it with good will at your hand.

[And this have ye done again.] Again, שְׁנִיתָ Sbenith, secondly, or a second time, or in the second place, or ^v this second thing; so that he seems proceeding in his reproof to tax them of a second crime added to a former. The former, to which this now to be spoken of, is second, is by ^x diverse taken to be that in the foregoing chapter, and the beginning of this, taxed; their offering to God illegal sacrifices, and in illegal manner, and shewing contempt of his altar, and want of due regard to his service. ^y Others look on this as called second, in respect to that spoken of, ver. 11. viz. their profaning the holiness of the Lord by marrying the daughters of strange Gods, idolatrous wives; to which, though the sins after spoken of, have respect, and be of the same kind, yet it is another additional degree of it, an heightning and doubling of it: so that the word again or secondly may well be referred to it. And it will not much matter which of the two opinions be followed. [But the Greek, and such as follow them here, (as the printed Arabick) render the word שְׁנִיתָ Sbenith much differently from both, viz. things which I hated, ^z taking, it seems, this word to be of the same signification with שָׂנֵא Sane in ver. 16. which signifies hating, and is a different root.] The fault with which they are taxed is, that they covered the altar of the Lord with tears, with weeping and crying out, &c. which by the generality of the Jewish and most of Christian Expositors, is understood of the effect of their treacherous dealing with their lawful Israelitish wives, whom, by either dismissing them to take others, or by taking with them strange women, to whom they shewed more respect, love, and kindness than to them, and with them dealt unkindly, and otherwise than

^a R. Tanch. ^o R. D. Kimchi, Abarb. ^p Chr. à Castro. ^q Capell thinking they read אֲדָרָתָם Ad yeunneh for אֲדָרָתָם Er veonch. ^r Flac. Illyr. ^s Bishop Hall. ^t Dutch Notes. ^u Oecolamp. ^v Piscat. ^x Aben Ezra, R. D. Kimchi, R. Tanchum, and several of the Christian Interpreters. ^y R. Solomon, Abarb. &c. ^z See Schindler in שְׂנֵא.

than they ought, depriving them of what was due to them; they caused to pour forth abundance of tears before the altar of the Lord, as it were covering it with them, ^a from the sight of God, or which God looked on ^b as if they fell on his altar, and to utter there their sad lamentations and doleful complaints for the injuries done them, as desiring help, redress, and justice from God: by seeing and hearing of which he was so far moved and provoked, that he would no more regard or receive with good will any offering that was there offered by the priests, ^c either for themselves or others, who had committed such things. Yet this exposition, though by so many agreed on, Calvin rejects, thus rendring the words, And this secondly have ye done, by covering the altar of the Lord with tears, with weeping and crying, because there is no more any respect had to the offering, nor any good will or acceptable thing received at your hand: giving then the meaning to this purpose, that the priests by their ill behaviour in God's service, so provoked him, as that he would no more respect any offerings offered by them, nor accept them with good will and delight: which displeasure of God the people perceiving, instead of coming with praises and rejoicing into the courts of God, now came only full of grief, with tears and cries, as thinking all they did to no purpose for the pleasing of God. But in this his way of interpretation, he seems not either to make the sense of the words, or the connexion of them so clear, as to persuade ^d those, who otherwise have great respect for him, to follow him in it; but they rather choose to embrace the former exposition. There is another interpretation given by an ancients ^e Expositor, who understands these tears, &c. of tears shed by those who are accused before, of such ill doings as are spoken of, as if they in shew of sorrow for their offences, did approach God's altar with many tears and lamentations, and cries, as desirous of pardon, yet still continued to do the same wicked things, and would still retain their strange wives; for which their false dealing, God refuseth any more to respect or accept their offerings, though they cry never so much and so loud. This would be no ill meaning: but the first mentioned is more approved and followed, as best agreeing with what follows. [Nor is that way followed which Cyril mentions; as if by the tears, &c. were understood such as were drawn from the covetous offerers, ^f loth to part with those things which they were to offer, as sorry for the loss they were to be at; wherefore he that loveth a cheerful giver, could not with good will accept things with so ill will offered.] There is yet another way by a very learned man (in the foregoing verse mentioned) given, which making it an aggravation of the punishment in the foregoing verse denounced; as if having there, according to his interpretation, threatened to cut off from them the priest that should watch over them, give them answers out of the law, and offer gifts for them, he should here add, And this secondly shall ye do, ye shall cover my altar with tears, weeping and cries: why? because there shall be no more respect to any offering of yours, &c. But it will be safe to follow the first, and more generally received exposition.

14. Yet ye say, wherefore? because the Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously: yet is she thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant.

Yet ye say, &c.] Yet ye ^h are so impudent as to stand up in defence of your sin, and to say, Wherefore, &c. or as Others, if ye say, wherefore? i. e. wherefore is the Lord so angry, that he will no more accept any offering from our hands? the answer is; because the Lord hath been witness of the contract, or matrimonial promises made according to his law in his name, viz. with invocations of it, and calling him to witness, (and therefore called the covenant of God, Prov. ii. 17.) between thee and the wife of thy youth, i. e. which thou tookest in thy youth, with whom thou now dealest treacherously, though she were thy companion, made so according to the institution of God, that thou shouldest ⁱ cleave unto her as one flesh with thy self.

And the wife of thy covenant.] By mutual covenant espoused to thee; the conditions of which covenant God ^k being witness to it, looks on as necessarily binding on both parts, and requires the due performance of it from both: and therefore hearing her just complaint of the breaking of it on your parts, moved with just indignation, will not accept of you, or look on any offering from you such treacherous covenant-breakers, as pleasing to him. This seems a plain exposition of the words, and in which will be included, or easily reduced to it, what is by Others said; as what Kimchi saith, that by, because the Lord hath been witness between thee, &c. is meant, that whatever they pretend, God seeth, and is witness, that they did not love their wives; their heart was not towards them, but they dealt treacherously with them, and so gave them just cause of complaining to the Lord: as likewise what Abarbinel saith, who makes the import of the question, wherefore? which impudently standing on their own justification they asked, to be, wherefore do those women weep and complain? as if they knew no cause they had: and then explains the answer much according to what was at first said, that it was because God was witness to those rites and instruments of matrimonial contract and covenants made between them, which the women having kept unviolated on their parts, and behaved themselves as faithful companions and covenanted wives to them, when they saw them violated by their husbands taking other wives with them, did address themselves to the Lord their wit-

^a Oecolamp.

^b R. Tanch.

^c Pelican.

^d Piscat. Diodati, Dutch Notes.

^e Lyra.

^f Chap i. 13.

^g L. de Dieu.

^h Abarb.

ⁱ Gen. ii. 24. Mat. xix. 5.

^k R. Tanch.

witnefs, and complained of the wrong done to them: by which moved, he fhews himfelf juftly difpleafed for fuch their treacherous dealing.

By God's being witnefs, ¹ Some underftand his precept or command for keeping covenants inviolable betwixt man and wife, according to the firft institution of marriage, Gen. ii. 24. By wife of youth, ^m Some underftand a wife taken in her youth or flower of her age, which being now paff, they fet her at nought, and ⁿ either put her away, or took other ftrange wives, whom they more loved, with her: and by companion and wife of covenant, a partaker of the fame holy rites, (or religion) and in the fame covenant of God. And it is by ^o divers obferved that here are put, as feveral aggregations of their fault in thus injuring their wives, 1. the witnefs of God, 2. the wife of thy youth, 3. thy companion, and, 4. the wife of thy covenant. [Kimchi obferves that by thefe expreffions is denoted the dereliction of any Israelitish wife legally married, whether in youth or age, inasmuch as the notion of companion and wife of covenant agrees to either.]

15. And did not he make one? yet had he the residue of the spirit: and wherefore one? that he might seek a godly seed: therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously against the wife of his youth.

And did not he make one? yet had he the residue [Marg. Or, excellency] of the spirit, and wherefore one? &c.] This verfe is confefledly difficult. It appears fo by the feveral different expositions that are given of it. We fhall in the firft place take notice of that which feems moft agreeable to our Translation in the Text. And did not he, i. e. that one God who created all, ver. 10. make one? i. e. one man, and one woman, made out of the rib of that one man, one only pair; fo that that one man had only one wife, though he had the residue of the spirit, ^p being the father of fpirits, and fo could have at his pleafure created more fpirits or fouls, and infufed them into more women, fo that that one man might have had more wives if God had fo pleafed. But now he gave him only one, and made only one couple, and that for this end, that they might in chafte wedlock and fincere love, and undivided affection, propagate a godly feed or holy feed to God: whose example, therefore, ye ought to look on as a perpetual law fet to you: and therefore in imitation of that firft man, take heed you alfo every one to your spirit; that fpirit by God infufed into you, that ye impart and communicate it only to one, and that with fincere affection, and let none of you deal treacherously against the wife of his youth, by defpifing or relinquifhing her, or taking any other ftrange wife with her. This feems an eafy and very probable interpretation, and the rendring is agreeable to the words, without force or violence to any of them, or to the conftruction. And it will be confirmed by our Saviour's way of arguing againft divorce, (and confequently Polygamy,) Mat. xix. 4, 5, 6. Have ye not read that he which made them at the beginning, made them male and female, &c. by which is well expounded this expreffion here, did not he make one? that is, one couple, which by that relation, as he there adds, became one flefh, and are no more two but one flefh, one man, as (Gen. i. 27.) they both together are called, and therefore fhould be of one mind and one fpirit alfo, the unity of which they ought faithfully to preferve, without dealing treacheroufly one with the other, to the making a divifion betwixt them, or by taking in ftrangers to corrupt that holy feed by God required, and introduce a fpurious un-fanctified generation, like that by fuch means brought in, Gen. vi. 2, &c. But though this feem a plain and good exposition, yet becaufe far different ones are by Others given, it will be convenient to take notice of fome of them at leaft, left we fhould be thought to take this becaufe Others were not confidered.

In the next place, therefore, we may take notice of that reading, which the ancient Latin Translation gives, Nonne unus fecit, & residuum spiritus ejus est, &c. which, according to the Doway English Version of it, is, did not one make, and the residue of the spirit is his? or, as it may found, and [it] is the residue of his spirit. They that follow this reading, wherein one is the nominative cafe, differ in their expositions; for if it be asked, what did one make? Some underftand one man, and one woman, Adam and Eve; which was the residue of his fpirit: of whose fpirit? whether of the fpirit of God or the man? this Jerom fhews to have been a doubt betwixt Interpreters even in his time. If of God; then they expound it, that God having residue of the fame fpirit, i. e. ^a like in kind, and of the fame nature to that which he had infufed into the man, infufed it into the woman taken out of him, that fo they might be of one mind, and joined in mutual affection. And to the like purpofe ^r they that expound it, the remainder of the fpirit of Adam, viz. that into the woman was infpired the like fpirit as into him. ^s Others, by that which he made, underftand Eve, into which he infpired the remainder of the fpirit, i. e. the like fpirit, or of the fame kind, that he had infpired into Adam; and then proceed in like manner as the other, as to the fcope of the words: and then he adds, what doth one seek but the seed of God? i. e. for what end did God do fo? fo join them into whom he breath'd the like fpirit, but for the propagation of a godly feed of men that might ferve him? which by your taking ftrange heathenifh wives will not be preferred, but neceffarily adulterated. For caution, in which kind, he infers, keep ye then, (or therefore) your spirit, i. e. fay fome of

¹ See Ribera, Ch. à Castro, &c. ^m Grot. ⁿ See Hierom. ^o Chr. à Castro, Tirin. &c. ^p Buxtorf. Vindic. p. 568. ^a Ribera, Corn. à Lapide, Menoch. &c. ^r Chr. à Castro. ^s Sa, and fee Chr. à Castro, and Cor. à Lapide.

of them; ¹ your wives, which are the remainder of your spirit, as it were making ² one soul with you, and wrong them not; or, ³ your affection, which from that relation ought to be in you towards them: or (as Others more generally) your souls and spirits, from committing any such sin by taking strange wives to the wrong of your lawful wives, which from your youth you have had: or, ⁴ as you love your own soul and spirit, take heed of doing so. Thus they who follow that rendring. A learned ⁵ man, who doth not farther follow it, yet if the words be so rendered, Did not one make? thinks this would be the meaning, That the one, viz. God, with whom is the excellency of the spirit, yea so great abundance of it, that there is still remainder of it with him, did make that which is in the end of the foregoing verse said, That the wife should be a companion to the man, and in covenant joined with him. And what in that doth he look after? He seeks a seed of God, a divine or godly seed, of which he may be called the author and father. Therefore take heed to your spirit that you offend not against him, (with whom is abundance of the spirit, and who by that abundance most wisely ordered matrimony,) by dealing treacherously with or against your lawful wives. This exposition he sets down; but doth not acquiesce in it, but gives another which he more approves of, which is thus; And not one, i. e. none doth this to whom there are any remainders of spirit: and how should any one do it, seeking a seed of God? take heed therefore to your spirit, that none deal treacherously, &c. that the sense may be; Thou dealest treacherously against thy wife, who is thy companion, and joined with thee in covenant. None doth this, ⁶ who hath any thing at all of the spirit of God remaining in him, and how should any do it, who seeks a seed of God? If therefore ye seek that, take heed to your spirit that it deal not treacherously, &c. Another sense he also mentions, viz. For he made not one alone, and abundance of the spirit is with him: and why, or to what purpose, should he have made one seeking a seed of God? Take heed therefore, &c. The sense is; God would that the woman should be a companion to the man, and his confederate; for he made not only man, not a male alone, but a woman also, and that most wisely, inasmuch as he hath the remainder of the spirit; and to what purpose should he do it, whereas he sought a seed of God, which could not be born without wedlock? Therefore take heed, &c. But this, he saith, pleaseth him not so well, as that before it, inasmuch as the word שאר Shear, signifies not excellency (abundance as it notes excellency) but remainder only.

Having seen this variety of expositions, (besides what we shall hereafter see) among Christian Interpreters, if we shall look into the Jews, we shall find yet more, they almost all differing one from another. The Chaldee Paraphrast, the ancientest among them, thus paraphrasteth the words: “Was not Abraham one alone, from whom was created (or produced) the world, or a world?” (It may be supposed he respects the blessings promised to Abraham, that from him should be a multitude of nations; and in his seed all the families of the earth should be blessed, Gen. xii. 3. and xvii. 4, &c. and xxii. 17. or, that by the world he understands the people of Israel, God’s peculiar in the world, Gen. xxxii. 8, 9.) “and what did that one seek, but that there might remain to him an offspring from before God, or in the sight of God: Take heed therefore to your selves, and deal not falsely with the wife of thy youth.” R. Solomon Jarchi, though after him many ages, yet the eldest Commentator, gives an exposition to this purpose, according to his own words, ⁷ and as by Abarbinel explained; “Did not God make one, i. e. one pair, Adam and Eve, and not one man with two women? and the residue of the spirit was to him, or was his, i. e. to, or in, Adam, the first man: the rest of the spirits of men were in him; from him they all proceeded. And if so, why doth one, who is in marriage, seek to find occasions against his wife, which is coupled to him; and which is the seed of God? why doth he persecute her so as to despise her?” This is his chief, or only exposition; according to what is in the printed copies, and what is reported from him by Abarbinel. But in a manuscript copy there is before this put another exposition different from it, viz. to this sense, “Did not the holy God prepare a help for Adam (or man) and join to him his wife at the beginning? and the remainder of the spirit was to him; (or, his spirit remained unto him) but now another ⁸ spirit is come upon him to hate her, and he hath chosen to him the daughter of a strange God: and why one? he seeketh, (or what doth that one seek?) a daughter of Israel, which is the seed of holiness.” This I must desire the reader to examine by some other manuscript copy, if he meet with any; and for that end I have put the Hebrew words, as they are in the copy which I had use of.

ולא הכין הק' עור לאדם וזיווג לו את אשתו ראשונה ושאר רוח לו ועתה עבר עליו רוח אחרת לשנאותה ובחר לו בבת ען ומה האחר מבקש את בת ישראל וזו שהיא ורע קודש

Another exposition he likewise mentions out of the ancient Rabbins, ⁹ which the words are made as it were, a dialogue betwixt the people and the Prophet; as if those that had married strange wives, coming together to the Prophet, said, Did not Abraham do so, who took to him Hagar with his wife? And he answered, “But the residue of the spirit (or excellency of spirit) was with him; his mean-

“ ing

Q q

¹ Chr. à Castro, Menoch. ² See Cyril. de Dieu. ³ See Chr. à Castro, Senf. 4. chap. xiv. 24.

⁴ Tirin.

⁵ See Buxtorf. Vindic. p. 568.

⁶ Chr. à Castro, Verf. Tig. and see Tarnov. ⁷ L.

⁸ See Numb. v. 14, 30. and

“ing was not as yours; he set not his eyes upon her; he had another meaning. They said to him, and what did that one seek, what was his meaning? he saith to them, That he might have a seed of God.” Another also in the manuscript copy to this purpose, as if the people did object, “Did not One make us? did not he that created Israel, create the nations also? why doth he make it unlawful for us to join in marriage with them? are not also all the rest of the spirits his? the Prophet did answer, And what doth that one require? a seed of God. Take heed, therefore, unto your spirit, and let not thy spirit deal falsely with the wife of thy youth.”

The last but one of these is plainly the same with what David Kimchi gives, as his father’s opinion, (without mentioning either R. Solomon, or any other from whom he took it,) only a little more explained, viz. “That the first are the words of the people to the Prophet, Did not Abraham, our father, who was one, do so as we do, who let alone his wife, and married Hagar his maid, although there was in him excellency of spirit, and he was a Prophet?” Then the Prophet’s answer in the next words, “What did that one seek? a seed of God: as if he should say, When he married Hagar, he did it not but to seek a seed of God, because he had no seed by Sarah his wife, and withal he did not deal falsely with his wife, because by her good will, and her command, he did it. But do you take heed to your spirit, and let not any of you deal treacherously with the wife of his youth, to leave her and marry the daughter of a strange God.” That which he gives as his own interpretation is, “Abraham, who was one, and the father to all who come after him, in his faith, did not so as ye do: for he followed not his lust, neither married any that was lawful to him, (no not Sarah, no not of his own flesh, or kindred;) but that he might leave a seed of God, as he commanded to leave seed, saying, Increase and multiply, Gen. i. 28.” And by the word שֶׁאֵר Shear, he says is understood excellency, not as in other expositions, residue of the spirit. [To this opinion, of making Abraham the one here spoken of, several Christians also incline: and amongst them Grotius, who yet in the expounding the other words differs from them, by the words which they take to signify excellency of spirit, he taking to be signified, that they, the Israelites, were the residue of his spirit, i. e. all drew and derived their spirit from his: and then what is rendred, Take heed to your spirit, understands, restrain or refrain your anger.] The changings of persons and numbers here in the Hebrew, (as, Take ye heed to your spirits, in the plural number and second person, then the wife of thy youth in the singular, then let him not deal treacherously in the third person, without expressing who is meant, whereas it might seem more agreeable to what precedes to say, do not ye or thou, which some supply by putting in any, let not any, or let none deal, &c.) Others making the preceding word spirit the nominative case, that is, and let not your spirit deal treacherously, &c.) are ways of change so usual in the dialect of the Scripture, that none that looks into the original thereof, can raise any scruples or difficulties from it.

Abarbinel having considered and recited Kimchi’s exposition, as likewise shewed how the opinion of those, who understand that one of Adam, is, as he supposes, to be managed most agreeably to the scope of the words, (viz. that the first words be taken as an objection to the Prophet that reproved them for their taking strange wives; “We are all the children of the first man Adam, children of one father, and then none can be accounted a strange woman; which is that which is said, Did not one, i. e. the holy God at first create one man alone? and the residue of the spirit was with him, i. e. the rest of the spirits came forth of his loins, viz. of that first Adam, who was one: and then that the other words be the Prophet’s answer; to this purpose: Will you make your condition to be equal, or like that of the first man Adam, when he was alone in the world? for he did not seek ought but a seed of God; children that should serve God; not following after his concupiscence as ye do, and therefore it is meet that ye Take heed to your spirits, &c.” Which exposition, how clear it is, I will not examine:) yet seeing that neither Adam nor Abraham are mentioned in the Text, thinks the words are capable of another more simple exposition, which he thus gives, And not one hath done it, viz. not one only among you hath committed this evil. So that you may say, Shall one man sin, and wilt thou be wrath with all the congregation? (as Numb. xvi. 22.) One man alone among you hath not done this; so as that to the rest, their spirit is with them, i. e. they keep entire their soul and spirit, which shall return unto God who gave it. And if it were but one alone among you, I would ask him what he did seek by this marriage? whether he did seek that the children, which were born unto him should be a seed of God? this is not possible as long as their mother is the daughter of a strange God. And seeing the matter is so, that ye have all transgressed, not one only of you, and seeing that he that so transgresseth in this, knows of a truth, that his seed will not be the seed of God, it concerns you, that ye take heed to your spirit, (for there is nothing more precious to a man than his soul) and that you keep your spirit, that it break not forth after its lusts, and then it will not, (or let it not, viz. that spirit) deal treacherously with the wife of thy youth; Because, &c.

This is a literal interpretation of his words: and this his opinion a learned Christian em-

2

braceth;

^c See Kimchi on ver. 10.
Vatab. Paræus, Stokes, &c.

^d So a MS.

^e Buxt. Bibl.
^f So R. Solomon, and Ab. Ezra.

^g Buxt. Bibl.

^h As other Editions.

ⁱ Arias Montanus.

^k See Calvin, Druf.

braceth; but a modern ^k Jew who cites it, having considered it, prefers another of his own, wherein he takes by the one to be meant Israel, whom God chose to be to himself one peculiar people among all nations, a people that should dwell alone, and not be reckoned among the nations, (as Balaam speaks of them, Numb. xxiii. 9.) and were therefore to preserve themselves a holy people, and to keep their genealogy and offspring entire, not mingled with other nations, nor making marriages with them, whereby the holy seed, the seed of God might be mingled with the daughter of a strange God. So that the Prophet's reproof here will run thus, Did not God make Israel one nation in the earth, and to him was excellency of spirit, i. e. Did not God give to Israel, that one nation, an excellent spirit above all nations? and what is it that that one seeks, or should seek? It is a seed of God, a seed that God hath blessed to take (or in taking) a wife of the daughters of Israel, who are the seed of God, children of the living God; and not the daughter of a strange God, Therefore take heed to your spirit, lest there be made a breach in that high degree and excellency which God hath imparted to you, in making you one holy people, separate from all other people. And this exposition he confirms, by looking back to the 10th and 11th verses, Have we not all one Father, &c. which he will have to import, That God our God is one, and he is our Father, who created us to be to him a peculiar people, one people of one God, and if we take strange wives of the nations of the earth, we shall deal treacherously every one against his brother, and profane the holy covenant of our fathers, our seed, which is the holiness of the Lord, which he loveth.

There are yet other expositions ancients than some of the forementioned, which yet because the ^l author, from whom I take them, is not yet printed, as the others are, and in some consideration to the expositions themselves, I put in the last place. He tells us that the meaning of the words is said (by more perhaps, because he names no particular, though the words in which he gives it, are expressly Aben Ezra's;) to be, "That there " is not any among you but hath done this,
" that the construction of the words, with a " supply of what is to be understood, may " run thus, There is not one of you that hath " done, כרת Cedat, according to the law,
" and his spirit (or whose spirit) remains to " him, so as that it hath not been mingled
" with the daughter of a strange God." This exposition, though he approve not of, yet it may be observable in regard that it agrees with the usual reading of the LXX, or Greek Version, which hath καὶ καλὸν ἐποίησε, ὃ ὑπέσχετο αὐτῷ, which being read without an interrogation, though it is usually read with one, would sound, And he hath not done that which is good, and there is remainder of his spirit: where by he (seeing it is to be asked who is meant by it) it will be the readiest and plainest way to understand any one, that by ἐποίησε, he hath not done, may be meant the same as by ἐστὶ ποιῶν, there is not that doth, i. e. not one that doth good, Rom. iii. 12. and so then there is not any one (אחד Echad, one) that hath done good, and there is a remainder of his spirit; (or reading the last words only, with an interrogation, and is there any remainder of his spirit? i. e. so as that there is a remainder of his spirit, or his spirit is entire. This being allowed, it will be all one with that Jewish exposition mentioned, the one's supply of Cedat, according to the law well answering to the others καλὸν good: and if so, all that I shall at present say is, That then this interpretation is not novel, and withal, that perhaps there is no reason why ὃ καλὸν, not good, should be changed into ἐκ' ἄλλων, as a late learned ^m man would have it, that so he might have occasion of finding fault with the ordinary reading in the Hebrew.

This exposition R. Tanchum having cited, rejects, for this reason, because that fault was not so general, as that all may be said to be guilty of it, but only some particular persons, who are reckoned up in Esdra's, chap. x. 18, &c. and Neb. xiii. 28. except they may therefore be all accounted guilty, because they did not disapprove it. Another exposition, therefore, he gives of his own, viz. And there is not one who hath done this, and hath his spirit remaining to him, i. e. but shall certainly perish in his sin. Then he asks, as by way of derision, and what is the end or purpose of any one in doing this? Doth he thereby seek a holy seed that shall set it self to obey God, therefore it behoveth you to look to yourselves, as you would save ⁿ your spirits, that you abstain, (or to keep your souls, by abstinence from so doing) and that he deal not treacherously; the third person being put for the second, as in many places it is done, i. e. and do not thou, or you, deal treacherously with the wife, of thy, or your youth, he speaking to them in the second person.

There being this variety of expositions irreconcilable between themselves, I knew not how better to make way for the reader to examine them, and judge of them, and so to enquire after the truth, than by thus giving him the chief of them at large: and for more facilitating yet the matter, it may not be amiss to give the bare signification of the words, which are so diversly expounded, as they stand in the original Text, which are ולא אחד Velo Echad, and not one, עשה Asah, hath done, or made, ושאר רוח לו Ufear ruah lo, and the remainder (or, as some will, excellency) of spirit to him, ומה האחר Umah Haechad, and why, or what? one, מבקש Mebak-kesb, seeking, or seeketh, ורע אלהים Zera Elohim, a seed of God. From the different putting together and construction of these words, and distinguishing them, and reading them either with

^k Aben Dana in Micla Yophi, on the place.

^l R. Tanchum.

^m Lud. Capell.

ⁿ ان تحرسوا نفوسكم

بالامتناع من ذلك, That ye keep your souls in (or, by) abstaining from that.

with or without an interrogation, arise these so different senses; which when the reader shall have well considered, he shall perhaps find the first, which is according to our English Translation in the Text, or the last of the Jewish, which is R. Tanchum's, most easily applicable to the words, and according to either of them, and indeed of all, they will be a forcible argument against either their putting away their legal Israelitish wives, or taking with them other strange wives; yea more generally against either divorce, or polygamy, all treacherous or unfaithful dealing against the covenant of the marriage bed; which is also farther expressed in the following verse.

16. For the Lord, the God of Israel saith that he hateth putting away: for one covereth violence with his garment, saith the Lord of hosts, therefore take heed to your spirit, that ye deal not treacherously.

For the Lord God of Israel saith, that he hateth putting away, (or as in the Margin) to put away, &c.] In this verse also are several interpretations, and it hath its difficulties, of which our Translators give notice, by their putting in the Margin, as a different rendring, of which the first words are capable, If he bate her, put her away. And this marginal reading is agreeable to what most ancient Interpreters, to omit modern, have it: so the Greek and ancient Latin, and Arabick, If thou bate her, put her away; and so the ancientest among the Jews, the Chaldee Paraphrast. Yet neither is the other, which Ours follow in the Text, novel: they are both mentioned in the Talmud, and since that, by such Expositors as have followed, so as you may perceive they doubted which to prefer, though some inclining more to the one, others to the other. Kimchi following that which the Chaldee hath, makes no mention of the other; Aben Ezra following the other, as the truer in his opinion, mentions not that. R. Solomon only tells us of both without preferring either: and so doth Abarbinel and R. Tanchum. So that it will be necessary to take some notice of both, that so the reader may at last use his own judgment which he will follow; which will be the better done when he shall have likewise considered the following words, which are in our Translation rendred, for one covereth violence with his garment. Concerning the exposition of which words there is likewise no little difference betwixt Interpreters, both concerning the construction of them, viz. who, or what one it is, that is said to cover, and what to be covered, or which with which is covered, the violence with the garment, or the garment with violence; and concerning the meaning of this expression. 1. As to the construction, that which our Translators follow in the Text, makes the person spoken of, (viz. he that doth that wrong to his wife whom he putteth away,) to be him that covers; and violence to be that which he covers, and his garment to be that with which he covers it. For one (say they) covereth, i. e. He whosoever he be that doth this, as Bishop Hall well paraphraseth it, covereth violence with his garment: so taking the preposition by Al, which otherwise signifieth, upon, or above, here to signify the same that usually the preposition ב Be doth in construction of verbs, i. e. with. So do, besides some other modern Interpreters, some ancient Jews also take it to do, as the Chaldee Paraphrast, and R. Tanchum; although the first of these doth not render the former words as Ours do, but, If thou bate her put her away, yet in these he so takes the particle (as we said) to signify with, rendring, and cover not sin with thy garment. That he changeth the person from he to thou, his to thy, is by the liberty of a Paraphrast, that gives the meaning according as he takes the intent to be, not of a literal Interpreter. But whereas he puts in 'not', which is not in the Text, this Grotius solves, by saying that he read it interrogatively, And shall, or may any so doing cover his iniquity with his garment? which may likewise be applied to what R. Tanchum saith, who says that the first words being interpreted, when a man hateth his wife let him put her away, (i. e. it is permitted to him to put her away) viz. by a legal bill of divorce, that so another Israelite may marry her in a legal way, and he do not deceive her, by taking another strange wife unto him; the construction of these must be, and let him not cover violence with his garment: and so a Latin Version of good account renders it with an interrogation, Shall he therefore cover violence with his garment? That which from what hath been said we gain to our purpose is, That our Translators in rendring, covereth violence with his garment, go not alone, but have others of good authority, concurring with them in their opinion, that the words ought so to be rendred. Yet Others do differently render them, so as to make violence the thing covering, and their garment the thing covered: so the ancient Latin, But iniquity shall cover his garment, and so before him the Greek, as we may well suppose, though now in the ordinary copies it is read, impiety shall cover over thy thoughts, ἐνδύματα σου. But a learned man well supposes it anciently was read and ought to be read ἐνδύματα σου, thy garments, which is confirmed by the printed Arabick, which he that was the author of following the Greek, appears so in his time to have read it, by his rendring it ثيابك Thiyabeca, thy garments. And with these agree several others, whom we need not name, because they go in their steps. A late learned man considering the ordinary use of the preposition by Al, which we before spoke of, affirms it to be the righter way of rendring, and so renders it, And injury bath covered his garment. Much the same construction of the preposition he observes, that renders, For he covers with violence his garment, it

* Tract. Gittin in the end.
* As likewise the Syriack doth.

† See the MS. for the printed copy is imperfect.
† Tigurin. † Schindler in שולחן.

‡ Tig. Jun. Trem. Piscat.
‡ L. de Dieu. ‡ Druf.

it sounding, he draws violence as a covering over his garment. But now all these that go either of these ways, hitherto mentioned, take the verb נָסַף Cissab to be the preter tense, whether rendred bath covered, or for making the sense as they would have it, shall cover, or the like. But a learned ^a Jew saith, that according to that rendring of the former words be bateth putting away, it may and must be taken for the infinitive mood, which hath the force of a noun, and may be rendred to cover; or the covering; as also the foregoing verb שָׁלַח Shallach, as it is by them taken, who render it to put away, or as Ours putting away, or shall put her away, or let him put her away. As also ^y Drusus in another rendring, whereas he hates putting away, he covers violence with his garment, whereas Others who render it, put thou her away take it for the imperative mood; as also ^z Such who render, because God hates that word of yours, put her away: and then it being so taken, the whole will run thus, For the Lord God of Israel saith that he bateth to put (or putting) away; and that he bateth to cover, (or covering of) violence with his (or ones) garment. And this perhaps will be the clearest way of connecting the words of the former and latter parts of the sentence together. But this now being said of the construction of the words, it remains to be enquired what is the meaning of the expression, according to any of these rendrings.

And first as to the Jews, by ^a Some of them the violence here mentioned, is the refusing to put away his wife by a legal way of divorce, whom yet in his heart and covertly he hateth, whereas by legally dismissing her, that so she might be married to another, who would love her, he might have done her more right; his now retaining her, and for colouring his hatred keeping her to himself, as a garment that he would not put off from him, yet taking a stranger with her, is a great injury to her; or as ^b Others of them, is a manifest injury covering his garment, openly conspicuous, for all his pretence of doing her right in retaining her. Their words in expressing their meaning, as a learned ^c man observes of some of them, are short and obscure: that which they aim at is manifestly this, That if they hated their wives, they ought to put them away by legal divorce; their not doing so, but retaining them, though in their hearts hated by them, and taking in with them other strange wives, whom they more loved, was a great injury, a violence done to them and to God's law, whether it be interpreted a violence covered with their garment, i. e. with a pretence; or violence covering their garment and manifest to all. Then, according to that interpretation, which as we have seen, the Chaldee and Others follow, viz. If he hate her, let him put her away, these will thus follow; For will he (or can he) cover his iniquity in taking another strange wife, by his retaining still his former Israelitish wife? i. e. let him not deal falsely with her, and think it enough thus to cover his inward hatred of her, by making a shew of respect by retaining her, whereas his taking a strange wife with her, argues that in his heart he hates her; or according to ^d Others, it is a violence or injury that will not be hid, but appear to all, as any thing that is above his garment. Is it at all meet, saith R. Solomon, that thou spread thy garment over her to retain her for a wife, when violence or injury covereth this garment, (viz. under that pretence of retaining her, thou dost a continual wrong to her) hating her in thy heart, and always vexing and afflicting her? for so, I suppose, R. Solomon's words must be read interrogatively, or else they will make no clear sense. [In whose words Figuro seems to mistake הוֹגָאָה Hogaata instead of הוֹגָנָה Hoganat, rendring, Thou hast laboured, &c. for Is it meet?]

In a manuscript copy of the same R. Solomon we have another exposition, which in the ordinary printed copies we find not, viz. That he that putteth away his wife, draweth a covering of violence over his other garments to himself; agreeable to that expression, Hab. ii. 17. The violence of Lebanon shall cover thee: the end will be, that the violence done to her shall be revenged on him; his meaning seems to be, he makes himself guilty of violence, which God will revenge. But this is to be applied to that other rendring of the preceding words, viz. he bateth putting away, which (as we have seen) others of the Jews also follow, who yet as concerning these words, scarce give us enough, whereby to discern what they thought of the meaning of them, as particularly R. Aben Ezra, who hath no more than only these words, He bateth him that putteth away his wife that is clean, and he bateth him that covereth, or God seeth his violence, or injuriousness, which is in secret. By which words all that we can see of his meaning is, that by covering violence with his garment, is meant harbouring in secret hatred of his wife, which God seeth under what pretence soever covered, and hateth it. R. Tanchum also having declared for the meaning of the words, what we have seen, as applicable to the other rendring of the former words, doth not add any other as particularly applicable to this rendring, except out of his explaining them thus, "That he hateth putting away, or divorce, in this kind, that a daughter of Israel should be put away for the daughter of a stranger's sake, i. e. that he might take in her room a strange heathenish wife;" we may pick out this meaning, that the putting away an Israelitish wife for that reason is called a covering violence with his garment. All therefore that I can say is that the Jewish Expositors in giving the meaning of these words, are (as we said) somewhat perplex and obscure. Let us see if the Christians speak more plainly.

They that render as Ours in the Text, or to that purpose, for the Lord saith he bateth putting away; for one (or and, or but be) covereth violence with his garment, must make this the meaning, that what he doth is hateful, though he hath for a covering or pretence, that the law permitted to put away his wife, whom he did not like. For though God, to prevent greater mischief of cruelty and polygamy, did permit, or rather leave unpunished by the politick magistrate the doing so, yet for all that, it was still hateful in his eyes, really violence and iniquity, however, he might cover it with that cloak of permission in the law. And so if it be read (as in our Margin) if he bate her, put her away, to the same meaning follows, yet the use of this permission is only a covering of violence with a politick coverture; and not a thing pleasing to God. Or as Others, and let him cover violence with his garment, i. e. with a bill of divorce, which is likened to a garment, because as a garment defends the body from the injury of weather, and covers the shame; so that served to defend her, that was put away, from that cruelty, or hard usage which she should find, if retained; and from that contumely and disgrace, which she would otherwise be obnoxious too: and therefore Some look on the putting their wives away, without that covering of a bill of divorce, as the violence or injury here meant.

^a R. Tanchum, and see Ab. Ezra.^y See R. Solomon, Michal Yophi, and Stokes.^z See Tarn.^d R.

D. Kimchi, R. Tanchum.

^b R. Solomon, Abarb.^c Pet. Fig.^d Abarb.

From what hath been said will easily result what Calvin takes to be the import of these words, That God doth not in them shew any approbation of divorce, yet that seeing he had connived at it in his law, it would be a less fault than the taking in strange illegal idolatrous wives with their lawful Israelitish wives. And the same meaning they seem to aim at, who by violence understand the Israelitish wife retained for a cover, though hated and abused, and having another taken in above her; though Calvin thinks that a very forced interpretation. To these may be added, because they follow the same order in construction of the words, such who yet give a far different meaning of the phrase, by taking the preposition by Al in its most usual signification for upon or above, and so render the words as a proverbial speech, and he hideth violence upon his garment, i. e. though he pretend the liberty of the law in divorcing his wife, yet his doing so is a manifest violence or injury, no more to be hid than what a man bears or holds on the outside of his garment. But this will be much the same meaning which they give, who clean differently order the words in the construction, which, as we have seen, the Vulgar Latin and Others do, rendring, but violence shall cover his garment, i. e. for all his bill of divorce, it is still open violence and an injury, which will not, or cannot be concealed: or, taking with Others violence or iniquity for the punishment of violence; for all that, the punishment of his violence or injury done to his wife, shall be made conspicuous to all, both the fault and the punishment shall cover (or be overspread over) his garment, and his body too (as Jerome by the garment understands the body, which is as the garment of the soul;) and make him infamous to all. Others, the iniquity of his wife (made known by his divorcing her) shall cover his garment, defend him from that infamy which his wife did asperse him with.

This exposition seems not much to the purpose; as neither that of theirs, who would have it, If he bate her, put her away, saith the Lord, who covereth violence as with his garment, by permitting to put her away with a bill of divorce. Lud. de Dieu, having considered these words, and asserted this construction of them, and violence (or wrong) covereth (or hath covered) his garment, giveth as his opinion for the meaning of them, "That God here reproveth them, for that, whereas they with their garment ought to have covered their wives; violence or wrong did cover their garment, while they did treacherously hate their wives, and put away those whom they hated, that they might marry strange wives: or else, that by these words, violence covereth his garment, is denoted the filthiness of adultery, wherewith he was wholly covered, according as the garment spotted by the flesh is taken, Jude, ver. 23." To which his meaning he maketh way, by observing, That in matters concerning wedlock, the name of garment is used for fidelity and conjugal protection, as Ezek. xvi. 8. I spread my skirt over thee, &c. and Ruth iii. 9. Spread thy skirt over thy handmaid: and so concerning the use of the marriage bed, is used the expression, To discover the skirt of the garment, Deut. xxii. 30.

In all this variety presented to the readers view, he may judge what meaning will best satisfy him, and seem to give the fullest sense of the words. For my part I must profess myself not fully satisfied with any of them, and am of opinion, that by this figurative and perhaps proverbial expression, (which then when uttered was well understood, though not so at this distance of time) was something meant, which none of our Expositors give: concerning which though I have nothing confidently to affirm, yet I shall make bold to propose a conjecture, which I suppose will, as concerning the use of the words, be easily made probable. The conjecture is this, that by the words, taking that construction of them which we have seen Abraham Aben Ezra, and Rabbi Tanchum to afford, and which seems to be among all that are given the plainest, viz. He bated putting away, and he hateth to cover (or rather to put, or that one should put as a covering, or superinduce) violence over his garment; is meant the superinducing or marrying an illegitimate wife, over (or with, or above) his legitimate first wife. So that by violence may be signified a second wife, with wrong to the former taken in

^c Deut. xxiv. 1, &c. ^f See Jun. Trem. Pisc. Bishop Hall. ^g Dutch Notes, Diodati. ^h Brennius.
ⁱ Vatab. ^k And see Drus. in marg. ^l Oecolamp. ^m Pct. à Fig. ⁿ Menoch. Chr. à Castro's Paraph.
^o Ribér. ^p Tirin. ^q See Chr. à Castro. ^r Ibid.

in with her, and by his garment, his former wife lawfully taken. For making which use of the words probable, to begin first with the last word, we may observe, besides what hath been already mentioned of the use, if not of the very word, yet of another of like signification in matter of wedlock, that which (according to the simplest exposition of the words) is by Abimelech said, Gen. xx. 16. That Abraham was to Sarah his wife a covering of the eyes, i. e. saith the Chaldee, a covering of honour. And by like reason that the husband may be said to be to the wife a covering of the eyes, to keep her from looking after others, or others from looking after her, may the wife be said, to be to the husband a covering of the eyes, to keep him from looking after any woman but her. If this be not enough to prove such accommodation to man and wife of words signifying covering or garment, in the language of those times; yet if one Eastern language may serve for illustrating and giving testimony to the expressions of another of so nigh affinity to it, that they may be accounted almost one, and one but a dialect of the other, as the Arabick is to the Hebrew, so esteemed by the Jewish Writers, and therefore usually had recourse to for finding out the use and signification of Hebrew words, where any doubt or difficulty occurs; then here will the Arabick tongue help us, and teach us to pronounce boldly of such words, as signify a garment or covering, that they are applied to signify man or wife respectively. So saith a learned Grammarian, that حلة Hollah, which signifies an upper garment or robe, is used to denote a wife; and so likewise لباس Lebas (which answers to the Hebrew word לבוש Lebush here used) to denote either the husband or wife respectively; and he cites a testimony out of the Alcoran it self, (wherein he that compiled it endeavours very often to imitate Scripture expressions:) as if God should say to the men, هن لباس لكم وانتم لباس لهن Honna lebas lacem, waantom lebas labonna, they, i. e. your wives, are a garment to you, and you are a garment to them. And why might not this figurative signification also be allowed anciently, to this and like words in the Hebrew tongue, from which the Arabick might borrow it? And if by his garment here be understood his wife, 'twill easily be thought, that by violence or wrong, may be denoted another strange wife, with open injury taken in with, or above her. The name proper for such a superinducted wife, is in the same Arabick language of nigh signification to it, which is ضرة Darrab, which, as other nouns from the same root, signifies hurt, affliction, oppression, force, and the like; as ^u also in the Hebrew tongue, in which such a wife is called צרה Tsarah, one that afflicteth, is enemy to, or doth injure, and oppresses the other. Whence in the law is forbidden to take one wife to another, לצרר Litzror, to vex her, Levit. xviii.

18. Now that the noun signifying violence or wrong, or oppression, should in the abstract be taken for one that doth violence or wrong, is no marvel, it being very usual to put nouns signifying goodness or badness, or the like, in the abstract, for such as are eminent in those kinds good or bad, profitable or hurtful: and so violence for a wife, that will certainly do wrong or violence; or by taking of which, violence or wrong is necessarily done to the former wife; with more reason, I suppose (though much the like) than ^w Some by violence take to be meant the former wife violently retained, and not dismissed, that she might be married by another. And if garment may be used for a wife, then the verb signifying to cover, or put on a garment, (as כסו Cissab here) may by the same reason be well used for the taking a wife. And these things being allowed (as I know not why they should not be) as to the signification of the words, then will the meaning which we have given be plain, as to the reading of the foregoing words, which is the Text of our Translation, For the Lord saith he hateth putting away, and for a man to take a strange (a wrongful injurious) wife, above (or with) his lawful former wife. For the particle ל Al is ^x noted to signify as well ל im, i. e. with, as over or above, the sense will be all one: and as to the marginal reading it will well agree with that also thus, If he hate her, let him put her away: he may have some colour from the permission of the law so to do, but he doth not that, but retaining her, though he hates her, takes over her, or together with her, another strange idolatrous injurious wife, which is a greater wrong and violence offered to her: or, but by him another wrongful wife is taken with or above his former legal wife; to fit it to that construction, violence covereth, &c.

Another meaning might be, according to the same notion, given agreeable to that construction, let him put her away, and cover the wrong towards, or against, his wife, called his garment, viz. by a bill of divorce; so that ל Al may signify towards or against.

The same meaning will be easily applied to such other renderings, as are given and warranted by the scope of the place, as coming fully home to it, which, from the 10th verse to these inclusively, is a reproof of the Jews of that time, for their injury done to their lawful Israelitish wives, by either illegally putting them away, that they might take the daughters of a strange God; or else if they did retain them, yet secretly hating them, and taking in above them such strange idolatrous wives, whom, with manifest injury to their former, they did shew more affection to, and make, as it were, mistresses over them. And this the Jews think to be all that is meant, accounting both divorce, and taking more Israelitish wives, not to be (for all that is said) any way prohibited, or displeasing to God. But to us learning from ^z Christ the true import

^y Ebn Athir in his Dictionary.
R. D. Kimchi and R. Panchum.

¹ Cap. 2.

^u Morphed in לצר.

^w Oecolamp.

^x Abu Walid.

^y See

^z Mat. v. 30, 31. and xix. 3, &c. Luke xvi.

port of the Scriptures, it will be more absolutely a prohibition from God, both of the one and the other, viz. both divorce and polygamy; which having shewed how hateful it is to him, he concludes with a repetition of his injunction or caveat given in the foregoing verse, Therefore take heed to your spirit, that you deal not treacherously: take heed to your selves as you love your souls, and the preservation of your spirits, that ye offend not by indulging to your unbridled lusts in either of these kinds, and prevaricate against the sacred tie of wedlock, by God instituted for the joining one to one, in an indissoluble knot of affection in legal manner. And this till some plainer way be shewn we embrace, as the fullest and properest meaning of this verse, it being agreeable both to the construction and signification of the words, and manifest scope of the place.

17. ¶ Ye have wearied the Lord with your words: yet ye say, Wherein have we wearied him? when ye say, Every one that doth evil, is good in the sight of the Lord, and he delighteth in them; or where is the God of judgment?

Ye have wearied the Lord with your words, &c.] A Jewish^a Doctor notes this to be another section, and the things therein spoken to belong to the time to come, and so^b some Others make it the beginning of a new chapter, as not having dependence on the preceding words, but referring rather to what follows in the next chapter, in which is answer to the doubts they raise, and a vindication of God's justice, which they seem here to call in question: yet may there well enough be a connexion made between them and the preceding words too, if we look on them as a defence of their obstinacy in not hearkning to God, or the Prophet in his name, reproving them for such faults as have been hitherto mentioned; for that^c there seemed to them no such care taken by God of what men did, when they saw those that did otherwise than he commanded, yea more plainly wicked and disobedient, to prosper as much or more than Others, that made more conscience of their ways, and therefore there was no necessity to them of amending their ways, or ceasing to do what they did. Or as Abarbinel makes the transition from the former words to these, that, after he had reproved them for their evil deeds, both priests and people, he here proceeds to reprove them for their words and thoughts, which were even worse and more wicked than their deeds; in that the wicked ones of that generation did return in answer to the reproofs of the Prophet, There is neither judgment nor judge, God hath left the earth. His reproof of them, therefore, for this he gives, saying, Ye have wearied the Lord with your words. Here is by several of the^d Jews noted (as well as by Others) that that is spoken figuratively according to the language of men, or in such as is passable among men, but cannot be properly said of God, who cannot be wearied. It denotes that their words were such as would weary any man in authority, and provoke him to anger, and so did provoke God to deal so with them, as that by the effects they might judge him to be weary of hearing from them such words, and could no longer endure them: which is that which the Greek expresses by rendring it, who have provoked the Lord to wrath. Rabbi Tanchum thus expounds it, Ye have caused a restraint of his (care and) providence, or caused him to withhold his providence from ordering your affairs, by doing such things as he cannot bear, according to what is said, I cannot away with it, &c. Isaiab i. 13. and again, I am weary to bear them, ver. 14. Abarbinel thinks there is no necessity of making any^e metaphor or figure in this speech, but that it may be understood, not that God was wearied by their words, but that they in saying what they did, did ascribe to him weariness and impotency, and defect in his power and providence: for if he did not know what wicked men did, or did not regard it, or would not, or could not hinder or punish it, this would argue him weary, impotent, and deficient. Which of the two ways of expounding this word we take, will not be much material, nor make any difference in the sense or coherence with the following words. But there is no reason to depart from the first and more followed way.

The Prophet thus reproving them as faulty in this kind, they are represented, as impudently denying themselves so to be, or to have spoken any words, that should be so offensive, Yet ye say, wherein have we wearied him? (or according to the other way, whereby have we attributed to him weariness or impotency?) Or if we interpret the words as Others to include a supposition of what he knowing their evil thoughts, saw they would be apt to say, If ye shall say, Wherein, &c. He gives them an answer in which he declares what it was they said, or thought to the affronting of God, and highly provoking him, when ye say, Every one that doth evil is good in the sight of the Lord, and he delighteth in them, or, where is the God of judgment? It is easily supposed, though not express, that they, seeing the prosperous condition of some openly wicked men, not only of the idolatrous nations, as Some would have it, but among themselves also, they being^f preferred in dignity above Others, and flourishing more than themselves, who in their own conceits, were much better deserving; took thence occasion of uttering these blasphemous words, contrary to what the Prophets affirmed concerning God's justice and judgments on sinners, thus retorting, and contradicting them, "Is it not certainly, as you say, but on the contrary, such as do evil are good in the sight of the Lord, and he delighteth in them, it so appears by their prospering; and where then is the judgment of" that

^a Ab Ezra. ^b See Lyra, and Ch. à Castro. ^c See Tarnov. ^d Ab. Ezra, and R. D. Kimchi. ^e Munst.

^f Hierom. ^g Grot. ^h R. Tanchum.

“ that just Judge, that you tell us of? which “ yet R. Tanchum thinks not to imply that “ they utterly denied the being of such a “ Judge, (for then it would not have been “ added, And where is, &c.) but spoke by “ way of contradiction to what they heard “ from the Prophets, as a proof of God’s “ slow proceeding in his ordering and dis“ posing of things. And in giving this sense,
“ he takes the particle ו O, or, to be, as if “ it were, the copulative ו Ve, and.” By Others, he saith, the meaning is thus given, as if they did say, thus or thus; sometimes, every one that doth evil is good in the sight of God, and he delighteth in them; at other times, where is the God of judgment? and by Others,
If it be not so as we say, where then is the God of judgment? In these ways of exposition by him given, is comprehended most of what is said by other Expositors ancient and modern, they following the same way in construction of the words. But a late learned¹ man thinketh it more convenient and agreeable to the nice rules of Grammar, to render the former words, when ye say every one that^k maketh evil, (or, the evil) to be good, i. e. with him that saith of evil, or of him that is evil, that it, or he, is good in the sight of God; God is delighted; or, he that so saith is acceptable to God. But this doth not make much difference, as to the scope or intent of what blasphemy they are charged with: viz. that they should make God a favourer of wicked persons. He differs from Others likewise in his opinion, concerning the rendring of that particle ו O, which is rendred or (and R. Tanchum would have rendred And, as he saith it elsewhere signifies, viz. ¹ Levit. iv. 24, 28.) and would have it to be taken for a particle of exclamation, O; and so that and the following words to be the words of the Prophet, admiring the patience of God, who so patiently bears with so great impiety, and doth not punish this their blasphemy. But though in his Notes on Isaiah xxvii. 4. he make it probable that this particle may sometimes so signify, yet whether it ought here so to be used (especially, making, as he doth, the following words, where is the God of judgment? to be the Prophet’s words) may seem questionable, inasmuch as then the Prophet would seem guilty in the same kind that those whom he reproves were; viz. in questioning God’s justice, as shewing favour to wicked men, they did it because God seemed in their eyes to favour others more wicked than themselves, more than he did them; he should do but much the same, because God so much favoured, or bare with them. But if any will have it so rendred, I should rather think the following words should still be the words of those wicked men, as Others take them to be;
and then the sense will be but the same, as if it were rendred or, or and, only with a little more vehemency; and either a denying or complaining of the slowness of God’s justice:
they thus (probably, as we said, in defence of their own obstinacy in persevering in those evil ways, for which the Prophets reproved them,) ^m arguing, “ What need we fear, though we “ go on in such courses, as you reprove us “ for? do we not see those, that do that,

“ which you call evil, prosper? so that we “ may well conclude, either that their doings “ are well liked of by God; or else, if it be “ not so, where is the God of judgment? sure “ either there is no such, (as Abarbinel notes
“ this way of speaking to denote the not being “ of a thing;) or else he is very negligent and “ slow in his executing judgment: else why “ doth he suffer so long such things, and not “ punish them?” (so those scoffers, ² Peter iii. 4. where is the promise of his coming?) so intimating, that from the ill ordering of things in distributing of justice, ^a they thought either that God saw the evil things that were done, and was not displeased with them: or else did not see them, nor regarded them, and so was not a God of judgment. Such impious sayings of theirs he shews that God was highly offended at, for their undertaking to be judges of the seasons and circumstances, which he hath reserved the^o judgment of to his own knowledge and power, and to subject the depths of his judgments to their own shallow reason; and with this reproof of them is this chapter concluded. But out of his great condescension in the next chapter, he returns such an answer to these their causeless objections, as may teach them to discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not; as he speaks in the 18th verse of that chapter.

Grotius interprets what is rendred, ye have wearied, &c. by ye will weary, &c. and when ye say, by in that ye will say, &c. viz. so as to be a foretelling of their behaviour in that interval, that they should now be without Prophets and miracles for many years, between the time that this was spoken, and the coming of that messenger and Lord, in the next chapter, ver. 1. spoken of. And it is but reason, and agreeable to the words, that we should take in, together with what the Jews had done, since their return into their country, and with what at present they did, all that they should do in that time, God foresaw what they would say or do, as already said or done. But to pass by all that was in that time done, and to look on the words, as reporting by way of prophecy what is now by them done in their present dispersion, after the real completion of these prophecies, as some^p Jews do, (according to what R. Tanchum thinks convenient, both here and chap. iii. 14.) is wholly to elude this prophecy; as then spoken, and to make void all that we believe, and all that the history of the times testifies of the completion of it, by the coming of Christ, and the destruction of the Jews in the following words threatned, and to persuade us to look after that, which they vainly do, as if Christ were not yet come, but we were to look for another, to shut our eyes

VOL. I.

S s

¹ Lud. de Dieu.
^p R. Tanch.
^k Compare Isaiah v. 20.
¹ See Abu Walid in 18.
^m Tarnov.
ⁿ Abarb.
^o Grot.

eyes against what hath been, and to look for what shall never be, to take off the Prophets words from the times that they concerned, and apply them to such as began not till all that he spake was manifestly fulfilled, so making by a perverse method the end to be the beginning. Though they be now guilty of the same sin that the men of that generation then were, yet are not they the men then particularly spoken of and designed.

CHAP. III.

VERSE I. Behold I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple: even the messenger of the covenant whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts.

BEHOLD I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me, &c.] How these words depend on those foregoing, with which the former chapter is concluded, hath been already intimated, viz. that here is an answer given to that blasphemous question of those perverse ones of that time, who from what they saw of the prosperity and flourishing condition of such whom they looked on as deserving other usage, took thence occasion of questioning God's justice; God assuring, that there should come a time, wherein they should perceive that he was no favourer of wicked men, or their practices; a time, wherein he would by his executing his just judgment on them, shew that he took due notice all along of what was done by them, though he might seem for a while to connive at it; and that time should be at the coming of a righteous King, whom he should raise up to set things in order, viz. the King Messiah: as I choose to utter in the words of a Jewish Expositor, that so it may appear, even by confession of his enemies, That the words are a most illustrious prophecy of Christ, by which this last of Prophets before Christ's coming, assured them of, and warned them to expect his coming: for which to prepare them, they should have no more Prophets sent them, till a Messenger, which should immediately before his coming, appear to prepare his way before him. How this Prophecy was in its due time fulfilled, the history of the gospel clearly and fully shews: so that there is nothing in the cavils of the Jews, or any other that acknowledge not the truth thereof, that can raise to us any doubt, as to the scope and true meaning of the whole; though in the explaining of the particular words may be some difference; which as far as may seem convenient, we shall take notice of, in going them over as they lie in order.

Behold [saith God] I will send.] Others translate, I do send, as more agreeable to the letter; and so also is it recited in the New Testament; as, Mat. xi. 10. Mark i. 2. Luke vii. 27. Because the thing, though not done, or in present doing, when these words were spoken, yet was assuredly to be done; and was therefore spoken of in the present tense. But Ours, in regard that it was after a time to be fulfilled, expresses it not unfitly in the future, I will send, as agreeable to the sense, and not disagreeable to the letter, which will well enough bear either; seeing the participle, as is here שולח Sholeach, sending (Behold I sending, i. e. am sending, or will send) is frequently used to denote the present tense, but sometimes the future also.

מלאכי Malachi.] Which signifies either my angel, or my messenger, the word signifying both an angel and a messenger, an angel because a messenger, agreeable to the root of the word, of which see chap. i. 1. and ii. 7. from which our Prophet had his name Malachi: it is here rightly rendred my messenger.

My messenger.] Who is designed by this title we Christians cannot doubt, it being in those forecited places in the gospel, expressly attributed to John the Baptist: and he in two of them, viz. Matthew and Luke, is plainly said by Christ himself to be him of whom this was written. But the unbelieving Jews denying Christ, whose messenger this was to be, are at a loss likewise concerning this messenger: and by disagreeing among themselves so far as they do, and by the absurdity of what they affirm, shew that they are either all ignorant of the truth, or will none of them confess it, as by a brief view of them we may see. R. Solomon Jarchi interprets it (if Abarbinel give us the meaning aright) of the angel of death, who shall take the wicked out of this life to be sent into hell torments. In the copies of him that we have, are no such words expressed, but only My messenger, to take out of the way, or cut off the wicked. מלאכי לבקר את הרשעים, and so accordingly interprets the angel of the covenant, an angel that shall revenge the [breach of the] covenant. Which exposition of his so understood, the same Abarbinel thinks, though true in the general (that however the wicked here may prosper, yet after death vengeance shall certainly be taken on them) yet not to agree to this place, where is a prophecy of a signal particular day, and not that which is continually and necessarily seen, and always was, and will be so, without any new remark to be ushered in with a Behold, as of a new notorious thing: as is likewise intimated to be pointed out here in what follows, But who may abide the day of his coming, &c. And he shall purify the sons of Levi, &c. which are not things properly and peculiarly denoting the state of souls after death.

Aben Ezra saith that it is probable, that by this messenger is meant Messiah the son of Joseph. But it is so far from being probable so to be, that it is most certain it is not so. For what is that Messiah the son of Joseph, but a mere figment of their own brain, whom they suppose to be of the tribe of Ephraim, on whom they may fasten those prophecies, which foretel of the sufferings of Christ, that so they may take them off from Messiah the son son of David, to whom they will have none but glorious and triumphant things to pertain? as if they could not belong to one person, who through^d sufferings should enter into his glory. And this they do without any ground or warrant from Scripture, only that they may deny our Christ to be the true and only Messiah, by the Prophets spoken of: so that to us, who believe the gospel, this signifies nothing, nor hath in it any thing that may make it probable, so far as in this place to be embraced by others of their own profession. R. D. Kimchi thinks that by this messenger is meant an angel from heaven; "If, saith he, ye ask concerning the judgment of the wicked in this world, there shall come a time that you shall see, and then he will draw near to you for judgment to consume the wicked that are among you: and that shall be the day when I will send my angel, and he shall prepare (or clear) the way before me, and he shall be an angel from heaven, as it is written, Behold, I send my angel before thee to keep thee in the way, &c. Exod. xxiii. 20. and he shall clear the way before me: this shall be in the gathering (or restoring) the captivity, so as that they shall not find in their way any adversary, or evil occurrent." This exposition of his appears, not to have pleased Abarbinel, by his taking no notice of it, when yet of his exposition of the other words he doth; and by that he himself gives another far different from that or the others that have been mentioned: which is, "That by this messenger is meant the Prophet himself that here utters these words from God, whose name is the same word here used, viz. מלאכי Malachi, and being interpreted signifies, my angel, or my messenger:" which cannot but seem strange to any, that the Prophet speaking of things to come, should be thought to prophesy of himself. But, to put the best colour he can upon his opinion, he would persuade men, that Interpreters are out in interpreting these words wholly of the time to come, but that they are to be understood partly of what was at present, partly of what was to come, partly of what was past: of what was present, Behold I send Malachi my Prophet; of what was to come, The Lord whom ye seek shall suddenly come, viz. the Shedinah, or majestic glorious presence; of what was past, And the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in (viz. the King of Persia) hath already come: as if, to stop their murmurings by reason of the prosperity of the wicked, he had now sent the Prophet Malachi to tell them what punishment is determined for those wicked hereafter; (as in the following part of the chapter he will shew) and so to clear the way before him by solving their question, Where is the God of judgment? and seeing they murmured, because the Shedinah, or glorious presence did not appear in the temple they had now built; (in which were wanting the Shedinah, and glory, and fire from heaven, and answer by Urim and Thummim, which were in the former temple:) and objected that God's providence was removed from them, and all things were ill ordered; therefore to assure them, that the Shedinah should assuredly come again into the temple that should hereafter be built, he saith, And the Lord whom ye seek shall suddenly come into his temple, there shall his glory and majestic presence dwell, even that Lord which they now sought in their murmurings. And for a proof of this, and that this promise should certainly be performed, he instanceth in what they had already seen in what concerned the King of Persia, who was the Lord's angel, or messenger, and Messiah or anointed, for destroying of Babylon, and bringing back the dispersed of the Jews to Jerusalem, according to what Esay prophesied of him, and made with them a covenant of peace: of whom therefore he saith, And the messenger of the covenant whom ye delight in, i. e. to honour and love him, do you not see, that he came according as was promised to you? so shall the Lord, whom ye seek, come suddenly and unawares, in the time of redemption and gathering of the captivity, &c.

This is his meaning, as far as I can make it out in his Commentary on this place; and I suppose I have faithfully given it, and the giving of it is a sufficient confutation of it: so doth he distract the construction of the words, so blend and intermingle them with strange notions; that as he rejects the opinions of others of his own profession, so I suppose none of them will embrace this of his. All that we can gather from this, or any yet named, is, that they, not willing to see or acknowledge the truth, which the Christians instructed by the gospel embrace, do strive to go as far from it as they can; mean while taking such different ways, and disagreeing among themselves, as that it is manifest they had no one probable thing to insist on.

There is yet another opinion among them, (which Abarbinel glanceth on for a reserve, as a possible one, if the other of his own be not thought sufficient, although he doth not so apply it as others do) and that perhaps much ancienter than any of these we have yet seen; and such as by a right interpretation of the words, though not according to their meaning, might be reconciled to the truth. And that is, "That by this messenger is meant he who, chap. iv. 5. is called Eliab, whom some of them would have to be Eliab the Tishbite in person: Others, not necessarily so, but some great Prophet like him in degree, and therefore called by his name." So the often cited R. Tanchum reports their opinion on that place, chap. iv. where will be occasion to speak again of it. That this opinion among them was ancient we learn, not only out of their own records, but out of the gospel also, Mat. xvii. 10. where we hear the Disciples asking Christ, Why then say the Scribes that Eliab must first come? their opinion then was, that before Christ Elias ought to come, as a messenger and forerunner: and Christ doth not say they were out in expecting such a one, as was to be looked on as Elias; but in this that they

^d Luke xxiv. 26.

^e See Note on Micah ii. 13.

they did not acknowledge him that was under that name expected to be already come, saying, Elias was truly first to come: but that indeed he was already come, and they knew him not, &c. By which answer his Disciples understood, that he spake unto them of John the Baptist, of whom also he had before told them, and the whole people, that he was he of whom it is written, Behold I send my messenger before thy face, &c. Mat. xi. 10. and the Elias which was for to come. To those Jews, therefore, who are of the last opinion mentioned, we have from those words of our Saviour a ready answer, and to any objection that they shall raise from it, against their believing this prophecy to be fulfilled, and the Messiah to be come. Whereas ^f Some of them, making it an argument in that kind, say, that this prophecy is not fulfilled, because Elias is not in person come, and therefore neither the Messias; we refer them for answer to those of their own sect, who confess that neither these, nor those other words of Malachi, nor any other prophecy, require that Elias should come in person, but only some great Prophet or prophetic man in degree like to Elias. And then to these, if they say that not any such hath yet appeared, we say, Yes, there hath, and that John the Baptist was he, for he came before the Lord in the spirit and power of Elias, to make ready a people prepared for the Lord, Luke i. 17. He was by all that then lived and beheld his works, counted and holden for a Prophet, Mat. xiv. 5. and xxi. 26. yea, he was more than a Prophet, than whom there was not a greater risen among them that were born of women, Mat. xi. 9, 11. so great, that they doubted whether he were not the Messiah himself.

What was required from this messenger, and from him that was promised under the name of Elias, viz. that he should prepare the way for the Lord, he did fully make good by preaching repentance, Mat. iii. 2. by baptizing unto repentance, ver. 11. by bearing witness to Christ, and pointing him out to the people, that they might believe on him, John i. 29, &c. if there be any thing in that ancient tradition of theirs, that Eliab was to prepare the Messiah to his office; that may be said to have been fulfilled by John's baptizing Christ before he began to preach, at which baptizing the Holy Ghost descended on him visibly from heaven. But this is besides the expression of the Scripture, and so not to the present words. John then being such as to his person, and so having performed that office, for which it is said here that he should be sent, what can it be but mere obstinacy to deny him to be the Lord's messenger here prophesied of? and what can they expect in any, which was not in him found?

From the time of this prophecy till the time of its completion by the Lord's sending him, was their opinion true; that such a one, who for his excellency and the spirit with which he was to be endowed, might be called Eliab, was to come as a messenger and a forerunner of the Messiah, to prepare his way before him: but since these things have been all fulfilled, still by virtue of the same prophecy, to expect another, denying him, is great perverseness. According to their own rule, ^h that prophecies and promises of God are at their manifestation, to be discerned and acknowledged as fulfilled, they ought so to discern and acknowledge this, and could not but so do, did they not willingly shut their eyes, because they will not accept of Christ. God be thanked, who hath opened our eyes by the gospel, so as to acknowledge this messenger, who by what is therein declared, is evidently approved to be John Baptist. He it is, without doubt, of whom he here saith, my messenger. So our Translation renders it, others rendring my angel. The word is indeed that which is used to signify an angel, but as well likewise any other messenger or ambassador; (from a root that signifies to send;) and that signification of messenger is by our Translators well chosen to put in this place, as taking away or preventing those needless questions, which from rendring it an angel, might be raised: as, How John was an angel? or, Why called so? which is ⁱ reported anciently to have given occasion, to some, of an erroneous opinion, that he was not only so by office, but by nature also.

The word פִּנְנָה Pinnah, which Ours and Others (agreeably also to what is in the gospels) render prepare, is from a root Panah, that hath also the signification of looking on, and is therefore by the Greek in this place, according to that, rendred ἐπισκέψεται, shall look on; and so by the printed Arabick, which therein follows them. Which certainly cannot be so agreeable to the meaning, except we extend it so far as to understand by it, to look to it, so as that it be as it should be, which then will be the same with preparing. But the word in that form that it is here, is not used for to look and consider, or the like; but to clear and make clean, to prepare by removing what is amiss or offensive: so likewise used Isaiah xl. 3. Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight a high way: which words are likewise applied to the same John Baptist's office here spoken of, Mat. iii. 3. and Mark i. 3. and Luke iii. 4. and he shewed to make good what is thereby required, by calling to repentance, and by preaching the baptism of repentance, for putting away those sins which might hinder them from receiving Christ, and so were obstacles in his way. And in that place it is rendred by the Greek also prepare, and so probably they might here do.

Having observed these words to be cited by the Evangelists, we cannot but take notice that in them they are cited something differently from what is read here: for whereas here he saith, my messenger, and before me, or my face, in the first person, as speaking of himself; there it is still said before thy face, and last chapter. ⁱ See Ribera.

^f Trypho in Justin. Martyr, p. 208. Edit. Comel. 1593.

^g In the same place.

^h Maimon. in Yad, the and thy way before thee, as speaking to, and of another. Which hath caused some question to be made, which of the persons of the Trinity here speaks, whether God the Father, or Christ. But though it be true what ^k Some here observe, that such works of the Trinity, as are external and common to all the persons, and not proper to one, may indifferently be attributed to either; yet the plainest way of expounding these words here seems to be, to look upon them, as spoken here (as well as in the Evangelists) by God the Father concerning Christ; here of him, there expressly to him. And then the saying here, my messenger, before me; and there, thy way, before thee, making the same way to be called God's way here, and ^l Christ's there, affords us an evident proof, that Christ is one God with the Father, ^m and that in Christ God came, and was manifest in the flesh.

For the proving the same, viz. That Christ is one with God the Father, Some ⁿ would take from what is here said, before my face, an argument, thence proving that Christ is called The face of God: but ^o Others observe, that according to the use of the Hebrew Tongue, before my face, is no more than, before me. And therefore our Translators so rendring it, shew, that they thought not in the word my face to be included any argument for proving the Divinity of Christ, on which any great stress ought to be laid: and they that think it, ought to shew ^p how then the words, as here uttered by the Prophet, and as cited in the gospels, may be reconciled. For if by my face be here meant that Christ is the face of God, who then shall be there understood by thy face? who shall be called the face of Christ? It follows,

And the Lord whom ye seek shall suddenly come to his temple, &c.] Who by this Lord is meant is agreed on, on all hands by Christian Interpreters: viz. that it is Christ, whom God hath made both Lord and Christ, Acts ii. 36. and who is Lord over all, ibid. x. 36. ^q by whom all things were made, by whom all things are sustained and governed; who is (as the root of the word imports) the basis and foundation, not of any private family, tribe or kingdom, but of all; by whom are all things, and we by him, 1 Cor. viii. 6. and whose we are also by right of redemption; and so he is Lord of lords, and King of kings, Rev. xvii. 14. and xix. 16. deservedly intitled The Lord.

Among the Jews there are some who understand it more generally of God; so R. Solomon, The God of judgment, R. Aben Ezra, The God of glory; and so Abarbinel, The glorious Name, i. e. the glorious God, whose words may be by a Christian well interpreted also of Christ, though not so by them meant. But others of them more plainly agreeing so far with us, expressly say, he is the King Messiah, so Kimchi; yea ^r בֵּלָא שְׁבַחֵי Bela shaccin, that without doubt it is meant of the Messiah: and so say we, though as to his person, and the right of his title to that appellation of Lord, they will not agree with us. This Lord is described by that epithet, whom ye seek, which may be referred to what is before said, where is the God of judgment? as an answer to that question, and is therefore by ^s Some looked on, as if it were spoken in ill part, as much as to say, whom ye scoffingly seek, saying, Where is he? Why doth he not shew himself? Although it may be (as by many learned men it is) taken; as spoken of a serious expectation, and seeking of the promised Messiah, by many, if not the generality of the people, whom all along from of old they longed and waited for, according as that saying of Jacob, I have waited for thy salvation, O Lord, Gen. xlix. 18. and what we read of Simeon, Luke ii. 25. that he waited for the consolation of Israel, and ver. 38. that Anna spake of him (being brought into the temple) to all them that looked for redemption in Jerusalem, manifestly shews that there ^t was such a seeking, a waiting and longing for the promised Shilo among them by such as seriously wished for it, as well as others did in scoff ask after him, or murmur at his delay.

Of him that was so sought, it is said, as to the circumstance of time, that he should suddenly come, i. e. suddenly after that his messenger had come and prepared the way before, as Christ did after John Baptist's preaching: or suddenly, i. e. unawares, when men should not think on, or be aware of him, as Kimchi takes the word here to signify; the time being not precisely in the Prophets determined, according to what is said in Daniel, The words are closed up and sealed, till the time of the end, chap. xii. 9. Whence perhaps it is that the Jews reckon the Messiah among the things that come ^u unawares, or when men think not of them: and in this sense, as it is here said of his first coming, so it is said of his second coming, which perhaps may be comprehended under this here spoken of, that except they diligently watch for it, it shall come upon them unawares, Luke xxi. 36. suddenly, Mark xiii. 36. in such an hour as they think not, Mat. xxiv. 44. So doubtless shall his last coming at the day of judgment be; which is that alone which the unbelieving Jews, having overslipped the former, here mentioned, without taking notice of it, can now (whatever they vainly promise to themselves, as if this Lord were not at all yet come) farther expect; as farther appears by the circumstance of the place, to which it is here said, He shall come, that is, his temple. However, by his temple, Some ^v have anciently understood Christ's human nature, or body, of which he spake, John ii. 21. or his church; or all faithful believers, who are called likewise the temple of God, 1 Cor. iii. 16. or the like; yet no doubt but here is meant that temple at Jerusalem, built then lately (when these words were spoken)

^k Ribera.
à Castro.
Tarn.

^l See Dr. Hammond on Mat. xi.

^p See Ribera, and Chr. à Castro.

^q John i. 3.

^m 1 Tim. iii. 16.

ⁿ Galatin. Jansen.

^o See Chr.

^r R. Tanchum on chap. iv. 5.

^s Jun. Trem.

^t See Ribera, Chr. à Castro, Parcus.

^u Buxt. Lex. mag. in פסוק.

(spoken) after their return from the Babylonish captivity, which whatever alterations were made in it, was still looked on as one, till the time that it was destroyed by the Romans; and by the Jews called the second temple in respect to that former built by Solomon, and destroyed by the Chaldeans. To this temple it is here said that the Lord (here spoken of) should come; and so did Christ, whom we say to be that Lord: and of his coming to it, and his appearances there at several times, we read: He was there first presented by his mother, Luke ii. 22. there again when he was twelve years old, found sitting among the Doctors, ver. 46. where, in his answer to his mother, who told him that they had sought him for- rowing, he may seem to allude even to this prophecy, How is it that ye sought me? wist ye not that I must be in τοῖς τοῖς Πατρὸς μου, in my Father's house? Was it not foretold that he should come to his temple? Was not that the proper place for him to be in, and for them to look after him in? Several other times we read of his going to it, preaching in it, conducted to it, and received with Hosannas, and Blessed be he that cometh in the name of the Lord: and in it exercising his authority, as Lord of it, in purging it, and vindicating the dignity of it, and driving out thence those that profaned it. Any of these his appearances there, is sufficient to prove, in, and by him to have been made good, that which we take to be the main drift of this expression in this prophecy: viz. that the Lord (Christ or Mes- siah) here spoken of, was to come while the temple (that temple then built) was standing. Which is likewise evidently foretold by the Prophet Haggai, chap. ii. 7. that into it should come the desire of all nations, and it should be filled with glory, yea, that thereby the glory of that latter house should be greater than that of the former, ver. 9. though it were then in their eyes as nothing in comparison of it, ver. 3.

^z By virtue of these signal prophecies it is without question, that those ancient Jews who lived before Christ's coming, did expect that he should come while that temple was stand- ing. And it is evident that old Simeon, to whom it was revealed by the Holy Ghost, that he should not see death till he had seen the Lord's Christ, ^a who came by the Spirit into the temple, when Christ was thither first brought, and taking him in his arms blessed God, and desired of him then to depart in peace, because he had seen his salvation; did so understand it; and that the Lord was now, according to this prophecy, come to his tem- ple: he desired to see no more for the com- pletion of it. And so holy Anna also, who coming in that instant into the temple, gave thanks likewise unto the Lord, and spake of him to all that looked for redemption in Jeru- salem. And what else is proclaimed by all those multitudes, who at his going to the temple, and at his being in it, cried, Hosanna to the son of David, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord, Mat. xxi. 9, 15. but the same, viz. that the Lord was now come to his temple? and so it is witnessed that accord- ing to this Prophecy, and that of Haggai, he was by the Jews of that time expected to come to that temple then in being. And so to us do they together afford an unanswerable argument against the later Jews, all that have lived since that time, that that temple was standing, and deny the Messiah to be yet come, thus; Messiah was to come while the temple was standing, and therefore seeing the temple hath so long since been destroyed, it is mani- fest that he is long since come, and in vain is now by them expected. For what is it else but blasphemously to accuse God speaking by his Prophets of falshood? so poor a shift is it, which is all they have to flee to, to say that there is yet a third temple to be expected, un- der which these prophecies are to be fulfill'd; as that it cannot any way shake our faith, but ought more to confirm it, while we see that they have for so many hundreds of years, above a thousand, expected what they without any ground or warrant from Scripture look for. It cannot without wilful blindness and obstinacy be denied, that the temple here mentioned was that second temple, and more plainly when Haggai looking on, and describing that temple then built, saith expressly, this house; by this house, to understand a house after this (as Abar- binel doth) is such a perverting of words and meaning, as we cannot without loss of our own reason admit of. Yet this is the only salvo that they have, or can have. And this their great Doctor ^b Maimonides seems to make use of, when finding no temple for their yet vainly expected Messias to come to, saith, "That the King Messiah shall hereafter come, "and restore the kingdom of the house of "David to its old former estate, and shall "build a sanctuary or temple, &c. and that "in the same place where formerly it stood." And in that regard perhaps they will have it called his temple (as here it is) and so shift off another argument against the Jews, who deny Christ's divinity, which is by Christian ^d Inter- preters hence usually taken, viz. that because the temple is called his temple, it is thereby made manifest, that he who should come to it as a man, was not only so, but God also; it being proper to God only to have temples, or houses of worship erected, and appropriated to him: and so we know that at Jerusalem to have been dedicated to the only true God. Here therefore it being called Christ's temple, it shews that he is true God, one with the Fa- ther. This argument, though pious and con- clusive to Christians, yet a learned ^e man would not have to be much insisted on, as to the sig- nification of the word היכל Heical, inasmuch as it doth not only signify a temple, or house of worship, but also a palace; and so he thinks the Jews may put it off by saying it signifies only, only, the Messiah shall come to his palace. But I suppose they would not fly to that, I do not find any of them that do.

^a See Grot. &c. on that place out of Nic. Fuller. ^y Mat. xxi. 9. Luke xix. 47. John ii. 14. and xiv. and viii. 2. and oft elsewhere. ^z See Grotius on the place, and lib. 5. de Veritate Rel. Christi. ^a Luke ii. 26, &c. ^b In Yad. lib. ult. cap. 2. ^c המקדש. ^d Vat. Riber. Chr. a Castro. ^e Pet. a Figueiro.

The ordinary Expositors that we have of them (as R. Solomon Jarchi, Aben Ezra, David Kimchi, as likewise R. Tanchum) do not at all meddle with interpreting this word: only Abarbinel (who, as we said, interprets the Lord, not of the Messiah, but of the Shecinah or glorious presence of God, or God himself) explains it, to his היכל Heical, which is Bebeit mikdash, in his sanctuary: by which he will have to be meant הבית הבנוי Habbeit baatid, that house, or temple, which is to come, or shall hereafter be built: or, as in his Commentary on Haggai he calls it, Beit shelishi, the third house. By it then here I doubt not but they all understand a temple properly so called. But however they may otherwise seek to evade the force of this argument (and this I mean of them who confess by the Lord here to be meant the Messias;) whether by saying, it may be called his, because by him built (according to Maimonides) or because he should frequent it, or otherwise; certainly the other argument for proof of his being come, because the temple, to which he was to come, is so long since destroyed, is unanswerable, and their talking of a third temple, without any ground in Scripture, so long and still in vain expected by them, under which this prophecy is to be made good, (as if it were not long since fulfilled, while that second temple was standing, as we are assured that it was) is a mere dream of men choosing to themselves strong delusions. Which left any of theirs by enquiring into it, should discover, they (weary, it appears, or ashamed of the length of the time of their vain expectation, or not knowing how they should satisfy such as should enquire into it; have long since, by a severe way interdicted all such enquiries, by saying תפח רוחם של מחשבי תקציים Tippach rucham (or Atsmam) shel Mechasbebe haketzim, Let them burst (or, breath out their souls) that enquire after the ends (or periods) and terms of time, viz. concerning the coming of the Messiah. And that perhaps may be the cause why their Expositors in this place say so little of it, viz. how, or when, the Lord should come to his temple. Certainly without acknowledging Christ the true Messiah, and him to be come in the flesh, and both God and man, there cannot any thing be said that can give the true meaning, or shew what was requisite for the fulfilling of this prophecy here; and that cited out of Haggai of such affinity with it. And no wonder to see them who willingly and obstinately decline the one only way of manifest truth, to run on in such different tracts of error. It follows in the Text,

Even the messenger of the covenant whom ye delight in.] Where our Translators rendring the copulative ו, which ordinarily signifies and, by even, give us to look on these words as a farther description of the same person who was called the Lord; and that is (as hath been said) Christ Jesus, who though he be one with his Father God eternal, yet humbled himself for men's sakes to be as a Messenger from his Father to them, to declare unto them his will, and to be unto him obedient in all things that he gave him to do. This proves not, that he is not one God with the Father, though as a Son he yielded obedience to him, and performed his work. Here is nothing in this that takes away either ^a unity of essence, or equality of power. So that we need not to depart from this notion of Messenger, or Angel, to render it Prince, as a learned ^b man, by the use of the word in another language ^c, thinks it may be proved in the Hebrew, and here also to signify. It will come but to one pass, he is Prince of the covenant, for the same reason that he is called Messenger, or Angel of it: which is because in him God founded the new covenant of grace, and by him as Mediator of it, administered it; he, not only declaring it, but ratifying it with his own blood, and receiving into it as many as lay hold on him; even that new covenant (of which he is Mediator, Heb. xii. 24.) better than the old, and established on better promises, Heb. viii. 6, 8, &c. spoken of, Jer. xxxi. 31. no more comprehending Jews alone, but Gentiles also. In which regard God saith of him, I will give thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles, &c. Isaiah xlii. 6. in whom he was reconciling the world unto himself, 2 Cor. v. 19.

In this that we say, that it is but the same person who is called both Lord and Messenger, we have most of the Jewish Expositors consenting. So R. Solomon, and Aben Ezra, and Kimchi, and R. Tanchum, and Abarbinel, in a secondary exposition; but yet in this divided among themselves, that ^a Some of them say by both is meant God himself, i. e. God the Father, by Others the Messiah. Against the former is hence an evident proof, that of God the Father it cannot be meant, because a Messenger is necessarily a distinct person from him that sends him. The Lord therefore and Messenger here spoken of, must, as we affirm of Christ, needs be so. As for those who interpret both, as we do, of the Messiah, though much differing from us, as concerning the nature of his person; yet there is no occasion to dispute with them concerning that here, in that they agree, that the person by both titles described is the Messiah. As for Others, who take by the Lord to be meant one, by the Messenger of the covenant, another; so vain and absurd are their fancies, that to name them will be sufficient confutation of them, as not only that uncouth as well as novel opinion of Abarbinel, making it to be the King of Persia, who had sent them home from their Babylonish captivity; but also that of some more ancient, who would have to be meant Eliab, whom they would have to be called by that title, because he always presides at the rite of circumcision,

^a Maimonides, as above, chap. xii. and Talmud Sanhedrin.

^b Polan. lib. 3. c. 10.

^c Lud. de Dieu.

¹ viz. Æthiop.

² R. Solomon, and Ab. Ezra.

cision, the sign of God's covenant with them, which they thus make out, "God seeing his zeal for circumcision, when those of the ten tribes were negligent of it, gave him this privilege as a reward of his zeal, that that sacrament should never be administered, but that he should oversee it, for which cause always at every circumcision they set a chair of state for him, as being Angel, Messenger, or President of the covenant, and so here called." A pretty story, whereby to delude themselves, and amuse the people from further enquiry after the truth, which if it were found only in trivial fabulous books might pass as a fancy, but that it should be quoted by their serious and grave¹ Authors, as a thing pertinent to this place, and grounded on it, cannot but seem as strange, as it is groundless and ridiculous.

What is added, whom ye delight in, shews that with great longing they expected of old his coming, as a time that should bring much cause of joy and rejoicing to them: and what follows as repeated, Behold he shall come (or cometh) saith the Lord of hosts, shews the certainty of the thing, as sure as if it were already done. God engageth both his truth and power in it, he says it, and every word of his is truth, and he that says it, is the Lord of hosts, God of all power, and can and will effect whatsoever he saith.

Behold he cometh] not as Abarbinel (as we have seen) would have it, both or is already come, that so he might apply it to the King of Persia, who made with them a covenant of peace; but יבא yabo, shall certainly come, בזמנו Bizmano, in his time, as Kimchi truly explains it. And not only so, but if we look on the place before named to which he should come, viz. his temple, it will give us necessarily to understand, as to the time too; that he was to come while that temple was yet standing, as Grotius well observes.

And here before we proceed, it will be convenient to take notice what the same learned man suggests to us on the next verse, viz. That Christ's coming, when spoken to, and of the Jews, denotes not only his first manifestation in the flesh, or the temple; but all the time from his first preaching to the destruction of the city of Jerusalem, and of the temple. Otherwise, more distinctly the word is applied to a^m threefold coming of Christ, 1. His coming in the flesh, to be born among men. 2. His coming in judgment for vengeance to his enemies, and deliverance of his servants in this world, as he did come at the destruction of the Jews. 3. At the end of the world, at the day of judgment. And so understanding it as particularly respecting the Jews, we shall easily perceive here a full and satisfactory answer to those murmurers and scoffers of those times, who seeing the prosperity of some wicked men (as it is in the last verse of the preceding chapter) said, every one that doth evil is good in the sight of the Lord, and he delighteth in them, or, where is the God of judgment? though such who impiously question God's justice, deserve no other answer than to feel it, yet in much condescension he here vouchsafes them such an answer as to let them know, that though he doth not presently proceed, as they would have him, but seem to neglect or wink at the doings of wicked men; yet he is not negligent, but in his own appointed time will so order things, as shall make it manifest to all, that he took notice all the while of what was done. This time, as to them, he here expresses to be that coming of Christ, which is in these and the following words described; in which time was his just judgment signally executed before the whole world, as to what concerned their nation: and so the question, why God suffers the wicked, oft, most to flourish? as to them of that nation, the people then by the Prophet spoken to and of, is fully decided by what was in that space of time by him brought to pass, so as to stop the mouth of any other, who shall in like blasphemous manner question his justice; by warning them to leave to him his own time to execute his just judgments, and rather to prepare themselves for that time, which certainly shall come upon them, than in any way to doubt of it.

The things here spoken do more particularly concern the Jews, but are to all, and to us, forⁿ examples, and are written for our admonition, God having several ways of executing his judgments, but proceeding still according to the same rule of justice. They likewise concern rather more general and national impieties, and judgments accordingly executed; yet so, as every particular man may thence take instruction, that none who taketh care of his ways, seeing such as are openly wicked to prosper and flourish, should thence take occasion of murmuring and questioning God's justice, nor any wicked man that prospers in this world, should, because God suffers him so to do, for that justify himself, or think himself good in the sight of the Lord, or that God delighted in him, but be assured that a time will come, when God will execute just judgment on him, however for a time he forbear him, and so deal with him in particular, as he here threatneth to do with the wicked of those times. He hath other ways of coming, besides that here spoken of: to every man, at his death, and after judgment, which though R. Solomon, as we have seen, doth ill in making the prime and literal meaning of this place, as he doth, yet so far he is true, that certainly God will by it come to every man in particular, and then judge and distinguish them according to the things that they have done, not the things that they have enjoyed in this world. His deferring them till then is not a sign of his liking to them, but shall make (if they by repentance prevent it not) for their greater condemnation and misery, and so shall it appear that they are out, who for what they see them here to enjoy shall account them happy. See Luke xvi. 25.

This

¹ R. D. Kimchi, and Abarb. in locum.

^m Dr. Hammond on Mat. xxiv. Note b.

ⁿ 1 Cor. x. 6.

This may seem a digression, as not pertaining to the literal meaning of the words, yet may be not impertinent, in regard that both the present words and other passages after in this chapter, cannot but suggest such consideration of God's just judgment both for private persons, and whole societies of men, to us. That some ° Christians anciently should interpret the word, come, in the first place, of Christ's first coming, and in this second, of his coming to judgment, cannot but seem strange. Doubtless, here is but one and the same coming spoken of, and the repetition of the promise of it, doth but confirm the certainty of it, and that was the first coming of his, then, when these words were spoken, to be expected by the Jews. The words will naturally bear no other sense.

2. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers sope.

But who may abide the day of his coming? &c.] By looking to what precedes in the last verse of the former chapter, and the first of this, the connexion of these words with the former seems thus, The Jews of those times seeing (as they thought) all things out of order then amongst them, the godly oppressed and the wicked exalted, murmured against God's justice, and having had promises from God of one who should set all things to right, as doubting of the truth of those promises, seeing them so long deferred, ask'd, Where is the God of justice? where is the promise of his coming? he answereth them therefore, that he is not negligent of their affairs, nor slack concerning his promise, but what they counted slackness was long-suffering towards them, that they might be prepared for receiving that Lord whom they sought after, that Messenger of his covenant, whose coming they longed to see, as expecting that then all things should go according to their desires, and they should have great cause of rejoicing, in seeing the wicked severely dealt withal, and themselves established in worldly prosperity and pleasure; mean while, not examining themselves how they were fit for such things as they expected. He therefore tells them, that certainly without any failing on his part, that Lord should come at his appointed time; but that before him also should come a Messenger to prepare his way before him, by calling them (that thought best of themselves) to prepare for his coming; for that it should not be so easy to them as they fancied to themselves, without more ado to give them what they expected of worldly enjoyments, and without farther trial to give them what they thought themselves worthy of; but that it should be with great severity, and so as in strict justice to proceed after trial made of all, for good to those who should be found faithful and sincere, and for destruction to those that were otherwise; so that the righteous should not without a difficulty be saved, but for the ungodly and sinners they should not be able to appear. This is that which he saith, but who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth?

Who?] of the wicked, say some: which as it is most true, and the coming of that day shall be to them most terrible and intolerable; yet may the question seem more generally put as concerning all, even the best as well as the wicked, to shew, that the time spoken of shall be full of difficulties, such as will put all to a hard trial, such as will prove them to the uttermost, though the issue thereof shall be indeed for joy and salvation, to those that are found faithful and sincere; even they shall be saved, but so as by fire. For in that day many shall be made white, i. e. tried, saith Kimchi, in the words of Daniel, xii. 10: even the righteous shall pass a hard trial, that they may be purified and made white, though not consumed and destroyed as the wicked: so that even to them the day of his coming should be terrible, though salutary. This that they might expect, and yet among those difficulties find comfort, Christ himself having taken our sins upon him, took on him the cross, that he might enter by it into his kingdom, and shew to his the way that they must also go, if they will enter thereinto, viz. by taking up their cross and following him. True peace and joy he promiseth to them, but not without the preceding trial of troubles, and afflictions, and so instructeth them that they might know that he came not to send peace on the earth, Mat. x. 34. not such peace as the Jewish nation generally expected at his coming; but that ° for judgment he came into this world, (as is here prophesied that he should) which, if we take his coming in that latitude as before we said, we shall see with such severity to have been executed, as that in respect thereof we may see there was good grounds for this expression of it by way of question, who, (not only of the wicked, but of the best of men) may abide the day of his coming? or who shall stand when he appeareth?

Though the generality of the Jews did, I suppose, then expect nothing but present joy and prosperity at his coming, yet we may well think that those that better considered the prophecies, had other notions like those, that we have expressed, of the day of his coming and appearance, by that tradition which those since report to us, as from them, of the חבלי משיח Cheblo shel Mashiach, The pangs or dolours of the Messiah, such great afflictions as shall be to Israel at the coming of the Messiah, spoken of in the ° Talmud: which Abarbinel mentions, as here pointed at, if the words be expounded (as we have shewed they ought to be,) of the Messiah. And certainly such tradition may be as well founded on these words as any passage in the Prophets, although this place be not cited, where it is mentioned in the Talmud in the Tract of the Sabbath, chap. xvi. fol. 118.

VOL. I.

U u

but

° See Ribera, and Chr. à Castro, &c. ° 2 Peter iii. 4. ° 1 Peter iv. 18. ° Compare Rev. vi. 17.
 * Tarn. † John xvi. 33. † Ibid. ix. 39. * Sabbath, fol. 118. Sanhedr. fol. 98.

but that which is repeated concerning the same day that is here spoken of, chap. iv. 5. where it is called the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord.

The same Abarbinel speaking of the same opinion of theirs in his Comment on Daniel, fol. 68. col. 2. saith, [That the Disciples of Jesus received from the wise men of Israel (among other things that he there mentions) that in the days of Messiah afflictions should be multiplied, which they call חבלי המשיח Cheble hammeshiach, the pangs or dolours of Messiah, inasmuch that they said, Very happy shall he be that shall not see them, and in whose time they shall not be. And concerning them (says he) it is said in their gospel, Wo (or alas) who shall live with (or in the time of) those great afflictions which shall be seen in the last days? which are the pangs or dolours of Messias, which by tradition they had heard of.]

The words which he mentions, though they are not literally found in the gospel, yet may (as the sense) thence be collected, as a summary inference out of what our Saviour saith, as in Mat. xxiv. Mark xiii. and Luke xxi. It is well observed by Buxtorfius that the word ἡμέραι, by our Saviour used in his description of those days of his coming in judgment to the Jews (that here called likewise, The day of his coming and appearance) doth properly and particularly answer to the Hebrew, חבלי Chebel, or חבליים Chabalim, or in construction חבלי Cheblo, or חבלי Cheble, as they denote bitter pangs, as of a woman in travail, and so used for any great pains and afflictions. So that, if that tradition among them were ancients than Christ's coming, and the gospel, it may not be improbably thought, that our Saviour did by such terms as were then in use among them, and in their mouths, set forth those dolorous times which they did talk of and expect; so to warn them to prepare for them, as now at hand; and a certain proof, that Messiah, of whose being come they were, by their own confession, to be a sign, was now come, and they ought to acknowledge it. And in expressions so full of dread doth he describe those pangs, sorrows, or afflictions, of that time and day of his coming to the Jews (which were accordingly made good in that space of time, which we said to be comprehended under the day of his coming, and his appearing) as that nothing can surpass or equal them, but the day of his last coming, at the terrible day of judgment, to all people at the end of the world; inasmuch that it may even seem doubtful, whether that day were not meant by divers of them, in those chapters of Mat. xxiv. Mark xiii. and Luke xxi. which we have cited. At least, this is set forth as a type and figure of that: inasmuch that as well in respect to this time of such tribulation, as had not been from the creation, here spoken of, as of that, might be said, as well concerning even the elect among the Jews, (for whose sakes our Saviour saith, those days should be shortened, whereas else no flesh should be saved, Mat. xxiv. 22.) to whom the issue should be salutary, as concerning the wicked, to whom it should be for destruction, Who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? which in St. Luke is expressed by being accounted worthy to escape all those things, that should come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man. What we, with most Others, render, who may abide, &c. is by the Vulgar Latin rendered, who shall be able to think of the day of his coming, and who shall stand to see him? to express emphatically, I suppose, the terror here intimated. For if none can think of it by reason of the power or dreadfulnes of his Majesty, who shall be able to abide or bear it? says St. Jerom, including both significations. Not that the word מכלול Mecalcel, or its root doth properly signify to think of (it is no where else so found) the properer signification being to bear, or sustain, which it hath, Jer. xx. 9. And so farther describing the terror of those times, or giving a reason of the terror of them, he adds, For he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers sope. In words taken from things of known and ordinary use, he describes the severity of those judgments, which should then come on all in that country, for trial to all, and destruction to the wicked. He is (says he) like a refiner's fire, or as the construction will also bear, as a refining fire, though the other seems more proper. The use of that fire is to melt metals and try them, that so what is pure may be by it self retained, the dross being either consumed, or so separated as to be taken away from it. And then the people being compared to mixt metal, that hath in it what is pure and what is dross; and the Lord that should come in judgment, being compared to fire, which shall thoroughly try that metal; the meaning will be plain (as R. Tanchum expresses it) that he will consume or take away the transgressors and rebellious amongst them, as the refiner's fire consumes or separates the dross of melted metals, and cleanseth them from what is false and unsincere: and this so, as that the good and sincere shall at once be put to severe trial, every one in their own persons, as the good metal also, the sincere gold or silver endureth the hardship or trial of the fire, though preserved, and at last coming forth more pure, refined and purged: so as this may be applied to what concerns them in their particulars also, which by those trials and afflictions shall be made sensible of their sins, and what is amiss in them; that so purging themselves from them, they may become vessels of greater honour, sanctified and meet for the Lord's use, and prepared unto every good work, as the Apostle's words are, 2 Tim. ii. 21. But the words seem here more to concern the whole mass or community of the people, all calling themselves by the same name of God's people; but many of them being not so, whom now by the refining fire of his judgments he would distinguish from the true Israelites, and by the same means prove the one, and bring to destruction the

* Mat. xxiv. 8. Mark xiii. 8. † Luke xxi. 28. ‡ Id. xxi. 36. § Vulg. Lat. R. Tanch. || Psalm cxix. 119.

the other; as was actually done by those heavy calamities, which ended in the destruction of the country, city, of Jerusalem, and the temple, by the Romans, about the seventieth year of Christ. The same is plainly likewise the meaning of the other similitude added, and like fullers sope, the use of which is to scour wool or cloth, and purge out all spots and stains in it, and take them away, leaving the wool or cloth, though by the same means fretted and rubbed, the more white or brighter coloured. As that takes away all spots, so shall he take away all wicked ones, saith R. Solomon. The wicked may well be compared to spots in the garment of a people, as St. Jude calls them in the assemblies of the Christians spots in their feasts of charity, Jude, ver. 12. The word בורית Borith, which Ours and Others render sope, the Vulgar Latin and Others also render fullers berb. Concerning the primary signification of the word, there is doubt both among the Jews and Others: but, which is all that is to the purpose, it is by all agreed on to be somewhat, which in those times and places the fullers, or scourers of cloth, used to take away spots and stains, cleanse and whiten cloth withal, having (as Grammarians will) for its root ברר barar, which signifies to cleanse, make white and clean, as Dan. xi. 35. Now what our Translators, and most Others supply by, he, attributing it to the Lord spoken of, Kimchi doth it by, it, attributing it to the time called the day of his coming, and when he shall appear; and takes refining for an epithet to fire, but then maketh the sense the same, thus, And that day shall be as fire which purgeth the dross from silver; so shall that purge or separate the wicked from the good; and the wicked shall be destroyed, and the just or righteous shall remain: and so in the other similitude.

Here we may not pass unobserved, that divers Christian Expositors interpret this, not of those visible judgments and afflictions which we have spoken of, but of the irresistible force of Christ's word and preaching, which may be compared indeed to fire, as Jer. v. 14. and xxiii. 29. and is expressed by things of greatest force and power, which nothing can resist, as Heb. iv. 12. by a two edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, &c. and called a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the hearts, which spared no sin or sinner; and of the efficacy of his grace and spirit working on the obdurate hearts of men, and the like: which may be added to what hath been said, as the words seem to require it should. Otherwise, I suppose the way that we have taken to give a fuller and more proper meaning of the words, and such as will be of more use in dealing with the Jews to convince them, that all here spoken hath been fulfilled, all those calamities, those pangs of the Messiah, which they expected that the coming of Messiah should be accompanied with, did accordingly seize on them in that day of his coming; including the time (as we said) from his preaching to the destruction of the temple, brought on them by their obstinacy in refusing to hearken and turn to him: and so what is here said, to intimate what is more fully declared by Christ in the gospels concerning that time. The other exposition alone perhaps will not gain much from them.

As to the expression here used, it may be compared with several others in the Scripture: so (as Aben Ezra and Kimchi will) with what is said, Zech. xiii. 9. where God saith, I will bring the third part through the fire, and I will refine them as silver is refined, &c. as likewise, Isaiab. i. 25. I will turn my hand upon thee, and purely purge away thy dross, and take away all thy tin: and Ezek. xxii. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22. as they gather silver, and dross, and iron, and lead, and tin into the midst of the furnace, and blow the fire upon it to melt it; so will I gather you in my anger, and melt you, &c. (ver. 20.) as silver is melted in the midst of the furnace, so shall ye be melted, &c. (ver. 22.) and Luke xii. 49. I am come to send fire on the earth, &c. and 2 Thess. i. 8. where he speaketh of a time, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven in flaming fire, &c. with other like places. Which what judgments they concern will not be to our purpose at present to enquire; but only thus much, that it is usual to compare God's severity in proceeding against sin, to such purging and refining fire, which melts and tries the whole mass, but purifies the good, and refines it, and separates and consumes the dross. So those judgments often fall promiscuously on all both good and bad; but the end is different, and when the wicked are destroyed, the godly are only purged and made more precious in the sight of God; yet so as that in regard of that severe examination and trial, which they shall endure; even in respect of them also it may justly be asked, who may abide the day of his coming? &c. According to the same notion he adds in respect of the present trial here spoken of,

3. And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness.

And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver, &c.] R. D. Kimchi, as before, so here also, what Ours and Others attribute to the person of the Lord, takes as spoken of the time called the day of his coming, thus giving the meaning of the words, "As a judge that sitteth to judge the people, and to distinguish the offender from the innocent; so shall be that day, which shall refine and cleanse the silver, and take away from it the dross, or refuse; and they are the wicked." But the word שׁב properly signifying to sit, may seem more to agree to the person, than time, though it make not much difference in the above cited, Mat. xxiv, &c.

^a R. Tanch. and R. D. Kimchi in radie.

^b See Jer. xxix.

^d Ribera, Menoch. Tirin. Quistorp.

^e Diodat.

^f In the

¹ See 1 Peter iv. 12. πύραυς.

the meaning. And it cannot be here strictly taken in the notion of sitting, however it be attributed to the person; but rather to signify his set purpose and resolution of so doing, as one that sits to a work. He shall set aside all other works, that he may be as a refiner, saith R. Solomon, scarce warily enough; inasmuch as one work hindreth not him from attending to others; except we take his meaning to be, that he shall so fully do that business, as if he attended wholly to it. The Chaldee renders it, "He shall be revealed, or reveal himself, to melt and cleanse, as a man that melteth and cleanseth silver." He means (saith R. Tauchum) "He shall try and cleanse Israel, or the people, as silver, i. e. * as silver is cleansed and purified, or, he shall sit, as one that refineth silver." The letter or particle C, which is a note of similitude, being either way omitted, because the meaning is clear.

And he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them.] He shall cleanse them as silver that is tried in a furnace of earth, purified seven times, Psalms xii. 6. The sons of Levi.] Of the priests who were the sons of Levi, we have in the former chapters heavy complaints, that they in nothing performed their duty aright, but profaned God's holy name, his altar, his offerings, and service; and adulterated and violated his law: of them therefore seems here particular mention made, and promised or denounced, that he would take them (who should have directed and been examples of good to Others, but were wholly corrupt, and ill examples to them) in the first place into a strict examination, and reform what was amiss in his worship and their performance, so far that he loathed their offerings, that hereafter he might in an acceptable manner be worshipped, and have offerings offered to him in righteousness, such as should be pleasing to him.

But who are meant by the sons of Levi is not well accorded by Expositors. Who of old were called by that name is manifest; but now the outward part of God's service being altered, the persons also, by whom it is to be performed ought to be so too, though under the same name set forth. The change of the law, and the change of the priesthood or ministers, necessarily accompany one the other, Heb. vii. 12. By the sons of Levi here therefore † Some understand in general all Christians, who are all in Christ made a holy priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ, † Peter ii. 5. all priests unto God, Rev. i. 6. and v. 10. ^m or the whole church, by naming the Levites, who were anciently the chief part thereof. ⁿ Others understand the priests or ministers under the New Testament, who succeed under the gospel, in the place of those under the law; as the Apostles and Disciples of Christ, and their successors: ^o Others, the sons of Levi, properly so called, or the race of Aaron according to the flesh, of whom this is verified; in regard that many of them by the power of the word of God, were purged and purified from their former corruptions and errors, and reduced to the acknowledgment of Christ, and true worship of God, according to the perfect rule of the gospel, as it is said, And a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith, Acts vi. 7. All these may be true, and well joined. As to the last which understands it of the sons of Levi properly so called, as of that race; of such as were won to the obedience of Christ by the word of his gospel, and had their hearts purified by faith in him; of them may it be truly verified, that they were purified and purged as gold and silver by him sitting as a refiner and purifier of silver: and it cannot be doubted, but that they had their parts in that sharp trial of afflictions too in those days. And as for them who were all dross, and would not be purified, but continued in their corruption, what became of them, the sad story of the destruction of the city and temple (which we take to be deciphered by this day of his coming, and the trying and purifying here described) shews, when so many of them together with the temple, perished by fire: as that if the expression here were properly meant of material fire, it might be said to have been verified in them; although we do not here take it as so meant, but only to express the strictness and exactness of the trial. It is said that he shall so purify and purge them, that they shall offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. In the times when this was spoken, that they did not so, is shewed in the preceding chapters. Because they were so perverse in their ways, so wicked in their doings, he tells them that he regarded not the offering, (by which they thought to satisfy his law, and do to him acceptable service) nor received it with good will at their hands. As likewise, Isaiah i. 19, &c. he calls the sacrifices they pretended to do to him, while their hands were full of wickedness, vain oblations; the incense they brought, abomination unto him; their feast, iniquity and trouble to him, and that, when they make many prayers, he will not hear. Before they can do any thing that shall be acceptable to him, they must wash them, and make them clean, put away the evil of their doing, cease to do evil, learn to do good, &c. The persons must be first made such as he will accept, before their offerings can be ^p acceptable or their sacrifices sweet unto him. That therefore among these that are here called sons of Levi, (whether be meant all Christians, or those that are peculiarly separated to the ministering to God in holy things, or such of the Jewish Levites that were converted to Christ) there may be such as may offer to him an offering in righteousness, rightly, lawfully and acceptably, not to the farther displeasing of him (as those in this Prophet reprehended then did) he saith, that he will first purify them as silver, and purge them as gold and silver, from all dross and corruptions that are in them, by such means as he sees

* See the LXXII Version. † Pareus, Diodati, Montan. See Chr. à Castro. ^m Druf. ⁿ Vatab. ed. 4to and 8vo. Ribera, Sa. Chr. à Castro, Menoch. Bishop Hall. ^o Grot. Tirin. Stokes. ^p Jer. vi. 20.

fees convenient, whether by the powerful efficacy of his word, grace, and Spirit, or farther (if he see necessary) by the fiery trial of sufferings; by the ^a spirit of judgment and of burning, to separate the sincere of them from those that are not such: and then they being so purged, and with sincere hearts and pure hands presenting their offerings in righteousness to him; shall be accepted, both they and their offerings: so saith he in the following words.

4. Then shall the offerings of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and as in former years.

Then shall the offerings of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord.] Judah and Jerusalem are named (saith Kimchi) because there was the temple or sanctuary. It will be easy to translate the names to the church of Christ, of which that city was a type, and which thence was to have its ^r rise and beginning, though since spread abroad through the world; so that it will be all one to say the offerings of the church. But what offerings are then to be understood? Not certainly such legal sacrifices or Mincha's, as were then under the law offered. For this is spoken of what was to be after the coming of the Messiah, by whose once offering of himself all such legal offerings had an end put to them, and were for the future to cease. By the offerings (the Mincha or offering, as it is in the singular number) of Judah and Jerusalem therefore must be meant all the spiritual offerings and services of the church, and the faithful members thereof; their ^r prayers, ^r alms, praises, eucharistical sacrifices, their whole selves offered to God, as a living sacrifice, holy acceptable to God, Rom. xii. 1. all comprehended under that pure Mincha, or offering, ^a chap. i. 11. they being all made a holy priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God, ¹ Peter xi. 5. Much of the service under the law consisting in offering oblations, that name is transferred to all evangelical services.

It is said, they shall be pleasant as in the days of old, and as in former years, in the days of the pious Patriarchs, say ^{} Some. ^{} Others, in the time of the first temple, and when the worship of God flourished in Judea: or ^r the time of the tabernacle that Moses pitchd.

But it will not concern particularly to design the time, the text having not so designed it, it will be sufficient to understand it, that the services in the time here spoken of, by such and in such manner, as he describes, done, shall be as acceptable and pleasing to God, as any ever heretofore by holy and pious men in due manner performed, were, and not loathsome and displeasing to him, as those offerings of that present age by wicked men, unduly and with neglect and breach of his law offered, were.

But here is observable that from what he saith, that the sons of Levi shall be purified, and then offer offerings in righteousness, and pleasant unto God, as those of holy men of old, on, and after the coming and appearance of the Lord the Messiah, there is an evident proof, that by that coming of his here spoken of, is not meant his last coming to judgment (inasmuch as after that will be no time for such services: they are to be performed in this life and this world, not in the life and world to come) but a coming in this world, after which it should yet last; in which is a time of purging; the other being a time only of remuneration, according to what men have in this done. They are an argument in this kind looked on, not only by ^z some Christian Expositors, but by a Jew also. Abarbinel makes it as a proof against R. Solomon's interpreting what is here spoken, concerning death, and the punishments in another world, because, says he, that which is here said of offering offerings, הנה זה לא יפול על הנפשות אחר המות is a thing that doth not belong to souls after death. This is to be observed not only in respect to what hath been already said, but in respect of what follows also in the next verse, and other passages which are betwixt this and the end of this prophecy: by which, taken by themselves, the judgment after this life and world may seem deciphered; and we ought to be put in mind of it. Yet if we consider to whom, (viz. the nation of murmuring Jews;) and on what occasion the words were then spoken, and how there is in them (as this) that which agrees to things in this life and world, not so properly to that; we shall see that they must have respect to such judgments as God would exercise towards that nation in this world, and taking the time denoted by the day of the Lord, - the Messiah's coming, for that time, which (as we said) was from the first preaching of John Baptist, and Christ, until the destruction of the country, city, and temple of Jerusalem; and considering what was done in those times; we shall easily perceive that all by the Lord in this Prophet spoken, was so far fulfilled, as that in regard thereof alone, not one word of his may be said to have fallen to the ground: though, as then the words might warn them, who were then in the Prophet's time living, and should die before the execution of such God's publick judgments on the community or nation, of a certain account that they should after this life, if not before, be brought to, for their doings; so they ought still to warn all, whether particular persons, or whole nations, to expect in God's due time to be brought to judgment, at least after this life, if not in it too: what happened to them, being for example to all, and their concern so to make use thereof, that purifying themselves before hand, and doing to God acceptable service, they be not consumed as dross.

5. And I will come near to you in judgment, and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers,

VOL. I.

X x

^a Isaiah iv. 4. ^r Tirin. and see Notes on Micah iv. 1, 2. ^{*} Psalms cxli. 2. ^t Heb. xiii. 15, 16. ^z See the Notes thereon. ^z Cyril. Vatab. Grot. &c. ^z Drus. Aben Ezra. ^r Abarb. ^z Ribera, see Chr. à Castro, p. 572.

cerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of hosts.

And I will come near to you in judgment, &c.]

An answer to their former groundless murmurings and questionings in the last verse of the preceding chapter, he hath in the former verses given, and in this and the next verse continues it in terms coming close to the question there by them made, where is the God of judgment? he here answers, I will come near to you to judgment. Before he spake as of a third person, The Lord shall come, &c. and he shall sit, &c. and he shall purify, &c. viz. the Lord Christ, the second person of the Blessed Trinity; here in the first person, as of God the Father, I will come near, &c. This alters nothing in the sense, but only gives us to understand, that God will judge by the Messiah, God the Father in and by the Son. For the Father hath committed all judgment to the Son, John v. 22. and hath given him authority to execute judgment, ver. 27. he coming, therefore, saith, I am come in my Father's name, ver. 43. whether therefore this be looked on as spoken in the Father's name, or in the person of the Messiah, as ^a Vatablus will, it is all one, for he and his Father are one, John x. 30.

He will come near to them in judgment, to exercise judgment, which they complained was not executed. Will come] at the end of the world, at the last judgment, saith the same learned man, following ^b some Others. ^c Others expound them of both comings of Christ, that already past, and that to be at the end of the world; as much as to say, I will come down in the flesh, and enquire into the corrupt manners of men, I will come also at my last coming to judgment.

Or, I will come in judgment, first ^d to correct, and also as occasion shall serve, to punish; but will perfectly complete it at the day of the last judgment. But what to say of these see in the note on the former verse, as likewise of R. Kimchi's note on the place: I will come near, viz. in that day which he hath mentioned, to you; that is, to that generation which shall be in that day, and the generations that are past, if they received not their judgment in this world, they shall receive it in the world to come; and of what Abarbinel here saith, who though he rejects R. Solomon's opinion, as to the former verse, yet will have it here to take place, viz. that by his saying I will come near, is meant that before those things so far off to come, which Malachi should tell them of, he will more speedily come to the particulars of them by death, which should send them to hell; making that the import of קרבתִי I will be, or am near to you.

And I will be a swift witness, &c.] That none of the transgressors may think to avoid his judgment, as in human judicatures many do for want of evident witnesses, against them, their crimes having been committed in secret, and oft sentence is delayed that so enquiry may be made, and witnesses sought for; he tells them that here it shall not be so, he himself that is the Judge will also be witness. And ^e all things being open to him, even those things which are done with greatest privacy, as well known to him, as those that are done in the face of the sun, and before many witnesses, he will not delay for making farther search and enquiry, as in doubtful matters, and where circumstances may not be plain, or men's memories may fail, as by men done, but will be a swift witness, will without more ado, convince them of their sins, and as speedily execute sentence on them being convicted, none being able to stop or hinder his proceeding, when once he takes the matter in hand, as he here assures, that in his appointed time, (which shall then seem too sudden to them, though now they accuse him of delay) he will do.

Against whom he will so proceed, he shews by reckoning up divers notorious sins, which his specifying shews to have been then common amongst them: and besides that, he will in like manner proceed against all others guilty in other like kinds of sins contrary to his law, as these expressly are. These being named, we cannot but think others included.

Against the forcerers.] Of this sin forbidden, Deut. xviii. 10, 11, 12. is shewed, that they were much guilty even under the first temple, in Isaiah, chap. ii. 6. Jer. xxvii. 9. Micah v. 12. And how under the second, and in the later degenerate times, they addicted themselves to the like vain diabolical arts, (one here named comprehends the rest, which in the law are distinguished by several names) is proved by the learned Dr. Lightfoot by several instances on Mat. xxiv. 24. And of the rest of the sins here reckoned up, the same will be to be said, that as they of former times before the Babylonish captivity, and destruction of the former city and temple, were guilty of them, and by them pulled on the whole nation those heavy judgments, besides those which in their particular persons they were for them liable to, either in this life or the other, so these also, after their return from that captivity, (not taking warning by what had happened to their ancestors, and they had either tasted of, or could not but have fresh in memory,) casting off the fear of God (which in the last words of the verse is assigned as the cause of their so doing) did again give themselves up to the like, so far, that God again threatneth them with like national judgment. In rendring the words, whereby the last sin here spoken of is described, viz. and that turn aside the stranger from his right, the words from his right being put in different characters, sheweth that they are not expressed in the original Hebrew, but are supplied for making clearer and fuller the sense; the words literally founding only, that turn aside the stranger: so do some of the ^f Jews think a supply for that end necessary, and there-therefore understand משפט Mishpat, judgment, as if it were. וּמַטֵּי מִשְׁפַּט הַנֵּר Umatte mishpat bagar, and that turn aside, or pervert, the judgment of a stranger; which is in the text it self put in, where a curse is denounced against this sin, Deut. xxvii. 19. (and there is the word מַטֵּה matteh, perverteth, in the singular number, and therefore with the letter ה H in the end, whereas it is here in the plural, and therefore with י I in the end. Which I suppose is all that the Masoretet, or those that took care of the right writing and reading of the Hebrew Text, would have here to be observed by that note of theirs, which ^h Some take notice of, viz. that it is not elsewhere read with י yod in the end; not that they would have us think it ought here to have been written with ה H; for here it is in the plural, as the rest of the nouns here are, as R. Tanchum notes; of which yod in the end is a sign, and the letter ה H of the singular.

^a Edit. 4to and 8vo. ^b See Chr. à Castro. ^c Tirinus. ^d Menoch. ^e See Abarb. ^f See R. Kimchi. ^g R. D. Kimchi.

That among the sins here reckoned up as provoking God to come in judgment, is not mentioned idolatry (as great as any, and which the former Prophets under the first temple did oft inveigh against) Abarbinel notes the reason to be, because that under the second temple that sin was not found amongst them. The same Doctor on the last words, and fear not me, saith the Lord, notes, that he intimates, that if they should fear him, and ⁱ repent of these sins, he would pardon them.

Saith the Lord of hosts.] This intimates the certainty of what he saith shall be, that they may take due notice of it, which is also assured in what follows, ver. 6. ^k Divers connect the last words with the former thus, and against those that do not fear me, ^l including, with those guilty of the former sins, all others who fear not the Lord.

6. For I am the Lord, I change not: therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed.

For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed.] These words are very differently expounded, at least applied, by Interpreters; especially as to the latter part of them. The connexion of the former part of them with the preceding, according to the way that we have gone, will be easy; viz. That although we have so long forbore to take vengeance of the wicked, yet they are not to think, that it is because he approves of their doings, or is grown neglectful of those that take care to serve him; but that he will in due time execute his judgments on the one, according to what he hath threatened against such as go on in evil ways, and shew his care of the other; inasmuch as he is still the same God of judgment, unchangeably the same, a hater and certain avenger of evil, and a lover of good: and therefore all his threats and promises, however seeming to be deferred, shall in their due time certainly come to pass, and have their due effect. But how then doth what he sub-joins, therefore, (or and) ye sons of Jacob are not consumed, follow on these? Because (as we said) Expositors in giving the meaning of these words much differ, it will be convenient to take some of their interpretations distinctly.

R. Solomon's note on this place is, Although I do defer my anger, I have not changed my mind [or purpose] from what it was at first, as that I should love the wicked, and hate the good. And ye sons of Jacob, although [some of you] are dead, or have died, in their iniquity, and I have not taken punishment of those wicked in this life, yet ye are not consumed; ye are not consumed, or brought to nothing, before me; I have left your souls to execute my judgment on them in hell: according to Jonathan's Chaldee Paraphrase which is, And ye of the house of Jacob think that he who dieth in this world, his judgment ceaseth: as much as to say, Ye in your opinion say, my judgment is frustrate, or ceaseth, because there is no farther time to take vengeance on him. But our ancient Doctors, saith he, otherwise expound it, I have not changed or returned, or done a second time, I have not smitten any other nation, and returned, [or ^m been changed, to it, or smitten it a second time.] But you have I preserved, or caused, to abide after many punishments. ⁿ My arrows are consumed or spent, but ye are not consumed.

R. D. Kimchi's Exposition is thus, for I the Lord change not, for whatsoever I have spoken, though for a long time to come, shall certainly so come to pass; for I change not, neither do my words change: and all the things to come, which I have spoken to you by my Prophets, shall so be, or come to pass. The verb שִׁנִּיתִי Shaniti hath the signification of changing, as if he should say, I change not from word to word, from purpose to purpose, or liking to liking, i. e. that I should one while say or like one thing, and another while another. And ye sons of Jacob are not consumed; as other nations are consumed, of whose name no memory is left, and who are destroyed from being a nation: but ye are not consumed, neither shall you be consumed; for ye shall always be separate among the nations, that ye may be one nation in the earth; although you be led captive, and dispersed to every corner, your name remaineth, or shall remain, in every place. The evil that I have done to you, I have done for your iniquities. And as I change not, so ye also shall not be consumed, and in the latter days ye shall return to your dignity, and shall be high above all the nations of the earth. But Jonathan paraphraseth it thus, “For I the Lord have not changed my covenant, which is from of old, but ye, O house of Israel, think, that he that dieth in this world, his judgment ceaseth.” Thus Kimchi. Abarbinel, though he dissent from R. Solomon on the 2d, 3d, and 4th verses, (as we have seen) yet here agreeing with him, as separating, what is spoken in the 5th and this verse, from what is spoken in them, as belonging to a distinct ⁱ See Cyril.

^h Buxt. vindic. part 2. cap. 4. pag. 502.

^k LXXII. Arab. Chr. à Castro, Pareus, Grot. &c.

^l Vat. Edit. 4to and 8vo. ^m In the Concordance the word שִׁנִּיתִי is put in both these significations. ⁿ Deut. xxxii. 23.

distinct time and judgment, as not seeing in his way how well to join them, thus here speaks ; “ For I the Lord change not, i. e. I have always loved judgment and righteousness, but “ if it be not in this world, it shall be in the “ world to come, that is it which he saith, “ and ye children of Jacob are not consumed, “ for although you die, behold your souls remain to receive the recompence of your “ doings.”

These words and opinions of these Doctors we recite, not as if they conduced to the right meaning of the place, for they are far from it ; as R. Solomon's, in that, what is spoken of a particular signal day and judgment in this world, he expounds of that which continually did befall, and still doth befall all men in their times ; viz. the day of death, and of the immortality of the soul, which things being common to all men, and before known to all the Jews, cannot be the utmost meaning or conclusion of a new Prophecy directed to the Jews ; and particularly concerning their nation, to shew them some new thing that should betide them, and satisfy that question then in their mouths, Where is the God of judgment ? with some new answer. However, that which he saith be in it self true, it is not here, by it self, to the purpose, and it seems to proceed on his former wrong supposal, that ver. 1. by the Lord's messenger is meant the angel of death, and by the Lord here spoken of, the God of judgment, without respect to the Messiah ; and not to come home at all to the taking away the murmuring of the people, of which he complains, and shews it to be causeless, and through ignorance of what he now declares to them.

This objection against him Abarbinel suggests to us, in what he saith on the first and second verses, but here, where he falls in with him, it stands firm against himself : for here we are not (as he doth) to look on these words, as spoken of a distinct time, or persons, or judgment, from those that are in those former words spoken of, but as concerning still the same day or time, (as Kimchi, as we have seen, well notes ;) and all directing to some visible judgment, whereby God in that appointed time should clear his justice, which they now looking on the prosperity of the wicked called in question, and make manifest his immutability in his hatred of the wicked, though he do not presently execute sentence on them, and his love to the godly ; whom though he suffer to endure for a while perhaps hard trial, yet he still takes care of their final preservation, and will in his due time make it apparent, by what shall be then visibly done by some distinguishing judgment : which to the particular day of men's dying, and the judgment that they shall then be brought to, invisible and unknown to others, (so that thereby God's love and hatred to the one or the other are not easily discerned, ° one thing, as far as man can discern befalling them, and one dying as the other dieth,) is not so kindly applicable.

As for David Kimchi, neither can his exposition here take place, it running (as to the latter part) on a false supposition, which may not be granted, viz. that the Lord and his messenger, who were, as is evident (ver. 1.) to come to the temple then standing, which is long since destroyed, and by whom the judgment spoken was to be brought near unto them, (ver. 5.) are not yet come, nor that judgment yet executed, but are yet (no man knows when) to be expected, and that the judgment, with which that nation is here particularly threatened, was to be executed only on other nations, there remaining for the Jews, only a triumphant return to their ancient dignity, and a flourishing estate in this world ; which certainly are no way intimated in the words, but on the contrary a destruction of all the sinners among them by a national judgment, though the godly among them were not to be thereby consumed. All which hath been already so fully compleated in the destruction of that people, within few years after Christ's coming, that to pass by what hath been done, and look after things to be done, not at all by God here, or elsewhere promised, is to delude, and not to give a true exposition of this prophecy.

From none of these expositions therefore (as we said) have we certainly the right meaning of these words, as to the scope of them ; all that we may gain by them to our purpose is a justification of the signification of some of the words, as they are by our Translators rendered, and particularly of the two verbs, the first in לֹא שִׁנִּיתִי Lo shaniti, I change not ; the other in לֹא כִלִּיתֶם Lo celitem, ye are not consumed : in the giving of the meaning of which, R. Ab. Ezra, and R. Tanchum agree with those already named, only that the latter of them thinks that both of them, though in the form of the preterperfect tense, ought to be rendered in the signification of the future, I will not change, and ye shall not be consumed ; making the former to include a reason of the returning of God's providence to them as it was of old, and giving for the meaning, “ These promises “ shall certainly come to pass, although they “ be deferred for a long while, for no change “ or failing shall happen to me : and likewise “ ye shall remain by the remaining of my law “ among you, neither shall you be consumed “ or cease to be.” Into which meaning we shall not further enquire, he not fully expressing of it. If he mean the same that Kimchi doth, the same answer will serve. That which we take notice of, is, that according to these the meaning of the first word is given, by saying that God doth not, or will not alter his purpose and decree, concerning his hatred of the wicked, and in his appointed time bringing to condign punishment obstinate sinners, or his love to the good and care of them ; so that however he delay the time of his evidencing these things by open judgments, his justice is not to be questioned, as if he now liked or approved of such things or persons, which he had formerly declared his dislike unto.

This while with them we look on, as the import of the word here, we cannot but wonder at the impudence and folly of that railing Jew^p Lipman, who saith that Christians go contrary to the meaning of what is here said, in affirming, that God, who before had not flesh and blood, was changed to be flesh and blood, or, as another copy hath it, who was before only the Father, and the Holy Spirit, was afterward changed to be the Son. In which objection of his is only much malice and impertinency; inasmuch as by nothing that the Christians say, nor by any consequence that can be drawn from what they say, can it be concluded that they affirm any change or alteration in God or the Godhead, with whom they profess to be no variableness, neither shadow of changing, either in his nature or any of his attributes, all things remaining in him, the eternal Trinity, one God in three Persons, as they were from eternity; nor by Christ's taking the manhood into God, was there any change of God into man, nor confusion of substance, or alteration of person. Again, inasmuch as, that he might pick a cavil against Christians, he takes the word which here denotes God's immutability in his will, word, decree, and purpose, which with the Jews the Christians absolutely affirm, as if it imported here immutability of nature or substance, (though that be most true also:) so that it is a cavil sought, not offered to him, either by the word as here used, nor any thing by the Christians affirmed. He had no occasion to say this, but he having said it, it was convenient to take some notice of it, lest others of his sect might applaud him in it, and think to be true what he feigneth.

But of the concurrence of the other Jews, in rendring the latter verb in the same notion that our Translators do, who render it are not consumed, we take more notice, because some learned Christians take it in another signification, and would have it rendred, And ye sons of Jacob^a do not desist, or leave off to do evil: so in Munster and the Tigurin Translations more lately: and the Septuagint of old seems so to have taken the word to signify, reading this word with the two first of the following verse, And ye sons of Jacob have not receded from the unjust dealings, or wickedness of your fathers: as likewise the printed Arabick Version following that, and the Syriack also. And from the word in that notion rendred, would flow a very convenient sense, taking the whole verse as a confirmation of what is before said; and that they certainly must expect that judgment denounced to come in its appointed time, inasmuch as the Lord is unchangeable in his purpose of punishing incorrigible, unrepenting sinners, and they would not leave off their evil courses, nor repent them of their sins, nor desist from them.

VOL. I.

But others, and they the major part, viz: all that follow the Vulgar Latin and divers others also of modern Interpreters, prefer, with the forementioned Jewish writers, the other notion of being consumed, as more usual to the verb in the conjugation or form here used; according to which our Translators render are not consumed: but then in giving the meaning and connexion of the whole verse, there is among those who embrace this signification of this word some difference. Some taking it as speaking of the time past or present, make the coherence with what goes before, and the meaning, to this purpose, as may be collected out of them put together; that doubtless it shall be so as he said, he will come in judgment to those sinners. For he (the Lord) who hath determined and pronounced that he will not leave impenitent sinners unpunished, doth not change his will and purpose. But how then is it that the sons of Jacob, whose fathers and themselves have been great and obstinate sinners, have not long since been, or are not yet consumed? It is from the same unchangeableness in God, who as he is just, so is likewise merciful and long suffering, not willing the death of sinners, but rather that they should come to repentance: and therefore determined as to execute justice, so not to be hasty in executing it, but to give space for repentance, that so the necessity and equity of his judgments executed on such as would not lay hold on his mercy by repentance, while they had time allowed for it, may appear: and besides, that he might shew how just he was in keeping promise, and his covenant made with their forefathers, Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in so long sparing for their sakes their rebellious posterity, who would make no end of sinning: so that it was not through any change in him, that they have not yet been consumed, but shall now be severely punished; but from his mercy and their obstinacy opposing and rejecting it. So that they cannot but say (if they will rightly consider the matter) it is of the Lord's mercy that we are not consumed, because his compassions fail not. Great is thy faithfulness, Lam. iii. 22, 23.

This, however they differ in expressions, seems to be the scope that the most of Expositors will have these words to aim at. There are that read them by way of interrogation or admiration, For I the Lord change not, and are not ye, O sons of Jacob, consumed? how wonderful a thing is it that the Lord being immutable in his judgment against refractory sinners, they should not yet be consumed! how hath mercy prevailed against judgment! this falls in with what hath been already said, and requires the same answer.

There may be proposed another way thus, "Expect certainly the execution of the judgment spoken of, and that I will in due time call to an account sinners, for I the Lord change not:" of which that you may not doubt,

Y y

^p See Wagenfel Correct. Lipm. ^a Stokes.
Stock. &c. [!] Sanctius. [!] See Vatab.

^r Pelican, Ribera, Chr. à Castro's Paraph. Tirin, Tarnov.

doubt, you have from a contrary effect and evidence of my immutability a proof; for therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed; though the wicked have hitherto domineer'd, and wickedness reigned, yet you true sons of Jacob, that fear me, as Jacob did, have been preserv'd; by virtue of my promise and mercy they have not been able to root you out.

But as we saw before, that by a learned Jew it is noted, that this verb is to be rendred rather in the signification of the future, and with respect to what was to come, not to what was past or present; so it is by "Some of good judgment and learning among Christians also taken, that the words may be rendred, Therefore, or and, ye sons of Jacob shall not be consumed, as part of the prophecy of what should be to the godly, when the Lord should come to execute his judgment spoken of on the wicked: and for making out the meaning to this purpose, they understand by the sons of Jacob the godly amongst the Jews, (they who being of the faith of Jacob, and following his steps, deserved peculiarly to be called his children or sons, according to what we learn in like kind, whom properly to call children of Abraham, Galat. iii. 7. and Rom. ix. 7.) and then the coherence will appear thus, I will certainly come near to you in judgment, against the sinners among you. For I am the Lord and change not, but am still, as ever, inexorable to obstinate and impenitent sinners, one that will in due time take vengeance on them however for a long time I have spared them; but ye true sons of Jacob, ye whose heart is right with me, and who lay hold on my promise to him made, and by walking in his steps approve your selves his genuine children, heirs of his faith; ye, as you are not partakers of their sins, so neither shall ye be of the judgments brought upon them: I will make a way for your escape, that ye perish not with them. And that so he effected it, is made evident by the history. When the judgment here prophesied of had its execution and completion in the destruction of the city and temple of Jerusalem, and the wicked obstinate sinners of the Jews in it; God provided for the escape and deliverance of such as had embraced the doctrine of Christ, and yielded obedience to him: so that they were not consumed, as, if God had not taken a special care for them, they must necessarily have been. And so taking by that day of the Lord's coming to be meant the space (as we have said on the first and second verses) betwixt John Baptist's and Christ's beginning to preach, and the destruction of the temple; and by that swift judgment the destruction of the wicked among the Jews, together with their city and temple; and by the sons of Jacob those that believed in Christ, whom Jacob so long before waited for, and transmitted the expectation of to his posterity; and by what is said that they should not be consumed, their escape and wonderful preservation from that so universal a destruction, by their being from God warned to go out of the city, while there was an opportunity offered, which accordingly they did to a place called Pella, so that there was not one Christian left in the city when it was destroyed, but all escaped, as Eusebius testifies in the third book of his history, cap. 5. and Epiphanius de Ponderib. cap. 15. "we cannot but see all that is here spoken from the beginning of the chapter to the end of the 6th verse, to have been so fully made good by evidence of fact, that there is no ground by virtue of this prophecy, to look for any thing yet to be expected, which hath not been made good, as the Jews, that they may keep up themselves in their willing error of denying Christ yet to be come, would have us do: and that there is in them a full and satisfactory answer to that blasphemous murmuring and questioning in the last verse of the preceding chapter, God delighteth in them that do evil, else why doth he suffer them to prosper? or, Where is the God of judgment? so that, in respect to those who so spake, and to whom these things were then spoken, viz. the people of the Jews, there is no need of looking farther. Mean while, what happened then to them is to all others for example, to teach them that though God for a while in his forbearance and giving time to repent, suffer the wicked to prosper, yet he will doubtless in due time manifest his justice in punishing them for their evil doings; and if he do not in this life, whether by personal judgments on particular persons, or national on wicked nations, yet he certainly will after death, and at that general terrible judgment at the last day; of which that severe judgment then on the Jewish nation, was so lively a figure and emblem; as that it cannot but put all that will consider things in mind of it, and warn them to expect it, though it be not that which is here primarily meant. And this seems the most plain and the literal way of the expounding these words hitherto.

7. ¶ Even from the days of your fathers, ye are gone away from mine ordinances, and have not kept them: return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord of hosts: but ye said, Wherein shall we return?

Even from the days of your fathers ye are gone away from mine ordinances.] The connexion of these words with the former is by Expositors differently given, according to their different expositions of those. According to those that render the foregoing verb in the notion of desisting or ceasing [from evil] these words will be a farther declaration of what was by it said, viz. that they continued still to do, as all along from the days of their fathers they had done, and would not be brought to repent of their evil doings and forsake them, which now yet they are exhorted to do, and in the following words some of those their sins particularly enumerated.

" Castal. Grot. * Idem adversus Hæreses, p. 123. And see Grot. Dr. Hammond on Mat. xxiv. 16. Simon's Chron. part 7. p. 46. Anno Christi 67.

According to those who render it in the notion of being consumed, and take it in the sense of the time past or present, they will be an amplification of God's mercy in that they have not been, nor are yet consumed, by aggravation of their sins from their long and obstinate continuance in them, without repentance of, or turning from them, which by the same unchangeable mercy they are called on yet to do. But according to the latter way (which we prefer) of rendring it ye shall not be consumed, there is not any such connexion to be looked after, but the former part of this chapter containing an answer to what was, whether by impatient murmurers or scoffers objected against God's justice and immutability of his methods in proceeding against wicked doers, being in the sixth verse concluded, he passeth to a new matter, a distinct part of the chapter, a new contest against the people of that time for other sins, by which they had provoked him to send on them already some previous judgments; for removing which, and preventing those most terribles ones mentioned in the foregoing verses, and which he doth again before the end of this prophecy put them in mind of, he shews them the only way to be, to return unto him by repentance, and therefore in compassion to them calls on them so to do.

So R. Tanchum saith that though these words are not distinguished [from the former] in the writing, yet in sense they are, being an address to the people of that time alone. So Junius and Tremellius look on it as a new contest or expostulation, added to those former, against contempt and profanation of his worship (chap. i. ver. 6. and chap. ii. 10. 2ly, Against illegal marriages, polygamy, and divorce (thence to ver. 17.) 3ly, Against their murmuring, repining, or scoffing at his justice and judgments, (ver. 17. of that second chapter) with an answer hitherto. And now, 4ly, here against sacrilegious detention of tithes and things belonging to God, hence to ver. 13. where and in the following verses he adds another against their slighting of his worship and of repentance. So Grotius looks on it likewise as a distinct speech, saying that here leaving off to speak to whom he spake in the last words, he returns again to speak to the wicked. And according to this supposition, that here is a transition to a new matter of expostulation, without mingling this verse with the preceding, in construction or continuation of sentence, will be the plainest way of proceeding to what follows.

Even from the days of your fathers ye are gone away from mine ordinances, and have not kept them. Abarbinel notes that in these words, ye are gone away from mine ordinances, God accuseth them of breach of his affirmative precepts, or those that enjoined them to do such things, as he commanded: in the other, and have not kept them, of the breach of his negative precepts, or such as forbade them to do such, or such things, which he saith is agreeable to an observation of their ancient Doctors, that the latter word שָׁמַר Shamar is usually applied to negative precepts: but without this nicety of distinction R. D. Kimchi gives the meaning in plain and perspicuous words, thus. "A long time is past since that ye have not kept (or observed) mine ordinances, both ye, and your fathers: therefore have I brought evil on them, and on you: but now from henceforth return, &c." In much like manner Grotius; "Ye now so live as ye formerly lived when ye deserved to be carried away into captivity, and will again deserve to suffer the like." That here, while he mentions their doings, are intimated such evils and judgments, as they had already pulled down on themselves, and should farther pull down if they continued in those ways, is manifest by what follows; as in the subsequent verses, where such evils are named, so in the next words of these, wherein he exhorts them to repentance, as the only means to remove what they already suffered, or were further threatened with, and to reconcile him whom they had provoked, to themselves, and regain his favour. Return unto me, and I will return unto you. Return unto me by repentance, and I will return unto you in mercy and favour, and care over you, by my good providence. Remove you the evil of your doings, and I will remove the evil of my judgments, the effects of my displeasure for that evil. ^a God neither recedes nor returns, but when he shews tokens of his displeasure he is said to turn away; when of his favour, to return.

But ye said, wherein shall we return? The import of these words is by ^b Some here given (as of like expressions before in this Prophet) if ye shall say wherein shall we return? and R. Tanchum well notes that the particle בְּ be, in, or with, in the word בָּמָה Bammeh, in what, or wherein, hath here the force or signification of מִן from, as in some other places; for that the sense is not in, or with, what thing shall we return unto thee? but from what thing shall we return, &c. whether they openly and in words said thus, or inwardly and in their thoughts, is all one; what they thought or said in their hearts, being as well known to God, as what they uttered with their mouths; it argues their ^c great impudence, who being called on by God to return from their sin, would not acknowledge themselves guilty of any thing that they should repent of, or amend in themselves, but in justification of themselves, say, ^d what is there in us that needs to be reformed? Kimchi thus paraphraseth it, "Is there any other matter besides what thou hast hitherto reproved us for, of matters of illegal sacrifices, and concerning women [or transgression in matter of marriage] mentioned in the first and second chapters?" To this he returns them an answer by specifying what besides those things they were guilty in, viz. in their defrauding him in tithes and offerings: and he so doeth it, as to give them notice of the hainousness of that fault, saying,

^a Stock. ^y Jun. Trem. on chap. i. 6. ^c Abarb. ^d Grot.

^z See Ezra ix. 7. and Neh. ix.

^a Calv. ^b R. Tanchum, R. D.

8. ¶ Will a man rob God? yet ye have robbed me: but ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? in tithes, and offerings.

Will a man rob God? &c.] Of these words we find far different translations, as, 1st, That of the ancient Latin, Si affiget homo Deum, quia vos configitis me, which the Authors of the Doway Translation in English, render, shall a man fasten God? because you do fasten me, with which though a harsh sense, the Tigurin Version also agrees; though noting in the Margin, that otherwise it might be rendred, do violence to, and pierce, and otherwise, take away by force, and that instead of God, may be rendred, Judicem, the Judge. 2^{ly}, That of the Greek, will a man supplant God? because ye have supplanted me. And, 3^{ly}, of the Chaldee, will a man provoke a Judge to anger? because ye provoke me to anger. And, 4^{ly}, the interlineary Version, Will a man take away God by force, (which must be understood of the things pertaining to God.) 5^{ly}, Ought a man to snatch (or take away by rapine) those things that are God's? because ye snatch away those things that are mine, as Pagnine. 6^{ly}, As Munster, Will a man do violence to the judges? because ye do violence to me.

That we may judge between these, and if there be any other that differs in sense from some of these, and clear the sense, it will be expedient to enquire into the signification of the principal verb in this expression, because on the acception of that depends the main of the matter, either for preferring any of these before the other, or reconciling them, if it be possible. That word (or verb) rendred by Ours, rob, is קבע Kaba, of which we may observe, that it is found but seldom in the Scriptures, viz. here in this and the following verse four times, and in Prov. xxii. twice in the same verse, viz. the 23^d verse, and not elsewhere, I mean in the form of a verb, for to look after some nouns which have the same radicals, which are but two neither, in Scripture, viz. קובע Koba, a helmet, and קבוע Kubaath, dregs, will not be much to our purpose. And this seldom use of it makes the signification not to be so well known as that of words oftner used. Divers of the Jewish Grammarians and Interpreters tell us that it signifies, to take away by violence, to rob (as Ours well here expresses it) or to spoil, as in the forecited place, Prov. xxii. 23. they render it: for in both places, viz. here and there, it seems to have the same signification. Others looking on it as a Chaldee or Syriack word, at least of more use in that language, thence would have us take or look for the signification of it: and in that the most usual notion of it is, to fix, or fasten, to stick in, and the like. If this, as the learned Nicholas Fuller observes, be looked on as the primary signification, then because this is done by a violent percussio, or striking, the other which the Jews give of oppressing, or taking away by force, or robbing; may be looked on as a metaphorical use of it, as agreeing in the act of violence or force with it. But however they fall in together in this common notion, I know not why that given by the Jews may not be thought as proper a signification of the word, when that tongue flourished in its latitude anciently among them; except we shall think the notion of doing violence, to have been the more general and ancient notion of it. Surely the places which it is found in, in the Hebrew Text, which we have cited, do seem to require some other signification than that of fixing or fastning. And the Doway Translators who here render it, fasten, in the parallel forecited place of Prov. xxii. 23. render it peirce. And R. Solomon on that place, notes that in the Syriack Tongue it signifies also, to rob, as he proves by an example out of the Talmud. However these two, of robbing, or taking by violence from, and fastning, are the two main significations attributed to the word, to which all others given to it ought to be reduced, and what is spoken in exposition of it to be examined by.

Now of these significations, the Jewish Expositors more generally follow that which, as we said, they give us, of violent, spoiling, taking from, or robbing. And so doth one of them, who translating this with the other Prophets into Arabick, render it by غصب Gasaba, which is violently to take away. But the Latin, as we see, follows the second, of fixing, or fastning; which yet divers of those Expositors which follow that, will not have to be understood properly of fastning, but rather of piercing and striking or sticking in; that so the meaning may be, that by sinning against God, as they did, they did as it were, pierce and wound him, i. e. grieve and afflict him. So^a divers learned men that follow the Vulgar Latin, giving to the word a figurative signification. But if we were to follow this translation, I should rather choose to take the word fasten in a more proper notion, as it will denote, to restrain, as what is fastned is restrained, bounded, or limited, that it cannot go farther, and so is as it were shortned, or kept short, stinted and stopped.

This notion may be illustrated out of the use of the word in the Arabick Tongue, wherein the root قبع ⁱ Kabaa signifies to shrink in, or pull, or put in, as when a tortoise shrinketh his neck into his shell, or a man his head into his shirt, or garment, to hide it; and to turn in, as when one turneth in, or doubleth inward or outward the mouth of a sack, or bag. According to this notion, to fasten God, in respect to the matter of tithes and dues here spoken of, will be, to shorten that proportion that was due to him, to restrain and stop his allowance, and detain part of it from him, not giving the full of that which he by his law required, nor in its due time, but limiting and bounding it, according to what they thought fit. And to this meaning seems Aben Ezra

to

^a Abu Walid, R. Tanchum, R. Solomon, R. D. Kimchi, Abarbinel. ^f R. Solomon. ^g Capit. Concord. MS. ^b See Ribera, Chr. à Castro, Menoch. and Tirin. ⁱ Ebn Athir, Kamus, &c.

to incline, while he expounds it, to retain, or detain that which is due, which will also be confirmed by what follows, ver. 10. Bring ye in all the tithes; intimating that part of them were detained and stopped by them. And this being granted; these two translations, will a man rob God? and will a man fasten God? though at first hearing they seemed very wide from one another, do meet in a middle notion of straitning, or restraining; he that detains ought of a man's allowance, that pincheth (as we say) or shortens him in it, and doth not give him with a cheerful eye his full and due proportion, doth rob him, as well as he that by force takes away from him what he hath. And so to fasten, or fix God to their allowance and stint him, not giving him his whole due, is to rob him.

And so these two expositions, which seemed most different, being brought thus far to agree, it will not be hard to reduce the rest to one of the forementioned significations. As for the Latin or modern versions, it will be plain. The ancienter Greek rendring the verb by supplant, seems to have taken it to have the same signification with אָקָב Akab (which consists of the same letters though otherwise transposed) to supplant, defraud, or deceive (whence Jacob according to Esau's interpretation, had his name, Gen. xxvii. 36.) but it falls in well with the first signification, according to which the other Greeks render it more plainly, ἀποστερήσει, will a man defraud his God. The Chaldee rendring it, by, provoke to anger, useth his liberty of a Paraphrast, rather than a literal Translator, the provoking of God to anger being an effect of what they did, he expresseth the sin by its effects and consequents; and so in rendring judges (wherein he is as we saw by some others followed) what we and most others render God, taketh the word in a signification in which it is also used elsewhere in Scripture, viz. to signify judges, who supply the place of God, and not only God himself.

By this enquiry into the signification of that word which we proposed, have we not only discovered the grounds of the different translations of this place, but in part also shewed how they are between themselves more reconcilable than at first sight or hearing might be judged. By what hath been said will also easily appear, that among all there is not a more convenient or justifiable rendring than that of Ours, who translate it to rob, which will express wherein they sinned in defrauding God, either by taking away or abridging and detaining what was due to him: and so from this necessary digression in looking into the signification of the words, return we to consider the scope of them.

Will a man rob God?] This question thus put serves not only to convince them, that they were guilty of the breach of God's ordinances, which they denied themselves to be, but shews together the greatness of the sin wherein they offended, as a thing which even the common consent of men, and their reason shewed most unfit to be done. Do ye not know that it is not fit that a man should rob his God? saith Abarbinel, his God, or Gods, for the word Elohim is the plural number, in which though it be usually spoken of the one true God, yet it is also elsewhere so used as to comprehend also idols and false Gods, such as men made and took to themselves in the place of God, though they were indeed no Gods. And ¹ Some conceive, it ought here so to be taken, and that so there is a greater emphasis in the words and force, for convincing them of great impiety, by shewing that they who knew and acknowledged the only true God, and pretended to serve him, did yet that towards him which any idolatrous, ignorant heathen would not dare, or offer to do toward their false Gods. Would any of them rob, or sacrilegiously defraud those whom they took, though falsely, to be gods, of such dues, as under that notion of God, were looked on as belonging or due to them, though they were such as could do them no good? none of them, but would abhor it as a wicked thing. Ye therefore are worse and more wicked than any of them, for ye have robbed me, your benefactor, from whom ye have all that ye have. They also who take (as we before said) God here for judges, or great men, look on it as an argument concluding from the less to the greater. If men dare not, or will not, or ought not to provoke such persons as are in authority among them on earth, by defrauding them of what is due to them, as it is plain they will not, or ought not; how much more ought you to beware of offending against me by robbing and defrauding me?

Yet ye have robbed me.] Ye have done it, yet ye deny it: They said, or were, or behaved themselves as if they said, wherein have we robbed thee? Seeing they will not perceive or acknowledge wherein they had done it, he particularly expresseth it to them, saying, In tithes and offerings, in that they detained, and did not duly and willingly bring in those dues, which he that gave them all that they had, did require, that they in acknowledgment of his bounty, should offer and return to him, as a portion by him reserved to himself for the maintenance of the Priests and Levites, and such as waited on his service, and for the relief of the poor, out of such encrease of their fields, and fruits of the earth, and the like which he gave them. In detaining these from the Priests and Levites, to whom by his command they were to be given, and so robbing and defrauding them, they, he saith, robbed him himself. If they thought by this means to have ^m any ease or greater store to themselves, being, as it appears by what follows, then under a judgment of famine and scarcity, he gives them to know that they are in this deceived, and their penury, not their store, shall be encreased by the continuance of his curse upon them, saying in the next words,

^h Exod. xxi. 6.¹ Calvin.^m Abarb.

9. Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation.

Ye are cursed with a curse, for ye have robbed me, &c.] The words thus read, give us the effect, and ill consequence of that their sin of robbing God in tithes and offerings, and so the coherence is plain, and is that, which by many, if not most, Expositors is followed; and will be all one as to that, whether it be read as by Ours, and Others, in the present tense, ye are cursed, as speaking of a curse already on them, or (as Grotius takes it) in the future, of a curse to come, or at least to be continued on them, ye shall be cursed; viz. for this your sin, even because ye have robbed me, great evils (such as appear to be in the following verses, "penury and scarceness") shall come upon you; as if he should say, because you have scant me, I will scant you, and repay you in your own measure. But a late learned man thinks the meaning to be mistaken in this rendering, and that to be put for the effect, which was indeed the cause of their robbing God, viz. that therefore they robbed him, because they were cursed with that curse of scarcity. He doth not (saith he) make the robbing of God the cause why they were cursed, but his curse the impulsive cause why they robbed God: for they pretended that it was not to be thought much that they detained the tithes and offerings; seeing they were forced to it, by reason of the want of the fruits of the earth caused by the curse of God. But God required that though they had scarcity, and his curse were on them, yet they should bring in his full tithes of what they had, which if they did, he promiseth to return and bless them. This exposition he prefers before any, though he name another also, viz. by way of interrogation, ye are cursed with a curse, and do ye rob me? i. e. Is it not a wonder that ye are not deterred by the punishments which I have sent on you, but do rob me even when ye are cursed? or without an interrogation, ye are cursed, and yet ye rob me, even this whole nation: as if he should say, I cannot but accuse you of great perverseness and stubbornness, who when ye be cursed by me, go on to rob me, and that your whole nation. This he saith, excepting against the ordinary translations and expositions. But if we consider the words in respect to what precedes, we shall find them to comprehend what is by either said.

In the second chapter, ver. 2. we hear God threatening to send a curse upon them, yea, telling them that he had already cursed them. The sins for which he there threatens them are manifest out of the foregoing chapter, to have been their misbehaviour in bringing their offerings to God, in that they offered polluted bread upon his altar, and in that they brought to him, to whom the best of their substance was due, that which was torn, lame, sick, and corrupt. There was in that plainly a robbing of him, while detaining to themselves the best things which were due to him, they gave him only the worst, and that which they cared not for. And for that, he threatneth, if they would not amend it, to send a curse upon them; yea, tells them that the curse was already gone forth: they that would rob him in that kind, would not stick to rob him in others also, though not fully expressed till now, viz. in defrauding him by detaining their tithes and offerings, which here mentioning, he mentions again that curse by their evil dealing brought upon them, and tells them that it should not be removed, till they brought in all the tithes into the storehouse; so that we may conceive, the cause of the curse to have been their robbing him, and then the curse being a curse of scarcity and penury, that to have caused them, that they might make themselves whole, as much as they could, to detain what they should have given him, which he shews to have been a wrong course, and a farther cause to him of continuing the curse on them, which should not be removed but upon their amendment of their doings; so that, if it be asked what was the cause of the curse on them, we may say with ours and other Interpreters, that it was, their robbing of God: if, what was the cause that they pretended for their robbing of God, we may say with that learned man, that it was the penury or scarcity which by the curse of God was brought on them: they pretended that his tithes and offerings would be more than they could spare out of that small store which he gave them, or their wicked thought (as if they stood on even terms with him) was, that seeing he had stinted and abridged them of what he was wont to give them, they would abridge him of what they were commanded and ought to give him: if then it be farther asked what was the effect of this proceeding to rob him; that it was a continuance of his curse to them. So that though we look on what he saith as true, in respect of the cause which they pretended for the robbing of God, yet we cannot but according to what Others say look on that their fraudulent dealing, as a cause provoking God to send his curse on them, and so to join both expositions together. And in this the Jewish Expositors shew us the way. R. Solomon Jarchi thus expounds them, "Ye are cursed with a curse for this iniquity, because I send a curse on the works of your hands, and yet notwithstanding ye do rob me." Aben Ezra thus, "Because ye say, How shall we give with a good eye (or cheerfully) out of this little? but this is not good (or well) that ye rob me, because of the curse and scarcity with which ye are cursed, and are in want; but this do, Bring in all the tithe, and I will pour upon you a blessing, &c. that they should not give with an evil eye. By the curse you ought to have been corrected, (or amended) and not provoked to rob me." R. David Kimchi, thus, "Ye are cursed with a curse: for those transgressions which were before mentioned, as

• So the Vulgar Latin, Ye are cursed with penury.

• Lud. de Dieu.

“ as he said, yea, I have cursed you. Yet “ farther, still you do add iniquity to iniquity, “ and ye rob me out of that which you ga“ ther, in that you do not give me of it the “ offering, and the tithes, and ye say he rob-“ beth us of rain, and sends a curse on the “ fruits, and shall we give him the offering
 “ and the tithes?” And lastly Abarinel, “ Do ye think to get ease by denying to give “ to me the tithe and offering, as ye ought?
 “ the matter is not so, for for this iniquity ye “ are cursed with a curse by me. Yet not“ withstanding ye rob me, and so the matter “ is become hurtful to you, and hurtful to “ the Levites and Priests.”

What is added, even this whole nation, R. David Kimchi thinks to intimate, that the whole nation was not equally guilty of the other forementioned sins, but of this they were. Some join these words with the former words, thus, ye are cursed with a curse, even this whole nation, because ye have robbed me: but the plainer construction seems that which Ours follow, ye are cursed with a curse, and (or for) ye have robbed me, even this whole nation, all of you have done it; joining them with the immediately preceding words. The sense will be much the same, and one infer the other, a general sin and a general curse; so that these words will necessarily be referred to both, and shew both the extent of the sin, and of the curse, all the whole nation being concerned in both. And for the punishment they repined, but did not repent of the sin, but rather more obstinately went on in it, and thought to have stood it out with God; but they took not a right course herein, they could not by this get the better of God. If they would be eased of the curse, it must be by pacifying him, not by thinking to make themselves whole out of his part; and therefore he shews in the next words, what is the only way for them to take, even to amend in themselves their error.

10. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it.

11. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts.

12. And all nations shall call you blessed: for ye shall be a delightful land, saith the Lord of hosts.

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, &c.] Their sin, it appears, consisted, in that they detained part of those tithes, which they ought, according to the law, to have paid, and did abridge God of his due; some (it seems) they brought in, as much as they thought good, not so much as he had commanded. So that by this means there was not sufficient maintenance for those who were to wait on his service, the Priests and Levites, and were by that his due to have been maintained, that without distraction they might attend on their office; this their doing is called robbing of God.

For illustrating the things here said, it will be convenient to look on what we have of the history of those times recorded in the book of Nehemiah, in which we read, chap. v. 3. that there was a great dearth among them. And this curse, here spoken of, seems to have been a present dearth or scarcity, not only one threatened for the future: then chap. xiii. ver. 10, &c. that “ Nehemiah found that the portions of the Levites had not been given them, so that they forsook their work, and fled every man to his field to get a livelihood.” And the occasion of this appears to be, because all the tithes were not paid, for so upon Nehemiah’s contending with the rulers about it, it is said, ver. 12. Then brought all Judah the tithe of the corn, and the new wine and the oyl into the treasuries, or storehouses, as in the Margin, and as here translated; the word being in both the same, denoting such a room as was at the temple appointed for the laying up of those things brought in, as ver. 5. of that 13th chapter is described, viz. a great room, or rooms, where they laid the meat-offerings, the frankincense, and the vessels, and the tithes of the corn, the new wine, and the oyl, which was commanded to be given to the Levites, and the singers, and the porters, and the offerings of the priests. But those things were not duly given to them as it appears by reason of the people’s defect in bringing them in. Grotius thinks that the sin, here found fault with, was, that whereas out of the Terumah or offering mentioned, Deut. xviii. 4. and such other gifts as were due to the priests, they ought to have maintained the daily sacrifices; they either did it not at all, or in such illegal fraudulent manner as is reprov’d in the first chapter, and that the priests took the whole tithes to themselves, and did not give to the Levites what ought to have been distributed to them, viz. nine parts of them, and that the whole nation became guilty in robbing God, because that when they saw the Levites were not maintained out of the tithes, they abstained from bringing them, and so God was robbed; both because such things were not performed to him, for which the offerings were given, and because the Levites were not maintained, as they ought to be, but forsook his service for want of sustenance, and so he was deprived of their ministry. But neither here, nor in Nehemiah, is any thing specified in these kinds, but only the people accused for not bringing in all their tithes, by which failure in them, there was not meat in his house, i. e. maintenance, for his altar and those that ministered at it, and did service service in his house, whether Priests or Levites. For which sin he is angry with them, and commands it here to be redressed by the whole nation, which were all guilty, by their bringing in all the tithes into the storehouse; and so in Nebemiah it is said that that zealous Governor caused all Judah to do, and that he then set treasurers over the treasuries, to see them distributed as they ought. How long before that was done, this was spoken by the Prophet, the history of the Scripture doth not make clear. But herein do these two books well agree, in that both here and there a dearth is spoken of: and as here the people are reproved for robbing God in tithes and offerings, so there it is testified that they did detain them; and whereas, here they are exhorted to redress that sin, by bringing them all duly in, for removing the curse that was on them; so there we read that Nebemiah prevailed on them so to do, as perceiving that there was no other way for averting God's wrath from them. What was the issue on their doing so, the history doth not proceed so far as to declare, but here in the Prophet we have assurance, that if with a willing and pious mind they should do so, it should be good; God would remove the curse, and abundantly bless them. If they would be so just to God, and kind to themselves as to put it to the trial, by but doing what they ought to do, they should find that God would not fail in any measure of his promise, but would on their obedience do more for them than by virtue thereof they might ordinarily expect. This he gives assurance of in the next words, And prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, &c.

The connexion of these words with the former verse, and the meaning of them, as likewise with the following, Abarbinel thus gives, [And if ye shall say that this curse on the fruits of the earth, is not because of this, but that it is an accident to you, come now let us make a trial, Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, as much as if he should say, give the tithes and offerings in full measure, and with a good eye, and bring them into the Lord's storehouse, that there may be meat, i. e. sustenance, and maintenance for the ministers of my house, the Priests and Levites, and prove me now by this. For (saith he) though the law saith, ye shall not tempt the Lord your God, Deut. vi. 16. * yet now for your information at this present (on this present occasion) prove me, and tempt (or try me) if I will not open you the windows of heaven, to give the rain of your land in its season, in such a manner as that I will pour out upon you a blessing to בלי Beli dai, i. e. not to enough only, and such as shall be sufficient, but more and more than enough, that is, a great addition: (but R. D. Kimchi, saith he, expounds it, till there be not vessels to put it in;) and by this ye shall know that for transgressing in matter of tithes, this curse hath been on the corn (or encrease of the earth) hitherto. And because the locust and the caterpillar came upon them, and devoured their fruits in the fields and vineyards, therefore he saith, and I will rebuke for you (or for your sakes) the devourer, viz. the locust which devoureth the encrease, (or fruits of the earth) in such a manner as that he shall not destroy any more to you the fruit of the ground, and of the vine; 'for by the will of God are the ways of them; the beast of the field, and the fowl of the air shall make peace with thee, and the earth shall yield her encrease in full perfection, so that in respect of the abundance of the fruits which you shall have, all nations shall call you blessed. And whereas you have been a reproach amongst the nations, because of the famine occasioned by the curse, with which I cursed you, for your iniquities; now when all the fruits shall be blessed, ye shall be counted blessed, and prosperous in the eyes of all nations, and they shall say that your land is a land of delight, in which I delight, and that therefore the fruits thereof are blessed.] Thus have we given his words at large, because they give an entire and good paraphrase and exposition of these three verses, viz. 10, 11, 12. without interruption, yet because of some different expositions of others, we shall again more particularly reflect on some of the words and expressions.

Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open, &c.] * Some look on this as an implicit form of oath, and an imperfect speech to be supplied, by adding after it, if I will not open, &c. then let me be accounted worse than my word, or the like; because it is usual with the Scripture, when things are to be expressed, which seem to denote something which may sound of blasphemy, or contain any thing unfit to be said, to be silent, and rather leave men to conceive them, than to utter them, or else to use some more comely or honest expression. But however this rule may be elsewhere applicable, here seems to be no need of it. According to those here is a stop made after, prove me now herewith, and a distinct member of the sentence to begin. But read all, as in our Translation and Others in a continued sense, and the meaning is plain without any such supply, or any abruptness, in the speech, as if he should say, you, in doing what you do, take a wrong course; neither your detaining my dues, nor murmuring against my justice, shall any thing prevail for good or help to you in this curse of penury, under which ye suffer; but if you will find relief, do what I prescribe to you, Bring in all your tithes, &c. and thereby prove me whether I will not quickly remove the curse, by giving all necessary causes and means of a contrary blessing. And so it implies a promise, that he will do it, they shall certainly find it; * and that the parting with that which they detained, as fearing the parting therewith should diminish their store, shall ways please the Lord, Prov. xvi. 7.

* In the forecited place, and in chap. x. 35, 36, &c.

* Pils. Rib. Menoch. Stock. and see Chr. à Castro, in Paraph. Haggai ii. 15. and forwards.

* Compare Isaiah vii. 11, &c.

* Or, for when their

* Com-

shall be a way, the only way for great encrease of it.

To this purpose R. D. Kimchi explains the words, "Bring in all your tithes, &c. that there may be meat for those that serve me, and withal repent you of the faults mentioned; if ye do not, I will punish you with other punishments; but if you do bring in all the tithes and offerings as ye ought, I will give you rain, and pour out on you a blessing."

Pelicanus, a learned and serious man, in this exposition follows him, who also from what is here said, with great reason urgeth on Christians under the gospel, a diligent care of due and willing paying such tithes and oblations, as are for the maintenance of the ministry, &c. As likewise Oecolampadius, saying, that Christian liberty exempteth none from tithes that were wont to be paid. But to receive what either they or any other in like kind, deduce and conclude from these words, will not be to our present purpose, which is to clear only the literal exposition of the words, and shew what meaning they will bear.

If I will not open, &c.] That which is here promised, is generally agreed on to be a plentiful rain, by restraint of which, there was occasioned a dearth in the land, and this the Lord saith, he will give. Though the rain proceed from natural causes constituted by God, as other things in the order of nature do, yet the ordering of those causes and effects, as concerning rain, hath always been looked on as an immediate act of God himself, whereby his power and mercy towards men have been as visibly declared as in any thing, and as a particular act of his providence, in causing it to come, (or not come) whether for correction, or for his land, or for mercy, Job xxxvii. 13. It is therefore an ancient saying among the Jews, that there be three keys which God hath reserved in his own hand, and hath not delivered to any minister or substitute, viz. the keys of life, and of rain, and of the resurrection of the dead; in the ordering of the rain they look on his great power to appear, no less than in giving life at first, or afterwards raising the dead to it: agreeable to which St. Paul saith, that God left himself not without witness, in that he did good, and gave rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, Acts xiv. 17. It was a manifest testimony always to all nations of his divine power, and so acknowledged; so that it will not be necessary to look into those many places of Scripture, wherein he speaks of it as so, either by promising to give it for a blessing, or restrain it for a curse and punishment.

When he restrains it, he is in a figurative speech said to shut up heaven, as Deut. xi. 17. and Luke iv. 25. and to stop the windows of heaven, Gen. viii. 2. equivalent to which is another expression of making the heaven brass, Deut. xxviii. 23. and staying it, Haggai i. 10. When he giveth it in abundance, he is said, to open the windows (or as ² Others the cataraacts or flood-gates) of heaven; as here; and likewise, Gen. vii. 11. but there it was for a curse, (as sometimes he disposeth it, as we have seen out of Job xxxvii. 13.) here for a blessing. Which way soever it be intended, there is no doubt but that the expression is (as Aben Ezra notes) a proverbial phrase for signifying a great abundance: and because abundance thereof may be (as we said) as well for a curse at some times, as a blessing at others; and it is in the disposal of God to order for which it shall be, to shew that his promise here is for good, he adds, and pour you out a blessing, viz. of plenty, contrary to their present condition of penury. Both the rain, and the making it a blessing, is from him and his ordering. And he saith of that blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. So according to our Translation; and so (as we already noted from Abarbinel.) R. D. Kimchi (reporting it as from his father) saith that the meaning is, in such plenty that you shall not have vessels, or storehouses sufficient to receive it. The words in the original are concise עַד בְּלִי דַּי Ad belidai, and literally signify only unto not enough, which being an expression not so intelligible in other languages, Interpreters differently render and explain it in their own tongues, which renderings it will be to no purpose to recite, inasmuch as they all agree in this, that it is an expression to denote great abundance, which shall afford them not only enough to satisfy them, but more than enough, that they shall have to spare; plenty without measure, or such as for its abundance cannot be measured, as R. Tanchum expresses it. Instead of what is in the Text of our Bibles, is put in the Margin, empty out, which either must be understood, as that in the Text, or else will not be so clear an expression, inasmuch as it may seem to import, that God's store may be emptied, which can never be. L. de Dieu would have it understood, as long as there is sufficiency, which is perpetually, for God's sufficiency cannot be exhausted. But for the completing to them a blessing contrary to the curse under which they suffered, it would not be sufficient that they should have rain and fruitful seasons; these might make the earth yield her encrease, and bring forth in plenty all manner of grain and fruits, and yet they by other means be deprived of them, as by locusts, canker-worms, caterpillars, and the like devouring creatures, which God calls his great army, Joel ii. 25. which in a short time oft have destroyed the hope of the whole year, and occasioned great famines, when there hath been expectation of greatest plenty; and probably these were part of that curse now upon them. For perfecting therefore the blessing here promised on their amendment of their ways, he promiseth also to secure them from these, and all hurt by them, saying, I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, (or to, or for you) i. e. that all things may prosper to you. The devourer; because there were many sorts of such creatures,

as

* On ver. 8. 7 Talmud in Sanhedrin. cap. Chelek. and in Taanith. c. 1. 2 See Vulg. Lat. and Doway Engl. 3 Compare 2 Kings vii. 19. 4 And so the Interlineary.

as may devour and corrupt the corn and fruits, he puts a general name that comprehends all; all of them will he rebuke, i. e. hinder from doing hurt. They are wont to do hurt, not only to the trees of the ground, the corn and herbage, but to the fruit-trees also, by causing them also not to be able to bring any fruit to perfection, as appears by Joel i. 7. according to what some there expound the words. However that place be understood, the thing is known and manifest, and therefore both Munster and the Figurin Latin Version, instead of what Ours render, neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, &c. translate it, neither shall he (i. e. the devourer) make your vine barren (or unfruitful to you in the field,) and to that doth that exposition of Abarbinel (which we have seen) seem to incline. The verb חשבל Teshacel is of that form, as that it signifies sometimes to cause to make abortive, to deprive of, and the like in an active sense, as Deut. xxxii. 25. The sword, &c. shall destroy, or bereave, and Ezek. xiv. 15. If I cause noisom beasts to pass through the land, ושבלתה Veshicclattah, and they spoil it, or bereave it. And in the same sense, Hosea ix. 12. שכלתי Shiccaltim, I will bereave them, to omit other examples: and sometimes again in an absolute sense, viz. to be abortive, to be deprived of, or cast fruit before it be perfect, as Gen. xxxi. 31. Thy ewes and thy she-goats, לא שכלו Lo shiccelu, have not cast their young (or been abortive,) and Job xxi. 10. Their cow calveth, ולא תשכל Vela teshacel, and casteth not her calf. Those therefore mentioned take the verb in the former signification; Ours and most Others, both Jewish and Christian Expositors, in the latter, to which we the more incline, because otherwise here will be a change of the gender in the verb, speaking of the same thing, for that in the word destroy is masculine, but here is feminine, so that they seem one to agree with the first noun locust, which is of the masculine gender, and the other with vine in the feminine, however such change of genders may be admitted: and seeing though the locusts destroy not the vines, yet there may be other means, as blasts, or blights, and hurtful winds, and like causes, whether from within or without, which may make them lose or cast their fruit before it comes to maturity, even after a great shew and likelihood of plenty; from hurt by all such causes, whether from such devouring creatures, or any other means, God here promiseth to secure them upon their turning to him, and to give them both the encrease of the earth, and fruit of the vine, and so all necessary things in such plenty and perfection, that all nations seeing God's great goodness shewed unto them, shall call them blessed, For ye (saith he) shall be ארץ חפז Eretz chephets, a delightful land, or land of delight, or desire; worthy to be desired, saith the Vulgar, i. e. (as Some will) a land that men would desire to live in. So

R. Tanchum, a land to be desired and chosen for its pleasantness, and excellency, to the same sense that it is said, which is the glory of all lands, Ezek. xx. 6, 15. Others with Abarbinel understand it, a land of desire, or well pleasing to God, i. e. such as he takes delight in, and shews extraordinary respect and favour to, both to the people and the land, (as Aben Ezra) as he saith elsewhere of Zion, that she should be called Hephzibab, Isaiah lxii. 4. i. e. my delight is in her, because, saith he, the Lord delighteth in thee: and the comparing that place with this, seems to make for this exposition, and it will be well illustrated by what is said, Deut. xi. 12. a land which the Lord thy God careth for, (or seeketh,) the eyes of the Lord thy God are always upon it, from the beginning of the year, even unto the end of the year, viz. to give it its rain in due season, the first rain to make it spring up, and the latter rain to bring it to perfection, and so to preserve the fruits of the earth, that they might gather in their corn, and their wine, and their oil, ver. 14. which is the same care, and the same blessing that is here promised. This exposition the Syrack follows, rendring it ארץ חפז Ar'o detzebyoni, A land of my delight, good will or pleasure, i. e. to which I bear good will, or have good liking to. The Chaldee likewise taketh it in, rendring, And all nations shall praise you, because you dwell in the land of the house of my majestic presence, and do therein my pleasure. He suggests therein a double meaning or respect to the word חפז Chephets, as, first, that they or their land should be called a land of delight, or good will, because God delighted to dwell in it, and, secondly, because the inhabitants thereof did the good pleasure of God and delighted to do his will; and therefore he delighted in them, and to do good to them, as appeared by his extraordinary blessings poured out upon them, more than on other people, which they should all acknowledge and call them blessed for it; so saith the Lord of hosts, of all the hosts of heaven and earth, who hath power and command of all, and therefore so shall it certainly be, as he saith.

13. ¶ Your words have been stout against me, saith the Lord: yet ye say, What have we spoken so much against thee?

14. Ye have said, It is vain to serve God; and what profit is it that we have kept his ordinance, and that we have walked mournfully before the Lord of hosts?

15. And now we call the proud happy: yea, they that work wickedness are set up, yea, they that tempt God are even delivered.

16. ¶ Then they that feared the Lord, spake often one to another, and the Lord hearkened, and heard it; and a book of remembrance was

* Jerom. &c.
and Filin.

† See Dan. xi. 16. and so Zach. vii. 14. ספר חפז.

• R. Solomon Jarchi, Aben Ezra,

was written before him, for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name.

Your words have been stout against me, saith the Lord.] These words may be coupled with the former, as if they were a complaint of the Jews stubbornness, that though God had re-proved them for their sins (such as have been expressed) and by some judgments warned them of his displeasure for them, and likewise had invited them to repentance, and promised upon their repentance to remove those judgments, and turn the curse, with which he had cursed them, into a blessing, yet this was so far from working in them repentance that they grew more and more insolent, and instead of acknowledging their faults and ill deserts, proceeded in speaking against him and his justice, as if he inflicted on them worse than they deserved, not accepting of any service from them, and mean while seemed to favour those that were notoriously wicked, and tempted him, and despised him, and so set at nought what by the Prophets was spoken to them for their good. Wherefore he proceeds farther to reprove them, and mind them of the ill consequences of such their ill behaviour, which shall be occasion of more heavy judgments, and final destruction, as between this and the end of the chapter he shews. Or we need not be solicitous of the coherence of these words with those immediately preceding, but may look upon them as a new reproof, or at least afresh resumed; and on what follows as a beginning or continuation of a prophecy for the time to come, and of the terrible day of the Lord; after the former words inserted for shewing them what was the cause of that judgment of famine at present upon them, and by what means they might remove it, for the fault here objected to them, is much the same with that mentioned in the last verse of the foregoing chapter. However we make or judge of the coherence, the meaning of the words in themselves will be the same, your words have been stout against me, stout and great, or insolent words have ye spoken against me, saith Abarbinel; and that will be the sense however there be some little difference between ^k Translators in expressing it. For all look upon it to denote that their words were such as would be irksome, grievous, and burthensome to any man, and overcome his patience, by casting hard and odious things on him undeservedly; and so (God speaking in the language of men) looks on them as to himself; or, that their words were more and more insolent against him.

Yet ye say, wherein have we spoken so much against thee. The words so much are supplied or added above what is in the letter of the Hebrew Text; I suppose to express what Some (as namely ^m Kimchi) observe that the word נִדְבָרָנִי Nidbaru, being in a passive form though active signification, implies more than in a simple active form, so as to denote not only speaking, but a continual, reiterated, or much and frequent speaking; and so here doth the Chaldee render, wherein have we multiplied speaking, or spoken much, against thee? which way Ours therefore take: Others seem not to lay any such weight upon it, but simply render it, what have we spoken against thee? but generally they render it actively, as it is elsewhere used, as Psalm exix. 23. Princes בְּנֵי נִדְבָרָנִי Bi nidbaru, spoke against me; and Ezek. xxxiii. 30. הַנִּדְבָרִים Hannidbarim, which Ours render still talking against. Yet here Abarbinel thinks it may be more conveniently taken for a verb passive, as well in signification as in form, and be rendered, what are we spoken of to thee, what is said of us to thee, or what are we reported by false accusers to have said against thee, as men use to do when they are accused of some ill that they have spoken in secret, to say to him that tells them of it, what false report is this that hath been brought to you concerning us? this way also Montanus commends; though not mentioning whom he follows in it. The words either way taken, include a denial of the fact, and shew their folly in thinking that God did not know what they thought and said in secret, even in their hearts, except they spake it openly and loudly in the ears of all; or else some to whom they spake it should report it to God. He therefore, to shew that he knew both what was in their mouths and hearts, and to convince them of their guiltiness in that which he accuseth them of, answers them by a particular declaration of what they said. If ye say, what have we spoken against thee? it is this, ye have said, it is vain to serve God, &c.

Ye have said so, at least thought in your hearts, which is all one with speaking, in the ears of God. It is vain to serve God, שָׁוְיָ עָבַד אֱלֹהִים Shav abod Elohim. The Greek and ancient Latin, He is vain that serveth God, as if they had read עֹבֵד Obed, he that serveth, for Abod, to serve; but I do not suppose them to have read so, but only to have given the meaning as they thought convenient, for it is all one to say, It is in vain to do such a thing, or, He is vain that doth such a thing; the meaning of both being, It is to no purpose that he doth such a thing; or he looeth his labour that doth it, he gets nothing by it, as the Chaldee here paraphraseth it, He gains nothing which serves the Lord. It is vain: to wit, to him that so doth: though it may, as ⁿ Some think, be referred to him to whom it is done, i. e. no profit to God if we serve him: according to what is said, Job xxxv. 7. If thou be righteous, what givest thou him? or what receiveth he of thine hand? but the former is the plainer. The expression gives to suppose, that they served God; and this supposition the Syriack taking in renders, In vain have we served God, and so it well agrees with what follows; and what profit is it that we have kept his ordinance, what Mammon, or wealth, ^f See Cyril. ^g See Abarb. ^h As Aben Ezra notes, This Prophecy is לֵעֲתִיד Leatid, concerning the time to come. ⁱ Abarb. and see the Greek. ^k See Vulg. Lat. Chald. Syriack, &c. Ribera, &c. ^l Vat. and see Calv. ^m See Abarb. here, and on Ezek. xxxiii. 30. ⁿ Abarb. ^o Read Job xxii. 2, 3.

wealth, have we gained? saith the Cbaldee, (as if it were for Mammon's sake only that they served God, and so indeed not God at all, but Mammon.)

His ordinance, or as in the Margin; bis observation,] i. e. that we have observed those things that he hath commanded us to observe. What advantage have we gained by it? yea though we have walked mournfully (or as the Margin hath it) in black,^p which is the habit of mourners: or, as Others, with bowing down, or the like submiss gesture, before the Lord of hosts; and shewed in our behaviour all signs of penitence, and^q awful fear of him by mourning, fasting, and humbling our selves in contrition of spirit (as the Cbaldee hath it) before him and the like. Which last words Abarbinel seems to expound otherwise, viz. "We have not only not gained any thing, but withal, have been forced to walk mournfully and afflictedly before the Lord, i. e. because we have kept his commandments." But the former construction seems plainer, in that the particle כי Ci, that, or because, with which the last foregoing member of the sentence is joined with what goes before; is here again repeated with a copulative conjunction, that we have done that, and that we have done this. Their complaint (according to him) was, that there was no profit in serving God, either on God's part or their own, no advantage to either; and therefore that it was a vain labour: they were happier that saved themselves that trouble; so it follows,

And now (or now therefore) we call the proud happy.] Proud, insolent, presumptuous men, who will not be kept in by any bounds, nor observe God's ordinances, as we do, nor walk humbly before him,^r but transgress all laws of religion and justice. [The same word used, Psalms xix. 13. substantively is rendred prides, or presumptuous sins; but here adjectively, presumptuous sinners.] Such we look upon to be in a condition more to be envied and desired, than pitied or feared for, inasmuch as they enjoy all wordly pleasures and prosperity, nor are overtaken, or, as far as we can perceive, like to be overtaken with any punishment or mischief, in their persons, or any belonging to them; yea so far is it from that, that they that work wickedness (set themselves purposely to do it) are set up (or built, as the Margin hath it, for so the word בנו Nibnu literally signifies) i. e. are firmly established, like a new building, saith^s One, not likely quickly to fall or decay. They flourish in their offspring, say^t Others, alluding to the name בן Ben, son, in respect to which the verb that signifies building is used for to obtain children, and so by Ours rendred, Gen. xvi. 2. and xxx. 3. i. e. they raise their houses and families, as^u One paraphrases it here: ^x they are not cut off, but leave a numerous posterity to keep up their name; or generally, they flourish and prosper more and more, all things thrive and prosper with them, yea, farther yet, they that set themselves so impudently to sin, as to tempt God, as if they did it on purpose to try and prove him, whether he could or would punish sinners, and to provoke and dare him to do his worst, to execute judgment if he be a God of judgment; even these are delivered, and escape without any of those punishments in the law, or by the Prophets threatened against obstinate, impenitent sinners. These are the words, or thoughts of those unsound ones in their religion, and unsincere in their practice, who, looking on what they saw at present, and not on what should certainly in due time be made manifest for clearing God's justice, and his perpetual love to good, and hatred of evil, did hence take occasion of questioning whether there were any just Judge or judgment: and of repining and murmuring against God's ordering of the affairs of men, and so of contemning and setting at nought what was by the Prophets, reproving them for their sins, and calling them to repentance for removing such judgments as were on them, or preventing of others, said unto them. Who they were that said these words, and when they said them, and concerning whom, it is not particularly expressed. R. Tanchum therefore, as he did also, chap. ii. 17. looks upon them as representing words which should in time to come be spoken by Israel in captivity, such at least, as if they did not speak or profess, yet might seem to have occasion to do it. And that they are here recited for reproof to them that should be impatient under the length of their captivity, and forsake their religion, and speak thus in respect to what they should perceive of the prosperity of heathenish nations notwithstanding their impiety: to which is added in the following words a declaration, that those that endure patiently and stick to the truth, shall in the end be rewarded in the best manner, as in the two following verses, Then they that feared the Lord, &c. and then is added a mention likewise of the punishment of those that are not so affected, and the punishment of the wicked injurious nations also, (as he saith, ver. 18. and chap. iv. 1. then shall ye return and discern between the righteous and the wicked, &c. Behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, &c.) But as to the former part of his words, it cannot be made out of what is here spoken, as neither out of the last verse of the second chapter, but is destructive to the right meaning of them.

The words being directed to them that were returned from the Babylonish captivity, manifestly concern the behaviour of them now again settled in their country, which was not such as it ought to have been, and therefore they are reprov'd for it; that which is here objected to them, appears to have been a sin of impatience and blasphemy against God, and his providence and justice, of which too many or most of them were guilty; yet not all, for while the discontented ones among them spake thus impiously of God and his justice, there were were others that feared the Lord, and spake among themselves otherwise, as is manifest by the next words. But he seems to mean it of the time of the captivity, that they are now under, and a future judgment yet to come, wherein he is manifestly wide of the matter, and passing over the times of the Prophet, and the present people of which he spake, transfers the words to such times as they do not properly concern, times now present and yet to come: and taking no notice of that day of the Lord, which was here prophesied of, as then indeed to come, but which is long since come, would have another yet on earth to be expected, as if the Lord, the Messiah, whose coming was that day, were not yet come, which is the common error of the Jews, which hath been already discovered, and will in considering the following words be farther discovered, if God permit.

^p Druf. ^q Abu Walid, and R. Tanchum. ^r Vulg. Lat. ^s R. Tanch. ^t Abarb. ^u Grotius. See Rib. and Chr. à Castro, ^x Stokes. ^y Ribera.

As for what, therefore, is spoken by way of reproof and comfort, it must be applied to the right persons concerned therien, which doubtless were in the first place those of that present time, and then such as should succeed them betwixt that and the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans; the completion of that day of the Lord's coming, both before, ver. 2. and after chap. iv. 1. spoken of. Those at that present for the most part of them murmured against God's justice, in the manner here described, yet, then mean while (as it follows in the next verse,) they that feared the Lord hearing what the Prophet said, spake often one to another. The word, often, is not expressed in the Hebrew, and therefore the words are by Others rendred, only spake one to another. But our Translators thought good to supply it, as being included in the word נִדְבָרִי Nidbaru, according to what we have seen to be observed by some of the force of the verb in this form on ver. 13. What they spake is not here expressed, except we render it otherwise, as ^a Some do, spake one to another, saying, certainly God bearkneth and beareth, &c. as if the words following were those that they spake. But this ^a seems somewhat harsh, in regard that the copulative, and, which is in the original, in וַיִּקְשֹׁב Vayakshob, and the Lord bearkned, is wrested to another signification. It is more easy to understand it thus to be meant, that as the wicked spake much among themselves, so these also did, but contrary things; they against God's justice, ^b these in vindication of it, believing what the Prophet said, and expecting the completion of it: and what they said was not in vain to them, for the Lord bearkned, and heard it.

But before we proceed to those words, we may here take notice that as Abarbinel (as we shewed) differs in the understanding of this word נִדְבָרִי Nidbar, in the 13th verse, so here he goes much more wide from them, taking it in clean another signification from that which he himself gave it there, and Others both here and there give it. For here he would have the words rendred, as continued with the former, and part of what those blasphemers, before mentioned, said, viz. that then they that feared the Lord were destroyed, from another signification that the same root hath, and is used in, as in other places according to him and some others. So in 2 Chron. xxii. 10. וַתִּדְּבֹר Vattedabber, and she destroyed all the seed royal; and from it is the noun דִּבְרָה Deber, which signifies the plague, or such destructive sickness: so that according to him the sense is, that when the presumptuous sinners, that work wickedness, are set up, and though they tempt God by exposing themselves to the greatest dangers, are yet delivered; then at that very time they that fear the Lord perish, are cut off and destroyed, one together with another, אֵל el, to, being here the same that עִם Im, with, (or, are by evil accidents intangling them, made destructive and causes of perdition one to another,) as if the hand of God were upon them to confound and destroy them. Thus far he would have the words of those that spake against God's justice to reach, and then the following words, the Lord bearkned, &c. to be an answer from the Prophet to them; as if he should say to them, Know and consider that to all this that you say, God hearkneth and heareth it, and that both the righteousness of the righteous, and the wickedness of the wicked are as manifest before him, as if all were written in a book of remembrance, that it might remain many days, till the time of due recompence and reward, &c.

And the same way of exposition with him doth Arias Montanus follow, and gives it as his own conjecture or opinion, probably having seen Abarbinel, else he would scarce have fallen in so fully with him here, as he doth in many other places, without mentioning him in expositions singular to them: and this he commends as most agreeable to the words, but I see no reason to be of his opinion, but choose rather to follow that interpretation which our Translation, with the most both of Jews and Christians, gives, not making these first words a part of those stout words which the wicked spake against God, but a declaration of the behaviour of those that feared God; and the following, of the good consequence thereon. So R. D. Kimchi perspicuously expounds them and the following. "The former words were
" the saying of those who did not understand
" the ways of the Lord and his judgments;
" and when those that feared the Lord heard
" those words from those men, who denied
" the providence of God over these things
" below, they spake one with another and " multiplied, or often repeated those words,
" and argued the matter, till they found by " their understanding, that all his ways are " judgment, that he is a God of truth and " without iniquity. And the Lord bearkned,
" i. e. God blessed for ever attended to their " words, and gave them their reward for this.
" And a book of remembrance was written before him, a proverbial expression according " to the language of men, among whom " kings

“ kings write a book of memorials ; (for “ there is no forgetfulness with God,) accord“ ing to what is said, blot me out of thy book, “ Exod. xxxii. 32. and every one that shall “ be found written in the book, Dan. xii. 2.”

These words of his we have set down at large, because they give exactly that notion concerning the distinction of the words from the former and the signification of the verb נִדְבָרוּ Nidbaru, which our Translators choose to follow. And it is that wherein most both Jewish and Christian Expositors do well agree ; as likewise in what is meant by what he saith, and the Lord bearkned and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written, viz. that the Lord took due notice of what was said, (both by bad and good, say ^d Some ; which though it be true that he doth so, yet here more particularly it seems to be referred to the good,) and kept it in perpetual remembrance, in the register of his memory, if we may so speak, as certainly as if it were written in a book, according to the custom of men^e, who note down in writing, or cause to be registred, such things as they would not forget, but be sure to call to mind, and shew that they took due notice of, as meet occasion and opportunity should serve ; to reward those that had done them any service or deserved well, or whom they had a mind to do good to. Of God's book, and things being written in it, there is we know often mention in the Scriptures, besides those places which Kimchi recites, both in the Old and New Testament ; and every where is much alike to be understood, viz. that the things spoken of are as surely known, and had in remembrance with him, as if they were written down before him. And so where the books are said to be opened, it is the making manifest his knowledge of those things, by his passing sentence on men accordingly for good or bad : see Dan. vii. 10. and Rev. xx. 12. and Isaiah lxxv. 6.

The book of remembrance, is here said to be written for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name, viz. to give them assurance that their faithfulness to him, ^f however he did not presently reward them openly for it, yet was duly taken notice of by him, and in due time he would make it known by his distinguishing them from the wicked, and his great care of them to preserve them from those heavy judgments, and that destruction which should seize on the others, as will appear in the following words.

But before we pass to them, we may take notice of what is by Some observed concerning the signification or force of that word which is rendred, and that thought upon his name, viz. that it imports not a bare thinking of, but a due esteem and awful regard of, so as with all care to avoid all things that may tend to the dishonour of it ; constantly to endeavour so to walk as befits such who profess to know God and to serve him, as always in his presence, and with respect to him, and fear of him. Those, saith Kimchi, are meant who always think of, or meditate in the ways of the Lord, and the knowledge of his Godhead, for his name is himself, and he (himself) is his name. Aben Ezra understands it of the wise in heart, who know the secret (or the mystery) of the glorious awful name. He seems to allude to what is said, Psaln xxv. 14. The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him. R. Tanchum saith that the word חֲשַׁבֵּה Choshebe rendred that thought on, imports or includes honouring and magnifying ; according to the use of the word חָשׁוּב Chashub, for one in dignity and high esteem : so that it may be expounded, such as knowing the secret of that glorious awful name, do accordingly magnify it. The Greek, that reverence his name.

It will not be any great digression to look a little back, and see how the Greek renders the word נִדְבָרוּ Nidbaru, of which we have already spoken, because they seem to differ from the Latin and other Translations, rendring it, κατελάλουν, which usually signifies to murmur or speak against, or to speak of with derogation. These things (saith that Translation) murmured they, that feared the Lord. So that S. Hierom, to give their sense, saith that they took the words they that feared the Lord ironically, viz. for such as made shew of so doing, but did not truly and really fear him ; and so to belong still to those who spake those stout words before mentioned : except we should think that they took it, as if even the righteous were, by what they saw of the prosperity of the wicked, moved to speak otherwise, than they ought, of God's justice and providence, as the Psalmist by the same consideration was, as he confesseth, almost moved sometimes to do, Psaln lxxiii. 2, &c.

But besides this signification it hath another given it, viz. ^g to speak much, to overwhelm with speaking, to speak one down, as we may say, which if it be here taken, and may be used in a good sense, only for much and earnest speaking, then will it be but the same which our Translation gives, and Some as we have seen observe to be the import of the word, viz. that those that feared God, hearing what Others impiously spake, derogatory to God's justice, did in zeal to his glory speak much and often, and earnestly one to another in vindication of it, and to cry down the folly of those blasphemous ones, and ^h hinder one another from doing as they did. But whatever may be thought of this, the plainest meaning will be that which we have given, agreeably to our own Translation, and that way which most Expositors (as we have said) take ; and according to that way have we a clear passage to the next verse, wherein the Lord having assured them that their words are had in remembrance, and their reward with him in due time to be manifested ; he proceeds farther to declare it, and to assign a certain time of it.

17. And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels,
 2 and

^d See Chr. à Castro, Menoch. Tirin. ^e See Ester vi. 1, &c. ^f R. Solomon. ^g Steph. Lex. ^h R. Solomon.

and I will spare them as a man spareth his own son that serveth him.

And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels (or special treasures, as the Margin hath it,) &c.] According to this reading by Ours and some Others followed, the meaning will be plain, that though God suffer his, who are his jewels and peculiar treasure, to lie for a while mingled with the rubbish and dross, without distinction made betwixt them, yet there shall come a day of discrimination, in which he will sever them one from another, and make up, and take into his peculiar care his precious jewels, and reject and cast away what is vile and rubbish; and then shall appear who are his, and who are otherwise; though till then it may not appear, yet by what befalls them as to the ordinary affairs of this world, it may be judged that he rather owns the wicked, and those that tempt him, than those that fear him, and duly think on his name: but then he will put a distinction between the vessels of his wrath, and the vessels of his mercy, Rom. ix. 22, 23. vessels of honour, and vessels of dishonour, 2 Tim. ii. 20.

But if this rendring please not any (as a learned ^k Critick seems to except against it, both for rendring mine, and likewise make up my peculiar treasure, as harsh and unusual;) we have another by most of Interpreters given, viz. they shall be to me, in the day that I shall make (or, in the day that I shall do what I said,) a peculiar: so joining the last word in order of construction with the first, (as ^l Some expressly note that it ought to be) and not joining it with the word make, as if it were governed of it, viz. they shall be to me a peculiar in the day that I shall make: and the sense is plain then too, there shall come a day of discrimination by me designed, and then, though it doth not yet appear that I make any difference between the wicked and the godly, in that day there shall be put a manifest difference between them, by my separating the godly to my self, and by taking a special care of them, as peculiarly belonging to me, and which I will preserve as carefully as men do what they most esteem, love, and delight in.

The word סגולת Segullab, rendred by Ours jewels, and in the Margin special treasure, is taken to denote any choice thing of great price and esteem to any, and which he looks on as his own proper goods, and chief in his care; as ^m of silver, gold, or precious stones, which he lays up in his treasure: and so used for any thing which he takes special care of to preserve to himself. Such it was promised to Israel for a special privilege and preeminence above all nations, that they should be unto God, as Exod. xix. 5. If ye will obey my voice, and keep my covenant ye shall be סגולת Segullab, a peculiar treasure to me above all people. And so Deut. vii. 6. where is סגולת עם Am segullab, a special people. ⁿ And Psalm cxxxv. 4. the Lord hath chosen Jacob unto himself and Israel, לסגולתו Lisgullato, for his peculiar treasure. It is a privilege that they still boast much of, all that can pretend to be of the race of Israel; but it appears to be restrained by the same limits that the name of Israel is, and agrees only to such who truly deserve that name, viz. the true Israel of God: as all are not Israel which are of Israel, Rom. ix. 6. so neither are they all his, סגולת Segullab, his jewels, his special treasure, his peculiar people, but only such who are ^o the true Israel of God; so here out of all Israel doth he say, that in that day, only they that feared the Lord, and thought on his name, should be to him, סגולת Segullab, a special treasure or peculiar people. Which title, as well as that of Israel, in the New Testament being transferred unto Christians in Christ, who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, Titus ii. 14. and so 1 Peter ii. 9. we cannot but likewise look on, as bounded with the same limitations; and therefore they that will have comfort in it, must approve themselves not only Christians in name, but in deed, by abandoning all iniquity, by being pure and zealous of good works, by being an holy nation, and so shewing forth the praises of him who hath called them out of darkness into his marvellous light. By having these conditions in them must they approve themselves his special treasure. Ordinary stones will not pass for jewels with him, nor rubbish and dirt for treasure in the day of trial, though till then they may not be perhaps discovered.

This distinction between the Jews here spoken to, is said should be, in the day which he should make (or bring on them) or the day wherein he should do, what he determined to do, or said he would do, for both these senses are the words אשר אני עשה Asher ani Oseh, capable of, and so are by Some in the one, by Others in the other way rendred, all much to the same purpose; In the day which I shall make or bring to pass, so R. Tanchum, and some in Vatablus; and so the Greek. In the day of judgment wherein I shall execute judgment on the wicked, saith Kimchi. They shall be to me in the day wherein I do, or make, for a peculiar, saith the Vulgar Latin, (not as the Doway Version renders, in the day that I do to my peculiar.) The same way Others take; and that so those words should be rendred by themselves indefinitely, viz. in the day which I make (or shall make,) or wherein I do, (i. e. will certainly do.) And the word peculiar not governed of that just in place before, viz. do or make; but be referred to the foregoing, viz. they shall be to me, may be confirmed by their coming again in the same manner, chap. iv. 3. in the day that I shall do or make, without any thing added after it. Yet doth the ancient Syriack Version make the last word to be governed of that immediately preceding it, as Ours do, though rendring that otherwise than

^l Jun. Trem.

^k Druf. on the place, and in Quæsit. per Epist. Eph. i.

^l Aben Ezra, and R. Tanchum.

^m Kimchi in Rad.

ⁿ Deut. iv. 2.

^o Gal. vi. 16.

than Ours, viz. a congregation, They shall be mine in the day when I shall make a congregation. So the Latin Translator points it, although possibly by otherwise distinguishing the words, it might be rendred, They shall be to me in the day, which I make, a congregation. R. Solomon Jarchi seems to give an exposition different from all these, to this purpose, "In the day which I make a reserved treasure, i. e. which I have treasured and laid up with me, therein to perform (or pay) my recompence." And if it were so understood, the expression would agree with that, Acts i. 7. wherein speaking of those times, in which they expected that Christ should restore the kingdom to Israel, he calleth them times and seasons which God had put in his own power.

But whatever differences may be betwixt Expositors as to the rendring the words, the day in them spoken of is still the same, viz. the day of the Lord's coming, mentioned before in this chapter, in the second, third, and fifth verses, and again in the following chapter, in the first, second, and third verses; namely, the day wherein God should execute his judgments on the nations of the Jews, for working revenge upon his enemies, and redemption to those that fear him, and revere his name. Though such discrimination shall be fully made between all the godly and the wicked at Christ's second coming, the general day of judgment, (to which, therefore, what is here spoken is by divers referred,) yet certainly here what is said, respects more particularly the nation of the Jews, and the time of that national judgment denounced against them. What hath been before said, and what is here said, and what shall be after said in this prophecy, will not be so properly applied, and clearly understood by applying it to any other: mean while may the words well be accommodated, to any other people with whom it shall be so, at any time, as it was then with the Jews, and whom God shall in like kind visit with a national judgment or excision; what to them happened being to Others for example, and likewise to that great day of discrimination, the day of the general judgment; yea, likewise to the day of death, as for what concerns particular men; but still those whom the words seem properly to concern as here spoken to, and of, are the nation of the Jews, then in being in their own country, a nation separate from others, and bearing then the name of the Lord's people. In that day when the Lord shall do such things, he will shew by making a manifest difference, who are his, and who are not his: his shall be separated from the rest as his own peculiar, from such as he will not own or regard; and when he executeth judgment in fury on others, he will spare them, and keep them that those evils which destroy the wicked shall not touch them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him.

These words are a farther declaration of God's exceeding great favour; and compassion to those whom he would own, and look on as his peculiar, in terms of greatest elegance and height of expression. The compassionate affection of a father is great to any child, though he be unprofitable to him, yea hurtful to him; how much more when he is profitable to him, and honoureth him? so notes R. Tanchum, and to the same purpose Kimchi, and other Expositors also. There is another thing also here, by Some taken notice of in the expression, which may well be added, as making for the amplification of God's goodness, and the consolation of those that fear and honour him, viz. that he saith he will spare them, which imports that though there be found in them defects, and they have done and spoken things that they ought not, and which in rigour of justice might deserve punishment, yet as long as their hearts are right with him, and they sincerely honour and obey him, and have reverent thoughts of him, he will forgive their transgressions, and in great mercy save them, when he will shew no mercy to the wicked, but according to their deserts in severity deal with them.

18. Then shall ye return, and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God, and him that serveth him not.

Then shall ye return and discern between, &c.] Then, when that day shall come, such an alteration of things shall there be, that though you now think all things go alike to all, or rather for the worse to those that most serve God, yet then you shall change your minds, and discern that God did always observe the actions of men, and put a difference between the righteous and the wicked, those that served him, and those that served him not; though till now he did not make it so apparent to men of corrupt judgments.

Some difference here is betwixt Interpreters in rendring, and expounding these words, Some following a reading that is in some copies of the Vulgar Latin, (viz. Et convertimini, and be converted, or return) give us to take it as an exhortation to these wicked ones who spake blasphemously of God's justice to return and repent: and then they should discern that distinction between the righteous and the wicked, which they would not now perceive. And with this reading the Tigurin Version also agrees; so it will sound, now therefore return, &c. to which will be reduced also that exposition of Pelican, If ye shall repent, ye shall discern. Others following another reading, which Some observe to be more correct, and indeed comes closer to the letter in the original, though that admit of both; viz. Et convertemini, and ye shall return, or be converted, understand it of the late and bootless repentance of those blasphemers, or a conversion which they shall be forced to, by what they shall then, nill they, will they, necessarily fairly discern and acknowledge of the ² different condition of those that serve God, and those that serve him not. With this rendring agrees Ours, and they ³ also who render, then being converted, or returning, you shall discern. A late very learned ^b man would have it rendered, and ye shall again see; that the meaning may be, Heretofore, when I blessed my church with prosperity, then did appear a manifest difference betwixt the righteous and the unrighteous; now because my whole church is under affliction you deny that difference, but I will make or bring again a day wherein ye shall again perceive that difference. Now all these look on the words as directed to the wicked, who thought it vain to serve God, as if he took no notice of what was done by men, spoken to ver. 13, 14, 15. ^c There are who think, they may be taken as directed to those that feared the Lord, next before spoken of, as if the meaning were, that such a change of things should be, that though now they could not perceive any difference betwixt themselves and the wicked, yet then looking on what was come to pass, they should evidently discern it, and perceive God's especial care over them, and that so here is a change of the person, which is not unfrequent in the Scriptures: for whereas before they were spoken of, in the third person, they are here spoken to in the second. But without nicer enquiry into the persons spoken to, and the nature of the conversion or returning here mentioned, of whom, or whether true or false, it may suffice as to the meaning, to take the scope of the ^d words, to be as at first we intimated, That such a conversion, turning, or change, shall then in that day be in the face of things, that all, both the godly and the ungodly, looking thereon, shall necessarily see that there is no place for doubting of God's justice, in his ordering of things for the punishment of the wicked, and preservation of the righteous, and that he always doth put a distinction between them, though to men judging by the present outward appearance of things, it is not always so apparent. It shall be made beyond all doubt apparent in that day. By this, saith ^e Vatablus, he points out the future resurrection: and so think ^f Others, as well Christians as Jews, as expressly ^g Abarbinel, who therefore interprets this returning of the souls of men, returning to their bodies at that day; for the thing in it self is true, as to a general distinction between all the righteous, and all the wicked that ever were, or shall be in this world. At the resurrection of the dead, and the general judgment, there shall be an apparent difference made between them, and the one separated from the other, though before in this world mingled one with another, as when a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats, Mat. xxv. 32. and we willingly grant that the words point at that day, so as to put us in mind of it, and warn us to think thereon. But we do not look on that as the primary and proper scope of this prophecy, but that it describes to us in the first place, and as its main intent, that national judgment which God threatned to the Jews; and accordingly executed on them in this world, shortly after the first coming of Christ, or at his coming; that word including all that time from his first preaching to the destruction of Jerusalem. That was the day in which the distinction here spoken of was to be made, and accordingly was signally made, as hath been already said, and will be in looking into the next chapter, wherein is both the certainty of the coming of that day, and the nature or manner of it more fully declared, and described in propheticall expressions: in finding the true meaning of which, as well as of the present words, as to the words and signification of them, we may still make use of the Jewish Expositors, but not as to the sense and intent. For that day to be meant, which we say, agreeable to the words and history of the times also, is meant, they must by no means grant. That those things belong to the time yet to come, and are to be fulfilled, either at a restauration of Israel, and subduing their enemies, at the coming of their fancied Messias, which with much earnestness they long for, or at the day of judgment, or to particulars at the day of death, they will tell us; but that they were fulfilled (as manifestly they were) at that long since past destruction of their nation, and holy city, and temple, they must obstinately deny, or they must grant and acknowledge, as we do, that Christ is already come; in opposing and denying which the whole of their religion now consists. This therefore in their expounding this prophecy are they silent of, as if no such thing had been. This here spoken (saith Aben Ezra) was spoken to the men of that generation, because this is the end of all the prophecies. So say we too: for after Malachi was no other Prophet sent to the Jews, till John Baptist, Christ's forerunner, and what is said therefore concerned them, the people of the Jews then being, and all their posterity, till that time that this prophecy was fulfilled (as by succession still one people) to warn them by repentance to prevent the judgment threatned and declared for that end to them, ^h by the great mercy, and long suffering of God, not willing that any should perish, but all should come to repentance. But seeing the generality of them would not be brought to repentance, nor know the things belonging to their peace, in that their day, as Christ complains of them, Luke xix. 42, 44. the judgment was, so as here described, then in God's appointed time executed, and such a distinction and discrimination, as is here spoken of, visibly to all the world made, in the preservation of such among that people who feared God, and believed in Christ, and the destruction of his enemies.

^p See Chr. à Castro. ^q See Dr. Hammond on Mat. xiii. 49. ^r R. D. Kimchi. ^s Rib. Druf. Tarn. &c.
^t Pelic. and Calv. ^u Grotius. ^v And Munster. ^x Ribera. ^y See Lyra.

² See Wisd. v. 1, &c. ³ Jun. Trem. and Druf. Sanctius. ^e Edit. Steph. in folio. ^f Oecolamp.

^h ² Peter iii. 9. and see Mat. xxiii. 34, &c. and Luke xiii. 34.

^b Lud. de Dieu.

^c Pet. à Fig.

^d See Calvin and

^g The last page but one of his Comment. on the Prophets.

CHAP. IV.

VERSE I. For behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch.

FOR behold the day cometh, &c.] The connexion and necessary coherence of these words with the former, as being, as we said, a declaration of the certainty of the coming of that day in them spoken of, and a description of it, is so apparent as that it may seem no reason why they should be severed from them, and made the beginning of a new chapter, and therefore by Some are continued with them. But we need not much insist on this, the distinction of chapters not interrupting the sense. As to the scope of them it is well given by a learned ^a man, viz. that they are an image or description of the final judgment on the Jews (in their destruction) and an image of representation of the last general judgment on all mankind. That was certainly then to come on the Jews (if not prevented by their repentance, as it was not,) when the Prophet then spake this, but is long since come; this is yet still to come, but shall in God's appointed time, as certainly come, as if it were already present. Of both, therefore, it might then be said; Behold the day cometh, i. e. shall certainly come, and the description is so full of terror, as that it may well be applied both to the one and to the other, yet certainly was it that former, which the primary intention of the Prophet was here to describe, and to the latter are the words applicable only by way of accommodation. For to the nation of the Jews did he then speak, as a messenger peculiarly sent to them, to reprove them for their sins, and declare to them, such things as concerned them, and not immediately such things as were common to the whole world, though what things happened to them were ensamples to all other people: and like judgments on like behaviour they may justly expect in this world also, besides that last general judgment which shall involve all, both Jews and other nations, which (viz. to what people the Prophet was peculiarly sent, and spake, and when) they did not seem to consider who passing over what befel the Jews, according to this prophecy, expound these words, as primarily and properly belonging to that last general judgment (and taking in too the particular judgment of particular men at their death, as some will,) as many do.

'Tis the consent (saith ^b One) of Jews and Christians, that it should be so expounded of the day of judgment. Why the Jews must in their own defence and maintenance of their other opinions so expound it, or else of some other time yet to come, hath been already shewed; but why Christians should therein consent with them, there is no reason, yea much to the contrary, that they may not thereby confirm them in their error, as if Christ were not yet come. Yet what might move some Christians so to do, we shall perhaps have occasion to see, when we come to the 5th verse. Mean while we take that which we have given, viz. that this concerns primarily that national judgment on the Jews, not many years after Christ's coming, (about forty after his death) executed by the Romans, the instruments of God's wrath on them, in that terrible destruction of their city and people, to be the truest and most proper way of expounding the words; and according to that shall proceed: however by way of accommodation allowing them to be applied, either to the particular or general judgment, to be expected by all other men. And though we cannot consent with the Jews in their opinion, yet may we take notice of some things that they say for illustrating our own; or for shewing the incongruity of their opinion, or for enquiry into the signification and literal meaning of some of the words. And by the way we say, that what is said that the Jews all consent in this, that the peculiar day here designed is the day of the last general judgment, is spoken but at large. For indeed they do not agree in it, as Abarbanel, who doth himself say that it is the time of the resurrection and the day of judgment, plainly sheweth in his Commentary on this place, and seeketh to prove that some do agree with him in it, but confesseth that others of their Doctors do not, who refer it to the punishment that seizeth on the souls of the wicked immediately after death, and that Others speak so obscurely that it cannot be positively said of what time they understood it, whether of the restoration of Israel which they look for, or of the resurrection of the dead. So that all that can be said, that they consent in, is, that they do not expound it of that day which we do, as their interest leads them, as we have said, to do, though among themselves not agreeing in one opinion, and all erring from the right.

Nor do all Christians neither agree among themselves in the matter. ^c Some of good note and learning going the way that we take; with whom we may rank ^d Others also, who interpret the place, not of Christ's second coming at the end of the world, but of his first coming, though they perhaps extend not that name of his coming so far as we do, but in their explications of it, expound it rather of his preaching, while he was on earth, by which he convinced those hypocrites of their impiety, not sparing their sins, while they do not expressly mention his terrible judgments executed on the Jews in the destruction of Jerusalem. ^e Those also dissent from that opinion, which take this day to include all the time from that wherein this was spoken to the first coming of Christ, and ^f they also, who understand it, that this day began with the first day of Christ's

in-

^a Grot. and see Tarn. and Stokes.

^b Ribera.

^c Tarn. Grot. and Stokes.

^d Arias Mont. and Calv.

^e See Assembly's Annotat. and Tarnov.

^f See Dutch Notes.

incarnation, and is to last until he shall again appear in the clouds, to the last judgment, which certainly allow too large a time to that day, which is so described by the Prophet, as to shew it to belong to a ^a peculiar and particular day, ^b a great and notable day of the Lord, wherein he shall execute the signal judgment here threatned; called again, ver. 5. the great and dreadful day of the Lord.

To proceed therefore to the explication of the words and expressions, which to the way that, according to what hath been said, we take, are plainly agreeable, and according to it and no other, run in an equal tenour, he saith, Behold the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven, &c. We had before an expression to the same purpose, chap. iii. 2. especially according to their explication, who there read, it, i. e. the day of the Lord's coming, the day here again spoken of shall be as a refiner's fire, as we said Kimchi doth. The words as here set down, with behold for ushering in the strangeness of the thing, prefixed, sound out the greatest horror that can possibly be expressed, and beyond which nothing but the inexpressible terror of the conflagration of the whole world at the last day (of which therefore it is, as we have said, usually interpreted) can be imagined; and nearer to which no terrible judgment in the world ever on any people executed, came (or can well come) than this here spoken of. While he saith that the day shall burn as an oven, what doth it less than represent the condition of those whom the judgment spoken of shall then seize, to be as if they were surrounded with fire, without possibility of avoiding the fury and dire effects thereof, than which nothing, we know, is to men more terrible; as if the heavens were on fire over their heads, and made an hideous noise, and the elements melted with fervent heat about them, and the earth and all the works therein were burning; that we may take in, and so compare with these, those not unlike expressions in 2 Peter iii. 10, 12. by which usually the terror of the day of the last general judgment, is thought to be described: but in the opinion of the learned Doctor Hammond, this that is here spoken of, viz. that of the judgment threatned to the obstinate Jewish nation.

The words (as there, so here also) are such as no figurative or hyperbolical expressions that can be possibly used for setting forth a most dreadful judgment can surpass, yet so great was the judgment according to this prediction executed on them, as that we may look on them not as a figurative but real description of what should be. What could be said less to express the face of things, when their stately city, and magnificent temple were all at once on fire, and none could quench it? may it not well be said, that the day there then burnt like an oven, and in words appositely here applicable, though spoken to another sense, Isaiah xxxi. 9. that God's fire was then in Zion, and his furnace in Jerusalem? To shew how in that day (that ⁱ day of punishment, as an ancient Arabick Translator, not unfitly for expressing the sense, renders it) that which he before said concerning a certain discrimination to be made between the righteous and the wicked, should be made evident, he describes in the following words the effects of it, and first as concerning the wicked, saying, and all the proud, yea and all that do wickedly, all those that obstinately went on in wicked courses, and contemned God and his laws, shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, &c. Where is now then any occasion to say, as they did, chap. iii. 15. we call the proud happy, yea they that work wickedness are set up, yea they that tempt God are delivered; what shall now become of their happiness, and of their glory, when they shall be, but as stubble before the fire, which shall without delay or resistance be certainly consumed? where is now that deliverance that they talked of? how shall they deliver themselves? who shall deliver them? no escape shall there be found for them, such utter destruction shall that day that cometh in that dreadful manner bring on them, as if they were clear burnt up; so that it shall leave them neither root, nor branch, which is apparently contrary to that being set up, or built, chap. iii. 15.

This also is a ^k proverbial speech to express utter destruction by a similitude taken from a tree, destroyed not only by having its boughs and branches cut off, but its roots also plucked up. The Chaldee Paraphrast renders it, shall not leave them son nor nephew: because, saith Kimchi explaining it, the first son is as the root, and his son is as the branch; (but we may rather say, it shall leave neither them nor their posterity: the Father being the root, the sons and posterity branches from him.) That interpretation of the Chaldee being by most of the Jewish Expositors followed, Abarbinel not seeing how that may be so conveniently applied to the punishment of the wicked at the resurrection, finds out another explication which he thinks more convenient, viz. That what is said, is concerning the good works of wicked men, for which, because in this world they receive their reward, God will not there leave to them any root, or branch of any commandment by them performed, or any good work, for which they may receive reward in the day of judgment, according to a saying of their Rabbins, "That he the most of whose works are evil, and the least part good, he is rewarded for his small righteousness in this world, that he may be wholly punished in the world to come." This he gives as his own opinion, though a very far fetched one, not knowing how to adapt otherwise the words of the text to that punishment of the day of judgment, which he here thinks to be the day spoken of. Other opinions he mentions also, as of Some, that by branch is understood the infants of wicked men, as if they should not be admitted into the world to come; and other-ⁱ يوم العقاب.

^a היום היחיד הסיוד Abarb.

^b Acts ii. 20.

^k Drus. Compare Job xviii. 16, 19:

otherwise that by root is understood the soul, and by branch the body, with the like, ¹ neither root in this world, nor branch in the world to come.

Among Christian Expositors also they who expound the Text concerning the day of judgment, are at some ^m difference in applying the expression to the matter or thing signified, but to them who go the way that we have chosen, of expounding the Text concerning the day of the destruction of the Jews and their city by the Romans, there is no difficulty; but the proverbial speech may be interpreted as nigh to the letter as may be, to denote, fathers and children, the wicked and their posterity. Well may that day be said to have burnt them up, and consumed them, so as to leave them neither root nor branch; when at that time histories testify, that in the siege and taking of the city, there perished of them by fire, famine, and sword, no less than eleven hundred thousand; to which if we add those vast multitudes, and many thousands of others which were immediately and within the space of few years after by the same enemies destroyed (which all we may account as consumed by the time, which is called that day, having the authority of a Jew, Kimchi himself, so far to extend the notion of that day, and reckon all for one continued day of destruction, while he saith, although it be said, that the day shall burn them up, yet their destruction shall not be all in one day, but they shall go on in perishing, and in a short time be consumed): add, I say, those great multitudes to the former, (if there be need,) and what less can be said to express the greatness of the desolation and destruction, than that they were cut off root and branch, so far that it is no small wonder that there should be any remainder of them.

These things are manifest out of the histories of those times, especially out of Josephus's history of the Jewish war, in the sixth book, according to the Greek division, the seventh according to the Latin; and Eusebius, lib. 3. c. 5. as to the main and first part concerning the destruction of the city, and those multitudes that were then there gathered together, and perished; and as to the gleanings of that day, as we may call the following destructions of the Jews, out of such other Historians as relate the great variety of miseries and calamities which one on the back of another befel them, by their pride, as it is here called, and obstinate behaviour towards the Lord, pulled on them. If any have not opportunity of consulting those histories, he may without farther trouble find enough collected out of them by Dr. ⁿ Hammond, in his Annotations on the New Testament, (in which he applies several things, which by reason of the dreadful expressions in which they are set down or denounced, are usually by Interpreters applied to the last general judgment, and destruction of the whole world, particularly to this day of

Jerusalem, which we look on as here meant, to shew, that if what is here said, in the highest language that a scene of horror may be represented by, be applied to what was then really done, there will be found no great hyperbole, or figurative exceeding in it, but rather a plain draught, or description before hand, according to which things were afterwards acted.

By what hath been said, appears what little reason there was to account the proud happy, and those that work wickedness set up, and that God delighted in them, because at that time they were suffered to prosper; but whether there were any profit in serving God, and keeping his ordinances, and what would be done for them by which any might discern betwixt the righteous and the wicked; that part of the question remains yet unanswered, for if they perish with the wicked, be involved in one common judgment with them; what is their case yet better than theirs? To this therefore a full answer follows in the next words.

2. ¶ But unto you that fear my name, shall the sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings, and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall.

But unto you that fear my name, shall the sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings, &c.] In these words is safety and happiness assured to the righteous, in the day that the wicked shall be miserably destroyed, so that there shall be a manifest discrimination between them. What St. Peter saith, The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished, 2 Peter ii. 9. which he infers from two examples before given, viz. his saving Noah, when he brought in the flood upon the world of the ungodly; and his delivering just Lot, when he turned the cities of Sodom and Gomorrha into ashes, and brought them to utter destruction by fire from heaven, ver. 5, 6, 7. is here manifestly asserted, in that the same day which shall come as a burning oven to the proud wicked ones; to burn them up and destroy them, shall be to those that fear the name of the Lord, as a glorious day wherein the benign sun shall arise with his best influences of comfort to them, to cheerish and refresh their drooping spirits.

It is well known that the word צִדְקָה Tzedakah here rendred righteousness, is used to signify both justice or righteousness, and also benevolence or mercy; and both significations will to this place well agree: for that salvation and comfort, then to be reached forth to the righteous, is a demonstration both of justice and mercy; by it shall be declared the righteousness of God, whose justice those wicked ones questioned, saying, where is the God of judgment, chap. ii. 17. in that he now rewardeth them for their obedience, when he punisheth those

¹ Talmud. Aboda Zara, chap. 1. fol. 4. col. 1. ^m See Ch. à Castro. ⁿ See him in his Notes on Matthew xxiv. and on Mark xiii. note ^a, and on the second of Peter iii. note ^b, and on Revelations vi. note ^d, and note ⁱ, with other places.

those that would not obey, and by it also his mercy in sparing them, though perhaps having many defects in them, in that day of judgment, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him, as he promiseth, chap. iii. 17. And this would be a clear sense if we should no farther press the letter of the words than so by way of similitude, to denote that the same time which should be to the wicked, a day of utter destruction, consuming them as fire, should be by the justice and mercy of God to the godly, as a fair day wherein the sun doth kindly arise, and benignly and largely impart his light (as Drusus explains the expression) for the comfort of men and other creatures; a gracious and comfortable day, a day of saving health to them: so Kimchi, not unaptly, notes that the words import, that they should be delivered from all evil, and rejoice with a good (or glad) heart. But Interpreters think it not enough to stop here, but farther enquire who is meant by this Sun, and Christians generally agree that Christ who is, ° Luke i. 78. called the Day-spring or rising Sun, is by this title meant; and this day, here spoken of, being the day of his coming (as it is, chap. iii. 2. called) he being entitled a Sun, his coming in it may be well called his rising. Why Christ may be so called, many reasons may be, and are, brought by Interpreters. But among them to our purpose in this place, and according to our understanding of the time here spoken of, the most agreeable will be; because as by the sun's rising those things, which before were covered in darkness, are discovered and made apparent, so that by his coming in this manner both ^p God's justice, and his mercy to them that feared his name, which before was not so discernible while he suffered them to be mixed with the wicked, yea insulted over by them, as if he did not own them more than others, nor take any peculiar care of them, so that they sate as it were in the shadow of death, should now be made conspicuous to all, in his freeing them from their oppressions, delivering them from those judgments by which the wicked were destroyed, and signally rewarding them for their obedience, so that they that sate before in darkness now should see a great light, and joyfully walk in it. Such a difference should be in their condition from what it was before, as that it might well be said, The Sun of righteousness, of justice and mercy, was risen to them, and that with healing in his wings, i. e. his comfortable rays or beams, as all agree by wings here to be meant. The ordinary sun kindly arising in the morning, may at any time be said, to bring healing in his wings, to diffuse and communicate health by his rays, both to men and other creatures, which after his setting, and in his absence, all the night seem to droop, languish, to be sick and out of order, and those that are so otherwise, in that while to be more so. Whence the Jews have a proverbial speech, which may serve something to illustrate this expression. ^q The sun ariseth, the infirmity decreaseth, that is, As the sun riseth, so infirmities decrease. Much more of This Sun might it be said, that he did at his arising to those that feared the Lord, bring healing with him in his wings to them in that day of distress, worse than the darkest night, the shadow of death it self, which without his arising to them would necessarily have swallowed up them too in destruction, and could not but by the apprehension of it, make them as even sick at heart according to what he said, chap. iii. 2. who may abide the day of his coming? so terrible should it be, that all men's hearts should ^r fail for fear, in contemplation of those things that should come on them, yet even then, in regard of his salutary effects that his coming should have toward them that feared his name, he bid them ^s, when these things, these terrible things should begin to come to pass, to look up and lift up their heads, for that their redemption then drew nigh, their deliverance from the persecutions by the unbelieving Jews, which they had endured, and from the dangers which threatned them, as, except by his extraordinary providence inevitable, and his making that which was for the destruction of his enemies, occasion of comfort and prosperity to them, may well be termed healing. But we may not confine it only to the rescue of their persons, and preservation of their bodies, nor the outward joy that they should find from that, but look on the inward spiritual comfort, and the healing of their ^t broken hearts, and fainting spirits, in preserving them from failing by fear and despair, as a greater part of it, and therefore not unfitly doth Grotius interpret this arising of the sun of righteousness with healing in his wings, of the collation of the Holy Spirit, which Christ should send to his to shine in their hearts, and bring perfect health to their minds; that Spirit of Comfort, the only true comforter. In regard of both these, viz. both his rescuing and delivering those that feared his name, and protecting and delivering them from their outward fears and dangers, and persecutions, and his inward illumination and comforting of them by his good Spirit, shewing himself in all ways a Sun and Shield to them; was this prophecy that he should arise to them with healing in his wings, evidently and abundantly made good to them in that day. And certainly in all respects doth that title of the Sun of righteousness agree to Christ the fountain of true heavenly light, who enlightneth every man coming into the world, ^u John i. 9. and whom God hath set forth to declare his righteousness, Rom. iii. 25, 26. and the Author of all true comfort, who giveth to his such joy, as shall swallow up all worldly sorrow, John xvi. 20. such joy as no man can take from them, ver. 22. and never leaveth his comfortless, John xiv. 18. but sendeth to them from the Father, the Comforter, the Spirit of truth, John xv. 26. to abide

VOL. I.

D d d

° See Dr. Hammond on Luke i. 78. ^p See Calvin. ^q Baba bathra, cap. 1. fol. 16. col. 2. ^r Lukee xxi. 26.
^s Ib. 28. ^t See Psalms cxlvii. 3. ^u See Dr. Hammond on that place, and see John viii. 12. and xii. 46.

abide with them for ever, and to dwell in them, and to be in them, John xiv. 16, 17. and in the same regard likewise may he be said to arise or come with healing in his wings to them, as in all other ways also, diffusing health in all kinds. When he was here on earth, great multitudes from all parts flocked to him to be healed of their diseases; and they that were vexed with unclean spirits, and they were healed. And the whole multitude sought to touch him: for there went virtue out of him and healed them all, Luke vi. 17, 18, 19. And the woman which had been twelve years diseased with an issue of blood, did not doubt but to find the effects of that virtue, who therefore coming behind him, touched the hem of his garment, for she said within herself, If I may but touch his garment, I shall be whole, Mat. ix. 20, 21. and she did accordingly find it, for straightway she was healed of that plague. And Jesus perceived, though he saw not the woman, that virtue had gone out of him, and she before all acknowledged it, Mark v. 28, 29, 30, &c. and Luke viii. 44, &c. on which passage in Mat. ix. Grotius notes, that it may well be looked on as having reference to, at least good correspondence with, this place. The word בִּנְפִיָּה Bicnapbeiba rendred, in his wings, being capable of being rendred, in fimbriis, in the hems or borders of his garment, as he observes it to be elsewhere rendred: and it may be not unworthy of consideration. But withal, that healing virtue in him shewed it self, not more in the healing bodily distempers, than the worse maladies of the soul, as appears in his words when he cured some bodily diseases, in saying, not, Be well or healed, arise and walk, but, thy sins be forgiven thee, * Mat. ix. 2, 5. that they might know that he had power to forgive sins, ver. 6. and was no less a Physician of sick distressed souls, than of diseased bodies.

In all regards then, as we said, doth the title of the Sun of righteousness arising with healing in his wings, well agree to Christ our Saviour, and all things that those words can give us to expect from him that is so described, have been, and are, by him abundantly made good; so have those that faithfully believe in him and rely on him always found, and shall find. But as to this present place, the words seem limited to those benefits of outward preservation, and inward comfort which those that feared the Lord were in that day of discrimination, which the Lord saith he would make, to expect according to his promise here made, and did accordingly find, with what more he adds in the following words for expressing his goodness to them. But before we proceed to them, we may here take notice of a strange conceit of the Jews, which they here bring for explication of what is here said concerning that day that shall burn as an oven, and devour the wicked, and that Sun of righteousness which shall arise to them that fear the name of the Lord, and how the discrimination shall be made between them. The sun, * they tell us, is now inclosed in a case or sheath (besides that God, out of a pool before him, deads his force with water) that so he may not burn up the world, but at the day of judgment he shall be unsheathed, and so coming forth in his full strength, shall (as he now doth in melting some things and hardning others,) shew contrary effects, according to the difference of the subjects that he hath to work on, and so burn up the wicked as stubble, but heal the godly of all those bodily defects and imperfections with which they shall then arise; this is the sum of what they say, as improved to its best meaning by Abarbinel. But what tolerable meaning it may have at best, I cannot perceive; sure it is such as hath no ground at all from Scripture, nor agrees with it in any meaning. To prove that the sun is in a sheath or case, because it is said, In them hath he set a tabernacle for the sun, Psalm xix. 4. and that in the last day it shall be unsheathed, because it is here said, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, are ways of proof that will have certainly no force with any, but those of the Jews that must think all that their ancient Rabbins have said to be true, how absurd and groundless soever, yea though both contrary to Scripture and reason. What proof, mean while, for the pool of water, in which the sun is cooled? I should have passed this by, without taking notice of it in this place, as thinking it only a conceit of their Doctors given in strange terms, to amuse their Disciples when they would not speak plainly to them, with some hidden meaning in them (as many in that kind they have, and in particular, that which also may seem to refer to this place, † that Abraham had a precious stone hanging about his neck, which when any sick people looked on, they were healed, and when he died, God fastned it in the sun by which means the sun hath healing virtue in him; by which ‡ Abarbinel interprets to be meant that Abraham while he lived convinced men of the unity, truth, and power of God by solid arguments, but after his death they being deprived of such an oral Teacher, they had a visible one in the sun by his wonderful motion undeniably demonstrating the same;) but that by the § gravest and most serious of them I see this cited as literally to be expounded, and to give the true meaning of this place, from which, and from being true in any kind, it is certainly most wide, and in it self very ridiculous. As so therefore leaving it, we pass on to the following words, in which he farther describes the happy condition that those that fear his name shall be in.

And ye shall go forth and grow up as calves of the stall. ¶ Ye shall go forth, i. e. say some of the Christian † Expofitors, who understand the

* Mark ii. and Luke v.

† Talmud Nedarim. cap. 1. fol. 8. col. 2. Abo da Zarah, cap. 1. fol. 4. Bereshith rabba, Sect. 6. See Buxtorf. Lex. Mag. in פָּרָק.

‡ Baba Bathra, cap. 1. fol. 16. col. 2. Yalkut. § On chap. i. 11.

¶ R. Solomon, D. Kimchi, Abarb. and see Maimon. on cap. 10. of Sanhedrim. p. 157. in porta Mosis.

‡ Jerom. Vat.

time here spoken of, of the day of the last general judgment, out of this world, in which ye have hitherto been detained, as in a prison. Others to much the same purpose out of your graves, and so enjoy that happiness and joyful estate in the next words described. But this though applied to that time undoubtedly true, and such as may well mind us of that day, yet will not well agree to that way which we follow, taking the day spoken of for that particular day of judgment, wherein God proceeded to the punishment of the Jews by bringing destruction both on the city and people.

In respect to that, the explication of a learned ^d Man comes closer, which is, God shall as with his hand bring you out of the city ready to be destroyed; according to that way of taking care for the preservation of his faithful servants, when destruction is sent on the wicked among whom they are, of which we have many examples. Our Saviour gives us two, Luke xvii. 27. the one of Noah, at the general deluge, whom he taught first to make an ark for his preservation, and brought not the flood on the ungodly till he was first by that secured, but as soon as Noah entered into the ark, the flood came and destroyed them all. The other of Lot, v. 29. to whom God purposing to destroy Sodom, sent angels to lead him by the hand out of the city, by them telling him that he could not do any thing till he was escaped, Gen. xix. 22. But the same day that Lot went out of Sodom, it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all. And a vision there is presented to the Prophet Ezekiel, chap. ix. 4, &c. to the same purpose, where by God's command a mark was set on the foreheads of such as feared the Lord, that they might not perish in the common destruction of Jerusalem; and those that were to destroy the inhabitants thereof old and young, women and children, without sparing any, were yet charg'd not to come near any man upon whom was God's mark. Not to look after more examples; this promise of deliverance to those here to whom he saith, Ye shall go forth, was manifestly made good to the Christians that were in Jerusalem, when it was destroyed, by God's miraculous warning them to go out of the city, affording them occasion so to do, by which means they went forth and were preserved, as hath been above said on chap. iii. 6.

Calvin's words also for explaining this word will well fit the same purpose, (though not fully by him directed to the same, but to the renovation of the church more generally) that the word going forth is opposed to the hard straits they had been before in, but should now have liberty of going forth, and find open matter of joy. But there may be other ways of expounding this word without looking on it, as denoting properly a going forth out of the place where they were: but being joined to the next word, and grow, to denote that they shall ^f proceed to grow, &c. i. e. having received that healing, and salutary influence of the sun of righteousness, shall go on in prospering, according to what the next words declare. Or as a learned ^g Jew saith, it may be expounded, ye shall go forth to, or in, or by the light of that sun of righteousness arising to you; and in this sense may it be well enough applied to that warning of them to go out of the city, which before we mentioned; or as ^h another, Wheresoever ye go ye shall grow, &c. Which of these notions it will be best to take, (if it be not indifferent to take either,) as to this word, it will be better discerned when we shall have considered those joined to it, and grow up as calves of the stall: in rendring the first of which words, viz. וַיִּשְׁתַּח Upishthem (which Ours render, and grow up, there is some difference among Interpreters, some rendring it, and ye shall leap, so the Greek, ἀναστήσετε, (using here the same word, which is, Luke vi. 23. where he bids his rejoice, when they are persecuted, and leap for joy.) And so the Latin, and the Syriack: the printed Arabick to the same purpose, ye shall move your selves, or leap for joy, the Chaldee Paraphrase also, ye shall do or go wantonly: the same signification doth the Greek give to it, Jer. i. 2. likewise the Syriack and the ^k Chaldee more plainly than here. So doth R. Tanchum say, that it signifies here playing and leaping for alacrity and joy, which he thinks also may most conveniently agree to that other forecited place of Jeremy; that it may be there rendred, because ye skip or leap. And not far from this signification is that notion which the same root, viz. פָּאָשָׁא Phasha, hath in the Arabick Tongue, in which it signifies to vaunt or boast, to go struttingly or proudly, but ^l Others prefer here to give it the signification of multiplying, waxing fat, growing or encreasing, whether in number, as Some seem to understand it, who render it ^m Multiplicabimini, ye shall be multiplied; or in strength, and well liking as ⁿ they who render it ye shall waxe fat, or whether more generally in any way, as Others who use a word applicable to encrease in any way, as ^o augeſcetis, or ^p creſcetis, with which our grow up agrees. This signification also R. Tanchum recites, both in this place, and the forecited, Jer. i. as likewise Nabum iii. 18. and Habbak. i. 8. and R. D. Kimchi both in this place, and that of Jeremiah, puts it as the proper exposition of it; here he expounds it, Ye shall encrease and multiply as calves of the stall, which grow great in flesh and fatness. It is confirmed by the common use of the same word in the Chaldee Tongue, and the learned Lud. de Dieu confirms it also by the use of the Ethiopick Tongue, in which ^q he notes the word to signify, to be sound, healthy and strong, and so would have it here to signify ye shall be fat, fat, lusty and strong, and because calves when they are fatted and lusty, use to frolick, and to leap and skip up and down in wanton manner, therefore he saith, it was that the Greek and Latin render it, shall leap. But perhaps they looked on it as a proper signification of the word distinct from the other, as well as besides them R. Tanchum, who intimates that the word having different significations, that is to be taken which the sense of the place requires, or best agrees to. Both indeed of the forementioned significations well agree to this place, and that in Jeremy also, and both are joined by Abarbinel, who saith the meaning of the words to be, that the sun of righteousness shall arise to them with healing, and they shall go forth to (or in, or by) the light of that sun, and ירענו וירבו delight or sport themselves and increase (or multiply or grow up) as calves of the stall, which will signify, as R. Tanchum well expresseth it, according to that notion, increase in happiness.

^c Ribera. Menoch. and see Christ. à Castro. ^d Grot. ^e Euseb. Hist. l. 3. c. 5. ^f Jun. Trem. and see Tarn. and Stokes. ^g Aben Ezra לאור השמש and Abarb. ^h R. D. Kimchi. ⁱ וַיִּשְׁתַּח, see L. de Dieu. ^k וַיִּשְׁתַּח. ^l See Munſt. Tig. Jun. Trem. and see Bootii Animad. l. 3. c. 4. §. 3. ^m Pagnin. ⁿ Munſter. Tig. supra. ^o Jun. Trem. ^p Pifc. ^q On Heb. i. 8.

Another signification is attributed to the word, viz. of spreading or dispersing, and in that sense Aben Ezra would have it here understood, as appears by what he notes on Nabum iii. 18. where indeed that signification is by many given to the word, and by Ours rendred, is scattered, as likewise Habbuk i. 8. where Ours and many Others also render it, shall spread themselves, although in those places also there be who would have it to obtain the signification of multiplying and increasing. But in this place he hath not many that go with him, although R. Tanchum in his Notes on Nabum, intimate that Some do, viz. take the word here to signify as it doth there to spread or disperse themselves. But that signification may be also referred to the former of multiplying. There is another notion that the same root, פשׁ * Posh, hath in the Syriack Tongue, viz. to remain, to cease, to rest and be quiet, פושׁ Pusho, an interval, resting or intermission between any motions. And to say that here according to that notion it might signify that they should have rest and intermission from their troubles, and be secure and quiet, as calves in a stall, would be no wide conjecture, nor disagreeable to the purpose. But the two former significations, viz. of leaping, or growing strong and lusty, are the most followed; and both agree to the comparison taken from calves in a stall, by considering which words, guess is to be made of the signification of this. As to the signification of those, I suppose there can be no doubt made, but that they properly signify as they are by our Translators rendred: nor is any made by any, although they have not all agreed in the rendring; for Some render, as calves loosed from bonds (they mean I suppose let loose out of the stall.) * Others, as calves of the herd, not that they read instead of מרבק Marbek, by transportation of a letter, מבקר Mibbakar, as might more easily be conjectured, than what a learned man supposeth that the Greek by change of a letter read מרתק Meretak, because מרתק Rattok signifies bonds; but that the one took it for a * calf taken out of the herd, and put into a stall to be fatted; the other having rendred the verb ye shall leap, thought it applicable to stalled calves, not while tied in the stall, but such which having been full fed in the stall were grown lusty and wanton, and would, if let loose, frolick it and leap about, and therefore thought it more apposite to the scope of that word to express the other, by rendring calves loosed from the bonds with which they were tied in the stall. The same word is used, 1 Sam. xxviii. 24. and Amos vi. 4. and is doubtless a stall, or place in which cattle are tied up and fatted, though in the first place it be rendred by the Greek and Latin, a feeding or a fed calf; in the second by both an herd. Nor was it necessary that that learned man should have changed a letter to find in the word the signification of bonds: the word as it is read would as easily afford it, if he had consulted the Arabick, which is of great affinity with the Hebrew, in which R. Tanchum, (on that place in the 1 Sam.) notes that רבק Rabko or rabak is a cord, with which calves or other cattle are tied, that they may be fatted, and thence מרבק Marbek, a place wherein they are so tied for that end, a fatting house, a stall. This by the way for justifying the reading of the word in the Hebrew Text.

The comparison that is used in the forecited Jer. l. 2. is much like to this as to the scope, viz. of expressing vigour and lustiness, or alacrity, but there instead of the word מרבק stall in this place, is דשׁא Dasba where (the verb of the same root being there, that here) Ours render the expression, ye are grown fat, (big, or corpulent, as in the Margin) as the beifer at grafs, but * Some think better to render it as a calf, or beifer (the word may indifferently be rendred, calf or beifer,) that treadeth in the floor; (and so being permitted to eat what he would, grew lusty and wanton.) However the words there be rendred, and however that expression differ from this here, the meaning is much alike, and therefore the Chaldee there also renders calves of the stall, regarding more the sense than the word. And however the words be here rendred, according to any of those interpretations that we have mentioned, the scope will still be the same, whether we follow those that render ye shall leap, or those that render ye shall grow up, be lusty or fat and strong, like fatted calves. The scope will, I say, be still the same, viz. to be a promise of great happiness and prosperity, and security and occasion of joy and exultation to those spoken to, that they shall not only find healing by the arising of the sun of righteousness, but also find occasion of delight and joy, as * a Talmudical Doctor expresses it. And this prosperity prosperity and exultation so comparatively described do they that by the day here spoken of, understand the day of judgment, and to concern all, apply to the joy and happy condition which then the Saints shall be made partakers of: but certainly that is ^b such as neither eye hath seen nor ear hath heard; nor can by the heart of man be conceived, nor by any similitude taken from earthly enjoyments, or any expressions of joy, or alacrity in any creature in this world be set forth.

* See Schind. Lex. and see in R. Tanch. on those places. * See Bara Ali Lex. * Greek and Arab.
 * Vulg. Lat. and Syriack. * Capel. pag. 255. * See Chr. à Castro. * And in his Diction. and Abu Walid in his. * Abu Walid, R. Tanchum, R. D. Kimchi, and R. Solom. and Boot. Animad. l. 3. p. 44.
 * Traet. of Idolatry, cap. 1. fol. 4. col. 1.

This comparison may seem more to agree to something that shall in this life be enjoyed, and so therefore do we apply it to denote the secure and happy condition, which in that dreadful day of Jerusalem's destruction (which by this day here we understand) God would of his mercy place those that feared his name, and sincerely embraced Christ's Doctrine, in. There is no doubt a promise to them of safety and deliverance in that dreadful day: and that were great kindness from God to them, and an evident sign of his love to them and providential care over them, if it were only so, and they needed not any thing more for proof of it, than their deliverance from so great and unavoidable destruction, according to what he saith to Baruch, Jer. xlv. 4, 5. That which I have built will I break down, and that which I have planted will I pluck up, even this whole land. And seekest thou great things for thy self? seek them not, for behold I will bring evil upon all flesh, saith the Lord: but thy life will I give unto thee for a prey in all places whither thou goest, (as likewise to Ebed-melech he saith; chap. xxxix. 16, 17, 18.) And had his promise now to those that feared his name, been only so far, as that he would secure them and save their lives, when so many perished, this had been, we say, evidence enough of his peculiar love and fartherly compassion to them, by which they might sufficiently discern between the righteous and the wicked, between whom there appeared hitherto no difference, in the common opinion: but here is withal an evident promise of greater things, of joy and prosperity, and well being as well as being, set out in this comparative expression. But though righteousness hath the promise of the good things which respect this life, as well as those which respect that which is to come, of outward as well as inward good things, yet considering the nature of Christ's kingdom and his promises, we cannot but think respect to be had here also to that joy and comfort of spirit, and ^c peace of conscience, which in the inward man they should find through the presence and assistance of the Holy Spirit, the Comforter, by which they should have occasion, according to our Saviour's ^d Precept, to rejoice and leap for joy, whatever outward trouble they should find; this inward joy should be so great, as to express it self in vigour and alacrity, of the outward man also, as it seems here by this comparative expression intimated, and what they now felt, could not but be to them a pledge and certain token of finding the like deliverance in that last general judgment also; when they shall not be as calves of the stall, but as angels, their bodies being made like Christ's glorious body; and they by seeing God as he is, be made like unto him, and instated in all fulness of joy for ever, without any mixture of sorrow: though we do not with many look on that as the thing primarily here meant (though put in mind of, and given to look up to it,) but that liberty or happy condition, which in and by that fearful doom of the Jews which hitherto persecuted them; they should be brought to. And this is not only described by telling them in what happy plight and condition they shall be in themselves, but amplified by declaring how it shall be with them in respect to the wicked who before lorded it over them, so as that now there shall be an evident discrimination between them compared one with the other. That follows in the next verse.

3. And ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet, in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts.

And ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be as ashes under the soles of your feet, &c.]

In the foregoing chapter, ver. 15. the wicked are looked on by men judging according to the present face of things, as happy men, men set up, and ^e delivered to do all those abominations whereby they tempted God, so that they thought it in vain to serve God, no profit to keep his ordinances, or to walk mournfully before him: but see, in that day appointed by God for a discrimination between them, what a strange alteration shall be. They which before were kept under shall now tread down those that were so high, and the proud ones being by that burning day brought to destruction, be as ashes (or dust) under the soles of their feet whom they thought to trample on. By this expression is manifestly set forth the difference which should then be made by God betwixt the wicked and the godly, so as that the one should appear to be owned by him, and by that means not only in a safe but in an happy and honourable condition, the other rejected by him, and given up to destruction; and so in the vilest and lowest condition that any can be brought to, which is expressed by comparing them to dust and ashes under the feet of others.

And it were sufficient thus much to understand by the phrase, as a figurative expression concerning the difference of their conditions, by which should be made good what is said, chap. iii. 18. Then shall ye return and discern between the righteous and the wicked, &c. This is all that they who look on these words as describing the day of the last judgment, and what shall then be done, ^f when the just shall awake to everlasting life, and the wicked to shame and everlasting contempt, can require for the making good of the expression, and as much also as understanding it of the day of his proceeding in judgment ment against the Jews at the destruction of Jerusalem, we need require, or ^a they also who take this day to include all the time between Christ's coming in the flesh, till his last coming at the day of judgment. Yet the learned Grotius thinks that the words literally, and as without any thing of figure in them understood, may be looked on as made good at that time, inasmuch as after the destruction of Jerusalem, wherein so many were consumed by fire, such of the Christians as did after come thither, did really tread on their ashes. And so some of the ancient ^b Jews who understood this day of the last day of judgment, have found out a device to tell us how this shall then also be literally made good, viz. in that the bodies of the wicked (ordinary sinners at least) after they have been tormented in hell flames for twelve months shall then be consumed to ashes, and the wind shall scatter them under the soles of the feet of the righteous, according to what is here said. A pretty invention for such as will believe it on their authority. But I do not see that the soberer among them do; otherwise they would probably have made more use of it in their expositions of this place. Abarbinel indeed makes mention of it, but tells us that the simple meaning in these words is to shew, "That if we see the way of the wicked to prosper, and the righteous to go mournfully, behold that is it which happeneth in this dark world, but when the Lord of hosts shall arise a sun and shield in his divine day, and shall judge all living, he shall give to every one according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings." Neither R. Solomon, nor Aben Ezra, nor David Kimchi mention it at all; the last of these thus expounding the words, "He saith, that now the wicked bear rule over you, but in that time ye shall trample them under the soles of your feet. What he saith ashes, is a proverbial or comparative expression, because he had before said that the day that should come, should burn them up." It appears then that he did not think that ashes here ought literally to be meant, but to denote the vileness and contemptibleness of their condition. Neither find we any mention of it in R. Tanchum, who though he differ from what we follow, in that he looks on the things spoken as not yet fulfilled, but to come, yet affords us words which we may well make use of in our way, which though he put at the end of the chapter, yet may here conveniently be put, as having respect to what hath been said already, more than to what follows; and they thus found, [Consider (saith he) the great wisdom in the expression of the prophetic revelation, however it be to be understood, that whereas there is for the righteous a reward in this world, and in the world to come, and for the wicked on the contrary punishment in this world, and in the world to come, these passages of Scripture are fitted to both intentions at once, according to an outward (or literal) sense and an inward meaning. As to the outward meaning, it expresseth what shall be in the days of Messiah, to wit; that punishment shall then encompass the wicked, and they shall be consumed together and be burnt up, as he saith, Behold the day cometh burning as an oven; but as for the righteous of Israel, the light of divine providence shall arise upon them, and they shall be healed by the manifestation of truths, from that grief which they sustained by reason of their being hidden from them; and that is it which he saith, And there shall arise to you that fear my name, the sun of righteousness, and healing in his wings, &c. But as to the inward meaning, it signifies, as to those that feared the Lord, and thought on his name, viz. which sincerely did so after their knowledge of him and walking in his ways, that there should be to them an everlasting duration in his presence, which is that writing down of their righteousness in a book of remembrance before him, and they should be a peculiar to him among mankind, which is what he saith, And they shall be to me, saith the Lord of hosts, in the day which I shall make (or, when I shall do this) a peculiar, &c. But as for the wicked, to them shall the day come burning as an oven, which is the punishment of the world to come, accordingly as our wise men have declared, as likewise what is said, and the day that cometh shall burn them up. And by ⁱ day he expresseth both happiness and misery, for two different meanings (or reasons) 1. happiness, in regard of the light which is found in the day after the darkness of the night, like that clearness of apprehension that shall accrue to the perfected soul after its separation from gross matter, i. e. the matter of the body; then misery, by reason of extreme heat, that is found in the day proportionable to the grievousness of that condition, and the extremity of the pain thereof, as he likewise compares it to fire, saying, burning like an oven. And because the wicked shall be burnt with that fire, whereas the degree of the righteous shall be exalted, he compareth them also to ashes under their feet, saying, and ye shall tread down the wicked, for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet. And he explains his comparing happiness to light, in what he saith, And there shall arise to you that fear my name the sun of righteousness, &c. And that is an intellectual light which shall accrue by the right disposition of the soul, and the rectification of the deeds, by the clearness of the shining of which the soul shall find rest, and be healed from the pains of the distraction of the senses, and their disturbance (or struggling, or contrary motions;) that is it which he saith, with healing in his wings. And to like purpose, saith Isaiab, chap. lviii. 8. Then shall thy light break forth as the morning, and thy health shall spring forth speedily; and thy righteousness shall go before thee, the glory of the Lord shall be thy reward.

^a Dutch Notes on ver. 1.
Yalkut.

^b Talmud. in Rosh hashana, cap. 1. fol. 17. and something differently reported in Yalkut.
ⁱ Aben Ezra and Others note by sun, ver. 2. to be signified, day, the rising of the sun causing the day.

ward. We beg of the Lord therefore that he will assist us for attaining to those inward (or hidden) promises, by hastning the outward (or visible) ones, that our knowledge and worship of him may be sincere, and that may occasion to us an encrease of appropinquation to his Majesty, or, bring us nearer to him, and that may be made good to us, which he saith; Isaiah xxxv. 3, 4. Strengthen ye the weak hands, and confirm the feeble knees, say to them that are of a fearful heart, Be strong, fear not: behold your God will come with vengeance, &c.]

These are his words (which if opportunity serve we shall at the end of these Notes set down in his own language.) I thought convenient to give them at length, (though perhaps not all to our present purpose) because though he be out in the main matter of timing things, yet what he saith applied to the right time, will illustrate and confirm what we look on as the truest way of expounding them, viz. that literally and primarily they describe to us a day wherein God would proceed in judgment against the nation of the Jews, for making a discrimination betwixt the righteous and the wicked, which because it was at that present, when this Prophet lived and spake to them, not so discernible, they took thence occasion to question his justice, and spake stout words against him, saying, It is vain to serve God, &c. and where is the God of judgment? that day it appears, chap. iii. 1, 2. should be at, or, by the coming of Christ, and by his coming is meant (as we have shewed) his coming in judgment to them at the destruction of Jerusalem. In that our forecited Author is out, that he thinks Christ not yet come, and so that day not yet come: whereas we (as the truth is) look on both as already come; and that being granted, then we say that in that he is right, that here is described a day of discrimination to be made in this world, as there was then made by the terrible destruction of the wicked among the unbelieving Jews, and gracious rescue and deliverance of those that believed in Christ; but withal, that by the wonderful wisdom of God, that coming of Christ, to judge them then, is so described, as to set before our eyes another coming of his to judge all the world at the last day, wherein shall be made a perfect separation between the righteous and the unrighteous, those being received into joy and glory, and perfect happiness in the presence of God and the sun of righteousness, ^k the Lamb that shall be their light; the other adjudged to perpetual burnings worse than of an oven, or furnace, to everlasting shame, and contempt, and misery; however in this world they thought themselves happy, set up, and delivered. The first of these days is here properly described in such figurative expressions as necessarily suggest to us the condition of the second, and cannot but put us in mind of it. To either of them is applicable what is said in the next words.

In the day that I shall do [this] or, (according to the letter, and as the Interlineary Latin here renders, as likewise ^l some Others) in the day that I make, or shall make. The same expression which we had before, chap. iii. 17. and is an expression also elsewhere used, ^m This is the day which the Lord hath made, היום אשר יתור, and that title may be well applied to such a peculiar, signal, day wherein God hath done some ⁿ extraordinary thing either for good or bad, for punishment to his enemies, or salvation and deliverance to his. Though, he made all days, yet such a day might seem of a new make or singular creation, and be singularly attributed to him as its Maker. And such may well be called the days of Christ's incarnation, his preaching the gospel, his resurrection, his coming to judgment against the Jews of that generation, which all may be (according to what we have before said) looked on as one day, the day here spoken of, especially the last act mentioned, and here peculiarly pointed out, wherein was brought a terrible destruction on his enemies, and wonderful deliverance to his friends; and for the same reason may the day of the last judgment be so likewise called, which (as we said) may well be looked on as here pointed out, though not primarily meant as Some seem to take it with omission of the other. In this day that they might know what he had said should certainly come to pass, he adds his solemn confirmation.

Saith the Lord of hosts,] He who hath all power in his hand, at whose beck are all creatures in heaven and earth, as ready ministers to execute his pleasure, and therefore can make good whatsoever he saith, and who is true in his sayings, and will not alter the thing that is gone out of his mouth, he hath said it the mighty, the faithful God hath spoken, and who shall disannul it? he hath said it, and it is therefore as certain as if it were already done. According therefore to what he said, did that day come on the Jews, the people here spoken to, in the time appointed, and all those things here foretold, come to pass. And as certainly shall that other day, here (as we said) typified or intimated, come on all the world in the time appointed for it, because the Lord of hosts hath though not expressly here said it, yet not obscurely intimated, and elsewhere more plainly said it; so that all must expect that as certainly to come on them all, as they have seen the former already to have come on the Jews. They deny it indeed to have been yet come on them, and would have it to signify some thing to come not on themselves, but on their enemies, but it is because they wilfully shut their eyes against that which all the world besides hath seen, and with amazement acknowledge it. A strange thing that that terrible destruction of their country and nation, such as was never yet parallel'd by any thing that happened to any nation besides, nor can be out-done by any thing imaginable, but the day of general judgment and conflagration of all the world, which it not obscurely represented, should work no more on them. Our prayer for them therefore must not be in their own words, ⁿ Morch. l. 2. c. 29.

^k Rev. xxi. 23.

^l See Syriack and Arabick.

^m Psalm cxviii. 44.

words, that God would hasten the coming of that first day, that so they might with better preparations expect the second, but that he would open their eyes to see, and incline their wills to acknowledge, that to have come upon them, which God here threatned, and so be turned and brought near to Christ; for rejecting whom was all that come on their ancestors, and themselves ever since, that so, what shall come to pass of that last coming of his, may not be so terrible to them, but he then may appear to them as the sun of righteousness with healing in his wings to their salvation, who before came in flaming fire, as a burning oven to destroy them, who would not receive and obey ^o his gospel. So shall they prevent by their repentance the evil of that day, though their ancestors would not, though by God warned, seek to prevent the evil of the other: would not, I say; for though God here shews the certainty of the coming of that day, by saying, saith the Lord of hosts, and he knew what they would do, yet that it implied a condition of their persisting to do as they did, and that by their repentance and change of their ways it might have been prevented, appears by what he adds (not certainly to no purpose) to move them to it, by bidding them to remember the law of Moses, &c. and promising to send Eliab to seek to convert them, lest he should come, &c. to whom if they would not hearken, they should inevitably pull on themselves destruction.

4. ¶ Remember ye the law of Moses my servant, which I commanded unto him in Horeb for all Israel, with the statutes and judgments.

Remember ye the law of Moses my servant, &c.] Aben Ezra's gloss on these words is not amiss, Remember the law of Moses, &c.] i. e. (saith he) keep (or observe) it; for it will teach you the way of the fear of the Lord, and so when the mentioned day shall come, ye shall be delivered. But the other Jews go wider, as, by considering their words, we shall perceive. Abarbinel thus gives the coherence of these words with the former, "Forasmuch as the worship (or service of God) which should bring them to that last true reward at the resurrection, was the worship according to the law and commandments, and that great rebellion which should bring to that punishment, which he mentions, is the omission (or rejection) of the law, therefore he subjoins to this which he hath said, Remember the law of Moses my servant, to declare to them that by means of that they should attain to the reward, and true prosperity." That in which he errs in this exposition is, in that he refers what is here spoken to the day of the resurrection, which belongs to that day of Jerusalem's visitation, the evil of which that they might prevent, or in it find deliverance, he commends to them the remembrance and observance, in the mean while, of the law of Moses as a faithful rule, seeing they should after this have no more Prophets to direct them, till his sending to them Elias at the approach of that day. Much in like kind errs R. Tanchum, viz. in mis-timing the things spoken of, saying, "That this was given as a precept to those of the captivity, he commanding it to Israel by the hand of this Prophet, because after him prophecy should cease from among them, by reason of the obscurity of the captivity; and the meaning (saith he) is that he that would attain to the happiness spoken of, and deliverance from punishment, ought necessarily to obey the commands of the law, continued (or delivered down) among them." In which exposition he passeth over the time to which properly belonged what is spoken, viz. that between this prophecy, and the coming of the Eliab here meant, wherein prophecy (as he observes) should (and did) cease among them; and so the coming of that day of judgment and discrimination; to fasten it on times, which did not begin till after the completion of this prophecy, according to its proper and primary meaning, viz. since the destruction of Jerusalem. David Kimchi is not content to run on in the like error, but strives to justify it by accusing Christians of error in misinterpreting the words; his exposition runs thus, He saith, until the day of judgment come, remember ye in every generation the law of Moses my servant to do all, or according to all, that is written in it. Which I commanded unto him in Horeb, i. e. as I commanded him in Horeb, not according to the ^p words of the Christians, which say that it was given for a time according to the literal sense, but an Interpreter (Jesus) came and interpreted it spiritually; this Text is an answer to them. His meaning seems this, That here is a command that till the last day of judgment they should precisely keep the law of Moses, according to all that was written in it, and according to the letter of what was written, just as it was given to him and from him to them, and that therefore the words refute the Christians who say, that the law was to endure but for a time, according to the literal meaning of it, but that the literal meaning was to yield to a spiritual meaning according to which Christ interpreted it. But we say that this man frames an argument on false grounds, and that the Text makes not against us, as he would have it, and hath in it an answer to, and refutation of them, not of us, who embrace them, both according to the letter, from which he departs, and the true meaning of them, which he perverts. First, in that he saith that here is a command that they should remember the law of Moses in every generation until the day of the last judgment. If he mean (as manifestly he doth) the day of the last judgment, it is manifest that what is spoken hath not primarily respect to that, but to that day of God's national judgment to be executed on the Jews, continuing in obstinate rebellion against him; that was the day of the Lord in this chapter of this prophecy, phesy, and the foregoing, properly spoken of; as we have shewed, though so described as to represent to us, and necessarily to put us in mind of the last general judgment too. Besides, the words are indefinitely spoken without referring to any set time: if we will enquire till what time they may seem to bind; that will most conveniently be answered to, from the next following words, viz. till he send Eliab the Prophet before the coming of the day of the Lord; warning, that till his coming they should look to the law of Moses as their director. So that hence is no evident ground from which to conclude the perpetuity of the law, against such as should deny it. That it should last in force till that day, is as much as can from these words be concluded, and that which our Saviour saith, The law and the Prophets were until John, since that time the kingdom of God is preached, Luke xvi. 16. Farther, in that he saith, according to all that is written in it, and as I commanded him in Horeb; meaning that every thing in the law was just as it is written in it, and every thing punctually in that manner, and according to the letter as it was commanded, is his gloss; whereas in the Text it is only אשר, which I commanded, and not כאשר as; which though in it self it may seem to make no great difference, yet according to his meaning it manifestly doth, according to what he adds, not according to what the Christians say, that it (i. e. the law) was given for a time only to be observed, according to the letter (as it sounds) but that Jesus came and interpreted it spiritually, and so hereafter it were to be observed or understood according to that spiritual, and not its literal meaning. For answer to all this we might bid him only to clear himself, by answering to what is said, Jer. xxxi. 31, 32. Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah, not according to the covenant which I made with their fathers, &c. whence we may conclude with the Apostle, Heb. viii. 8. that in that he saith a new covenant, it is manifest that the first was to be made old, that the new might take place. But to deal more distinctly with him; in that he finds fault with the words of the Christians, let him take from Christ himself what they say, Think not that I am come to destroy the law, and the Prophets, I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil. For verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one jot, or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled, Mat. v. 17, 18. What is here spoken any way derogatory to the law of Moses? Is not here the perpetuity of the law as plainly asserted, as the Rabbin himself could assert it? But then his gloss אשר, all just as it is written, is not to be admitted as if every thing were still so to be observed as at first it was, and just as it was given to Moses; as if all things in it were of like moment and equally essential: for in it were diverse things which were to be fulfilled, and being fulfilled, could require no farther observance; such were those ceremonious parts of it, which were types and shadows, and could not but by the coming of the substance, which was Christ, have an end put to them, and necessarily be done away, not by being mean while violated but completed. The other more substantial parts, viz. the moral precepts are so far from being abrogated by him, as that being purged from all those corrupt glosses, and traditions of the Jews, by which they were almost made void and of none effect, they have not only their true meaning and extent given them; but are backt and confirmed anew by his authority; and commended to the perpetual observance of all his followers. And for what he looks on as a fault to be objected, that we affirm that Christ interpreted the law spiritually, as if it were no more literally to be understood, I know not what he would make to be the force of his objection, but to conclude against themselves that they are carnal, and so would not have any thing of the law so understood as to cross their carnal minds, or to require any more than the carnal performances of the outward man, which to think, appears to have been from of old their error, and such as they are willing still to continue in. For the law is spiritual, Rom. vii. 14. and always so was; that which made it not to be so understood, and not to have answerable effects, was the carnality of men, not the fault of the law. If Christ vindicated it from the wrong by them done to it by their gross and false understandings, and require the obedience of the inward as well as outward man, shall that be accounted an injury to it, or a destroying of it? If he mean that we say that the former types and shadows directed to more than was by them outwardly performed, and that what was by them really meant, was by and in him completed, and fulfilled in a more excellent manner, when he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself, and so to make all other sacrifices useless, and by the sprinkling of his blood to put an end to such other carnal ordinances as were imposed on them till the time of reformation only; if I say by what he calls interpreting the law spiritually, he means any of these things; he speaks of that which was a restoring the law to its true meaning, and a perfecting, not a violating of it: so that in these words is no answer (as he tells us it is) against any thing that Christians say, but they shew of him, and those of his religion, that they themselves do not duly remember the law of Moses which God commanded by him, nor consider or understand aright what that commanded them. If they would duly look into it, and apply the prophecies thereof to what they concerned, and the types thereof to what was signified by them, they could not but perceive that by them they were directed to Christ, and belief in him against whom they now urge them. This were sufficient for answer to him; even the bare setting down the words of Christ, and his Apostles, which shew that they taught nothing derogatory to the law of Moses, or by which they might be thought to violate any command, given either here or elsewhere for due observance of it; if there were here any occasion given to him of cavilling in that kind against them: but we look on this, which by occasion of his objection we have hitherto said as a mere digression, there being (however he hath sought occasion) no occasion, as we have already intimated by the words rightly understood, given to him, as will appear by the scope of them duly considered, which we may in brief thus sum up. The Lord having by this Prophet reproved the Jews for many sins, both by the priests and people committed wherein they shewed great contempt or neglect of the law by Moses given unto them, for which he delayed yet to punish them, or did but lightly punish them, giving them time to repent; and for that they for the generality, or most of them took thence occasion rather to applaud themselves in their wicked courses, than to repent of them, and to speak stout words against him, as if he delighted in sinners and their ways, and were not a God of judgment; nor had respect to them that served him, and therefore it were in vain to serve him, and having told them that he would in due time make it manifest, that he took all the while due notice of what they wickedly did and said, and would for that end send both his messenger to prepare the way before him, and the Lord the Messenger of the covenant, who should bring all their doings to an exact trial, and so he would come near to them in judgment, and bring on them such a day of discrimination betwixt the righteous and the wicked; wherein the wicked among them should be utterly destroyed; and the godly (who hitherto seemed to be neglected) find salvation and deliverance; and to move them therefore to repentance, having described the terror of that day; doth here, as it were, warn them, that if this would not move them, they should not, as they had hitherto had, have any more Prophets to call on them, but be left only to that law, which they had hitherto so much neglected, for their director; which was indeed a sufficient director to them, and had they duly hearkned to it, as they ought, they had not hitherto had such need of other Prophets to call upon them, and mind them of their duty. But now seeing he hath resolved to send them no more in that kind, till he send his messenger, whom he calls Eliab, to prepare the way before him at the approach of that great day of discrimination which he hath threatned, he urgeth on them a due remembrance of that law, and serious heed, and observance of all commanded in it, as the only way whereby to prepare them for the receiving of his Eliab, that they might be converted by him, and so prevent the evil of that day, wherein he would smite with a curse those that did not prepare then to meet him.

This being plainly the intent of the words, to raise from them a question concerning the perpetuity of the law, or hence to think to prove it in all parts unalterable, is quite besides the purpose. As they were given they are manifestly a command to them of that time to an observation of all the parts thereof, and the meaning of them is evident; thus: Look not henceforth for an ordinary or continued succession of Prophets, as you hitherto have had; but that you may prepare your selves for meeting the Lord in that day by Malachi told you of, remember duly the law of Moses, with the statutes and judgments thereof; take that for your rule and direction, whereby to square your lives and actions. Necessary was it that they should remember and duly attend to that, all of them; for though it was delivered to them by the hand of Moses the servant of God, and therefore called his law, yet was it by God himself commanded unto him for all Israel, all of it with all the statutes and judgments therein contained, all the parts thereof. By the law. Some will have meant the moral precepts of the law, by statutes the ceremonial, by judgments the judicial. Abarbinel (as the Jews commonly) by חֻקִּים Chukkim, statutes, will have to be understood such things for which no other reason is to be given, but God's command, by מִשְׁפָּטִים Mishpatim, judgments, such the reason of which was manifest. But without farther enquiry into the notion of the words we take to be in the words as here put, all the parts of the law whatsoever, and of what nature soever, even every jot and tittle thereof (as our Saviour speaks) comprehended, inasmuch as every one of them was then (when this was spoken) in force, not any of them completed by having had its due end. And therefore by being bid to remember them, they are told what was a duty necessarily incumbent on them. For all of them were commanded to all Israel, and they ought to observe all, and not forget or neglect any of them, and as this was a duty necessary to them, so was it a thing that would be greatly beneficial to them. So that it was the great kindness of God to call upon them to remember that which he had made formerly their duty, and might in justice without farther delay, or warning have proceeded in judgment against them for their many neglects and breaches of it, which by this Prophet he hath convinced them guilty of. The benefits of remembering of it, would have been the rectifying of them in their ways, which they had greatly perverted, the restraining them from, and warning them to repent of, those many sins, which he hath convinced them to be guilty of, whereby they had greatly provoked him as he hath shewed, and to set them in such ways, wherein walking both they and their services should be accepted by him: and farther, to instruct them, concerning the Lord, the Messiah, whose coming he hath here warned them of, and how to receive him, and his messenger that he would send to prepare the way before him. And this especially. Some will have to be understood as that for which he would have them remember the law of Moses. That indeed did both point him out before hand in many types and figures, and expressly expressly command obedience to him, when he should come, as Deut. xviii. 15. as that place is cited by St. Peter, and shewed to be meant of him, Acts ii. 22. and our Saviour himself tells us that Moses wrote so plainly of him, that if they had believed Moses, they would have believed him. And that the cause that they believed not his words, was because they believed not the writings of Moses, John v. 46, 47. The law, (with which it may not be amiss, with some, to take in the Prophets as appendages for exposition thereof, as our Saviour joins them, They have Moses and the Prophets, let them hear them, Luke xvi. 29.) in these and other regards was plainly a School-master (as St. Paul calls it) which attended to, would have brought them to Christ. And so the remembrance of it would have been eminently beneficial to them. But we look not on this only (though of chief regard and including the rest) as that wherein it would have been advantageous to them to have remembered the law of Moses, but with this on all the other mentioned. By so doing they should have been so prepared for the coming of the day of the Lord so often before, and immediately again spoken of, that it should not have for destruction come upon them: and their not remembering it would (as in the event manifestly it did) bring with it all its dreadful effects on them. It was then God's great kindness to call on them to remember it for their own good. Yet is not that the utmost of his loving kindness. That they may see his mercies never cease, where men do not obstinately reject them, and forsake them, though they may not expect any more Prophets of an ordinary rank to warn them when they forget the law, by observing which they should prevent the terrors of his day; yet that they may not have any excuse, or pretence at all to say that it came on them unawares, he promiseth hard before the coming thereof, an extraordinary one, whom he calls Eliab, to endeavour even then to convert them if they would be converted. So follows it in the next verse.

5. ¶ Behold I will send you Eliab the Prophet, before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord.

Behold I will send you Eliab the Prophet, &c.] As to the connexion of these words with the former in such manner as we have said, Kimchi thus notes. "Although I warn you to have recourse to the law of Moses in every generation, yet notwithstanding for your good I will send to you Eliab the Prophet." But concerning the person, who is here meant by Eliab, is no small controversy and difference betwixt Expositors. The Jews agree not among themselves; the forementioned Kimchi with several others of them, think it meant of that Eliab himself in person who lived and prophesied in the time of Abab King of Israel, 1 Kings xvii, &c. The meaning, saith he, is, "That he will put again his soul which ascended into heaven, into a body which shall be created like his first body, because his first body turned to earth at his ascension, every element to its like element; and after that he shall cause him to live in his body, he shall send him to Israel before the day of judgment, which is the great and dreadful day of the Lord, and he shall warn both fathers and children together, to turn with all their heart unto the Lord, and they that turn shall be delivered from the day of judgment, as he saith, &c." Aben Ezra seems to be of the same opinion, but to think that Eliab continued still in the same body, and to believe that he appeared sometimes in the days of their holy wisemen, and prays God to hasten the time of his coming. So Others of them. Abarbinel here thinks the same as to his person, though not determining whether he shall come in a new raised body, or in his old body, which he never put off, "God, saith he, shews them that the first which shall arise at the resurrection shall be Eliab the Prophet, whether he shall rise as others do, if his body were consumed, when he was taken up, as some of the modern Doctors affirm, or whether he miraculously remain in his body and soul in the earthly paradise, as our wise men thought, and that God will send him; before the great and dreadful day of the Lord come, which is the day of judgment for all living." All these think that here is a promise of sending Eliab (the old Elijah) in person. Others of them of no less authority, think it not necessarily to be so meant, but of sending some other great Prophet, who because he should be like to Eliab in dignity, and knowledge, is called by his name, as appears by what R. Tanchum notes on this place, whose words are in their own language, partly set down in the Miscellaneous Notes in the book called Porta Mosis, chap. vi. page 219. and translated into English, found thus, "This without doubt, is a promise, that there should appear a Prophet in Israel a little before the time of the appearance of the Messiah, and some of the learned men do think that he is Elijah the Tishbite himself; and that is the opinion that is found in most of the allegorical expositions; Others think it meant that he should be some great Prophet like unto him in degree, and occupying his place as for what concerns the knowledge of God, and the making manifest of his name, and therefore called by the name of Eliab. So expressly declares that eminent great Doctor Rabbi Moses, the son of *Maimon at the end of his great juridical work called Mishneh Torah (or the repetition of the law) and perhaps according to this opinion may be understood to be Messias the son of Joseph, as he saith also." These words seem to intimate that that should be said by Maimonides in that place. But I do not find any such thing in him there at all, either in any printed copies or manuscripts, which I have seen. He mentions indeed in the preceding ceding chapter there, two Messiahs, but the first he saith was David who delivered Israel from their enemies, and the second should be of the posterity of David who should save Israel from the hands of the children of Esau (the Romans he means) according to that obstinate error of theirs, expecting that Christ should come to restore a temporal kingdom to them, and destroy their enemies: but of a Messiah the son of Joseph (by whom what they mean hath been elsewhere shewn, viz. such a one as should be of the posterity of Joseph, and coming before the Messiah, the Son of David, undergo all the suffering part of such things as are in Scripture spoken of Messiah, and leave only the glorious, and triumphant part alone for the Son of David;) I find not in him any mention. R. Tanchum goes on and saith, "That here is said the same that was" above said, chap. iii. 1. Behold I send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me, and that what he there saith, And the Lord whom ye seek shall suddenly come to his temple, even the Messenger of the covenant, &c. is meant no doubt of the King Messiah: may he quickly be revealed. But the truth of the matter as to these promises will be distinctly known by their manifestation (or fulfilling.) For there is none that hath any certain tradition concerning them, but every one speaks according to what appears to him, and preponderates with him among the interpretations of the Texts of Scripture, as there also the same Moses the son of Maimon declares." Out of these words of his appears that among them is this difference, that Some understand Eliab in person to be here spoken of, Others not so, but some great Prophet in degree and dignity like him. The same difference and doubt seems anciently to have been among their ancestors, as appears by their questioning John Baptist, whether he were the Messiah, or Elias, or that Prophet, John i. 19, 20, 21. for what can those words more probably seem to mean, than whether he were Eliab in person, or that Prophet which was prophesied of, called by the name of Eliab? And we may think that the Scribes mostly thought that it should be Eliab in person, Mat. xvii. 10. This difference and doubt he thinks cannot be determined but by the event and fulfilling of the things themselves: no man (saith Maimonides) can know how they should be, till they be fulfilled. This therefore that we except against them for, is, why since they have been fulfilled, the things concerning the messenger, and Eliab, in John Baptist, the things concerning the Lord, spoken of, in Christ, they will not yet for all such demonstrations by the performance of their offices, acknowledge them; but rejecting them, and shutting their eyes against what hath been already fulfilled, look on them as things not fulfilled, and expect both Eliab and the Messiah, as here promised, yet to come. But perhaps they will here be ready to retort, and ask why then do

* Calv. See Not. in Porta Mosis, c. 6. p. 218, &c.

* Viz. Traet. Melakim, cap. ult.

Christians yet dissent among themselves, concerning the exposition of this prophecy, some of them affirming that here is meant Eliab in person, and that he is yet to come, as well as any Jews do? It is to be confessed that here is a wider difference betwixt Christians than might be wished there were, though on other grounds than the Jews go. The Jews whether they understand it of Eliab in person, or any other great Prophet set forth by his name, all drive at this end to prove that the Messiah is not yet come, because no such Prophet hath yet appeared: against whom we need not add to what hath been said on chap. iii. 1. Their not acknowledging them is no proof that they are not both long since come. The Christians all in this agreeing that the Messiah or Christ is already come a first time, and shall at the end of the world come a second time, and in this also that John Baptist was the promised messenger sent before him at his first coming, and that he was deservedly called Elias, yet in this differ, that some of them do not think that the Elias here mentioned is the same with the messenger before promised, chap. iii. 1. nor the same coming of Christ spoken of, that there: but that there, is to be understood his first coming, and John Baptist his forerunner at that, but here his second coming to judgment, and, as Mr. Mede thinks, either Eliab in person, or some other called by that name, who shall come before him at that: whereas Others rightly take the Eliab here mentioned to be the same with the messenger there promised to be sent, viz. John Baptist, and in both places the same coming of Christ to be meant, viz. that usually called his first coming. And this we say is manifestly the truth. It appears by what is spoken by Christ himself in the gospel, Mat. xvii. 9, &c. and Mark ix. 11, &c. in the story of his transfiguration, where the Disciples, Peter, and James, and John, which he took up into the mountain with him, after they had heard what Moses and Elias talked with him (probably concerning the fulfilling of the prophecies in this chapter of Malachi mentioned, concerning the approach of the great and dreadful day of the Lord, wherein he should destroy his wicked obstinate enemies, the unbelieving Jews, and deliver his faithful servants that believed in him, out of that destruction, before which it is here said that he would send Elias to forewarn them of it, and to preach repentance for the averting of it, whom they did not discern to be yet to come;) asked him, Why then say the Scribes that Elias must first come, and Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come, (or cometh first) and shall restore all things: but I say unto you, that Elias is come already, and they knew him not (or acknowledged him not) but have done unto him whatsoever they listed, &c. These words, I say, make it so plain that the Elias here meant was then already come, and that no other for fulfilling this prophecy, on which that saying of the the Scribes (or Doctors of the law among the Jews) was grounded, was to be expected before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord, that there seems to be no place for questioning it. Yet do they, who would have Elias that ancient Prophet to be here meant, take hence their chief argument to prove that he here spoken of is not yet come, and therefore that the day here mentioned is likewise to be understood of the day of the last judgment, before which they expect he shall come, because, say they, it is said in the future, Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things, as if it were a thing yet to come, but surely the following words, But I say unto you that Elias is already come, make it evident that that interpretation cannot be put on the former, so as to infer from them, that Elias is not yet come, but that they must be expounded thus, It was truly said, Elias shall come, &c. or, It is true that Elias should first come (or was first to come :) and so it appears the Disciples understood it, of whom it is said, ver. 13. Then the Disciples understood that he spake to them of John the Baptist, which is a plain proof that they, that understand it of any other, understand it not aright. They, though the opinion be ancient, and have many both of note and learning which follow it, (for what end it will not be to our purpose to examine,) may seem (as a great learned Man observes) to have taken it rather from some tradition, that they had heard from the Jews, than to have warrant from the Scripture, or any good ground for it. Sure the words of our Saviour in the place cited, make not for them, but evidently against them, while he concludes all, with affirming that that Elias, which they spake of, was already come, not saying that another was to be expected, though one were already come. To the same purpose, as clearly makes what he elsewhere saith, concerning John Baptist, Mat. xi. 10. This is he of whom it is written, behold I send my messenger before thy face which shall prepare thy way before thee, and ver. 14. And if ye will receive it (if ye will receive and believe the truth) this is Elias which was to come, (ὁ μέλων ἐρχεται) spoken there as of the future as well as in the forementioned words, which shall come, to shew that he was when the Prophet Malachi spake, to come afterward, not that when our Saviour spake he was yet to come: he plainly sheweth, by saying thus, that he was already come. By all this our Saviour makes it manifest, that all that could in Malachi be interpreted of Elias was made good in John Baptist,^a who came in the spirit and power of Elias, and was to be understood of him alone, as much as if he had in express words said; that he only was the Elias, that was to come; and they were not by virtue of Malachi's Prophecy, or any other, to look for another. And of him because he is here stiled a Prophet, doth he say, that he was more than a Prophet, Mat. xi. 9. yea much more, Luke vii. 26.

^y Melacim, c. 2. §. 2. ^z Ibid. ^a See Notes on chap. iii. 1. ^b As Dr. Hammond proves on Mat. xvii. note ^a, and Luke ix. note ^b, and 2 Peter i. note ^c.

VOL. I.

G g g

for (saith he) ver. 28. I say unto you among those that are born of women there is not a greater Prophet than John the Baptist. And in Luke i. 76. Zecharias saith of him that he should be called the Prophet of the Highest, and all the people were persuaded that he was so, Luke xx. 6. his denying himself to be that Prophet, who the people asked him if he were he, John i. 21. shews only that they were mistaken in their conceit, concerning that Prophet which they asked after, as likewise they were in their question concerning Elias, which likewise he denied himself to be, viz. Elias in person as they expected, but not that he was he that is here called Elijah the Prophet.

Here the Greek Version instead of Prophet puts the epithet of Tisbite, which was the appellation of the Prophet Elijah of old, and by that they who would here have it to be understood of him in person, strengthen their opinion: but sure that adds no strength to it, besides that this is a manifest change of the word in the original, which ought to be of greatest authority, there is no doubt but that by the same reason, and figurative way of speaking, he may as well be called Elijah the Tisbite, as Elijah the Prophet, that only shewing the country of that Prophet, as the other word his office; if he deserved to be called Eliab the Prophet, he deserved to be called Eliab the Tisbite. For that Eliab the Prophet, whose name, because he came in his spirit and power, he was called by, was a Tisbite: in this there is nothing of force to prove that here, and in the third chapter, ver. 1. are meant two different Eliabs. We conclude therefore from the express words of our Saviour, that he that is meant here by Eliab is John the Baptist and no other, and remit the Reader for what is of him affirmed, and concerns us to know more of what is said of his person, to what hath been spoken on chap. iii. 1. That which is added in this verse concerns the time of his coming, viz. that he should be sent before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord. That day is the same which is spoken of, chap. iii. 2. called there the day of his coming and his appearing, and ver. 17. the day which the Lord shall make (or according to our Translation) the day wherein he shall make up his jewels, and in this chapter, ver. 1. the day which shall come burning as an oven, and shall burn up the wicked as stubble, but wherein to those that fear the name of the Lord, the sun of righteousness shall arise with healing in his wings, and again, ver. 3. the day which the Lord should make, or wherein he should do what he had spoken; so signal a day as that it may above others be called the day of the Lord, as shewing more of his power and presence, than ordinary days, though all his. And that day we look upon (as we have before shewed) to be that day or time which should end in the dreadful destruction of Jerusalem, so comprehending under it (as we have said on chap. iii. 2.) all the time from ^a Grot. on Mat. xvii. 10.^d Luke i. 17.^e Rib.

Christ's

Tirin.

^f Rainoldus de lib. Apocr. prelect. 97. p. 1199.^z See on ver. 3. out of Moreh, l. 2. c. 29.

Christ's first beginning to preach to the Jews to that destruction of them and their city. And all this may be called the day of his first coming, to distinguish it from that which is usually called his second coming, viz. his coming at the last day to judge all the world. Otherwise if we will more nicely distinguish and confine the day of his first coming to his birth, and the second to his coming at the day of doom to judge the world, this will be to be accounted a middle day, or coming between those two (as the learned Dr. Hammond calls it on Mat. xxiv. 3. and Luke ix. 31.) for vengeance on his enemies, and deliverance of his servants.

But it may seem convenient to comprehend, as we said, all that time from his first manifestation till his executing that fearful national judgment on the Jews, under one notion of his first coming. For though that which makes these titles of great and dreadful is most signally applicable to that day of vengeance; yet all along in his preaching and foretelling, and threatening them with that doom as certain to come, if they continued obstinate and would not repent, as if it were already present, is that which may deservedly denominate this whole time, a great and dreadful day to them. John the Baptist's words, wherein he describes it, and forewarns of it, sound no less, as Mat. iii. 2. where he begins his preaching with Repent ye, for the kingdom of God is at hand, and ver. 7. O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? and ver. 10. Now the ax is laid to the root of the trees, therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire, and ver. 12. where he tells them of Christ's coming with his fan in hand. The day or time thus described is a day of terror, and that so described is the day of Christ's first coming then already begun. Our Saviour's own preaching and behaviour while he was on earth was likewise very troublesome to the unbelieving Priests, Scribes, and Pharisees; their quiet by both he disturbs by continual minding them of, and sharply reproving them for, their sins and hypocrisy, and denouncing to them many sad woes for them with severest threats, ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell? Mat. xxiii. 33. and telling them, Behold your house is left unto you desolate, ver. 38. i. e. the desolation of your temple, city, and nation is irreversibly at hand, as certainly shall it be as if it were already done. Again, when of that stately admired frame of their temple, which his Disciples shewed him as a thing to be wondered at, he saith, Verily I say unto you, there shall not be left one stone upon another which shall not be thrown down, Mat. xxiv. 2. and likewise that the days should come upon Jerusalem, that her enemies should cast a trench about her, and compass her round, and keep her in on every side; and should lay her even with the ground, and her children within her, and should not leave in her one stone upon another, because she knew not the day of her visitation, i. e. because she would not repent upon all his calls, Luke xix. 43, 44. and that generation, he saith, should not pass till all these things were fulfilled, Mat. xxiv. 34. and Luke xxi. 32. within the life-time of some that there were then alive all that he said should be certainly fulfilled. That time in which these and like dreadful things were spoken by him who spake as one having authority, as the people acknowledged, Mat. vii. 29. the Lord himself then on earth, whose words were as things done, may well be called a great and dreadful day of the Lord, at least an awful day, or day to be feared (as ¹ Some would have it rather rendred,) how much more when we shall look on it as concluded before that generation was passed away, within a matter of forty years, ² with the fearful and total destruction of Jerusalem? so that comprehending all that time, both of Christ's being on earth, come in the flesh, wherein he threatened such destruction to the Jews, and of his coming in that short space after his leaving the earth, to execute what he had threatened under the name of his first coming, we say that by the day here called the great and dreadful day of the Lord, that is meant. If any shall so distinguish the parts of this time as to call the time of his being on earth, the day of his first coming, and the destruction of Jerusalem, a distinct coming from it; that which we say is, that by the great and dreadful day here meant, seems chiefly to be understood that of Jerusalem's destruction, though we think it better to join both these together under the notion of one day, as we have said, and that which we would evince is, that it is not literally and primarily meant of the day of the last judgment, as divers would have it, especially they who will have by Elias to be meant Elias in person; the one opinion depends much on the other. A chief argument of such of them as are Christians, seems that taken from the epithet it self, given to this day, because it is called a dreadful day, ³ which they say is proper to the day of the last judgment, whereas the day of his first coming is not so called, but an acceptable time and day of salvation. But sure, by what hath been already said, it appears that the day of his first coming taken as reaching to the destruction of Jerusalem (as we do take it) may well so be called, and was indeed so.

To the same purpose may be added to what hath been said, that which Simeon said unto Mary when she presented Jesus in the temple, concerning him, Behold this Child is set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel, Luke ii. 34. that is, as it is well and appositely to our purpose paraphrased by the learned Dr. Hammond, "is appointed by God to be a " means of bringing punishment and ruin
" upon all obdurate impenitents, and on the " other side to redeem, restore, and recover
" those that will be wrought upon by him."

He

¹ Dr. Hammond's Paraph.
de Romano Pontifice, l. 3. c. 6. and see Chr. à Castro, and Ribera.

² Druf.

³ Dr. Hammond on Mark xiii. 30. and Luke xxi. 32.

⁴ Bellarm.

He that was a chief corner stone, elect and precious, precious indeed to those that believed, was at once unto the disobedient a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence, 1 Peter ii. 6, 7, 8. such a stone as whosoever should fall on should be broken, but on whomsoever it should fall, it should grind him to powder, Mat. xxi. 44. and whereas ^m they urge in confirmation of their opinion, that Christ at his first coming came not to judge but to be judged, not to destroy but to save, we may oppose what he saith, John ix. 39. for judgment am I come into this world, so as to shew that that cannot be so understood, as to contradict this. And that place of John xii. 47. where he saith he came not to judge the world, may, as Dr. Hammond observes, be well understood, that he came not to accuse; but certain it is that the Father committed all judgment to the Son, and gave him authority to execute judgment, John v. 22, 27. and that as he came for judgment into the world, so he did execute it being come, both by his preaching while he was among men, laying the ax to the root of the tree, and feverely putting home the blow at the signal destruction of the unbelieving obstinate Jews, in few years after his departure out of the world, when they who before refused to be judged by him, and to be convinced by his preaching, of their evil ways, and to repent of them, that so judging themselves they might have prevented the farther judgment of the Lord, and thought to prevent that, by judging him, and crucifying him, did by their obstinacy pull it on themselves, and felt the sad effects in so dreadful a manner in that particular judgment on that nation, that nothing but that fearful perdition of the whole world expected at the last day, can be imagined more terrible: so that that destruction of theirs being comprehended under the day of his first coming (in the way that we have said,) makes it deservedly called, the great and dreadful day of the Lord, as well as the last day of his coming to the general judgment may be so called. And whereas, as they say, that the day of his first coming is called an acceptable day, a day of salvation, it is to be considered to whom it was so; viz. to such as received him with good will as a Saviour, believed in him, and obeyed him, but to others it was far otherwise, a day burning as an oven to destroy them. In like manner also may that day of the future judgment be termed, and shall be to the righteous a day of salvation; a welcome day, a day longed for by them, and in respect to the certain expectation of which they hold up their heads against all the pressures and persecutions, which from ungodly men they suffer before hand, and are by the Apostle bid to comfort one another with those words, 1 Thessal. iv. 18. so that in these epithets here put to the day here spoken of, there is nothing which maketh why it may not be attributed as well to the one as to the other, to that of Christ's first coming, as that of his second: and the other circumstances make it evident that it ought to be understood primarily here of the first, however applicable to the second.

In the Prophet Joel, chap. ii. 31. we read of a day of the Lord described in the very same terms, and concerning the day designed thereby is much the like difference of opinions, as here. ⁿ But St. Peter in Acts ii. 20. manifestly interprets that also of the day of Christ's first coming, and so from all which hath been said we conclude that by the great and dreadful day, before the coming of which the Lord bids them here take notice that he will send Elijah the Prophet, is to be understood the day of Christ's first coming, which includes his coming in judgment particularly, against the nation of the Jews, and ended in the destruction of the unbelievers amongst them and of their city, before which John the Baptist, designed here by the name and title of Elijah the Prophet, was according to this prophecy sent; and not of his coming to execute the general judgment on the whole world, at the day of doom, which shall end in the destruction of the whole, farther than as this was a type of that, before which that he will send an harbinger, as he did before this, is but the conjecture of ^p those that affirm it, and that for which there is not from these words any evident proof.

That which hath made me so long to insist on the clearing of this exposition, even to tediousness, is because the expounding the words otherwise, and as of a thing yet to come, would be to give up to the Jews an argument, which ought not to be given up to them. For if it be granted to them that Elijah in person be to be expected before the coming of Christ, here spoken of, and that the day here spoken of be not yet come, they will think they have reason to say (as they obstinately do) that the true Messiah is not yet come, and yet to expect another Christ as well as another messenger; whereas if it be made evident (as we suppose it is) that that Elijah here foretold of, is already come, and the day here meant, also come, they can have nothing more but mere obstinacy to pretend why they should not believe in Christ, and forsake that error received from their fathers.

Farther arguments for confirming what we have said, the following words also afford, as we shall see in taking them in their order; before we pass to which we may take notice of the Greek rendring the word הַנּוֹרָא bannora, which other translations render terrible, dreadful or awful, by ἐπιφανής, as likewise in Joel ii. 11, 38. illustrious or notable, as Ours translate Acts ii. 20. where that second place of Joel is cited, which hath made ^q Some to think that they read in the copy, that they followed, הַנּוֹרָא Hannireab, from נָרָא to see; whereas הַנּוֹרָא is from נָרָא yare, to fear: but another learned ^r Man is so far from their opinion,

as

^m Bell. ibid. See John iii. 17. and xii. 47. ⁿ Rainold. de lib. Apocryphis præf. 95. and Cameron on Mat. xvii. 11. ^o Ibid. ^p Mede's discourse on Mat. i. 14, &c. ^q Schind. Lex. in נָרָא and Capel. Crit. p. 60. l. 2. ^r L. de Dieu, on Acts ii. 20.

as that he thinks that the Greek word mentioned is not there to be taken in its ordinary signification of illustrious or notable, but rather for terrible, and so likewise to have that notion in the title of Antiochus Epiphanes, who he thinks was not called so much illustrious as terrible. But this neither makes much for or against our purpose in giving the meaning. To the day spoken of may well agree, either of those epithets: it was terrible and dreadful, and therefore notable, and perhaps there was anciently that communication of significations between those roots in the Hebrew as to justify both.

6. And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse.

And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, &c.] As in the former verse we had him whom God in mercy would send to them for preventing their utter destruction, described by his title of Eliab the Prophet, and by the time of his coming, before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord, so in this we have him described by his office, viz. that he should turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, to which are added the good effects which should be produced by his performance of that office, viz. the preventing of God's coming and smiting the earth with a curse. These words are referred to by the angel, Luke i. 16, 17. with a farther explication of them, and applied to John the Baptist thus, and many of the children of Israel shall be turned unto the Lord their God, and he shall go before him in the spirit, and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just, to make ready a people prepared for the Lord. That these words are there referred to, is manifest, and the person spoken of, so expressly declared to be John the Baptist, called therefore Eliab, because he should come in the spirit and power of Elias, that there can be no reason why that should be doubted or disputed of among Christians; or Elias in person, or any other by that name called, should be expected by virtue of them, (as before we have said.)

As concerning the meaning of the words by which his office is expressed, whatever they think concerning the person, it will be indifferent to all to enquire. They must have the same meaning, whosoever they are applied to, whether by Jews or Christians. For the meaning of them, therefore, we may look what they do or ought to agree in, comparing them one with another. To which enquiry it will be convenient to premise an observation concerning that word or preposition, which in our Translation is rendred to, and is in the Hebrew by Al, viz. that it is (as ^a Grammars observe, and examples convince) of divers uses and significations. It signifies most usually above, over, on; but not only so, but withal, to, with, for, by, near, against, in, and other like, of which examples occur in the Hebrew Text. And according to the words with which it is joined and the thing spoken of, is the signification thereof to be discerned and distinguished. Again, concerning the appellations and titles of fathers and children, that they are not only attributed to those that are so by nature, but to others also, who for other respects or relation one to another, have those names given them; as older people that of fathers, younger that of children; and so learned men, or teachers, are looked on as common fathers, in respect to their disciples, or such as learn of them, or are instructed by them, and the like.

This concerning the nature of those words being observed, will help us to judge of such expositions as are given of the whole sentence. The signification of the forementioned preposition which our Translators choose to give it in this place, is to, or unto, which it often manifestly hath elsewhere, as Joshua ii. 8. she came up, אלֵיהֶם Aliehém, to them: and 1 Sam. ii. 11. went אֶל בֵּיתוֹ Al Beito, to his house, with many other places. And it is likewise embraced by most of Interpreters: but then accordingly as they apply it to fathers and children, and their different understanding of what is meant by them, do they differ in giving the meaning. They that understand them of such as should be then together in present being, whether natural fathers and children, or others who might be called by that title (as Ours seem to do) take his office, so as here described, to consist in taking away such discords and differences as should be betwixt them, and settling peace, and love, and charity among them, so as that their hearts should be propense and kindly affectionated one to another, and they should be of one heart and one soul among themselves, as it is said of the believers, Acts iv. 32. and with one consent hearken to God and receive the truth preached to them. So that this disposition and behaviour, which it is here said, it should be the work of the promised Eliab to work in their hearts, may seem (as a learned ^u Jew observes) contrary to that which in the Prophet Micah is described, as being found among them in his time, chap. vii. 6. the son dishonoureth the father, or that which on their hearkning not to him our Saviour saith, should be in after-times, the father shall be divided against the son, and the son against the father, Luke xii. 53. Such dissensions among them in those times here spoken of, are ^v observed to have been caused and fomented by the several sects that were among them, as of Sadducees and Pharisees, and the like; which had such ill influence as to banish those due respects which ought to have been betwixt parents and children, superiors and inferiors (or whosoever under the title of father

^a Abu Walid, and R. D. Kimchi in Radic. Grot. on the place, and on Luke i. 12.

^u See R. D. Kimchi in Radicibus.

^v Aben Ezra.

^w See

father and son may be comprehended;) and that love and charity, which should have been betwixt all orders and degrees of men, whose hearts Eliab (i. e. John Baptist coming in the spirit and power of Eliab) should be sent to reduce (if possible) to better order, to mutual agreement among themselves, and joint obedience to God. This seems to have been the ancientest understanding of the words among the Jewish * Doctors, who sum up the meaning of them in other words, saying, "That he should be sent, להשוות הבחלות Lehasbucth hammachloketb, to compose dissension, or reconcile differences, לעשות Leasoth shalom binebem, to make peace between them, that they might all agree in the profession of one religion:" and thus seem the Greek Interpreters to have understood them, who instead of the second member of the sentence, and the heart of the children to their fathers, put for the meaning of it, and the heart of a man (or every one) to his neighbour. Against this exposition I know not what may be excepted; yet do Others, taking the forementioned preposition in the same sense, of to, give Others: * Some, he shall turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, &c. i. e. of the Jews to the Gentiles, and of the Gentiles to the Jews; which though it may be true, and that John did so, and it was as well an effect of his preaching and baptizing, as of the gospel, yet, I suppose, is not the literal meaning of these words, which were spoken to the Jews, and more particularly concern them between themselves. * Others, he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, &c. i. e. of God to Israel, and Israel to God; who is called their Father, and calleth them sons. That this is comprehended within the latitude of these words we doubt not, inasmuch as we hear the angel, where he refers to these words, putting as part of John's office, many of the children of Israel shall be turn to the Lord their God; and indeed for that end was he to turn their hearts one to another, that they might all with joint hearts, or one heart, turn to the Lord. Yet can we not think that to be the literal meaning of the present words: God is called their Father elsewhere, but I suppose fathers here put in the plural number, cannot be properly used of him.

Another ^b exposition of Camerarius, who makes the meaning to be, that he should reduce the hearts of the fathers to the children, and of the children to the fathers, i. e. "Should turn or bring back the hearts of the fathers, so as that they should take care of the pious education of their children, whereas they had been negligent in the right instructing and disciplining of them, and the hearts of the children who had been disobedient to their fathers; so as to yield due reverence and obedience to them, may be well reduced to the first." But as to that which ^c Others give, viz. that by the fathers should be meant the old Patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, &c. and by the children, those of that generation when this Elias should come: I do not understand how it can be made good. To say that the hearts of the children should be turned by their conversion to the same faith that was in those ancient holy men is intelligible; but how the hearts of those so long since dead should be said to be turned to those of that generation, is not so easily conceived. These hitherto mentioned all take על Al here in the signification of to. There are of the Jews who would have it here to signify by, or by the hand, or means of; so R. Solomon out of an ancienter Doctor, shall turn the hearts of the fathers by the hand of the children, i. e. "Shall speak to the children to persuade their fathers to embrace the way of the Lord, and on the other hand to the fathers to persuade their children." The same signification of it takes Abarbinel also, and gives this strange interpretation, making the time spoken of to be according to his fancy after the resurrection, which he will have to be before the end of the world, "If any be then at that time living who hath children dead, he shall by them, being raised from the dead at the coming of Eliab be converted to the truth, and on the contrary such children as are living, by their fathers being raised; that so before the end of the world all may be turned to the truth, that all be not destroyed." But this is so uncouth an exposition and so little agreeing to the words, as that it will be much from the purpose to speak more of it, nor doth that by R. Solomon mentioned agree with them, there being shewed in them what God would do by the hands of his Elias, not what Elias should do by the hands of others.

But there is yet another acception of the word, which is by Others, both Jews and Christians, preferred, as giving the plainest meaning; and that is by taking it here to signify not, to, but ^d with, as manifestly in several other places it doth. As for example, על מרים Al merorim, with bitter herbs, Exod. xii. 8, 9. his head על with his legs, and chap. xxxv. 22. and they came, על נשים Al nafim, with women, i. e. as Ours translate it both men and women; with several like instances. Thus R. D. Kimchi here will have it taken, giving thus his exposition, "He shall warn or call on both fathers and children together, with all their heart to turn unto God, and they that turn shall be delivered from the day of judgment;" so that על is to be looked on as signifying the same that עם im, with, fathers with the children, and of children with their fathers, all of them together. So likewise R. Tanchum, the meaning (saith he) is, "That he shall seek to rectify (or reduce into order) the sect (or people) that they may be all of them of one heart, in the obedience (or worship) of God, and the word על is in the signification of עם, with,

VOL. I.

H h h

* Talmud. Tract. Edaioth. cap. ult.
R. Tanchum. ^b See L. de Dieu: Tranfl. MS.

^y Ibid. and Maimon. cap. ult.

^c Rib. Menoch. Tirin. &c. and see Chr. à Castro.

^z See Ribera, and Lightfoot.

^a See

^d So an Arabick

“with, i. e. faith he, he shall seek to rectify “the hearts of the fathers among them, with “the hearts of the children; and the repeat“ing (or doubling) of the words, (viz. and “the heart of the children with their fathers,)” “is for greater confirmation sake.” Thus say those Jews, with whom do concur (as we said) divers Christians also, and are urgent for it, so as that the words may denote that he should convert or call to repentance all of them together, both old and young, young and old, that so they might all be a people prepared for the Lord, (as Luke i. 17. he speaks) and readily receive him, and with joint hearts obey him; this exposition gives a clear and plain meaning, and is easily reconcileable with the first mentioned; both even necessarily go together; viz. the converting all together, one with another, and one to another, in obedience to God, and love one to another: and therefore we may well look on the words as comprehending both, and that for giving a full meaning of them, both ought jointly to be taken in; and so are they taken in likewise in that one word, in which our Saviour elsewhere sums up that office of this Eliab herein more expressed, viz. ἀποκαλῦψαι πάντα, shall restore all things, reduce all things to right order, which could not otherwise be done than by turning them all one to another, and one with another to the faith of Christ. In much like manner to that of our Saviour’s, do some of the Jews likewise sum up the import of these words, concerning his office whoever it be that is meant, saying that he was לישׁר ישראל ולהכין לבם Leyasher Israel ve- lebacin libbam, to rectify Israel, and to prepare or put in good order their hearts.

In the forecited place, Luke i. 17. where these words of Malachi are plainly referred to, the words, and the heart of their children to their fathers, are not put as they are here read, but instead of them, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just, which the learned Dr. Hammond, in his Notes on that place shews to be as a gloss or paraphrase on the Prophet’s words, to explain his expression; both importing that a general reformation should be endeavoured to be wrought by the person sent for that end, among the Jews, for fitting them to receive the Lord Christ. From the same spirit did both expressions proceed, and it will not concern us to be inquisitive why he should change his language or expressions. By what he saith by his angel there in Luke, it is evident that what he here spake by his Prophet was spoken of John the Baptist, and not of Eliab in his person. And with what Elias-like zeal John did set himself to perform the office here designed for him, appears by what we read in the gospel of his mission, and his preaching, and the time thereof, and the contents and effects of it, as Mat. iii. Mark i. Luke iii. and John i. He that shall duly consider what is in those places said of John, and what he did, and compare them with what is said here of the Eliab promised, that he should do; will easily perceive all that is here prophesied to have been already made good; that there will be no ground left to him for expecting a farther completion of it, by Eliab in person, or any other under that name to be expected before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord here spoken of. Here God saith, Behold I will send Eliab the Prophet; in the gospel it is said, there was a man sent from God whose name was John, John i. 6. and that that John was Elias which was for to come, Mat.

xi. 14. Here, that he was to be sent before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord. There the time of John’s coming is described that it was when the kingdom of God was at hand, Mat. iii. 2. when the day of wrath was coming, ver. 7. when the ax was laid to the root of the trees, and every tree that brought not forth good fruit should be between down and cast into the fire, ver. 10. when he was now coming whose fan was in his hand, and he would thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into his barn, but would burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire, ver. 12.
 which expressions (as we have before shewed) are an evident description of the great and dreadful day of the Lord here spoken of: here, that this Eliab should turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to the fathers, preach to all sorts young and old conversion and repentance; there in the gospel, that John should turn many of the children of Israel to the Lord their God, and the hearts of the fathers to the children, &c.
Luke i. 16, 17. and that he did preach to all the baptism of repentance, Mark i. 4. Luke iii. 3.
 and that with such power and good effect that Jerusalem and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan, went out to him, and were baptized of him, confessing their sins, Mat. iii.
 5, 6. and Mark i. 5. i. e. multitudes of all sorts and conditions of people out of those places, Luke iii. 7. of the common sort of people; ver. 10. of those that might seem to have least of the fear of God before their eyes, least regard of, or charity for other men, publicans, ver. 12. soldiers, ver. 14. and were at greatest difference in opinion one from another, Pharisees, and Sadducees. To all these did he instil precepts of charity, Luke iii. 11. the hearts of all these it is manifest that he did turn one to another, in that they agreed and were united in one common baptism by him.
 What can more punctually agree than the prophesy here, and the matter of fact set down in the gospels thus paralleled, do, to shew that the person who is here so characterized in respect to what was to be, and there to what was made good in him, is one and the same, and that no other ought to be expected by virtue of this prophecy? certainly when we consider how exactly all things do concur of what is foretold of in the Prophet, and reported as done

• Chr. à Castro, L. de Dieu, and Dr. Hammond on Luke i. 17. in whose Notes, where he refers to this place, is ill printed for יל. f Mat. xvii. 11. and see Mark ix. 12. g Maimon. Melaḳim, c. ult. h Dr. Hammond on Mat. iii. note c. i Grot. k Lightfoot.

done in the gospel, in the one person of John the Baptist, and how all things here designed to be done by this person named Eliab, were by him in a signal manner performed; we shall perceive that there is little grounds for that argument which is by ¹ Some here taken to prove that Eliab in person is to be expected before the day of the last judgment, because (as they say) John did not fulfil all that is here required, in the conversion of the hearts of the fathers and children one to another, or as it is summed up by our Saviour in restoring all things, Mat. xvii. Not to enquire what other answers may be, or are, given to that objection, abundantly sufficient for confirmation of that exposition which we have follow'd, as to the scope and meaning of them, and to shew that they do not afford any good grounds for any such argument, will be the consideration of two things which would by those who draw that argument here from them, be otherwise (I suppose) easily granted. 1. ^m That words which are put to import that such or such a thing should be effected by any, do often signify rather his endeavour, and the doing of what would or might be sufficient for the effecting of them, than a full accomplishment as to the effect, or consequents on his endeavour. So that what is said that the person here spoken of should turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, &c. and Mat. xvii. 10. that he should restore all things, may well be said to be fulfilled, if he did diligently that which tended to the producing, and was sufficient to have produced, such effects, though through default in the subjects on which he was to work, the hearts of all were not turned, nor all things, or men (as ⁿ Some think it may, though put in the neuter gender, be particularly applied to them) fully rectified and reduced into right order. 2. ^o That the word, all, is not always to be taken in that extent as to comprehend every particular (whether it be applied to persons, things, times, or places) but only a great number, and to shew the diffusive nature, of that which is said should have respect to all, to be such as might be extended to more, even to all that should come in its way, or be offered to it, or were rightly qualified to receive its operation, or required to make good the truth of what is spoken of.

To omit other examples, which are frequent, one already mentioned, and which is to our present purpose will make it evident. It is said, Mat. iii. 5. that Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan went out to John, and were baptized of him. It will not by any be thought that every person in those places did thus, but a great multitude or store of them, and if more had come, or his preaching had prevailed on more, John was ready to perform his office to them. This is thought enough to justify the expression, that all the country came unto him, and were baptized of him. Here is not in our Prophet the word all expressed, but indefinitely, without any number mentioned, said, shall turn the heart of the fathers and the heart of the children; but because where Christ sums up what is here said, or gives the meaning of it, he adds it, viz. and shall restore all things, it is by them looked on as here understood, and the ^p exceptions therefore taken, that by Elias is not here meant John the Baptist, because to restore all things is to convert to the true faith all Jews and Hereticks, &c. which John did not effect, and therefore Elias in person is yet to come, and do it. But if we suppose that all is to be here understood, surely that by all were to be meant no more than we have said, i. e. many of all sorts, all that should hearken to his preaching and receive his Doctrine, we may learn from the angels describing of the same office of his that is here described by this, that many of the children of Israel be should turn unto the Lord their God, going before him in the spirit and power of Elias to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children. The all and the many do then signify the same thing in this matter. And these things being observed, surely by what we read of John's performance, it is evident that the words here spoken of this Eliab to be sent, were in, and by him, so far (even to wonder) made good, that to expect another to fulfil them in greater measure, is not warranted by virtue of this prophecy. He was zealous in the highest degree in performing what he was sent to do, and on very many did his endeavours take effect. That they did not on more, on all among them without exceptions, prevail, was not through any defect or default in him, but because, as the Scripture expressly declares, concerning many of the Pharisees and Lawyers. (^q many of which yet came in unto him) they rejected the counsel of God against themselves, Luke vii. 30. the like effects which our Saviour, who came to convert them all and to save all, complains his own preaching to have had, among that same people, through their obstinacy, saying, O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, that killest the Prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as an hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not, Mat. xxiii. 37. ^r Some are so far from thinking that on these words can be grounded any argument to prove that the Elias here meant was not John Baptist, and that it is one yet to come at the end of the world, before Christ's last coming, as that they look on them as an argument to prove the clean contrary; because this Elias is to come before the great day of the Lord, and to call to conversion and repentance; for which was a fit season at Christ's first coming: but at the last day of his coming, the day of judgment, is no farther time for repentance, but for reward or execution of judgment and punishment; therefore that day, not this, must here be meant, and this Elias one already come, not one ⁿ Hammond on Luke i. note c.

¹ Bellarm. de Rom. Pontif. lib. 3, c. 6.

^r Tarnov. Cameron on Mat. xvii.

^m Grot. on Mat. xvii. 10. Non tam fructus operæ, quam opera ipsa respicitur.

^o See him on 1 Cor. note.

^p Bellarm. ut supra.

^q Mat. iii. 7.

one then to be expected. What we have said will farther be confirmed by consideration of the next words, in which is declared why he should be sent to convert them, viz. lest (saith the Lord) I come and smite the earth with a curse.

As the former words concerning the mission, the time and the office, of the person here named Eliab the Prophet do (as we have seen) exactly agree to John the Baptist, and so as that they cannot so be applied to any other, so do these also which declare the end for which he should be sent at that time, to perform that office, no less agree with those in which in the gospel we are shewed for what end John did perform his, by preaching conversion and repentance, viz. That being converted they might flee from the wrath to come, Mat. iii. 7. and the axe being now laid to the root of the trees, they bringing forth good fruit, might escape from being cut down and cast into the fire, ver. 10. that they might be as wheat, and gathered into the Lord's garner, and not as chaff which he should burn with unquenchable fire, ver. 12. Add how the angel explains it, Luke i. 17. that he should, (and as appears, chap. iii. accordingly did endeavour to do) turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just. For what end? to make ready a people prepared for the Lord, a people fit to receive him, and to find mercy and salvation from him at his coming. Who will not at first hearing or reading perceive, that those things said concerning the end of his preaching, are the very same with what is said here of this person's performing the office he is sent for, viz. that he should do it, to prevent, lest the Lord should come and smite the earth with a curse, or utter destruction. The same words which are given, even by some of the Jews, for explication of this expression of the Prophet, will as appositely be used for summing up the meaning of those in the gospel. Such is that exposition of R. Tanchum, The meaning, saith he, is, "He shall fairly persuade them, " that he may reduce any of them who may " possibly be reduced; to wit, such who have " not evil habits so firmly rooted in their " minds, that they cannot return from them " till the punishment which shall seize on all " the rebellious transgressors, overtake them." Surely this which he gives for the meaning of what is here said of this person here denoted by the title of Eliab, for shewing for what end he should perform his office, is manifestly the meaning of what is in the gospel said, concerning the end for which John was sent to preach repentance, and did preach it, and baptize unto it. Not much different as to the purpose, is that meaning which another among them gives of these words, viz. "Therefore " he shall warn them, that they may be " brought to repentance against that day come, " that he may not smite the whole land, (or " the land with a consumption) and it be a " curse." Thus far, well; and so as to shew the end which this Eliab was to aim at, to be altogether the same that John did aim at, and labour to effect, so far as that we cannot but look on him as the person here designed, and have not reason to expect any other for making good, as we have before said, this here spoken. What this last Rabbin adds, They that will not be warned by his admonition, shall be consumed and perish in the wilderness of the people, or at the day of judgment in the land of Israel, doth only shew that he knew not well what to say as to the curse, or destruction here spoken of, when, or how it should be, not willing to understand it of that destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, on their rejecting both John's and Christ's admonitions, which it is (as we have before shewed) evidently meant of. He knows not on what to fix, and so speaks at random that which signifies nothing, and leaves the Reader in a maze. But if it be applied to that, all will run clear, not so if to any other. For against that which (as we have seen) many concur in, that it should be meant of the day of doom at Christ's last coming to judge the world, the form of the expression (as is by ' Some observed) affords an evident argument, lest I come, saith the Lord, and smite, &c. that shews that this judgment might by their repentance and conversion be prevented, which is confirmed by what our Saviour saith, Mat. xxiii. 37, 38. and Luke xiii. 34, 35. that therefore their house was left unto them desolate, because they would not be gathered when he would have gathered them, nor be brought to repentance by his call: and that all those evils, and a terrible destruction came upon them, because they would not know the things that belonged to their peace, nor the day of their visitation, when they were told of them both by John and himself, Luke xix. 42, 44. But that general judgment is a day that cannot by any means be prevented, but shall in God's appointed time certainly come, so that lest I come cannot be applied to that. For certainly he will come, without any peradventure. As for the explication of the word, earth, viz. that by it is here meant the land of Judea, the people spoken to, and of, and not the whole earth in general is evident. " That it is in that restrained signification for the land of Israel and Judea, peculiarly often used both in the Old and New Testament, is a thing so confessed as that there is no need farther to insist on it.

Abarbinel seeming to take it more generally thence infers, " That the destruction that is " here spoken of should be of things generable " and corruptible, such as are on the earth, " not of the heavens and the hosts thereof, " (or things therein,) so as it was at the universal deluge, when God destroyed every living substance: in sum, all only that was " in this lower world." What he aims at in this inference he doth not farther explain: if he

* Kimchi. † Rainolds ut supra, p. 1201. ‡ See Cameron on Mat. xvii. 11. and Hammond on Mat. v. 6. and on Rev. vii. 2, and xii. f. § Gen. vii. 4, 23.

he would have it that at the end of the world, only the earth and the things that are therein should be destroyed, we have to oppose against him that constantly professed truth, that as well the heavens as the earth are reserved unto fire against the day of judgment, as St. Peter speaks, 2 Peter iii. 7. and shall be dissolved therewith; but otherwise, if there be weight in his way of argument, it will make for our purpose, viz. that the day here spoken of is not that day of the last judgment, because it is a day of such destruction as was to be executed on earth only, and therefore in this world, viz. (as we have all along said) the destruction of Jerusalem.

By the earth, or land, will easily be understood by a most usual notion, Ablol ardi, the people of the earth, or inhabitants of the land, (as an Arabick Translation done by a Jew hath it) together with the land it self. * They that expound it “earthly minded men, such as follow earthly things, and will not make use of the time of grace, and embrace God’s salvation offered to them, say what is true, but seem not to give the full latitude of the word.” Such of the people only were destroyed, and those that turned to God were saved, yet for the sake of the many obstinate rebels, was the land together destroyed and made desolate. As for the last word חרם Cherem, which is rendred a curse, it may be likewise (as it is by several) rendred, destruction or utter destruction. So R. Tanchum saith, he means an universal destruction according to the sense of the verb in that place, Numb. xxi. 2. והחרמתי vehecharamti, then I will utterly destroy their cities, and so do our Translators in Zaccb. xiv. 11. render the same word that they render here a curse, by utter destruction; and the same verb that Numb. xxi. 2. they render I will utterly destroy, do they render, Micah iv. 13. I will consecrate, and Levit. xxvii. 28, 29. the noun, the same that is here used, is rendred a devoted thing, and Deut. vii. 26. a cursed thing. So that looking into the Scriptures we shall find the root of this word to have these significations, of cutting off, or destroying, and cursing, and consecrating, (to omit another notion in which it signifieth a net.) The prime ^a signification seems to be that of cutting off, or destroying, which appears in the other two; in that of cursing, which is a devoting to destruction, manifestly; and not obscurely in that other of devoting or consecrating, inasmuch as that is a ^b cutting off (as it were) and taking out of the way from common use that which is so devoted. In this place it is manifest that they that render it curse, mean the same with those that render it destruction; not such a lighter curse for correction as is spoken of, chap. iii. 9. but a curse ending in a final excision and utter destruction. For what is here meant by what is threatened, the event and manner in which it was fulfilled on them to whom it was spoken, makes evident;

VOL. I.

I i i

the generality of the Jews having rejected the admonitions of John Baptist, who was sent to warn them to flee from the wrath to come, by embracing Christ and his Doctrine, whom they not only refused, but procured to be crucified, and pulled on themselves a curse by saying his blood be on us and on our children, God, seconded it with his curse and sent on them that curse which ended in that fearful destruction of them, and their land; from which they could never recover, and which makes undeniably manifest to all the world that this prophecy had its full accomplishment in them, and in vain do they seek to elude it.

Thus here ends this prophecy, in the Hebrew Bibles and all that follow them; but in many copies of the Greek, the verses are so transplaced as that the fourth verse being taken out of its place is put after this, viz. Remember the law of Moses, &c. and so made to conclude the prophecy; on what occasion, or for what reason I know not. ^c One saith it was done in imitation of the superstition of the Jews, and to conclude the whole πρὸς ἀφ᾽ ἑμὶς that all might end in good words, or words of a good sound. The superstition of the Jews, which he mentions, is this, that whereas the last words here, and smite the earth with a curse sound harsh in their ears, and seem to bode evil; that they might conclude with something more pleasing, they repeat the words going before, again after them, viz. Behold I will send you Eliab the Prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord, and he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to the fathers; or at least some of them, so as still to leave out the last harsh words, which conclude with a curse. The like do they do in some other books for the same reason, as at the end of Isaiah, and of Ecclesiastes, and the Lamentations, in which after the last verse, they repeat again the verse going before it. And for warning thereof, casting the initial letters of the names of these books, viz. יחזק I, T, K, K, into an artificial word, so as to be a signal or memorial of them, I standing for Isaiah, T for תריעשר Tereasber, i. e. the twelve minor Prophets, of which Malachi is the last: and the first K for Kinoth, i. e. Lamentations, the second for Kobeletb, i. e. Ecclesiastes, they usually write or print that signal together, with the words which they would have to be repeated, all or some of them. How ancient this custom was among them I know not: it favours of the humour of those of ancient times among them, who said to God’s Prophets, Prophecy not unto us right things, speak unto us smooth things, Isaiah xxx. 10. They seem to think that the putting away from them the mention of ^d the evil day, that they might go on in their sins in security, should secure them from it, so inverting and frustrating to themselves God’s gracious method, who, that they might not perish in y See Chald. Syriack, Arab. MS. Tig. Castal. &c.

* See Jerom. Menoch. and Tarnov.

z See ver. 3.

a See Druf. and of the use of this word see Selden de Synedr. l. 1. c. 7. p. 121, &c.

b R. Tanchum in lib.

Morshead.

c Notes on the Greek Bible, Edit. Francf. 1597.

d Amos vi. 3.

in their security, caused those words in the last place to be inculcated to them, that so they might sink deep into them, and work in them repentance, whereby alone the evil mentioned might be prevented, whereas their refusing to give that attention to them would pull it on them to their unavoidable destruction, as in the example of these here spoken to, it manifestly came to pass so as to be for caution to all in like kind.

As for the present place, * Some are of opinion that the Jews do here repeat those words, Behold I send you Elias, &c. to strengthen themselves in their opinion and hope, that the Messiah is not yet come, but is to come. If so, or out of what respect soever they do it, we have from the Messiah himself, what to oppose to them, and add to what they would conclude with, viz. † But I say unto you Elias is come already, and they knew him not, but did unto him whatsoever they listed. The Messiah also is already come, and they would not know him neither, but rejected him, and despitefully used him: for which their obstinacy, that great and terrible day of the Lord is also come upon them, and he hath smitten the earth, i. e. them and their land with such a curse, so terrible a destruction, as makes good all that is here spoken, and shews that not one word of this prophecy is fallen to the ground, but hath had its full accomplishment on them; so that now they remain an ensample to all others that shall despise or neglect the means of grace offered to them, as they did, and putting far away the evil day, will not, while God gives them space, ‡ know the things which belong unto their peace, nor think of the time of their visitation. For how shall any that reject the counsel of God against themselves, as they did, (any people or nation) but expect to be smitten with the like curse as they were, even in this world; how shall the just God, which spared not that his chosen nation, his once peculiar people, the seed of Abraham his friend, spare others guilty in the like kind? so that though these words were fulfilled in that destruction of Jerusalem and the Jewish nation, the people then peculiarly spoken to and intended, yet may all others see in them, what may concern them also, even in this world. But if it should so please God, that any obstinately wicked, and impenitent people should escape the like judgment in this world, yet besides that prime and literal meaning of the words, already (as we said) fulfilled, on them, we cannot but by them be put in mind of that more great and terrible day of the Lord, and look on it as by this typified; the judgment of which, none either whole nations, or particular persons that ever lived shall escape, and which shall unawares seize not on any one land only, but on the whole earth and all therein, yea and the heavens too, with greater terror than that by which this concerning the Jews, is here, ver. 1. or elsewhere, described, or can by any words be expressed. Wherefore seeing what God hath done, and being thereby warned, and by his word certainly assured what he will do, what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness? (as ^b St. Peter will teach us to infer) looking for and hastning unto the coming of the day of God.

All those admonitions to the Jews, and all God's methods toward them for preparing them for that day of his coming here mentioned, equally concern us in respect of that other day of his coming by it typified, and it will be necessary for us to apply them to our own concerns, and to make use of them to our selves, without expecting of another Elias; to be sent to forewarn and convert us. We have not promise of any, and it would be to no purpose to have any. We have ¹ Moses and the Prophets, we have the admonitions of John Baptist and Christ himself, and the example of the miscarriage of the Jews for not hearkning to them; and if we will not hear, and be warned by these, neither will we be persuaded if Elias or John Baptist should rise from the dead, or Christ should come again in the flesh among us to convert us. Sufficient to us to make us to prepare our selves for what we are certainly to expect, or leave us without excuse, are those admonitions of his, extending to all generations, Watch therefore, for you know not what hour your Lord doth come, Mat. xxiv. 42. and again, ver. 44. Therefore be ye also ready, for in such an hour as you think not the Son of Man cometh. There is no generation which can assure themselves but that in it may be made good, as to that other day, what our Saviour saith to the Jews concerning the day of their visitation, Verily I say unto you, this generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled, Mat. xxiv. 34. The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness, but is long suffering to us ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance, 2 Peter iii. 9.

* Rainold de lib. Apocryph. prælect. 95. pag. 1163. xvi. 31. † 2 Peter iii. 11, 12.

‡ Mat. xvii. 12. † Luke xix. 42, 44. † Luke

SOLI DEO GLORIA.

Whereas we have by the Jews, in their Commentaries both on this and other Prophets; often mention made of a Messiah, the Son of Joseph, of the Tribe of Ephraim, whose name they make use for eluding many Prophecies which belong to the true and only Messiah, Christ: and we have therefore occasion to vindicate such places from their false expositions, I thought it might not be unfit to add this short discourse, on occasion made concerning that matter, wherein I have endeavoured to discover the grounds of that fond opinion, and collect such things as are by them said of it, because they are not so commonly found put together. I thought best to print it in Latin, as it was at first penned, seeing as much as may concern such as understand not that language, to know for the present purpose, is in such places of the Commentary as there is occasion to make mention of it, said in English.

MAL. iii. i.

Ecce ego mitto Angelum meum, & preparabit viam meam, & statim veniet ad Templum suum Dominus, quem vos queritis, & Angelus foederis, quem vos vultis, ecce venit, dicit Dominus Exercituum.

NON est mihi impræsentiarum animus singulas hujus commatis voces ad Grammaticorum Canones exigere, sed nec genuinum verborum sensum pluribus confirmatum vel illustratum dare, de quo dubitare nos non fuit divina Evangelii veritas; quæ hic dicta in Johanne Baptista Christi Anteambulone, & in Christo novi foederis Angelo completa atque eventu comprobata esse ostendit. Dicendorum materiam suppeditabit unum magni apud suos nominis Doctoris R. Aben Ezræ glossema, quo prima statim verba corrumpit; Ecce ego mitto Angelum meum יתכן להיותו משיח בן יוסף, convenit (inquit) ut sit [Angelus iste] Messiah Ben Joseph. quod licet absurdum plane atque à Scripturæ veritate, & ratione maxime alienum sit, paulo attentius considerandum & ad examen revocandum duximus, ne falso ipsius aliorumque ejusdem farinae commento non hoc solum sed & alia Prophetarum oracula corrumpi atque eludi, adeoque ea, quibus veritas propugnari debuerat, arma nobis eripi, atque in hostium contra pugnantium manus tradi, nescii atque incauti patiamur. Notissimum enim est apud Rabbinos in suis ad libros Propheticos Commentariis aliisque ipsorum scriptis frequenter Messiae Ben Joseph vel Ephraim (è Tribu scilicet Ephraim Josephi Patriarchæ filii oriundi) mentionem occurrere; idque eo potissimum fine ut quæ de vero, eoque uno, Messia Ben David Christo Domino nostro intelligenda sunt, si fieri possit, alio detorquentes nondum ea completa esse, adeoque ipsum adhuc expectandum probent. Quorum sententiam dum explodimus, ut merito id à nobis fieri constet, necesse est, ut quem per Ephraimitam istum Josephi filium indignant, atque unde, quæ de eo narrant, desumerint, prius inquiramus; ne de re nobis ignota statuentes, temere, & sine justa ratione, parte scilicet inaudita altera, haud æquum statuere videamur. At in historia ejus pertexenda, quo tandem duce utemur? Neminem sane reperimus, cujus autoritas tanti apud nos esse debeat, ut ea permoti rem pro certa imo vel probabili habeamus; Ejusmodi enim est, quæ ut non luculento aliquo sacræ Scripturæ textu, in quo Messia istius mentio sit, ita nec vel Paraphrasæon antiquiorem (Onkeli puta vel veri Jonathanis) vel ipsius Textus Talmudici, quem Misnaioth vocant, autoritate commendetur; adeo ut primo loco novitatis suspicione laboret, nec dubitari possit, quin diu post Christum in carne manifestum & completa de eo vaticinia, malitiâ eorum, qui ne, quem amplecti noluerunt, sine omni vel ratione vel autoritate adhuc expectare viderentur, quo haberent, quod perviciaci suæ obtenderent, excogitata, & quasi à Patribus accepta posteris obtrusa fuerit. Antiquissima, ni fallor, quæ ei confirmandæ adducunt, testimonia è Paraphrasi in Exodum xl. 11. Jonathanis falso ascripta, & Paraphrasi in Cantica & unico Talmudis tractatu Succah depromuntur. In ea ad Exodum mentio fit משיחא בר אפרים Messia filii Ephraim, cujus ope Israelitæ vincent Gogum, & turmas ejus in fine dierum. Cant. cap. iv. 5. verba illa, שני שדרך & duo ubera tua sicut duo hinnuli gemelli capreæ, sic enarrat Paraphrastes פריקיד דעתידין למפריקיד משיח בר דוד ומשיח בר אפרים דמין למשה ואחרון, quæ etiam, cap. vii. 3. repetita) duo liberatores tui, qui liberaturi sunt te, Messias filius David, & Messias filius Ephraim, similes Mosi & Aharoni. Sed Paraphrasæ istas, sc. Jonathanis in legem falso tributam, & alteram in Cant. incerti authoris & incertæ ætatis, commentis scatere Rabbincis observatum est à Doctis; nec ejus sunt autoritatis, ut vel ipsos Judæos in sententiam suam trahant; ideoque nec R. Solomon, nec Aben Ezra in locis illis explicandis eam amplectuntur, quorum ille verba, cap. iv. de Mosè & Aharone vel de שני לוחות binis legis Tabulis, vel (ut cap. vii.) de Rege & Sacerdote summo; hic de duplici lege, scripta & ore tradita, accipit, nullà Messia filii Ephraim seu Josephi factâ mentione: [quamvis Aben Ezra, cap. vii. צירך collum tuum sicut turris eboris, quod statim sequitur de המלך המשיח Rege Messia, sc. Davidis filio exponat.] In Talmude Tract. Succah c. Hachalil dicto, verba Zachariæ è c. xii. 10. ורביטו אלי את אשר רקרו & aspicient ad me quem transfixerunt, & plangent super eum veluti planctum super unigentum; Doctorum aliqui, (alii enim aliter) de Messia Josephi filio שנדרג qui in bello occidet, intelligi volunt. Eodem postea capite hæc habentur, Tradunt Doctores nostri, Dixit Deus benedictus Messia filio David, Fili mi pete quid velis, & ego tibi dabo; secundum quod dictum est, Enarrabo decretum, Dominus dixit ad me filius meus tu, &c. Pete à me & dabo gentes hæreditatem tuam & possessionem tuam fines terræ. Ille cum videret Messiam filium Joseph occisum esse, dixit coram eo, Domine Mundi, non peto à te nisi vitam. Dixit ei Sanctus Benedictus, Antequam esses jam vaticinatus est de te David pater tuus, Vitam petiit à te, dedisti illi. Ac rursus Zach. i. 20. & ostendit mihi ארבעה חרשים quatuor fabros, explicans. Quinam sunt inquit quatuor fabri isti? Dixit Rabbi חנה בר בון dixit R. Simeon Sanctus, isti sunt Messia filius David, & Messia filius Joseph, & Eliah, & כהן צדק Sacerdos justitiæ.

Nescio an alias in Talmude Messia hujus mentio occurrat. In his, quæ inde exerpsumus, quædam dam habemus fabulæ istius vestigia, sed adeo obfcura, ut queratur R. David Kimchi, Doctores illos haud apertius ea de re egisse. Sic enim ad Zach. xii. 10. Doctores nostri, inquit, hæc interpretati sunt, de Messia filio Josephi, qui in bello occidendus ותמה אני לפי פירושם איך סתמו ולא זכרו כלל, i. e. Miror autem ego interpretationem eorum, quod rem obscure tradiderint, nec totam explicaverint. Ut ut egerint, hinc ipsos traditionem hausisse haud altius derivatam liquet, tum è R. Solomone ad verba ista, & prædictum è capite primo locum, ubi tractatum istum Talmudicum, non traditionem aliquam antiquiorem citat. Ex lutulento igitur hoc rivo ad posteriores Rabbinos fluxisse videtur quicquid de Ephraimi seu Josephi filio isto nugantur, cujus sparsim in ipsorum commentariis sit mentio, dum fabricæ haud altius fundatæ facileque ruituræ fulcimenta minime sibi constantia hinc inde quarunt. Interim cum nihil hac de re clari vel certi, ne ab ipsis quidem Doctoribus Talmudicis (nedum antiquioribus) acceperint, ipsi in cerebri sui officina fabulam male concinnatam cudere, & fragmentis undique conquisitis confarcinare coguntur; quam tamen si integram audire cupias haud adeo facile in ipsorum scriptis reperies. Author quidem libri Abkath Rocel, eum aliquatenus depingit, lib. 1. part. 1. Signis 6° 7° 8° & 9°, asserens, tempore Regis cujusdam Romani, qui novem mensibus universo orbi imperabit, atque Israelitas graviter affliget, revelatum iri Messiam filium Josephi, cui nomen Nehemias filius Husiel, cum Tribu Ephraim, Manasse, Benjamin, & parte filiorum Gad, aliisque paucis, qui ex omnibus provinciis & urbibus ad ipsum congregabuntur, regemque illum superaturum, ipsumque interfecturum: deinde vero surrecturum regem alium nomine Armillum, quem Gentes, inquit, Antichristum vocant, monstrum hominis, quale nunquam finxerunt nobis poetæ, ut pote, statua marmorea fœdis libidinibus contaminata prognatum, cui altitudo duodecim cubitorum latitudo totidem; contra quem etiam arma movebit Nehemias iste filius Husiel sive Messias Ben Joseph, sed in prælio occidet; postea Messiam filium David cum Elia venturum, qui Armillum istum è medio tollet, & Messiam Ben Joseph è mortuis suscitabit, ac tum omnium gentium Reges totius orbis Israelitas humeris suis impositos ad Deum deducturos. Similia fere habet alter ille, quisquis tandem sit, cujus verba Munsterus ad finem notarum suarum in Malachiam refert de Nehemia isto, quem Messiam Josephi filium appellant. Sed & hi, ut & quos diximus, apud ipsos, Scripturæ interpretes, alique eorum Scriptores plerique, ita rem narrant, ut quæ dicunt pro concessis haberi velint. Nihil probare satagunt. Nemo omnium, quos videre mihi contigit, id facere conatus est, præter R. Saadiah Haggaon libro Emanoth, cap. viii. nemo rem plenius quam ipse enarrat. Eam itaque, si operæ pretium videbitur, fusius & quæ potuit arte adornatam ipsius verbis accipite. Novimus, inquit, nisi perfecta fuerit pœnitentia nostra, expectaturos nos donec completum fuerit tempus captivitati nostræ à Deo præstitutum: cujus si advenierit finis antequam pœnitentiam egerimus, fieri non potest ut contingat liberatio nobis peccare non cessantibus. Siquidem in captivitatem nos egit propter peccata: cumque diu jam extorres fuerimus, nec pœnitentiam egeri-mus, nos nondum idoneos factos reducet? frustra hoc esset. Verum Majores nostri tradiderunt eventuras nobis afflictiones multas & graves, quibus ad pœnitentiam adacti digni evadamus, qui redimamur. Hoc est quod dixerunt, Si pœnitentiam egerint Israelitæ, redimentur; sin minus, constituet Deus super ipsos Regem, cujus decreta non minus gravia erunt, quam Hamanis, quo fiet, ut resipiscences liberentur. Cujus rei causam futuram dicunt, quod in monte Galilææ surrecturus sit è Tribu Joseph quidam, qui confluentibus ad ipsum è popularibus nostris paucis quibusdam Hierosolymam, postquam in potestate Edom (id est Christianorum) fuerit, profectus; ibi ad tempus cum ipsis subsistet; post quod adveniens Rex Nomine Armillus bellum ipsis inferet captaque urbe alios neci dabit, alios captivos abducet, maleque mulctabit: Eritque ille, quem diximus, Josephi tribu oriundus è numero occisorum. Hinc magnis opprimetur gens nostra calamitatibus, inter quas non alia gravior futura, quam quod male se habituræ sint res eorum apud omnes ubique populos, dum fœtidi ipsis reddentur, adeo ut in deserta ipsos ejecturi sint, ubi fame & siti cruciabuntur. Ac præ gravitate, quæ passuræ sunt, malorum fiet, ut multi à lege desciscant; erunt autem reliqui sordibus purgati ac mundati, quibus tum manifestabitur Elias, venietque liberatio. Hæc, inquit, cum de calamitatibus istis dicta audirem, animum Scripturæ adverti, atque in ea textum aliquem quo singula confirmarentur reperi. Ac primo; quod tempore redemptionis Hierosolyma in potestate Edom seu Idumæorum (Romanos seu Christianos hoc Nomine indigitant, quo quæ ipsis visum fuerit vaticinia de istis interpretentur) futura sit, inde probatur quod dictum sit Obad 12. Et ascendent servatores in montem Sion ad judicandum montem Esau: deinde quod bellum cum iis gesturus sit quidam è posteris Rachel (tribu scilicet Ephraim Josephi, ac proinde Rachelis, filii) è Jeremiæ xlix. 20. propterea audite consilium Domini quod consultavit super Edom, Et cogitationes ejus quas cogitavit super habitationes Temam, si non traxerint eos צערי הצאן Parvuli pecoris. Et quod pauci futuri sint qui ad ipsum confluent, non admodum multi, ex eo quod dictum est Jer. iii. 14. Et assumam eos unum de civitate Et duos de familia. Quodque qui contra illos ascendet ipsos capturus sit & captivos abduciturus atque interfecturus, è Zach. xiv. 1. Ecce dies venit Domino Et dividetur spoliū tuum in medio tui, Et congregabo omnes gentes ad Jerusalem in prælium, Et capietur civitas Et diripientur domus. Quodque ille (Josephi filius scil.) qui regnum occupabit futurus sit è numero cælorum, ipsumque defleturi sint, è Zach. xii. 10. וירבו אליו Et aspicient ad illum (sic enim pro אליי legit אליי, pro me, illum) quem transfixerunt, & plangent super eum veluti planctum super unigenitum, &c. quodque afflictio gravis futura sit tunc temporis genti (Judaicæ) è Dan. xii. 1. Et erit tempus angustiae cujusmodi non est factum ex eo tempore quo fuit gens usque ad diem hunc. Quodque odium magnum futurum sit inter ipsos & multos è gentibus, adeo ut ipos in deserta pellant ex Ezek. xx. 35. Et adducam vos ad desertum populorum Et ibi vobiscum iudicio contendam: quodque famem & sitim & angustiam passuri sint sint, quemadmodum passi sunt patres eorum, ex ejusdem cap. v. 36. Et judicio contendam vobiscum ibi facie ad faciem, sicut judicio contendendi cum patribus vestris: quodque futurum sit ut ibi expurgentur & explorentur, ^a prout ferre poterunt, & secundum firmitatem fidei ipsorum è ver. 37. Et transire faciam vos sub virga, Et adducam vos in vinculo fœderis: quodque hæc in causa futura sint illis, quorum fides infirma est, ut à religione sua desciscant dicantque ^b Hic est in quo sperabamus, atque hoc est quod ab eo nobis contigit è ver. 38. Et repurgabo è vobis rebelles Et prævaricantes in me: quodque illis qui supererunt manifestandus sit Elias, & corda eorum conversurus, è Malac. iv. 5. Ecce ego mitto vobis Eliam Prophetam, antequam veniat dies Domini magnus Et terribilis, Et convertet cor patrum super filios. En (inquit) האלה עניני הרברים verborum istorum sensus in scriptura perspicue traditos. Hoc autem addiderunt priores seu majores nostri, quod singula in ordinem digesserint prout scripta sunt. Celebretur autem qui magnam in nos misericordiam exercuit, dum calamitatum istarum nos præmonitos esse voluerit, ne nos improvise invadentes ad desperationem adigerent: de quibus eventuris rursus dicit Isaiâ xxiv. 16. ab extremo terræ cantus audivimus, &c. usque ad finem capitis. His præmissis dico (inquit) ob duas simul rationes, viz. vel, si non convertamur pœnitentia, adeo ut contingant accidentia filii Joseph, vel si convertamur & non evenerint; subito nobis appariturum Messiam Ben David. Quod si ante ipsum venerit (ille Josephi filius) erit ipsi instar nunciû & qui idoneam reddat gentem (ei recipiendo) viamque ipsi paret (quemadmodum dixit Malac. iii. 1.) Ecce ego mitto angelum meum Et præparabit viam ante me: Et ut qui explorat igne, illis qui gravia commiserint peccata, Et ut qui abluit sordes smegmate, illis qui leviorum rei fuerint, sicut postea dicit ver. 2. Et quis sustineat diem adventus ipsius Et quis poterit stare cum apparuerit? Nam ipse est tanquam ignis conflantis, Et tanquam smegma fullonum. Quod si non venerit, tum veniet Ben David cito, sicut dixit, ver. 1. Et statim veniet ad Templum suum Dominus quem vos quæritis, adducetque secum populum Hierosolymam usque; & si fuerit ea in potestate Armilli, ipso interfecto, eam capiet, & hoc est quod dixit Ezek. xxv. 14. Et dabo ultionem meam in Edom per manum populi mei Israel; vel si in alterius cujusdam potestate fuerit; erit etiam ipse ex Edom, & quoniam non venit filius Joseph, ideo consecuturi sunt à filio David, quod cor ipsorum stabiliat, & fracturam sanet, & animos erigat, sicut Isaiâ lxi. 1. dixit, Spiritus Domini Dei super me, ea propter unxit Dominus me ad Evangelizandum mansuetis, misit me ad ligandum contritos corde, ad prædicandum captivis libertatem, &c. ad prædicandum annum beneplaciti Domini.

En vobis Messia: Josephi filii à Judæis toties prædicati (dum venisse eum, qui à Patribus expectatus fuerat, pertinaciter sibi negandum statuunt) historiam, dicam, an fabulam Prophetice descriptam? i. e. corrasis undique Prophetarum verbis contextam, quam qui veram crediderit, vel eventu comprobatum aliquando iri

VOL. I.

K. k k

speraverit; eadem facilitate, Quicquid inane Nutrit, Judaicis quæ pingitur India velis, fide dignum censeat. Gratulatur Haggaon majoribus suis qui hæc ordine tam concinno disponere potuerunt; sibi potius gratulari debuit, qui quicquid vel ab illis, vel à se, fictum fuerat, testimoniis tam luculentis è Scriptura petitis, probatum dare potuerit. Quis unquam Prophetarum verba tam misere torfit, vel tam impudenter prostituit? Quid tandem tam absurdum, tam à ratione alienum excogitari potest, quod non pari ratione è disertis Scripturæ verbis authoritatem sibi conciliet? Haud difficile foret, pleraque ab eo allegata, aliter tam ab antiquis quam à recentioribus etiam Rabbinis intellecta probare, nec ad Messia: Ben Joseph, vel ex eorum sententia, rem facere. Singulis ne immorer, quæ vel recensuisse, abunde refutasse est, illud, quo uno è posteris Josephi futurum aliquem, qui se ducem Israelitis adversus hostes suos præbeat, quique ab illis pro Rege habeatur, probare nititur, Jer. scil. xlix. 20. ubi à parvulis pecoris trahendi dicuntur (non alio puto nixum fundamento, quam allusione ad nomen רחל quod ovem denotat) quam futile? quam non modo aliorum apud ipsos Doctorum Interpretationibus, sed & inconcussis fidei Judaicæ fundamentis plane contrariam? Hoc enim, teste ^c Maimonide, inter fidei eorum articulos de quibus dubitare nefas est, locum habet, אין לא מלך לישראל אלא מן דוד, ומן נטל שלמה כאצרה, Non futurum Israeli Regem nisi Davide oriundum, eumque è progenie Solomonis. Posito hoc fundamento, quis Regi è Josephi posteris locus? Corruit quicquid de Messia isto nugantur. Cautè ergo hic agit Abarbinel, atque ideo in bello occisum iri ait Rege mistum Messiam Ben Joseph, quod imperium sibi vendicaverit, cum è Tribu Ephraim, non Judæ, ad quam jure id pertinebat, fuerit: adeo ut erroris sui moniti Judæi, cum illum in quo spes suas collocaverant periisse viderint, exclamaturi sint, Annon quod regnum familiæ Davidicæ deseruimus, hæc nobis mala contigerunt, occiditque Messias iste? & ad Dominum Deum suum & Davidem Regem suum se conversuri. At Messiam interim istum Ephraemitam virum pium, Domini timentem, eique carum futurum, quique nec ob peccatum suum neci dabitur, nec ob peccata eorum qui ipsi adhæserint, cum nec ipsi impii aut peccatores futuri sint, sed pii, si qui alii, ac sancti: adeo ut ipsius cædem in omnes gentes ulturus sit Deus, (ipsique hanc repositurus mercedem (teste R. Saadia capite jam laudato) ut primus ad seculi futuri gaudia resurgat.) At quam sunt hæc ἀσύνετα & à ratione prorsus aliena, ut morte mulctetur vir tam Sanctus, tam Deo carus, unaque pereat virorum, qui כאלהים sanctitate Angelis pares, multitudo, quod illud fecerint, quod ante tot secula Deus per Prophetas suos futurum prædixerat, quodque ut exitum fortiretur, ille mittendus erat, ut dictum, Ecce ego mitto, &c. vel illum, vel illos ita comparati cum essent, illud facturos quod legi contrarium Deoque ingratum esset? unumque ac idem facinus sceleri imputatum, ac mox vita æterna remuneratum iri? Nec minus mirandum, quod Haggaon postquam quam tot vaticiniis prænuntiatur Messiam istum ostendere conatus fuerit, rem in dubio tandem relinquat, venturus unquam sit necne; si enim Judæi poenitentiam egerint, non venturum. Quo ergo tot illustres Prophetiæ? omnium eventus à Judæorum arbitrio pendet; si illi poenitentiam egerint, frustra erit quod hic Malachiae præcorio publicatum, Ecce ego mitto nuncium meum, qui præparet viam ante faciem meam; frustra illud Zachariæ oraculum, Et aspicient ad me quem transfixerunt, & plangent super eum veluti planetum super unigenitum, &c. qui certè locus è præcipuis qui ipsos ad commentum hoc de Messia isto Ben Joseph excoGITandum impulit, videri possit. Nam cum in eo de Messia agi negare non possint, eoque transfigendo ac malè passuro, qualia Messiae Davidis filio, cui omnia in hoc etiam seculo prospera auspicantur, pati turpe & inglorium putant, alium sibi finxerunt, cui & Messiae titulum & dignitatem Regiam tribuerent, licet è tribu fastigii istius non capaci, quo Christianorum argumenta contra ipsos vaticinio illo pugnantium, Christumque per adversa & mortem ad regnum idque spirituale, non terrenum pervenire debuisse probantium, eludant. Ac מי יתן Quis concedat ut loco isto pro אלי Elai, ad me, substituere liceret אלי Elau, ad eum, & aspicient ad eum quem transfixerunt. Quam illud percipiant, ex eo patet, quod tam in Talmude, quam R. Saadia ita citentur verba. Hoc enim pacto nec idem esset transfixus iste, cum eo qui initio versus se super habitatores Jerusalem spiritum gratiæ & deprecationum effusurum dicit. (Ac proinde ipse Deus; cum hæc solius Dei sit, præstare) ipsisque injuriæ illi factæ scelus à se ad alios amolirentur. At cum hoc non liceat, frustra est quicquid moliantur ne argumento hoc premi videantur, & solutionem suam habet בצדו Betziddo (ut vel ipsius Lipmanni verba contra ipsos, ac suos populares retorquamus) à latere sibi conjunctam. Neque enim patiuntur Grammaticæ leges, ut aliter exponamus verba quam aspicient ad me quem transfixerunt, ut non ad illum quem, ita nec ad me, propter eos quos transfixerunt, ut David Kimchi ipseque Lipmannus.

^a Arab. sicut argentum & aurum, ut dignoscatur quomodo se habeat patientia, & quomodo fides ipsorum. ^b Arabo huc non expectabamus. ^c Ad. Sanhed. c. 10. fund. 12.

Sed ut eo unde digressi sumus revertamur. Quam finale interim (si in eorum potestate situm sit) de se & Messia isto suo merentur Judæi, quod mala sibi ipsius adventu impendentia, maturata poenitentia prævertere nolint, cum (ex Haggæonis sententia) si respuerint, nec venturus sit ille, nec ipsi gravia ista passuri? si (quod sentiunt nonnulli, & probare conati sunt Raimundus & Galatinus, è libris paucis, sicubi extant, Christianorum visis, (quique an omnino extent dubitari possit) non alium Messiam, quem dixerunt Josephi filium, ab illo Davidis voluerint antiquiores Judæi, non alia de causa illi nomen hoc ab ipsis inditum putaverim, quam quo πατριόν describerent, quique Josephi Jacobo filii instar male multandus esset, graviaque passurus: Nisi forsan qui primum hanc fabulam confixerunt, ansam arripuerint à nomine Josephi Mariæ sponsi, Messiam, Josephi filium comminiscendi, quod multo probabilius, quam quod ait Abarbanel Christi discipulos, multa de Messia Josephi filio à Patribus accepta, dogmatis suis immiscuisse. Sed revera non hoc inter τὰ ὑπὸ τῶν ἀρχαίων dicta, nec vel inter antiquiores traditiones numerandum censeo, sed magis nuperum sequioris ævi commentum, multis post Christum ea passum annis, effectum, ob eas quas superius innui rationes, quodque nunquam universalis apud ipsos traditionis nomen meruit. Huic adstipulatur etiam Maimonidis autoritas, qui de præcurfore Messiae verba faciens, quem Sapientum nonnullos Eliam fore, statuere ait, addit וכל אלו הדברים וכיוצא בהם לא ידע & quæ eo spectant omnia nemo distincte noverit antequam exitum habuerint: obscura sunt quæ à Prophetis de iis dicuntur והחכמים אין להם קבלה בדברים de illis traditio est, præter illud quod ex scriptura necessario infertur. Quæ & sic ex ipsius mente enarrat R. Tanchum في هذا المواعيد بالتفصيل انما يعلم بظهورها وليس مع احد فيها نقل محقق بل انما يقول كل منهم ما يقول على ما يظهر له ويترجع عنده من تاويلات quomodo se habitura sit res in istis promissis, tum demum distincte percipietur, cum extiterint, nec est cupiam de iis traditio aliqua certa, verum unusquisque profert quod sibi videtur ex iis, quæ apud ipsum præponderant, scripturæ interpretationibus. Sapientem illum Rabbinum (Maimonidem intelligo) alias religionis Judaicæ assertorem satis pertinacem, putidi istius de Messia Ben Joseph commenti puduisse videtur. Ubi enim quæcunque ad Messiam spectant exponenda sibi proponit, ea quibus duo Messiae innui videantur non de aliis intelligi vult, quam de David, eoque qui ipso oriundus sit, nulla Josephi filii facta mentione. Deque ipsius præcurfore (quem R. Saadias, & Aben Ezra ut vidimus, Messiam Ben Joseph autumant) licet Eliæ nomine appelletur, non tamen certo constare ipsum futurum Eliam, sed saltem Prophetam aliquem, viz. qui Eliæ dignitate, gradu, & scientia par sit, (explicante eam sententiam R. Tanchum) ac de hoc certe apud antiquiores Judæos olim disceptatum videtur, ex eorum verbis, qui ad Johan. Baptistam à synedrio missi percunctatum quis esset, interrogarunt? essetne Christus? essetne Elias? essetne Propheta ille? Messiam ergo expectabant illi unum, Davidis filium; expectabant etiam, vel Eliam, vel prophetam aliquem insignem. Nihil de Ephraimi aut Josephi filio quærunt. Faceffant igitur commenta hominum, indubitata Dei veritati, mendacia à se conficta præferentium. Faceffat ἐρεβώλος iste Messias; Hosanna filio David. Quisquis animo non præsumpta opinione corrupto, prophetarum verba inspexerit, quicquid ab Angelo ante Domini faciem seu Apparitoris vice, mittendo expectandum erat, in Johanne Baptista; quicquid ab Angelo illo foederis, seu ipso Messia, in Jesu Christo exitum habuisse, adeo ut extra dubium sit, illum fuisse qui venturus erat, nec alium expectandum, facile perspiciet.

A
C O M M E N T A R Y

ON THE
P R O P H E C Y
O F

J O E L,

By EDWARD POCOCK, D. D.

Canon of Christ-Church, and Regius Professor of the Hebrew Tongue, in the University of OXFORD.

Imprimatur.

JONATH. EDWARDS,
Vice-Cancel. Oxon.

AUGUST 19,
1691.

Right Reverend FATHER in GOD .

JONATHAN

Lord Bishop of EXETER.

My LORD,

WHAT is, as to the general, intended for the publick good, I make bold in particular to make use of as a token of thankfulness for the great favours, which I have received from your Lordship. Your freeness in conferring them makes that I cannot doubt of your candour in receiving this hearty, though slender acknowledgment of them. The subject is such that deserves acceptance from all Christians, it being a Prophecy in peculiar manner foretelling them what wonderful effusion of the Holy Ghost, and plentiful conferring the graces thereof, should be under Christ, and so by St. Peter cited, to prove that he was come, and the good promises of God by him fulfilled. Many difficulties there are in this Prophet, which were incumbent on me to endeavour to clear; of which my endeavours I humbly crave your Lordship's favourable acceptance, and pardon wherein I have any way failed.

My LORD,

Your LORDSHIP's Most Humble Servant,

EDWARD POCOCK.

P R E F A C E.

I Shall not with many words trouble the Reader to acquaint him with my intention or method in my Commentary on this Prophet, they being the same, which I have declared my self to take in those on Micah and Hosea: I shall only remind those, who are not acquainted with such languages as Hebrew and Arabick, that the giving the mind of such, whose opinions I cite in their own words, needs not to stop them in their proceeding, the meaning of them, as far as concerns the matter and our purpose, being all given in English. As to such who are acquainted with those languages, I shall desire them to take notice, that such passages as are taken out of Arabick Translators, Commentators or Lexicons, are put sometimes in the Arabick Characters proper to the language of which the words are; sometimes in the Hebrew, in which they were written, as the usual custom of those Jews, who lived in such places among the Mahometan Arabians, wherein the Arabick Tongue, as the learned language of the Eastern parts, was both studied and vulgarly spoken, was in those times to do. The reason of which, I suppose, was, that their books concerning their religion might not be commonly read by the Mahometans, enemies thereof: which likewise may be the reason why the Syrians publish in Syriack Characters what they write in Arabick. The expressing them sometimes in Hebrew Characters may, I suppose, not be unuseful to the Reader skilled in those tongues, for acquainting him with, and exercising him in their custom, if he meet with books so written, as many they have.

But the main thing which I am to give some reason of, is the draught or scheme of the area of the Temple, and the different parts thereof, which I have procured to be engraven and here put. In chap. ii. 17. p. 282. I commend to the Reader a draught of the several parts of the Temple, and courts belonging to it, which I find in an ancient MS. of Maimonides, in his Commentary on the Misnaioth, or the Text of the Jewish Talmud, in the Tract called Middoth, out of a Manuscript, (which I have probable reasons to think is as ancient as from the Author's own time.) I cite it, because in the printed Copies and Translations of it into Hebrew, I find no such draught; though an ancient Edition leave space for this, and other schemes that are in him, only with white blanks, yet putting before them, And this is the צורה Tsurah or figure, And to this present figure both in the Arabick and Hebrew is put, that it is a general figure which he had in several places of his Comment promised, mised, and referred the Reader to ; and that it did comprehend all that had been before mentioned. Which shews that in the Author's own Original there was a draught or scheme, which he would have the Reader take notice of, and be directed by. So likewise in an ancient MS. in the hand of my worthy friend Dr. Huntington, of another book of his stiled Yad Chafaka, being a sum of their Talmudical Doctrine, (wherein was written by a learned Jew, who had been owner thereof, that he had corrected it from a Copy of Rabbi Moses his own hand) written, I suppose, after the former, is the like scheme found, though not in the printed copies thereof. So that for communicating it to the Reader as from him proceeding, I saw no other way, than to get this Scheme agreeable to his engraved. We have indeed among modern Authors several schemes of the same thing, which as the Reader meets with, he may compare with this which I have chosen to exhibit to him, both because of its antiquity, and in respect to its Author. And of this having two several draughts, as we said, one in his Comment on the Misnaioth, the other in the MS. of his Yad, we have taken the former as seeming the more ancient, and being the more elegant of the two. And though neither of them be so exact in drawing lines proportionate to the measure of the several spaces as some latter are, yet this exception is taken away, by the measures belonging to every space, being in their proper places set down in words at length, from which, rather than from the lines, the Reader is to take them. Which words we have likewise given, though not engraven in the figure, as in the Manuscripts they are written, the space not being in the engraving so well capable of them.

The P R E F A C E.

- A. מזרח. The East. B. מערב. The West. C. צפון. The North.
D. דרום. The South.

The first Partition.

1. עזרת הנשים. The Women's Court. 2. לשכת ריד העצים. The Woodhouse.
3. לשכת הנזירים. The Nazarites Chamber. 4. לשכת המצורעין. The Lepers Chamber.
5. לשכת בית שמניה. The Oil-room.

The second Partition.

6. שער ניקנור. Nicanor's Gate. 7. לשכת פנחס המלביש. The Vestry. 8. לשכת בית.
עושי חבתין. The Cake-maker's Room. 9. לשכת הגזית. The Paved Room. 10. לשכת המלח. The Salt-room. 11. עזרת ישראל. The Israelites, or the Men's Court. 12. לשכת העץ והיא לשכת פלהרין. The Wooden, or the Counsellor's Chamber. 13. לשכת הגולה.
The Well-house. 14. לשכת המריחין. The Bathing-room. 15. לשכת הפרוה. Pirva's Chamber.

The third Partition.

16. עזרת הכהנים. The Priest's Court.

The fourth Partition.

17. מזבח. The Altar. 18. כבש. The Ascent to the Altar. 19. טבעות. The Place of the Rings where the Sacrifices were killed. 20. שלחנות. The Tables. 21. מקום הנסין.
The Sacrificers-room, where the Sacrifices were flay'd. 22. כיור. The Laver according to the Text of the Scripture; according to the Rabbins, the carved or flower'd Work.

The fifth Partition.

23. שער האולם. The Porch-gate. 24. אולם. The Porch. 25. שער בית המוקד. The Gate of the Fire-room. 26. בית המוקד. The Fire-room. 27. לשכת הטלאים. The Lambs Room. 28. לשכת שבה יורדים לבית הטבילה. The Place through which they descended into the Bath. 29. לשכת שבה גנוו אבני המזבח. The Room wherein they put the Stones of the Altar. 30. לשכת עושי לחם הפנים. The Shew-bread-makers Room. 31. עלית בית.
אבטינס. The Upper-chamber of Abtines, or the Perfumers-room. 32. שער הגדול.
The Great-gate. 33. מזבח הזהב. The Golden Altar. 34. היכל. The Temple. 35. שלחן.
The Table. 36. המנורה. The Candlestick. 37. שער המים. The Water-gate. 38. שער הקרבן. The Sacrifice-gate. 39. שער הקרבן. Another Sacrifice-gate opposite to it. 40. קדש הקדשים. The Holy of Holies. 41. שער הרלק. The Lighting-gate, where the Candles were lighted. 42. שער הנצוץ. The Bright-gate.

a The Length of the Women's Court is מאה ושלשים וחמש 135 Cubits.

b The Breadth of the same, as also of the whole Fabrick of the Temple, מאה ושלשים וחמש 135 Cubits.

c The Length of the whole Structure from the Women's Court, מאה ושמונים ושבע 187 Cubits.

d אחת עשרה אמה. 11 Cubits in Length.

e אחת עשרה אמה. 11 Cubits in Length.

f שתים עשרה ומחצה. 12 Cubits $\frac{1}{2}$ and half in Breadth.

g שלשים. 30 Cubits in Breadth.

h שלשים ושתים. 32 Cubits in Breadth, and as many in Length.

i שמונה. 8 Cubits in Breadth.

k עשרים וארבע. 24 Cubits in Breadth.

l שמונה אמה. 8 Cubits in Breadth.

m שתים עשרה ומחצה. 12 Cubits $\frac{1}{2}$ and half in Breadth.

n שמונה. 8 Cubits in Breadth.

o עשרים ושתים. 22 Cubits in Length.

p עשרים ושתים. 22 Cubits in Length.

q עשרים ושתים. 22 Cubits in Length.

r עשרים ושתים. 22 Cubits in Length.

s מאה אמה. 100 Cubits in Length.

t מאה אמה. 100 Cubits in Length.

u אחת עשרה. 11 Cubits in Breadth.

B

A

COMMENTARY

ON THE

PROPHECY

OF

J O E L.

CHAP. I.

VERSE I. The word of the Lord that came to Joel the Son of Petbuel.

WHO Joel and his father Petbuel were, is a question that might here in the first place offer it self, as likewise where and in what age they liv'd, and this Prophecy was uttered. The Scripture neither here nor elsewhere informing us concerning these things, nor any ancient records of those times remaining; it is manifest that all that is by Interpreters of later date said of them is only conjectural, without any thing of certainty therein. More Joel's, from whom this Prophet is distinguished by his being said to be the son of Petbuel we read of, but the name of Petbuel we do not elsewhere find: some therefore of the Jews (I suppose going on that uncertain rule of theirs, that where the father of a Prophet is named together with him, it denotes that his father was not only a man of good note in those days, but a Prophet also) make him to be the same with Samuel. * Samuel had a son that was named Joel, but as neither the time when he lived seems to permit that this should be the same, so neither what is said of that Joel makes it likely that he should be a Prophet, being ^b taxed as a man of evil life and behaviour; and why this Petbuel should be thought to be Samuel, no reason at all can be given: That which Rab. Solomon gives seeming very weak, viz. that he was so called because פתח לאל בחפלותיו He persuaded or wrought upon God by his prayers. For the same reason might any other Prophet or holy man be so called, as well as Samuel; there being no better authority for it; on the contrary we may well say פתואל אינו שמואל Petbuel is not Samuel, and therefore Joel son not to him, but some other. When he lived and prophesied (it being not in the Scripture at all mentioned) is likewise as uncertain, nor doth Aben Ezra without reason say אין דרך לדעת דורו ולפי הפשט איננו בן שמואל that there is no way to know his age, and in plain language he was not the son of Samuel; it is no ways probable that he was so ancient. סוף דבר לא ביאר הכתוב ואנחנו לא נדע יואל הנביא מאיזר i. e. In sum, the Scripture hath not declared, and we do not (cannot) know, as to the Prophet Joel, of what tribe he was; nor in what age he was. Hence is it that Expositors much differ in assigning the time of his prophesying. Some, besides what we have before mentioned of Rab. Solomon's opinion, placing him under the reign of Jehoram the son of Abab, when there was a great famine in the land (which they think by this Prophet spoken of) for the space of seven years: Others making him cotemporary with Hoseab placed before him, building on a rule ^a uncertain, if not plainly false; ^c that when the time of a Prophet is not expressed, it is to be looked on that he was in the same time with the Prophet placed next before him: Others thinking he prophesied under Manasseh, which is the opinion of several Jews, following therein their ^d Chronicle of good authority among them; ^e Others that it was in the time of Josiah King of Judah, and that what is by him spoken (as they think) of a famine, refers to the same which is spoken of by Jeremiah xiv. 1, 2.

Vol. I.

M m m

A

* 1 Sim. viii. 2. ^b 1h. ver. 3. ^c Abarbinel. ^d Abarb. ^e Epiphanius, who saith he was of the tribe of Reuben, for what reason I know not. ^f Kimchi. ^g 2 Kings viii. 1. ^h Tarnov. ⁱ Jerom. præf. in 12 Prophets. ^k Seder Olam. Kimchi. ^l Dancus.

A proof that he lived under these later Kings is by them, who so place him, thought to be, because his not mentioning the ten tribes in his Prophecy, but only the two, and speaking what concerned only them, is a sign that he prophesied after that the ten tribes were led away into captivity. Such variety of conjectures shews the thing to be no way certain, and the Scriptures being silent in it is an argument that we need not be solicitous concerning it. It is sufficient for us to know that Joel which was the son of Petbuel (and so distinguished from any other of that name) was in that time, when he lived, one whom God thought and made fit to be employed in his message to his people, and to speak in his name, which is shewed by saying what is recorded in this Prophecy was the word of the Lord that came to Joel; and this gave authority to it, viz. its being the word of the Lord, not its being the word of Joel, and out of this assurance, and the authority that it brought with it, was it constantly received into the canon of the Scriptures, among those books, which, though more particularly in some respects concerning those of that time to whom the words were spoken, yet were to be a standing rule to all succeeding generations, to instruct them also in the will of God by example, and to be profitable to them for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness. That it did not concern only that present age, but future times also, is witnessed to us by St. Peter; who quotes it as a foretelling what was afterward to befall them in the time of Christ (Acts ii. 17, &c.) which so evidently it doth, as that the Jews themselves cannot but confess it. So saith Kimchi, This Prophet prophesies first of the Locusts which should come up on the land of Israel for their sins, and afterwards utters a prophecy לִימֹת הַמָּשִׁיחַ עֲתִידָהּ which shall come to pass in the days of the Messiah: even the same of which St. Peter there saith, this is that which was spoken by the Prophet Joel, which we shall in its due place meet with, and have farther occasion of particular enquiring into. This at present may suffice by way of preface: what the whole of this Word of the Lord that came to Joel was, follows now in order.

2. Hear this, ye old men, and give ear all ye inhabitants of the land: hath this been in your days, or even in the days of your fathers?
3. Tell ye your children of it, and let your children tell their children, and their children another generation.

The Prophet by God commissioned; and having words put into his mouth, that he may bring those stupid sinners, whom he is sent to, to a due sense of their sins, and to a speedy and effectual repentance, that so they might remove God's heavy judgments, which they had by those their sins (which yet they continued in) provoked him to send on them, begins with a declaration of the strangeness of those judgments and the nature of them, that so duly considering them, they might perceive that they were not such as ordinarily befall men in the usual course of things, and must needs therefore make them to perceive that God's extraordinary hand was in it, and made it evident that they had in an high and extraordinary manner provoked him, and that therefore they could not look or hope to have them removed from them, till they had made their peace by serious repentance with him, who alone, as he had sent them on them, so could again remove them, and make good to them what evil they had suffered by them. The strangeness and grievousness of them he sets forth to be such, as neither any of them had ever before seen, or heard of, and such as their following generations, when told of, would admire at, as things not elsewhere found or known. This is the import of the 2d and 3d verses, in which by way of question he puts it to their own consideration, all sorts of them, whether they must not needs confess it to be so. Hear this, ye old men, and give ear all ye inhabitants of the land. Hear, what I say, ye old men. They had seen and known both by their own observation, and by what they had heard from others, what had for many years happened, and so were more fit to judge of what shall be now said, whether it be not a description of a heavier judgment than they had ever seen or heard of; you together with all the inhabitants of the land, (or as some will, of the whole earth, any lands) give ear, well ponder and consider, whether at any time, or in any place, ever they had seen or heard to have been in their days, or in the days of their fathers, any such grievous thing: if they have not, then will it greatly concern them to search into the cause of this strange work; and not to be neglectful of it as an ordinary accident; but such as former ages had not seen, nor future were like to see. Having thus stirred up their attention, he proceeds to the description of that judgment which he speaks of according to some, as already actually come on them; or according to others, as sure to come, as if it already were.

4. That which the Palmer-worm hath left, hath the Locust eaten; and that which the Locust hath left, hath the Canker-worm eaten, and that which the Canker-worm hath left, hath the Caterpillar eaten.

That which the Palmer-worm hath left. Our Translators in the Margin note that in the Hebrew is the residue of the Palmer-worm, so the words יתר הגזם אכל הארבה yether bagazam acal haarbek, literally sound. The reason why they render it as they do is, I suppose, for avoiding an ambiguity which that literal rendring may seem subject to; as if it sounded, The Palmer-worms that were left, the Locusts have eaten. It is by Rab. Tanchum taken taken notice of, יֶתֶר הַגֶּזֶם מֵאֵלֶּם He means by Yether hagazam, the residue of the Palmer-worm, that which they have left of the plants of the earth, not the remainder of them themselves; so rendred, as in our last Translation, it is plainer than that in the Geneva, which hath, that which is left of the Palmer-worm. Four kinds of noxious creatures succeeding one another, and the latter devouring what was left by the former, till all that was desirable of the growth of the land was consumed, are here named as executioners of God's heavy judgments upon them. The first is גֶּזֶם Gazam by Ours rendred the Palmer-worm, both here and Amos iv. 9. having its name from גָּזַז Gazaz to shear, to cut, or pluck off, with the letter מ added in the end; or else from גָּזַם Gazam, which though not found in the Scriptures, we may think to have been then in use in the Hebrew Tongue, as it is in the Rabbins, as likewise جَزَرَ in the Arabick in like signification of cutting off, so therefore called שְׁנוּי אֶת הַחֲבוּאָה because it shears the corn, as Kimchi explains it. The second אַרְבֵּה Arbeh, by Ours rendred here, as Exod. x. 4. and oft elsewhere, the Locust, and sometimes Grasshopper: which is looked on as having its name from רַבָּה Rabab, to be many or multiplied, by reason of the great multitude of that sort; the root and the noun are joined, יֶרֶב Jer. xli. 23. רַבּוּ מֵאַרְבֵּה rabbu mearbeh, which Ours read, they are more than the Grasshoppers. With another noun also directing to the same signification it is coupled, יָרֵב Jud. vi. 5. כִּי אַרְבֵּה לָרֵב Cede arbeh larob, as Grasshoppers for multitude. The third is יֵלֶק Yekek, by them here as also, Jer. li. 14. rendred the Caterpillar; and Nabum iii. 15. the Canker-worm, importing as much according to the usual derivation assigned to it, as licker: for so will they have it referred to the root לָקַק Lakak, to lick, שֹׁהַא לֹקֵק אֶת הָעֵשֶׂב because he doth as it were lick the herbs, as Kimchi speaks, and so devour them. The fourth חַסִּיל Chasil, which they render the Caterpillar, as here, so elsewhere; which name seems to import a consumer, from the verb חָסַל Chasal (except the verb be rather made from the noun) signifying to consume, and so by Ours rendred, Deut. xxviii. 38. יַחַסִּילֵנוּ הָאַרְבֵּה Yachsilenu haarbeh, the Locust shall consume it: the Greek render it here ῥυτίς, and the Vulgar Latin Rubigo, (which the Dorway render blast;) yet do the Greek elsewhere render the same by the name of a noxious living creature, as βρῦχος Bruchus, 2 Chron. vi. 28. and ἀκρίς a Locust, Isaiab xxxiii. 4. and so the Vulgar Latin by Bruchus in both those places: and (if it be granted that the word may signify both those, as Some will, and both be very noxious to green corn or other things) certainly the taking it here for the name of a living creature, seems much more convenient and agreeable to the place, wherein the other three named are unquestionably so, and of all said that they did eat, and that the following did eat or devour what the foregoing left; all then more than probably, by eating taken in a proper sense, and as it agrees to living creatures: they being then all so taken and look't on as several sorts of animals, it is by some very learned men much doubted what names in Latin may aptly be assigned to them: the like then will of other languages be said, how in them they may be properly called and distinguished. In Arabick there are no doubt particular and distinct names for them, yet how to apply them properly to those meant, it will not be easy to say: except a man saw them in that country, and heard them called every one by their names, it will be hard precisely to say they were such or such, and so or so are distinguished in form, or property. And therefore do some Interpreters rather choose to retain in some of them the Hebrew names than to translate them. It may I suppose suffice us to say with a learned Jew that هَذِهِ الْأَسْمَاءُ كُلُّهَا قَدْ تَكُونُ لِأَصْنَافٍ مِنْ these names all are of some sorts of Locusts, and are synonymous, or several names of that creature, of which that there are several kinds appears by what is said in the Law, Levit. xi. 22. הָאַרְבֵּה Haarbe Lemino, the Locust after his kind; that name Arbeh which is put here as the name of one sort, is there put as comprehending under it several sorts; so that it appears sometimes to be used as a more general name, sometimes as a more special وقَدْ يُطْلَقُ الواحد منها على الجميع مجازاً the name of one of the sorts (as he speaks) being used of all. Here we see they are four of them distinctly put, seeming to have their different names from their different way of doing hurt, yet all concurring in doing hurt and devouring the fruits or products of the earth; and as such, I suppose, are by our Translators very well rendred by names of such known creatures as do concur in so doing, though in differing manners, so that if any thing escape one, another will be sure to meet with it, till between them they have made an utter end of all. But now it being agreed that these names do literally signify such noxious destructive creatures, there is a question made whether what is spoken, as concerning them, be to be understood of them, and of what hurt they do according to the sound of the words; or of some enemies compared to them, and set forth under their names by reason of the destruction and desolation by them wrought, like to the worst which could by these all of them together be made. This question is ancient; and such difference of opinions hath been about it as is not yet reconciled, both among Jews and Christians. St. Jerome mentions it, and appears but dubious in it, yet so as rather to incline to those that interpret it of such enemies as invaded the country of the Jews; so he saith some of the

Jews

^a Ab. Ezra, R. Tanch. Fuller, Cap. Concord,

^o And so Aben Ezra.

^p R. Tanch.

gurun and Munster.

^r Ribera, Petr. à Fig. Ch. à Castro.

^s Ar. Moutanus, Bochart.

^q So also the Ti-

^t Pagn. Interlin.

^u R. Tanchum.

Jews before him (whom he means we find not) understood it, taking the first name to point out the Assyrians, Babylonians, and Chaldeans: the second to denote the Medes and Persians; the third the Grecians; Alexander and his successors, and particularly Antiochus Epiphanes, under whom were the wars of the Maccabees; the fourth the Romans, by all which, at several times some destruction was brought on the Jews, and their land made desolate. Yet other Jews, he saith, do think that in the days of Joel such an innumerable multitude of Locusts came on the land of Judea that they filled all things, and devoured not only the corn, but vines also, and the bark and boughs of the trees, of the truth of which he seems to doubt, and to deny it, in as much as he finds no where else in the history of the Scripture mention of it, as we do of other famines, and concludes with doubtful words, while he only saith, that under the metaphor of Locusts the coming of those fore-mentioned enemies is describ'd, and that he seems to have found out something in the meaning of the Prophet (viz.) that the wickedness (or cruelty) of those enemies is described under the figure of Locusts, and again the Locusts themselves are so described, as if they were compared to enemies. Ut cum Locustas legeris, hostes cogites, cum hostes cogitaveris, redeas ad Locustas: That when you read what is said of the Locusts, you must needs think of the enemies, and when you have thought of the enemies, must needs again return in your mind to the Locusts. Thus is the matter left but as in doubt by him. Cyril appears to understand it likewise of such enemies as did invade the Jews, as Others at other times, so at last Salmanesser; Nebuchadnezzar, Antiochus, and the Romans, yet (on ver. 14.) saith again that what is said will be true, though it be understood of the Locusts, and other hurtful creatures specified. Theodoret mentioning some who understood the words tropically of some Kings of Assyria, as Tiglath Pileser, Salmanesser, Senacherib and Nebuchadnezzar, saith that he thinks those things to be indeed true, yet withal that καὶ τὰ κατὰ τὸ πρῶτον νοούμενα τὰ ὄντως γέγονε, that those which are literally understood did really happen. But Ruffinus is positive that they are so literally to be understood of creatures named, as to refute them that at all understand them of the enemies. So appears, among those ancient Christian Interpreters Latin and Greek, to be a difference concerning this matter: who were those ancient Hebrew Doctors that Jerome mentions I find not. The Chaldee in the present place and elsewhere for the most keeping to the letter, and rendring the names here expressed by so many in the language that he wrote in, answerable to them, yet chap. ii. 25. where they are again (though not in the same order repeated) doth not so, but to express the meaning that he took them to have, rather than the letter, puts instead of them עממא ארמא ולישנא ושלטנא ומלכותא Nations, People, Tongues, Languages,

Potentates, and Revenging Kingdoms. So that it appears that in his time there was such diversity in interpretations. Among the later Jews, long since Jerome's time, the same is continued. R. Sol. Aben Ezra, and David Kimchi, the most known Expositors, expound the words as most properly concerning Locusts, and such noxious vermin, which did destroy the fruits of the earth, and occasion a sore famine or dearth in the land. R. Tanchum looking not only on these words, but on those also verse the 6th. For a nation is come up upon my land, for such as may be well understood of Locusts and like creatures, saith withal انه لا يبعد ان يكون جميع ما ذكره في هذه القصة من امر الجراد وانعاله مثل مجي الاعداء وكثرتهم واخلابهم البلاد ونهبهم لها that it is not absurd to say that all that he mentions in this narration concerning the nature of Locusts and their doings, is a parabolical expression of the coming of enemies, and their multitude and their destruction of the land and spoiling of it, which he thinks confirmed by other expressions in the following narration, as in that great terror that he strikes into them from the consideration of these Locusts. Again by what he saith that there should none escape but the remnant whom the Lord should call, (chap. ii. 32.) whereas it can scarce be imagined that that incursion of Locusts should so far prevail: for which makes likewise his subjoining that he will take vengeance on the enemies, when he saith (chap. iii. 2.) I will gather all nations--- and will plead with them for my people, and for my heritage, &c. and what have ye to do with me, O Tyre and Zidon, &c. Swiftly and speedily will I return your recompence upon your own head, &c. And although (saith he) Interpreters and Expositors make this to be no other than a narrative concerning Locusts, which were to come upon the land of Israel, yet doth that which I have mentioned seem to make انساب more proper.

By this we see how he was inclined to understand these expressions as nothing concerning Locusts, and those like hurtful creatures, farther than as to the borrowing their names, so as to call the destructive enemies of the Jews by them. Abarbinel (later than any of these) is yet more positive, and peremptory for this opinion, viz. that as to the things here spoken, and diverse of the expressions in this description לא אמרם הנביא על הארבה the Prophet did not speak them concerning Locusts חלילה לי מלהאמין בזה כי אם על אויבי השם שהחריבו את ביתו והגלו את עמו Far be it from me that I should believe this, but that he spake them concerning the enemies of God, which destroyed his city, and carried captive his people: and those enemies he will have to be those four kingdoms of the Babylonians, Persians, Grecians and Romans, to which he supposeth several of the following expressions to agree so, as that they cannot be properly understood of Locusts, and such noxious vermin, If we shall look to the more modern Christian * Expositors, we shall find still the same same variety of opinions, so that we shall have but to repeat the same things which we have before said; some preferring that exposition which would have the words not literally understood of Locusts, &c. but of such enemies as are under those names couched; and the destruction by them brought on the Jews, and they yet differing among themselves in the assigning of these enemies; Others of that which taketh the creatures named, and the mischief by them brought on their land, to be the thing primarily and properly meant; amongst whom the learned Bochartus plainly opposeth the opinion of Abarbinel the last of the Jews mentioned, and so by consequence all those Others, who, as he, deny the words to be properly meant of such creatures as are named, but of such enemies as should bring on them destruction. * Others think both be intended, one having been a forerunner of the other, as † Some have observed the coming of the Locusts to have preceded, and, as they think, portended the invasion of enemies. But not to intermingle our selves farther in any controversy about the matter, sure the plainest and safest way will be the most simple, which is to explain the words literally as they found: then will it be lawful to any to apply them to other things as he pleaseth: such expressions, as any party insist on, we shall meet with as they come in their order, and see what force is in them. But then they being so taken, there will arise other questions, which, for clearing the history of them, it will be convenient to answer. As, first, how what is said here concerning these hurtful creatures, and the mischief done by them, Hath this been in your days, or even in the days of your fathers? &c. can agree or be reconciled with what is spoken, Exod. x. 14. concerning those Locusts which God sent on the land of Egypt, that they were very grievous, before them were no such Locusts as they, neither after them shall be such. Several answers are to this given; as, first, ‡ That in Exodus is spoken of the bigness of the Locusts, here of the multitude, and so both are true (viz.) that there were never seen any so big as those there spoken of, nor so many together as here. Secondly; That in Egypt were such so great and so many of one kind, as never had been or should be seen together, but here such a multitude of more kinds, as had never flocked at once together there or elsewhere. Against this may be excepted; that though there in the law be mentioned only Locusts, yet under that comprehensive name were other kinds also included, as appears out of the Psalmist, who, having respect to that history, saith, he gave their increase to the Caterpillar, and their labour unto the Locust; Psalm lxxviii. 46. and cv. 34. that both Locusts came and Caterpillars, and that without number; yet Kimchi thinks this to hold in regard, that only Locusts, as principal, are in the law mentioned. Thirdly, That what is in Exodus may well be said in ^b respect of the coming of those Locusts altogether in one day, or for a few days; and what is here, in regard to their successive coming four years together, kind after kind. But this, to wit, that they are to be understood to have done so, will have need of farther proof. Fourthly, A clearer answer seems to be, that that in Exodus is spoken in respect of what had been seen in Egypt, this here in respect to Judea, and both true in respect to the places meant. Yet is against this an exception of Abarbinel, viz. that what is said in Exodus concerning the quality or quantity of those Locusts is חולטו כללי absolute and universal, not restrained to the land of Egypt, as that before concerning the hail is, of which it is said that it would be such, Exod. ix. 18. and that it was such, ver. 24. as never had been till then in the land of Egypt, and this he seems to make to himself a reason why he should rather understand these words of enemies than proper Locusts, and such worms, because then there should be no contradiction between these places. But may we not think that that limitation restraining the hail to the land of Egypt, hath also influence on the following plagues, as that of these Locusts also, to confine them to that country, as that what is said of them, may be understood particularly of that? Whatsoever be said for reconciling these Texts, which doubtless do not really contradict one the other, it is manifest that each in its several place is a description of a very signal and extraordinary plague in that kind, and as so to be taken notice of as a singular token of God's displeasure, that they might repent of that by which they had provoked it.

VOL. I.

N n n

to

A second question is, when what is here said was spoken by the Prophet. As there is nothing in the Scripture spoken elsewhere of the age, or time wherein our Prophet lived and prophesied, so neither is there of such a judgment or famine as he here describes. † Some will have it indeed to be that famine of which Elisha spake, 2 Kings viii. 1. which was for seven years together, which that they may make to be the same with this, they will have the first four years scarcity to have been caused by these four noisom worms here mentioned, devouring the growth of the earth; and then that of three others by want of rain; but there being nothing that may make it either certain or probable that Joel lived so early as the time of Elisha (viz. under King Jeboam) nor that this was the famine of seven years; or any other in the history of the Scripture mentioned, Others take it for granted that it is not at all therein expressly recorded; and Abarbinel makes that an argument that it is not at all to be understood of such a famine, at any time, by such devouring creatures as are here named, brought upon them, but of such destruction as was effected by cruel enemies under those names couched. But ‡ Others again think this argument from the Scriptures being silent elsewhere of any such thing, not

* Pet. à Fig. † See Mercer. Tarnov. ‡ Daneus.
 † Rab. Solom. and David Kim. ‡ Pet. à Fig. Mercer.

† See Sol. Jarchi and Kimchi, chap. ii. 2.

‡ Kimchi.

to be of any validity, in as much as many signal and notorious accidents fell out, of which there is not yet express mention made in the history of the Scriptures, as, for example, that earthquake mentioned as very notorious, Amos i. 1. and Zach. xiv. 5. and that it was not the proper business of the Scriptures to give a particular account of such things, as appears by the mention of other famines in it, which are not so much mentioned for their own sake, to give only an account of them, as for illustrating some other thing that was then done; as that famine which was in the land of Canaan in Abraham's time, to shew the cause of his going into Egypt, Gen. xii. 10. and that in Isaac's time to shew what occasioned him to repair to Abimelech King of the Philistines, Gen. xxvi. 1. and that of seven years by Joseph foretold of, Gen. xli. to make way for all those remarkable histories concerning Joseph and his brethren, and the children of Israel's bondage in Egypt, and their wonderful deliverance thence; and that in Ruth, mentioned to shew the occasion of Eliamelech's going into the country of Moab; when yet in the history of the book of Judges under whom it happened, there is no mention made of it. And that in 2 Sam. ii. 21. occasioned by Saul's injury to the Gibeonites, which could not be appeased without the hanging up of seven of his sons, that so it might be known how David's kingdom was established: and those again under Elijah the Prophet, 1 Kings xviii. 2. and under Elisba, 2 Kings iv. 32. to shew the occasion of the great miracles by them in those times wrought. Many other famines in the space of so many years very probably happened, yet none other of them being mentioned, and those that are being out of other respects spoken of, (as we have seen according to the learned Bochart's observation, who observes also the like concerning such as are mentioned in the New Testament;) it cannot be wondered that this here by Joel spoken of, should be omitted in the historical books of Scripture. It may seem an undoubted truth that such a plague of Locusts, and such a famine by them caused there certainly was, because the Prophet here describes it, though we do not here or elsewhere find the certain time of it assigned. If it had been necessary for us, or profitable for our instruction, precisely to know it, Spiritus Sanctus dixisset, the Holy Ghost would have revealed it. Mean while of the story it self it will concern us to make that use which was by him intended, and will be required of us. But the question arising from these words concerning the time when the Prophet spake this; is not properly so much concerning the age wherein it was, as concerning the circumstances of the time which he spake in, viz. whether he spake of the famine directly by way of prediction before it was, or whether by way of description of it already past, or at present in being. The ground of this question is, because the verbs here used are in form of the præter-tense, sounding as if they spake of what was already past, or at least began, and in present doing; but then withal it is a known rule in the prophetic languages, that the form of the præter-tense is used in the signification of the future, as denoting what God saith shall be done, to be as certain as if already done and past. Hence is here diversity of expositions, Some taking the words as a prediction of what was yet to come to warn them of it, to seek to prevent it by repentance; Others as a description of what had already happened to excite them to make right use of it for their returning to God, whom by what they suffered, they were given to perceive how greatly they had provoked, that so he might repair to them those losses which they had for their rebellions against him suffered. Rab. Solomon, as also Aben Ezra and Rab. David Kimchi, understanding the noxious creatures mentioned literally and properly (for if they be otherwise understood as by Others, as we have said they are, of enemies at several times to come, there will be no occasion of this question) say that he foretels of them שִׁבְאוּ וּבְאוּ בְאוֹתָן הַיָּמִים that they should come, and that they accordingly did come in those days, ^a being brought by God on their land for their iniquities. Of the same opinion are ¹ Some likewise among Christian Expositors, de futuris loquitur in præterito, he speaks of things to come, as of things already past, Propbetico more, as the Prophets use to speak. But Others on the contrary think that he speaks of things already past. Calvin saith that in his opinion they who look on the words as a denouncing punishment, yet in future time to come, do Errare & corrumpere genuinum Propbetæ sensum, err and corrupt the proper meaning of the Prophet, whose intention is to reprove the stupidity of the people which were not sensible of the plagues they suffered, and that they were by God chastened for their sins. Because they were not sensible of this, ^b ideo præteritas proponit calamitates, docens esse penitendum peccatorum, therefore he sets before their eyes such calamities as were past, that he might warn them to repent of such sins as had provoked such judgments. These opinions seem contrary one to the other, yet I suppose may well in this place be both joined, and each have its share of truth; for apparent it is that the plague here describ'd was of some years continuance, and that they were not freed from it when this was spoken, from chap. ii. 25. I will restore to you the years that the Locust hath eaten, &c. Probably then this might be spoken after the plague began, and had for some time continued, yet so as to denounce a farther continuance of it to them continuing in their sins; for it was not ended; the years which those worms had eaten were not yet restored; nor the famine taken off from them. So that some Others seem not ill to express it, that it is a description of a judgment, ^c qualis & tunc

^a Bochart.
^b Mercier.

^c Oecol.
^d Danews.

^e R. Sol.

^f Kimchi, Mercer.

¹ See Mercer. Pet. à Fig. and Bochart.

tunc ex parte sentiebatur, & magis adhuc percipienda erat, such as was already in part felt, and should yet more be felt, quid hic usque passi & quid præterea passuri sint commemorat (as Another) he reckons up what they had already suffered, and what farther they should suffer.

Another question here raised is concerning the time and order of the coming of these noxious creatures, whether they came in several years successively in that order as they are named, or whether all in one year. David Kimchi is of opinion that they came successively in several years, in the first the גזז Gazam or Palmer-worm came and devoured, and in the second the Locust, and eat up what he had left, and so as to the following. For saith he לא באו ארבעה המינים בשנה אחת the four sorts came not all in one year, אלא זה אחר זה, בארבע שנים, but one of them after another in four several years, as it is after said ושלמתי לכם את השנים and I will restore to you the years that the Locust hath eaten, the Canker-worm and the Caterpillar, and the Palmer-worm. But Others are of the contrary opinion, viz. that they came all sorts together in one year, and that they think manifest by what is said יתר הנום the residue, or reliques of the Palmer-worm, &c. viz. because had that, which the Palmer left, not been eaten in the same year by the following sort, it could not have been called יתר Yether, the residue or remainder of what that worm had left that year, being the product or new growth of another year, till then untouched, and that it is therefore manifestly to be understood of their coming all together, or one after another in the same year, so as that if one sort left any thing remaining, another devoured it, so that between them they made a clear riddance of all that grew out of the earth: and so the years mentioned will shew their continuing to do so for more years, not to distribute the years betwixt them. Again the different placing of the names of those worms in that place of chap. ii. and putting that name last which in these words is first, doth not obscurely make for proof of their being all of them together, so as one might follow to devour what the other left in a field or place. Which coming of so many sorts in one year Jerome looks on as making this judgment signally miraculous.

Some of these questions may seem perhaps not much material, as that we should so long have insisted on them; as not serving for doctrine, for reproof, correction, or instruction in righteousness, or like ends for which the Scripture is given; yet do they conduce to the clearing of the terms of the whole verse, which is profitable for them all, giving us an example of God's justice and severity in punishing national sins with national judgments; and withal giving us to know that when he will punish, he hath all creatures, even the most ungoverned among them, ready instruments for executing his will, and even the meanest and most contemptible of them, the vilest worms by his might able to destroy, and bring down the glory and greatest confidence of men. Besides that this verse is, as it were, the Text to the following Sermon of the Prophet, on which he enlargeth in it, and infers from it what therein he inculcates to them. So that for having his drift therein and understanding what he saith, it is inconvenient that the terms and all circumstances belonging to it should be explained.

5. Awake ye drunkards, and weep, and howl all ye drinkers of wine, because of the new wine, for it is cut off from your mouth.

Such a judgment as is in the former verse described, as either having already in part seized on them, or being threatened by God; and so unavoidably hanging over their heads ready to seize on them, should certainly, if they had not been very stupid and sottish, have awakened them from their sleep in sin, and caused them to turn and look unto God, whose hand was stretched out against them, striking, and ready farther to strike. But that so stupid they were as not to be sensible of the misery of their condition, appears by the Prophet's bespeaking them as he doth, and loudly calling on them to awake, and so behave themselves as he prescribes to them to do. The words may seem, and are by ^o Some thought to be an exhortation to repentance, as afterwards he doth seriously exhort them, ^p but withal from the terms used, and the reason added why they should do as he bids, they appear to contain an upbraiding them for not having sooner been aware of it, as if he should say, that it was time they should have done it already of their own accord, and that now it was come to that pass, that they should do it whether they were willing or no, in as much as there was now no matter, no occasion of sinning in this kind left to them; they must of necessity awake from their drunkenness and excess, because there is no more wine, no pleasing intoxicating liquors left to them, by which they might bring themselves to a sleeping condition, and so hath a declaration, though under the form of exhortation, of what a necessary effect, the judgment described should have on them, such as even those that are least sensible of things, even drowsy, sleepy, sottish drunkards should be forced to be sensible of.

Awake ye drunkards.] It may seem probable that that sin was among others then much indulged to, and by that the people of that age made so sottish and stupid, as drunkards usually are, and much sleeping; yea being always as men asleep: so that they did not regard the work of the Lord, nor had any regard of what concerned their own good. To them therefore more particularly doth he seem to address his speech, as by that obvious sin having pulled the present judgment on themselves, and their country. To them the word

^m Gualter. mirabilia sint.

ⁿ Jerom. He names them, ut quæ singula raro eveniunt, omnia simul facta memorentur, & ideo

^o See Cyril. Tarnov.

^p Mercer.

^q Diodati in his Analysis.

word הקיץו Hakitzu, awake, is very aptly accommodated, as properly directed against the sottishness of that sin, and the property and usual custom of those that indulge to it. So to the drunkard, and as contrary to his insensibility of such mischiefs as befall him, it is applied, Prov. xxiii. 35. Elsewhere it is used to denote the raising of a man's self from security in other sins, as Rom. xiii. 11. and Ephef. v. 14. The other words added to this (viz.) ובכו והילילו Ubecu Vebclilu, and weep and howl, set forth the greatness of the calamity, which should not only be such as should rouse them up from their quiet sleeping, but should also provoke them to shew forth and express the greatest signs of being deeply affected with sense of misery, whether with sorrow for their sins, whereby they had deserved it, or out of impatience or inability of bearing what they suffered (which perhaps is as much (as before we said) as is at present yet meant :) the exhortation to true repentance, upon due consideration of their condition following in ver. 13. Wherein this calamity did consist, which should provoke them to such expressions of grief, is declared both in the description of the persons spoken to, drunkards and drinkers of wine, and in the declaration of what had happened, or should happen to them in those words, because of the new wine, for it is cut off from your mouth: viz. because they were deprived of what was their joy and delight, and without which they could not enjoy comfort in their life. The word rendred by Ours new wine is עסין afis, which, according to the signification of the root, seems to signify such liquor as is by pressing or treading forced out of grapes or other fruits; for so the word is used for treading, Mal. iv. 3. ועסותם רשעים Veassotem Resbaim, and ye shall tread down (or upon) the wicked; and thence this name עסין Afis is given to wine כיון עד because it is trodden out when first made. Kimchi extends the name to כל משקה על ידי כתישה ודריכה any drink or liquor which cometh by pounding (or squeezing) and treading. A proof seems to be had, Cant. viii. 2. where is read מעסין רמני Meafis rimoni, which the Interlineary renders, de vino dulci mali granati mei, of the sweet wine of my pomegranate; our Translation, of the juice of my pomegranate: but this proof will not so well hold, if we should take R. Tanchum's interpretation of those words, who explains it to mean الخمر الحمر كاللون wine as red of colour as a Pomegranate, so that, according to him, it should sound of Pomegranate like coloured wine, not wine made of Pomegranates: but whether it be spoken of other liquors it matters not here to enquire; here it seems particularly spoken of wine, the product of the vine, and not ill by Ours rendred new wine, by Others mustum, as for such being usually taken, though Others choose to render it more ambiguously, * propter succum expres-

sum, for such juice as is squeezed out; or ob laticem. The Chaldee hath חמר מרת pure wine, Rab. Sol. good wine יין הטוב. Drus. saith it properly signifies Vinum dulce & recens expressum, sweet wine newly pressed out. The LXX. render על עסין al afis, because of the new wine εἰς νέον (and the printed Arabick following them للسكر) to drunkenness; the Vulgar Latin in dulcedine in sweetness. I do not think either of them to have taken the word Afis in other signification than it is by Others, as we have seen; taken: not the one to have thought it to signify properly drunkenness, but strong wine apt to intoxicate and make drunk; nor the other abstractedly sweetness, but sweet, pleasant wine. But the cause of their so translating in a way differing from that, which we see Others since them prefer to make, to be from their different distinguishing the words in construction, and then their taking the preposition על al, put before afis, in a different notion, not of, for, or because of, but of eis to, or in, on, or with: for whereas Ours with Others, not only modern but ancient also, as the Chaldee and the Syriack, make the words al afis (which the Chaldee renders על חמר מרת for or because of the unmixed (or new) wine; the Syriack حلا سدد for the wine) to refer to, and make one clause with the verbs weep and howl, as declaring for what they should weep; they refer them to the other, which declare who should weep and howl, viz. the drunkards and drinkers of wine, as describing their condition of drinking excessively strong wine, unto drunkenness, as the LXX. take it, or with pleasure and delight, as the Vulgar: and the words so joined and literally sounding, drinking wine, with, or upon Afis, strong wine, or new pleasant wine, will well enough make out the meaning which either of them give. But then in the clause of the verse, for it is cut off from your mouth, must something, either again the same word, or something equivalent be understood; and so the Vulgar Latin leaves it to be understood: but the LXX. * according to the more usual copies supplies, εὐφροσύνην καὶ χαρὰν, because joy and mirth are taken from their mouths. But the other way of distinguishing, and construction of the words seems plainer, and is followed not only by modern Interpreters, but by the Chaldee and Syriack also more anciently; by the manuscript Arabick also, whose words, because not printed, we shall put down, استيقظوا يا سكارى وابكوا وولولوا يا كل شارب الخمر علي العصير اذ انتقطع من فمكم which need no other translation than what our English gives of the Hebrew, except we read the last words, seeing it is cut off from your mouth. According to these the Afis, or new wine, is not that which they did drink with pleasure or to excess, but that which they were to lament, that they could not have it to drink, because it was cut off from their mouth, wholly taken away from them, that they could not

* R. Tanch. in his Lexicon.

* Tigur.

* Castal.

* The old Latin Version of it, in ebrietas, in, or with drunkenness.

* For it is wanting in that which not so much as wet their lips, or fill their mouth with it, the Locusts having wholly destroyed * the grapes of which it should have been made. The same way of construction follow also Some of those, who by those instruments, by which their wine would be cut off from them, understand not properly the Locusts and like vermin named, but the enemies by such names figured. So Abarbinel in that way gives a perspicuous exposition of the verse. Awake, ye drunkards, and weep, &c. i. e. Ye who are drunken with the vanities of the world, and the delights of meat and drink all the day, and do not regard the work of the Lord, awake from your drunkenness, and weep and bow for the destruction of your land. For the wine and must, being of the delightful things of the products of the earth which ye did eat and drink, are now cut off from your mouth, by the coming up of the enemy on your land to destroy it.

Jerome follows; and some Others. See Drus. Conject.

6. For a nation is come up upon my land, strong and without number, whose teeth are the teeth of a lion, and he bath the cheek-teeth of a great lion.

In this and the following verse have we a farther description of the executioners of God's judgments mentioned; ver. 4. and a more particular declaration of the manner and means by which they did or should effect that mischief, which is said was or should be done by them. Those instruments of God's wrath before-named, the Palmer-worm, Locust, Canker-worm, and Caterpillar; are here for their condition called גוי, a nation strong and without number, whose teeth are like the teeth of a lion, &c. Their being so called seems to Some an argument, that by the names before given, are not properly and literally meant those noxious worms thereby usually known; but men as hurtful as they, those cruel enemies by God sent to invade and spoil the land. So Abarbinel לאמר הנביא זה באמת על הארבה כי איד יקראו גוי וקהל גוים אבל אמרו על האויבים ששעלו על הארץ להשחיתה, i. e. The Prophet doth not speak this really of the Locusts; for how should he call them a nation and multitude of nations? but he speaks it of such enemies as came upon the land to destroy it: but his argument, taken from the attributing that name to them, seems not to be of force. That name though (perhaps most properly and usually) attributed to a multitude of men, yet may not unfitly be attributed to other creatures also, as well as עם am, a people, is, Prov. xxx. 25, &c. and those same also in the next chapter, ver. 2. and therefore it is perhaps not without reason observed by Kimchi, that כל גוי יקרא גוי any congregation, or multitude of living creatures is called גוי Goi, a nation. So in other languages also are the names of nation and people observed to be taken and applied to other creatures as well as men, and particularly this of nation to the very same that are here so called, namely Locusts; as appears by examples brought out of several Authors by the learned Bochartus; and among Others in the Arab. Language; wherein اممة Ommaton nation, is used for a company of any living creatures, and among them for Locusts also, as in that saying ascribed to Mahomet, that God created a thousand nations, 600 of which are in the sea, 400 on the land, and that اول هلاك the first that shall perish of these nations (for so I take these words to mean not prima pestis, the first or chief plague, as Bochartus renders it) are the Locusts, after which the rest shall perish in order: so that it is well said by R. Tanchum (although he be inclinable to take it in another way) of the word, that it is استعارة للمجاد لكثرة وعظيم افساده a metaphorical expression of Locusts in regard to their multitude, and the much spoil that they make. And there is no reason that because they are so called, to say, it is not meant of Locusts what is said in the foregoing verse, as Abarbinel will; nor yet that though there Locusts be spoken of, yet here are Others meant to whom that appellation may more properly agree, as Others think, viz. enemies: neither are they simply called a nation, but with addition of such epithets as may make them very considerable among nations, and terrible to others, viz. that they are strong and without number, whose teeth are like those of a lion, strong; though the creatures named seem in themselves singly weak and contemptible, yet sure ^z when by God armed, and sent with his commission for executing his judgments, that the strongest nation among men is not able to resist them, appears by what is here said was done in what follows, and by what was done by them in Egypt of old. Nihil enim leve aut infirmum est quod Deus contra nos armat. For there is nothing contemptible or weak that God arms against us. What wants in their strength taken singly, is made up by their multitude, which usually is very great; so that some sorts of them are (as above was intimated) looked on as thence having their name; and similitudes are taken from them to describe great numbers, Judges vi. 5. and vii. 12. Jer. xlii. 23. and here therefore is added that they are without number. It is also added to shew how they are by God armed for executing his will, that their teeth are the teeth of a lion, and they have the cheek teeth of a great lion, which 'tis well known how terrible they are, and what hurt they will do. The like comparison have we, Rev. ix. 8. where of those Locusts there described it is said that their teeth were as the teeth of lions. In saying that the teeth of those little vermin were the teeth of a lion, and that they had the cheek-teeth of a great lion, is a manifest hyperbole, to set forth the strength and ^a sharpness and ^b power of doing hurt that even their smaller teeth have, chiefly if we shall consider what great mischief they have been known to do with them, eating not only green tender things, but omnia morfu erodentes, dentes, etiam fores tectorum (as Pliny speaks) gnawing in pieces all things, even the doors of houses; so that there is good reason for the expression and comparison, though between creatures otherwise so different in bigness and strength. The hyperbole is heightened for expressing their great force and power of doing mischief, by saying not only the teeth of a lion, but even the cheek-teeth of a great lion, so as to shew the sharpest and strongest in that kind to be meant; they have not only שנים Shinnaim, sharp cutting teeth, and those as of an ordinary lion, but מתעלות Matlaoth, strong grinding teeth, and those as of a great and full grown lion. As to the word מתעלות Matlaoth rendred cheek-teeth we may observe that it is elsewhere with a different placing the letters מלתעות Maltaoth (as Psalms lviii. 6.) The word לבני Labi, by Ours here rendred a great lion, is by Others rendred otherwise. The Chaldee Paraphrast hath כנר-אריין as of a son of lions, and the Greek, Vulgar Latin, Syriack, and printed Arabick, all understand by it a lion's whelp. Against the propriety of which rendring is by ^c Some observed to be a valid proof of what is said, Job iv. 11. where is read בני-לבי Bene Labi, which Ours render, the stout lions whelps, where that called Labi is manifestly distinguished from those that are called whelps, as older and bigger. ^d Others on the other hand render here, vetuli Leonis, of an old lion; against which also exceptions are taken, because an old lion, non habet dentes validos, hath not strong teeth, whereas the strongest in that kind seem here to be alluded to. Others render it, ^e Leone of a Lioness (as the Vulgar also in other places renders it) which rendring two great men of the last age Grotius and ^f Bochartus seem to prefer, and think it proved from the use of the word لبوة Labwat, which as لباه Labah and لبية Labiyah, and the like in the Arabick Tongue, are particularly spoken of the female, not the male. But whether that be a sufficient argument to prove that לבני Labi in the Hebrew, which is of a form agreeing to the masculine, should therefore be proper to the female, because those names which are of form feminine are in the Arabick so, though no name from that root should be used of the male, I know not. Yet can I not say but that in that language also the masculine as well as the feminine is known, though not of so frequent use. For in the MS. Arabick Translation we seem to find it, who renders ואניאב אללבו Waanyab allabui labo, and it hath the long teeth of a Labu, which why shall we not render, it being in form masculine, without that note of feminine termination which the other hath, as distinct from it, in the masculine, of a lion? but this, as to the sense here, will not much make or marr, a she lion being accounted as fierce as the male, and not the sex, but the strength, being alluded to in this expression. That chief Hebrew Grammarian Abu Walid saith that it is usually said that לבני Lubuo in the Arabick Tongue is also a lion, but that he had not found it in any authentick books that he could rely on. But however it be as to the Arab Tongue, whether this name be used in it only in the feminine gender for a lioness, or in the masculine also for a lion, this is no cogent argument to prove that in the Hebrew Tongue it should be in the masculine form taken to signify only the female sex. I think it more reasonable to say with Kimchi that in it the masculine form Labi doth denote a lion, especially it having a feminine form of the same word for a lioness, which occurs Ezek. xix. 2. לבית Labiya, which, though written with the same letters as Labi, is otherwise voweled, viz. Lebiya, which according to Abu Walid and Kimchi is the same that לבית Lebiyah in a more usual and regular form would be; which why it should be excepted against, as by the learned Bochartus it is, I see no reason, but think, that from the beginning it was so read and known in that form for the female, whereas in all other places where it is read Labi, it will seem more properly to agree to the male, as it is by the forecited Hebrew Grammarians and Others generally understood. And we have making for this the plural masculine לבאים Lebaim from the one, and the feminine לבאות Lebaoth from the other. Here, as we said, we need not be put to any question concerning distinction of sex, but only on the consideration of the strength of the noble creature named: in respect to which it is most generally agreed that this name is attributed only to a lion of full growth and strength, not to a whelp, which is not yet come to that, nor to a decrepit old one, which is past it, and therefore seems well rendred here by ^g Others, a great lion, though elsewhere they render it simply a lion, as Hosea xiii. 8. it is noted by Kimchi to be גדול מן האריות one bigger or of greater force than the word Aryeh going before it (being a more general name for any lion) doth necessarily import: being so placed as to heighten the comparison made, between the teeth of those seeming weak creatures, and this strongest of beasts, as to their power in doing mischief, their teeth being not only such as of an ordinary lion, but such as is come to that bigness, age, and strength, as to be called Labi. If those insects the Locusts, &c. in the foregoing words named, be (as we have interpreted them) literally understood by the names given them, so then will also their teeth, and cheek-teeth, properly be understood of such as they have; but if by those names be understood those enemies which Abarbinel and Others understand, then by teeth and cheek-teeth must something else be understood in those enemies, that may be likened to them, wherein their force and power of doing mischief doth consist.

^c Lively, Druf.^d Castal. and French cited by Druf.^e Druf.^f Tigur.^g De Animal. part 1. p. 719.

^b The last letter in the MS. is almost worn out, but I think it can be no other by the space, if it were N it would be the same thing, but the room will scarce permit. ⁱ Except we may think that by lions whelps, they had respect to the kind, not the age. ^k Jun. Trem. Immanis Leonis.

sift. ¹ Arias Montanus therefore thinks thereby to be denoted their weapons, some for sharpness, as swords, spears and arrows; others for their greater force, as rams for battery, &c. Jerome thinks it enough that it be in general taken to express ferocitatem & crudelitatem, their fierceness and cruelty; and so Abarbanel, that it is רמו לכחו ועצמו an expression intimating their force and strength. Grot. Rapiditas hic significatur.

The executioners of God's judgments being thus described, as to their quality and condition, their force and power of doing mischief, the manner of the execution thereof is also declared; while he saith he is come up upon my land, he hath laid my vine waste, &c. He is come up upon the land with irresistible force, none being able to resist or repel him, or hinder him from doing what is said he did. Upon my land, saith he, whoever he be that speaketh, and hath laid my vine waste, and barked my fig-tree. Here comes in our way a question from the pronoun affixed in these words, being of the first person; he not saying indefinitely the land, the vine, &c. but as an owner thereof, my land, &c. who it is that thus challengeth the right of these things to himself, and so is to be looked on as utterer of these words. Kimchi seeing the construction ambiguous saith כל הכנויים הם דברי יושב all these pronouns shew the words to be either the words of the inhabitants of the land, or the words of the Prophet. ^m Others add another member, these words may either be verba Dei, vel Prophetæ, vel ipsius etiam populi, the words of God, or of the Prophet, or of the people themselves. And so Drusius, Deus loquitur, aut Prophetæ, aut quilibet à populo dicet. God thus speaks, or the Prophet, or any one of the people shall say. That the words are uttered by the Prophet by the Lord's order, there is no doubt, but whether he so speak them as to represent the Lord speaking, or the people, is the question, seeing each of these might say of the land, my land, and call the other things, mine. If he personate the Lord speaking, and give his words, then will they be a declaration of what he had sent, or purposed to send upon the land, which by a more peculiar right, with the things therein, were by him owned as his, though in such relation to him, and therefore might be thought should be taken special care of by him (as he saith, his eyes were upon it always, from the beginning of the year, even unto the end of the year, Deut. xi. 12.) yet that even that now was for the wickedness of the inhabitants given up to destruction; and to be laid waste. Which being brought to their consideration could not certainly, except they were very ⁿ stupid, but awaken them, and make them sensible of the condition they had brought themselves to, by provoking God to cast them off, and put them out of that peculiar care which he was wont to have of them, and so stirs them up to seek to regain his favour by speedy repentance, to call them to which seems the main drift of this part of the prophecy.

If he speak as in his own person, then may they be looked on as his publishing what he had received from God to denounce to the people, to make them sensible of the miseries that they had pulled on themselves, and a bewailing of them; if as in the person of the people or any of them, then may they be as a form of lamentation by him put into their mouths, whereby they would or should bewail their sufferings, by an enumeration of such grievous things which befel them, and could not but extort from them such laments. ^o So Mercer thinks that from the words, Awake, ye drunkards, &c. is lamentationis formula, a form of lamentation. To which soever of these persons the pronoun be assigned, the thing will be the same, The land, the land of Judea, and the trees, the trees that grew therein. That was the Lord's land, Hosea ix. 3. that the Prophet's land of his nativity and habitation, the people's land of their inheritance; each of them might challenge so much right in it as to call it, mine, and for the same reason so to call the things that grew in it, theirs.

What befel, or should befall this land, and the things in it from that nation said to be come up upon it, is farther described in the following words.

7. He hath laid my vine waste, and barked my fig-tree: he hath made it clean bare, and cast it away, the branches thereof are made white.

He hath laid my vine waste, &c.] or turned into desolation my vine; he hath by eating, gnawing, or other means so marred it, as to be become altogether unprofitable, not yielding any fruit but cumbering only the ground. The Vulgar Latin renders it, Posuit vineam meam in desertum, he hath laid my vineyard into a desert, as the Doway Translators render it. Of which Drusius saith that it is minus recte, not so well, the word גפן Gephen more properly signifying a vine, as כרם Cerem a vineyard; yet it is not certain that that was his meaning, seeing vinea may as well signify a vine as a vineyard. However a vineyard being but more vines, the thing will be all one: and of them that take it in the particular notion of a vine, do several render it in the plural, vites meas, my vines, as looking on the noun to be ^a collectively taken, not only for one single vine, but for more or all of that kind, all which this hurtful nation of vermin hath laid waste; and so likewise will ^r they have the following word, fig-tree, also taken for fig-trees, to which to express farther what mischief was or should be done, he saith, and barked my fig-tree, or, as the Margin hath it, for a more literal expression of the Hebrew words, ותנאתי לקצפר Uteenati Liktsapha, laid my fig-tree for a barking. In the same notion doth the Vulgar Latin take the word, ¹ And Thinius. ^m Petr. à Flg. ⁿ See Calv. ^o So Tarnov. saith these words were put into the mouth of every one of the Jews, in which to utter his complaint of what befel. ^p Jun. & Trem. ^q Merc. ^r Druf.

Et ficum meam decorticavit, just the same that Ours have in the Text, (which the Dorway render, and he hath peeled off the bark of my fig-tree.) In the same likewise other more modern Translators, Et ficum meam in decorticationem, which is that which the Margin of our Bibles hath. Kimchi also mentions the same as the opinion of Some, viz. that קצפה Ketsapha, should be the same with קליפב Kelipbab, barking, as he saith that קצף Ketseph, may also signify, Hosea x. 7. the bark of a tree; and in his book of roots mentioning the same, adds as the cause of it, שנקלפה מרוב היובש when it is barked by reason of much dryness. So Vatablus, præ nimia scil. siccitate Et ariditate, vel quod Locusta decorticavit Et comedit eam, viz. when the bark comes off through overmuch drought and heat, or because the Locust hath peeled off the bark and eaten it. But several other notions of the word are there here given by other Interpreters both ancient and modern: R. Tanchum rendring it by تشويط والحرق scorching and burning, and so before him Abu Walid explaining the word by شوطه واحرقه he hath scorched or burnt it; which signification to agree to the word R. Tanchum proves from the frequent use of Scripture, of the roots and forms thence derived for burning or boiling heat of anger; which notion if agreeing to the word, we may look on as well agreeing to the thing, it being observed by those^a that write of the nature of things to be a property of Locusts, multa contactu adurere, to burn, parch, or scorch many things by their touch. So that trees do ejus contactu perire Et exarescere, by the touch of them perish, and dry up or wither. And to this notion of heat, and burning of anger, respect is had by Others also, who render it (as the^b MS. Arab.) شخ anger; or as Kimchi לקצה ולועת ולמארה to anger and indignation, and a curse? i. e. as Mercer thinks, to such a condition as causeth in the owner iracundiam Et mœrorem intolerandum, anger and intolerable grief: or we may say such, as is a sign of God's^c wrath, or curse towards it, or the owner of it, as if bringing it to such a condition as the^d fig-tree was brought to by our Saviour's curse. Besides this notion of the word, it hath also another, of foaming and frothing, which^e Some look on as the primary signification of it, and from whence the other of foaming anger they take to be derived; and this Others having respect to give another different rendring, viz. in^f Spumam hath turned into froth, as Vatablus observes some of the Jews to do; and others consonantly^g in clavum, or fungum, into a toad-stool, (or the like) caused by the froth, or moisture, not rightly diffusing it self into all parts of the tree, by reason of some impediment or drought, but breaking forth in the lower parts of the tree into such excrefcencies, being from the froth or resembling it, as Grotius speaks, Hebraea vox spumam significat, Et sic videntur per similitudinem appellari clavi arborum, that the Hebrew word signifies froth and foam, and that by way of likeness the mushrooms in trees are so called. To this may be referred that exposition of Aben Ezra, who taking this word to be of the same notion with קצף Ketseph, Hosea x. 7. where Ours translate it, foam, saith that it is a thing שאין בו ממש in which is no solid substance, res nihili, a thing of nought, as Buxtorf^h in his lesser Dictionary renders it, in which regard, accordingⁱ to him, would the Chaldee Paraphrase go this way, who renders למפחר נפש efflationem animæ, (as Mercer, or as Others) exhalationem animæ, i. e. a puffing out of the breath: which according to Some, is as he notes, as much as to say nibilum, or levissimum, a thing of nought, or very light thing, quod anbelitu diffatur, which is blown away with a puff of breath: except with Others, as he saith, we take them to express and denote a breathing out of the soul, that so it should sound, in mœrorem quo anima tandem efflatur, into sorrow through which the very soul is breathed forth, or sorrowful sighing, viz. for the great loss sustained; and if it be so taken, then will it be manifest that he hath rather respect to the former signification of the word, viz. that of heat or anger, which as well as sorrow causeth puffing, blowing, and sighing, especially when they meet together, produced by the same occasion, as here, where was such destruction, so that they may be both jointly understood.

The LXX. yet differently render καὶ τὰς συκὰς μὲν ἐς συγκλάσμον, Et ficus meas in confractionem, and lay my fig-trees into a breaking to pieces, (or and break in pieces) with which agree likewise the Syriack ܠܦܚܒܫܘܥ Lephushboeo (which the Latin renders ad divulsionem, to plucking in pieces) and the printed Arab. لفتافسك ad discerptionem, to tearing in pieces, which Bochartus looks on as the most proper signification of the word, confirming it from the use of it in the Arab. Tongue, in which كساف Kasapha signifies to break (and that properly the bough of a tree which so broken is therefore called كسيف Kasiph) as if the meaning were that those Locusts did, by eating and gnawing, break into pieces the boughs of the fig-trees. In this they are not wide from that rendring, which Ours choose to follow, viz. that of barking, only that breaking seems to imply, the breaking of the wood as well as the rinde, but barking that of the rinde or barke only; both are breaking, and so therefore may we well adhere to that translation, which our Translators after Others give us, extending it yet so far as to comprehend the gnawing, and so breaking breaking into pieces the ^f tender boughs, which to be done by the Locusts as well as the other we cannot doubt. Against the literal understanding these words, ^g one mentions as a probable argument, that it cannot but seem strange, that Locusts should ordinarily hurt or eat the leaves of fig-trees, much less the bark thereof, because of the bitterness thereof, and therefore that it is probable according to Jerome that it should not be properly to be understood of Locusts, but of the hurt done by their Babylonish enemies to them and their land; or if it be understood of Locusts properly, it must argue tantum fuisse ipsarum voracitatem, that so great and extraordinary was the greediness of these Locusts, that they spared not either the leaves or the bark even of the fig-tree. But this objection is by ^h Others quite taken away, who from what is found by experience, and observed by writers of the nature of things, affirm on the contrary that the vine and fig-tree are particularly named, quia Bruchi & Locustæ utrique infesti sunt, because the Caterpillars and Locusts are very hurtful to both of them. It follows in the description of the mischief thereto done, He hath made it clean bare and cast it away, &c. [It] the affixe following immediately the noun fig-tree will be necessarily referred to it; but as Kimchi thinks, not to it alone, but also to the other noun, vine preceding, so as that what is done may be understood as done to ⁱ both, and so do ^k Some therefore render it, eat them. It, then (or them) the fig-tree, or both vine and fig-tree, חֲשׂוֹף חֲשׂוֹף Cashoph cashaph, and so the MSS. Arabick תִּקְשֵׁר תִּקְשֵׁר by making bare he (called the nation) hath made bare, i. e. as Ours, hath made clean bare. By that the Chaldee thinks to be meant, the gnawing the bark off, rendring it מְקַלֵּף מְקַלֵּף barking, bark barked it; but Bochartus thinks that by making bare, that is not necessary to be understood, it being sufficient for making good that expression, that a tree be spoiled of its leaves, fruit, and blossom, though not of its bark. The LXX. renders it ἐρευνῶν ἐρευνῶντες αὐτὴν, scrutans scrutatus est eam, as likewise the printed Arab. قَشَّتْ قَشَّتْ Scrutata est scrutando (i. e. as the Latin Translator of it gives it, diligenter scrutata est, hath narrowly searched into it) this makes ^l Some to conjecture that they read not as now it is read in the Hebrew חֲשׂוֹף חֲשׂוֹף Chasoph Chasapha, but חֲפֹשׁ חֲפֹשׁ Caphos Chaphafah, by transposition of the letters, seeing that Caphas is more frequently used in that signification of searching: but I know not why. Caphas having confessedly both those significations of uncovering and making bare, we may not think that Casaph also agreeing with it in the one, might anciently be looked on as agreeing with it in the other also. Besides that the notions are not so wide one from the other, but the one may denote the other, things being laid open and made bare, that they may be searched into, and so those Locusts might make bare the fig-tree, that they might search after the utmost of such food, as it might afford them. The Syriack without repeating the word hath only פִּסְלוּ divulsit eam, plucked it asunder.

^a Plin. see Bochart.^b Bochart.^c Which he notes that he prefers before what Others render it by, viz.^d Gamu sorrow.^e Petr. à Fig.^f Mat. xxi. 19.^g Nic. Fuller in concord.^h Bux. lex. Tarnov.ⁱ Jun. Tr. Grot. Tarn. ^b In his greater Dictionary. ^c See Job ii. 26. ^d In dolorem animæ, est enim gravis dolor, cum fruges & arbores devastantur, Petr. à Fig. In efflat. animæ, i. e. tantam vastitatem ob quam non immerito quis animam abiciat vel despondeat. Tarnov ^e Bibl. Polyglott. for Others read otherwise γλυκυσμίν, which Drusius observes to be ill done.

It follows וְהִשְׁלִיךְ Vehishlic, and cast away, where Ours add it, as understood, viz. It which they have gnawed, and chewed of the leaves, fruit or bark, letting fall what they have not swallowed thereof, that bark having sucked away the moisture that is between the bark and the wood, of which [saith Kimchi referring it to the vine,] having eaten the leaves they let the green grapes fall to the ground; and by means of what they have done הִלְבִּינוּ שְׂרִיגֵיהֶם Hilbinu sbarigeha, the branches thereof (of vine or fig-tree) are made white. The verb, though of a form usually transitive, yet here intransitively taken, made white, viz. either because the bark and all that is green being eaten off, the bare wood which is white appeareth as Some take it; or because, as Others, the ^m bark it self, or leaves and sprouts being by the touch, and sucking of noxious vermin marred, and made rotten loose their verdure, and grow white: we may well comprehend all; the word being a description of the great hurt, that those noxious vermin do to those trees, which they seize on. And what is here said to happen to the vine and fig-tree, may well be thought to be understood of all trees also, as more are named, ver. 12. these may seem especially named as of most use and profit, the spoiling of which might therefore be looked on as a greater calamity, than the miscarrying of other trees. Some think these particularly mentioned as such, in the sweet fruits of which the drunkards mentioned, ver. 5. took more delight, and therefore would be most affected with, and most sensible of the loss.

The word שְׂרִיגִים Sbarigim, by Ours rendered branches, as by the Vulgar rami, and by Others to the like meaning, is by Junius and Tremellius rendered, botri illarum, their clusters, viz. their green grapes, which being robbed of their juice grow wan and white. Piscator censures them for it, both in that they refer it to the vine, whereas he thinks it more properly to belong to the fig-tree, and because they render that by clusters of green grapes, which more properly signifies palmites, vine-branches; himself renders it albæ evaserunt frondes earum, the leaves thereof are become white, thinking the word though properly signifying as he said, yet molli metaphora; by a gentle or easy metaphor, to be transferred to denote the leaves of the fig-tree, which he looks on as here peculiarly spoken of, and the pronoun to belong to it. Abu Walid compares the word with the root سَرَا Saraa in Arabick, which is used for twigs or branches اذا امتدت when they stretch forth themselves. The ⁿ chief Arabick Lexicographer saith, that the noun سَرَا Saraa signifies

Vol. I.

P p p

^f Bochart.
^l Merc. Druſ.

^g Pet. à Fig.

^m Bochart. part 2. p. 469.

^h Bochart. de Animal. part. post. p. 469.

ⁿ The Author of Kamus.

ⁱ Ar. Mont.

^k Jun. Trem.

signifies القضب الكرمر للغن لستته tender boughs of the vine, of the first year, or كل قضيب رطب any moist (or green) twig. The same tells us that السرج arfargo, with غ g (which comes nearer to the Hebrew in sound) is قضيب الكرمر the twig (or branch) of a vine. They that look more nicely into the Hebrew root, will have it properly to signify such ° boughs as interweave, or intangle one with another, as those of the vine are apt to do; yet used for branches in general.

By the words thus explained, and taken in their proper significations, we have the literal meaning of this verse also, agreeable to the foregoing, as a declaration of what was so done, or to be done, as is described by those hurtful worms to the trees and fruits of the land: in which way it is by many taken; but those who take the preceding words in an allegorical way, here also continue the same figure, and according to them, by the vine or vineyard, and fig-tree, are signified the people of the Jews, (of whom it is said, Isaiah v. 7. The vineyard of the Lord of hosts is the house of Israel, and the men of Judah his pleasant plant,) and by the vines being laid waste, and the fig-tree barked (or made an indignation or curse) and both being made bare, and cast away, and the branches thereof made white by the Locusts, and other vermin named, to be meant the destruction brought on that people by the enemy, their being deprived of their honour and good things they enjoyed, and their being carried into captivity, and made poor and desolate. So among the Jews Abarbinel, and among the Christians ° several.

8. Lament like a virgin girded with sackcloth for the husband of her youth.

What reason there was for those whom he before spake to, and particularly names, drunkards, and drinkers of wine, such who give themselves to luxury and pleasure, to weep and howl, viz. because they were deprived of those fruits, in which they took pleasure and delight, is manifest; but the mischief did not only redound to them, but to others more serious and sober, and that in respect of things most highly concerning them, to wit, not in what concerned their bodily comforts, or pleasures only, but as to what concerned them in their performing the due service of God, according to what was then by the law enjoined, and required from them; in that they were disabled to perform that; and therefore to these also, even to the whole people, doth he now address his speech, and call on them also to consider what is befallen them, and lay it well to heart; Lament like a virgin, &c.] The verbs in ver. 5. were of the plural number, and so the nouns to which they refer, but this here of the singular, and of the feminine gender, requiring a noun of the same conditions, which being not expressed is necessarily to be understood; which Kimchi with the Chaldee Paraphrast not improbably supposeth to be ננסת ישראל the congregation of Israel. Aben Ezra thinks it may be either ארם ô land, or נפשי Naphshi, my soul. R. Tanchum בר ציון או מא בשמך ô daughter of Zion, or something like. To express what great sorrow the calamity befallen, or to befall her, deserves, or may extort from her, for aggravation's sake he expresseth himself by a comparative expression drawn from such, as in that kind useth to be among the highest, bidding her to lament not like an ordinary person, and on ordinary occasion, but like a virgin girded with sackcloth for the husband of her youth, i. e. as one that being a young virgin was married to a husband suitable to her, and hath untimely lost him, and so cannot but be supposed to conceive the greatest sorrow for his loss, and by the most evident outward tokens, as (according to the custom of those times, as appears by many expressions and examples in Scripture) the putting on of sackcloth, and doleful lamentations to express it.

That the nouns which we here have בתולה Betulah, rendred a virgin, and בעל Baal rendred a husband, do so properly signify as they are rendred, there is no question; yet the sense seems here to require, that the one of them at least be not so strictly taken; for how shall she be properly called a virgin, which hath had a husband, and known the marriage bed? This makes that Some take the one in a larger notion, Some the other, as either that the first should not denote strictly a virgin, but a young woman that had been so till of late married; or else the second, not only a husband actually married, but one that was contracted to a woman, though the ceremonies of marriage were not yet completed betwixt them. Among those that take the first way is Kimchi, who giveth this plain exposition of the words, He speaks this as to the congregation of Israel, Lament for this evil, and make great mourning, as a virgin that is given in marriage to a young man, and he dieth while she is yet a girl, because then is the time of their having greatest joy one of another, and therefore if he die she grievously mourneth, and putteth on sackcloth instead of her attire and ornaments: and this way ° several follow as the plainest; Others keeping this noun in its strictest signification, enlarge the notion of the other, and take it here to denote not strictly an husband, but more largely one that that hath indeed set his affections on a woman, and is espoused or contracted to her, but not yet married: so Piscator by husband here saith to be understood, is qui uxorem virginem sibi despondit quidem, sed nondum cum ea consuevit, quippe mortuus ante consuetudinem conjugalem. One that hath espoused indeed to himself a virgin but hath not yet kept her company, viz. as dying before the use of the marriage-bed: of this opinion seems the Author of the MS. Arabick Version, though not so much from any thing in his rendring the latter noun, which he rendreth زوج an husband, as from his rendring the first عاتق which signifies a girl ripe for marriage, but not yet separated from her parents to abide with her designed husband; لم تبين من اهلها الي زوج, Faubari. Another thing in Piscator observable is, that what Ours with Others render the husband of her youth, which sounds to whom she was married in her youth, he would have to sound literally, maritum juventutis suum, her husband of youth, and so means, maritum juvenem suum, her young husband, that so the age of her husband should be pointed out by it, not that of the spouse; in which Grotius seems to agree with him, while he explains the words, Solent enim mariti à feminis magis amari, quibus adolescentulis adhuc nuptæ sunt. For husbands are wont to be more loved of women, to whom being yet young men they were married; but this construction though there be some examples brought of it, yet is certainly more harsh than the other, and I know not whether it be more or so much conducing to the matter here intended, viz. for the expression of the greatness of such sorrow, as is usually found in such a person as is here described, a virgin (espoused, or a young woman) lately married, that hath lost by untimely death her (spouse or) husband. We may well think the tenderness of her own years to confer as much to the greatness of her passions, as the youth of her husband: as to the matter, both may here seem intimated, a young woman losing a young husband, whom she most passionately loved, and so bitterly lamenting his death, and shewing all signs of grief for him, so that from her behaviour is aptly taken a comparison, ad gravissimum luctum arguendum, to describe very grievous mourning.

° Ramus tortilis atque implexus. Etenim Radix hæc proprie sonat perplecti, implicari, contorqueri. Nic. Fuller. Cap. Concord. P. Ar. Mont. Christi à Castro. Brent. And that בַּזְלִי so signifies, Some think proved by what is added to it when it is spoken of Rebekah, Gen. xxiv. 16. neither had any man known her, if the bare name strictly signified such a one as had not been known by a man, why should this be added to describe a pure virgin? Druf. So Ab. Ezra, בְּיָמֵי שְׂמֵחָהּ in the days of her joy. Betulah ætatis hoc non integretatis nomen. Merc. Lively, and Druf. Mercer seems not constant to himself, saying in his first Notes on this verse, that Baal properly signifies Amasium, a lover, not maritum, an husband. But in his latter Notes, that it signifies non Amasium, not a lover; but maritum, qui jus habet in uxorem, an husband which hath full right to the wife. And so in his former Notes on Hosea ii. 18. he saith that Baal doth signify both Dominum & Amasium, a lord and a lover; and in his latter, that what Some say that Baal doth in Hebrew signify Amasium, a lover, falsum est, is false.

The Greek something differently in words from Others, though not in meaning, renders, Θρήνησον πρὸς με ὑπὲρ νύμφην περιζωσμένην σάκκον, ἐπὶ τὸν ἄνδρα αὐτῆς τὸν παρθενικόν, and the printed Arabick following it, نوح علي اكثر، من عروس اتزرت بالمسوح علي رجلها العذوي, and the ancient Latin Translation of the LXX. renders it, Plange ad me super sponsum accinctum cilicio, super virum suum virgineum, which in English must sound, Lament to me above, (or more than) a bride, (or new married woman) girded with sackcloth, for her virgin husband, in which version there is added πρὸς με, to me, above what is found in the Hebrew; of which Drusus conjectures the cause to be a double translation of the word עלי Eli, which so read, signifies, Lament, but with the same letters, Elai, to me, and both of these by some scribe anciently to have been put in together; so that for reducing it to agree with the Hebrew, he supposeth the second ought to be put out; he likewise supposeth that whereas they read ὑπὲρ νύμφην, which must be rendred, above, or more than, a new married woman, it was at first written ὡςπερ, like as, agreeably to the Hebrew word כַּתּוּלָה Cibtulah, and by a mistake of the scribe changed into ὑπὲρ: by ἄνδρα αὐτῆς τὸν παρθενικόν, her virgin husband, Jerome, as Others, will have understood, her first husband, which married her when she was yet a virgin, * so called, quod primus florem virginitatis abstulerit.

What Abarbinel takes to be alluded to, by taking this comparison from a virgin in such condition as is described, appears by his explication of the words, Lament thou, O congregation of Israel, which wert as a virgin, in as much as no people had dominion over thee, and gird thee with sackcloth for the husband of thy youth, which is God (blessed for ever) because his majestick presence is departed from thee. This he may seem to have taken from Jerome, who hath much * the same conceit.

9. The meat-offering, and drink-offering is cut off from the house of the Lord, the Priests, the Lord's ministers mourn.

According to the plain literal meaning of the words, here is a declaration of the cause which they had of lamenting in that manner which he mentioned, even the whole congregation of them. Although Aben Ezra looks on it, as still more particularly concerning the drunkards before mentioned, as if it were a confirmation of what he said, that the wine should be cut off from their mouths, as if he should say, How shall you think to find wine [for excess] when as the meat-offering and drink-offering, the necessary duty or oblation of the whole congregation, which, if there were wherewith to perform it, ought not to be omitted, is cut off from the house of the Lord [there being nothing whereby to offer it] so that the priests, the Lord's ministers are forced to mourn for want of it? but we may rather think that this is a new address to the whole congregation, shewing what reason not only the drunkards, who could not be satisfied with what is sufficient, but even they who did not require more than what was requisite for necessary uses, and even that without which they could not perform their duty to God, which they ought to have more regard to than any thing that concerned their own particular profit, or pleasure, was cut off from them, had to lament of: this meat-offering and drink-offering he saith is cut off, viz. (according to the literal sense of the former words) because those noxious vermin (mentioned ver. 4.) had had devoured those fruits of the earth of which they were to be. The מִנְחָה minchah, or meat-offering, of what it consisted, and how made, we have it described in Levit. ii. 1, &c. and vi. 14, &c. Numb. xv. 4, &c. and xxviii. 5, &c. The name indeed is elsewhere more generally taken, for any gift or oblation, but more peculiarly in the law attributed to such as is there described, and I suppose ^y here meant, the chief ingredient of which was fine flower. The drink-offering called נֶסֶךְ Nesek is in the same likewise described, as consisting of wine, Numb. xv. 5. and xxviii. 7, 14. So that the wheat and the wine of which these were made being by the Caterpillars, Locusts, and like noxious creatures marred, so as not to produce their fruit, these, viz. flower and wine must needs be cut off, and fail, and they in so great measure failing, as there was not to be had of them, so much as might serve for taking of the one for a meat-offering, and of the other a drink-offering to be offered in the house of the Lord, must certainly argue great penury and scarcity, such as could not but be a cause of great lamentation, such as he here describes or calls for, to the whole people that suffered such things, and more peculiarly to the priests who ministered to the Lord in his house, and there, according to their duty, continually offered to him such holy things while they were to be found; and therefore as he calls on the whole congregation to lament in sad manner, so affirms he of these that they do lament. The Greek indeed doth here render this verb also אָבְלוּ which Others take in the present or præter tense, do mourn, or, have mourned, in the imperative mood, πενθήσατε, mourn ye, and so joins the word not so much to the preceding, as to the following words, which give the like reason why they should mourn, as well as these do why the whole congregation should: this, though as not so much agreeable with Others in the construction, will not much alter the sense, and give much the same reason for their mourning. Why the priests are more particularly concerned in this kind are apparent ^z two reasons; one the great love and zeal that they had for God's service, which in those times could not without these offerings, which to the other sacrifices were necessarily joined, be duly performed: the other a necessary deprivation to themselves of their maintenance by God allotted to them, among the other tribes; so that they had not any other part of inheritance in the land with them, Numb. xviii. 8, 9. and xx. Among those who are said shall thus mourn, I know not how, or on what grounds the Syriack Interpreter reckons Kings: also his translation is כֹּהֲנֵי מִנְחָה וְנֶסֶךְ אֲבָלוּ, &c. The flower [offering] and asperfusion [or drink-offering] is gone [or ceased] from the house of Lord, the Kings sit

* Lively. * But Cyril's explains it by παρθενικόν τε καὶ ἔφηρον νυμφίον, as if it denoted the youthful age of the man, as is to be seen by Others. P And see Ar. Mont.

[or have fate] in mourning, and the priests that minister to the Lord. The word Kings we have not, as far as I have seen, in any other translation, nor is there ought in the original answering to it, or any ground for it, except we may think it a double translation of the word Cobanim, as if that signified as well Kings as Priests, and the Author would put in both, as thinking both comprehended. I find indeed in an Hebrew-Arabick Glossary כֹּהֵן rendred as well سلطان Soltan a King, as a Priest, as he would have it to be where it is said, Thou art a Cohen for ever after the order of Melchisedec; and it is elsewhere used for a prince or chief man; but whether that was the Syrians ground or no, I know not, but there is no ground for us to follow them in it: the words added for expressing who are meant, viz. the Lord's ministers, or they that minister to the Lord, plainly restrain the word here to the signification of priests, who had cause to mourn for the reasons before mentioned.

Of those who by those noxious creatures above named, will have to be understood the enemies, and not really those creatures, there be who understand the cutting off of the meat-offering and drink-offering from the house of the Lord, ^a to denote the desolation brought on the land by those enemies destroying the fruits thereof; or together, as ^b Others, by their making the ways impassable for those that would from the several places of the land, bring up their offerings to the temple. Abarbinel takes another way, or goes farther, taking hereby, as from what is likewise said ver. 10. to be intimated the destruction of the temple wherein they were to be offered, that they are said to be cut off, not so much for defect of those things whereof they consisted, as for that the ^c place where they were wont to be offered, was destroyed. But the words are easily retorted on him as a ^d proof to the contrary, viz. that the calamity was a judgment that befel them while the temple was yet standing. It is not said the house shall be cut off from the offerings, but they from it, and how can they be said to be cut off from it, if it were not in being?

10. The field is wasted, the land mourneth, for the corn is wasted: the new wine is dried up, the oyl languisheth.

He proceeds in a farther explication of that calamity, which had befallen (or should certainly befall) them, and hath the bad effects mentioned by reciting the particulars in which it appeared. His so punctually describing the particulars, and repeating in more words what might seem by fewer to be understood, seems (as is by Some observed) to argue the great ^e stupidity of the people, which though in such an ill condition, as they could not but be highly sensible of, and groaned under, yet do not

2

^y Minchah being the feminine gender, the Arab. MS. adds before it, Korban, as understood with it, as it is expressed, Levit. ii. 5. because the verb הִכְרַת Hocrat, is masculine. ^z Jerom. ^a Ribera, Menochius. ^b Gualter. ^c So the Doway Translators in their Notes, when Jerusalem was taken, and the temple destroyed by the Babylonians, the sacrifice necessarily ceased according to this and other Prophets. ^d Bochart. ^e Calv.

אדמא Adamah. The land [mourneth] i. e. Saith Aben Ezra אכלו וישבירו the inhabitants thereof mourn, and so before him Jerome, qui versantur in humo, they which have to deal with the ground, or live on it, of them it may seem to be more properly taken than of that which hath no sense or feeling of what befalls it. Yet it is by Others thought more emphatical to apply it to the earth or land it self; and so it is in other places applied to express the same face and condition of it, and the things in it, as Isaiab xxiv. 4. The earth mourneth and languisheth, and so Jer. iv. 28.

For this shall the earth mourn, and xli. 4. How long shall the land mourn? ^b with several other places; as on the contrary when it is in a flourishing, prosperous condition, the hills thereof are said to rejoice, the valleys thereof to shout for joy, and so sing, Psalms lxxv. 12, 13. Nor will the like figurative expression be strange in other languages, in which we have the meadow said, ridere, to laugh, and the lætus ager, a merry, or joyful field, when they flourish and abound with plenty: on the contrary when they are barren, desolate, and deprived of such things, will they be said to mourn, or to be sad, to be sad of face, and in mourning habit. The Chaldee Paraphrast attending to such meaning of the word, in respect to the subject of which it is spoken, more than the proper signification of it, renders it ארעא חרובה the land, or earth, ⁱ is desolate. Mean while, how what is spoken of the ground, or earth it self, concerns the inhabitants of it, is manifest; if it mourn as desolate and destitute of what it should bring forth, necessary will mourning be to them that live by the fruits and products thereof, and cannot subsist without them. What is the cause of the land's being said to mourn, is declared in the next words, describing in like figurative language, the afflicted condition of those things, in the flourishing of which it was wont to exult and pride it self, viz. because שרד רגן Skuddad dagan, The corn is wasted, or as in the Geneva rendering, destroyed. The same verb have we here that before, and as by Ours rendred as before, so by the Greek also, and by the Syriack and MS. Arabick, but by the Chaldee differently, though much to the same meaning, there by Embezizu are spoiled, here by ספ Saph, is consumed, or failed; and in the Vulgar Latin, in the first place by depopulari, to be destroyed; in the second, by devastari, to be wasted. That which is the most useful among the products of the earth, even the staff of life in man, and which strengthneth his heart, and from which was the substance of the minchah, or meat-offering to God, faileth them, whether by ^k the noxious vermin before mentioned, corrupted, or consumed; or as ^l Some gather from what follows, per nimum æstum solis, parched and withered by the excessive heat of the sun; or otherwise חוביש תירוש Hobish Tirosh, The new wine is dried up, so in our Text; but in the Margin, is shamed: the reason of which different rendering is the ambiguous signification of the word חוביש Hobish in the original, which is sometimes looked on as having the ordinary notion of the verb יבש Yabash, signifying to be dry, or dried up, sometimes in the notion of the verb בוש Bosh, signifying ordinarily to be ashamed. ^m The forms and so the notions of which roots are sometimes mixed and confounded, which hath caused a difference betwixt Interpreters in the rendering it here, even from of old, the LXX. rendering it ἐξηρανώθη is dried up, and so the Chaldee.

Vol. I.

Q q q

^f Vatab. ^g Mercer. ^h So it is said, Lam. ii. 8. That he made the rampart and the wall to lament. ⁱ And so some Others, desolata est terra, Pagn. ^k Cyril. ^l Pisc. Dan. Tarnov. per nimum aestum & insecta varia.

^m Buxt. Lex. in בִּרְיָ, and see Schindler in the same root.

The first word חובישו Hobishu is of the same form with חוביש Hobish in the preceding verse, which there is rendred by Ours in the Text, is dried up, and in the Margin, is ashamed, as capable of either of those significations, and as indifferent for the meaning of that place in either of them: but the same R. Tanchum, who notes that of it in that place, as we have seen, saith that it is here الخري the husband-men, without doubt of the signification of shame and confusion, yet do the LXX. here also take it in the other notion, rendring (according to the ordinary reading and distinction) ἑξηράνθησαν γεωργοί, as likewise the printed Arabick following them, جفت الفلاحون the husband-men are dried up, which makes a very harsh sense, which may seem to be corrected, by otherwise distinguishing the words, as Cyril doth, by making ἑξηράνθησαν to be but a repetition of what is said in the former words, viz. the things before spoken are dried up; and to begin anew, begins with, joining the noun only to the following verb γεωργοὶ θρηνεῖτε κτήματα, agricolæ lugete possessiones, ye husband-men bewail the possessions, for what follows, as we shall by and by see. But others generally both ancient and modern, with good reason, I suppose, take the word which we speak of, in the other notion of being ashamed, and make the noun husband-men to govern it, yet is there difference between them concerning the mood or tense of the verb, some taking it to be of the præter tense, and so reading it, as the Vulgar Latin, confusi sunt agricolæ, the husband-men are confounded, the Syriack ܚܘܒܝܫܘ Chobishu (according to the Latin translation of it,) erubuerunt agricolæ, the husband-men have been (or are) ashamed. And among modern Interpreters, Junius and Tremellius, erubescunt, are ashamed; and Others to the same meaning, puget, or dispuget agricolas. But Others prefer to take it in the imperative mood, so the Chaldee ܒܝܬܝܐܢܪܝܐ Be ye ashamed, O husband-men, so the MS. Arabick, اخذوا باالاربي, the form indifferently agreeing to both. Kimchi sets a note upon it, that here it is (as likewise the following verb) צווי, the imperative mood, and so is also by divers Others, as well as Ours, among modern translations taken, as most convenient, and most emphatical: Erubescite, or as the Interlineary, pugete vos agricolæ. As both these ways of rendring agree to the form of the verb, so will they well agree to the meaning, the import being to shew the greatness of the calamity which either was befallen, or certainly to befall them, such as could not but, or deservedly might, provoke lamentation from them. If it be taken in the præter tense, it shews what effect it had already on them; if in the imperative, then what it justly should have on them, as Kimchi speaks, כי ראוי לכם שתבשו, because there is great reason that you should be ashamed, in as much as all labour or works in the field are come to nought, as will appear by what is in the following words expressed. The persons here spoken to, or of, are אנרים Iccarim, in the Chaldee אנריא Iccarya, in the Syriack ܐܢܪܝܐ Acare in the MS. Arabick الاربي Accarin, the same root Acar being common to themall, and the word in them all, signifying עובדי השדות (as Kimchi) they that till the fields, or as R. Tanchum الذي يحرثون الارض plowmen, or husband-men, that plow, or till the ground, the singular number אנר Iccar occurs, Jer. li. 23. which Abu Walid explains, כראב והו אלרי יקלב אלארץ באלחראת A plowman, which is he that turneth up the ground by plowing.

In the next words חילילו כורמים Helilu Coremim, rendred, howl, O ye vine-dressers, of the first, viz. the verb Helilu, from הלל Yalal to howl, the ^s same is said as concerning the state and form of it, which was of the foregoing Hobishu, viz. that it may be indifferently taken, either of the præter tense, or the imperative mood, and is by most so taken as they took that, and so by Some rendred as the præter tense, so by the Vulgar Latin ululaverunt vinitores, the dressers of vines have howled, as the Doway. The Syriack in like way ܘܠܠܘ ܒܐܠܪܡܝܐ Wailelu corne, which the Latin Translator renders, ululaverunt vinitores, Jun. Trem. ejulant vinitores, the vine-dressers do howl; but by Others as in the imperative mood, so by the Chaldee ܠܝܠܘ ܡܦܠܚܝ alilû mephalehi as in the ^h usual translation rendred, ululate cultores vinearum, and by Mercer, ejulate, &c. (though ⁱ Some render both this and the foregoing verb in him by the præter tense, pudesciti sunt agricolæ, ululaverunt vinearum cultores, the forms being coincident) so in the Manuscript Arabick ولولوا بالارامي howl, O ye vine-dressers; and so Kimchi notes, that it ought to be taken as well as the foregoing verb, and several of the ^k modern Interpreters take it. The Greek here (as the printed Arabick following them) differ from the rest in that they translate the first of these verbs in the præter tense, ἑξηράνθησαν, the second in the imperative mood, θρηνεῖτε, lament. The persons spoken to, or of by this verb are עובדי הכרמים Ovede bucceramim (as Kimchi explains it) such as are employed in the vine-yards, in ordering, planting, and dressing them, so the Chaldee ܡܦܠܚܝ Mephatechi carmaya, cultores vinearum, the Syriack ܐܠܪܡܝܐ Corne, and the

MS. Arabick الارامي Carramin, in words of the same root, sound, and signification with the Hebrew, viz. vinitores, the Vulgar Latin renders it vine-dressers, and so generally all modern Interpreters, but the Greek and printed Arabick here differ from all the rest; the Greek rendring it by κτήματα, the Arabick مواشي Cattel. For reconciling the Greek with the Hebrew, some conjecture, that instead of Coremim, vine-dressers, they read in the Hebrew brew Ceramim, which signifies vines, and then that in the Greek they wrote κλήματα, which signifies, vitium propagines, shoots or plants of vines, 'tis Mercer's conjecture, and Drusus saith of it that it is emendatio non mala, no ill emendation; yet why we should in whole embrace it, I think there is no reason. That they took Coremim in the signification of Ceramim, may seem probable, but that it should in them be read κλήματα, and not κτήματα is not so evident, it being against the authority not only of the known copies, but of the ancient Latin translation of the LXX. in Jerome, which renders it possessiones; and it's manifest that the Arabick also read it, while he renders it, cattel, which will come under the notion of possessions (though not such as the Greek may seem to relate to) but not of vine-plants. Besides the same word כרם Cerem, is elsewhere rendred also by the word κτήμα, as usually reading the Greek copies that we have.¹ So Prov. xxxi. 16. where what is in the Hebrew נטעה כרם Nateab Cerem, she planteth a vine-yard, the Greek renders κατεφύτευσε κτήμα, plantavit possessionem, she planteth a possession. And so Hosea ii. 15. where כרמיה Cerameha, is in it rendred τα κτήματα αὐτῆς. There indeed Drusus doth, as Mercer here, think it probable that it should be read κλήματα, vine-branches; but what like reason there is to change the reading there, we have said on that place, and little I suppose have we to change it here, the word κτήματα, possessions, though not signifying only vine-yards, will comprehend them better than the word that signifies only single plants or branches, it being supposed that for Coremim, vine-dressers, they did read Ceramim, vine-yards: but then if it be so read, (viz. κτήματα) or otherwise, how shall the word be taken? whether as governing the verb, or governed of it? the usual reading takes it in the first way, lament, O ye possessions, but Cyril otherwise distinguishing it, seems to take it in the second, bewail the possessions; so it appears by his explication, which is, that without doubt the destruction of things in the fields brings sorrow to those that till the ground. Such difficulties and scruples arise from the version, which by keeping to the plain reading of the Hebrew and the rendering of such as adhere to it, as Ours and Others, there is no cause of at all.

^c Doway. ^d Drus. à Cast. ^e Mercer. Tarnov. ^f Munst. Pagnin. Tigur. ^g Kimchi. ^h Polygl. ⁱ Pet. à Fig. ^k Pagn. Tigur. Munst.

Those that are bid to howl, are Coremim, the vine-dressers, those whose chief possessions and emoluments were vine-yards, in the increase and fruitfulness of which, the chief pleasure and profit both of themselves, and Others that lived with them in their country, and enjoyed the fruits of their labours, did consist: what reason they had to howl (though before sufficiently declared) yet is farther expressed in the next verse, but before that, the reason why those before mentioned, viz. the husband-men, are bid to be ashamed, in the remainder of this verse, namely, for the wheat, and for the barley, &c. the chief grains for man's use, and in ordering of which the husband-man's care consists, and on the kindly growth of which his hope and livelihood depends, being so destroyed (according to the plain forementioned literal meaning) by the Locusts, and other noxious creatures above mentioned, (or as Others will, by the enemy) that there is no harvest to be gathered out of the field, but all utterly perished, great cause is there that they whose hope is thereby frustrated should be ashamed and confounded; yet by consequence all the people of the land, being by this means deprived of necessary sustenance: so that it is a description of a great and general calamity, which he mentions that they might all take due notice of it, as an argument of God's great displeasure provoked against them, especially there being added concerning the other fruits, for which the vine-dressers are also bid to howl, what follows in the next verse; although I know not for what reason the LXX. Greek and printed Arabick here render the words קציר שדה Ketfir Sadeh, the harvest of the field by the vintage, the Greek having τρυγητός ἐξ ἀγρῶ, the Arabick القطار هلك من الحقل the vintage is perished out of the field. Though perhaps the general word harvest, might be extended to the gathering of any fruits, as grapes or other, yet certainly here it appears to be more properly and strictly taken, for the gathering, or reaping the wheat and barley, about which the אכרים Iccarim, or husband-men are peculiarly occupied, and they are therefore particularly bid to be ashamed for them, viz. ὑπὲρ πυρῆς καὶ κριθῆς; as the Greek also hath it, for the wheat and the barley; for I suppose the printed Arabick which follows them, in rendering these words, plainly mistakes them, to the manifest marring of the meaning, while he reads أكثر من القمح والشعير more than the wheat and barley. The MS. Arabick renders the whole more conspicuously, and agreeable to the Hebrew علی الحنطة والشعير اذا ياد حصاد المحرا for the wheat and the barley, seeing the harvest of the field is perished; so that those words properly concern the husband-men, or tillers of the ground, the following, the vine-dressers, viz. The vine is dried up. Here have we the same word that we had twice before, viz. הוביש Hobish, which verse the tenth is rendred in the text by the notion of drought, is dried up, and in the Margin by the notion of being ashamed, and verse the 11th, by the signification of being ashamed; and it is here noted by R. Tanchum, as also by Others, that it is here capable of the same signification that it was there. And so find we it differently rendred, by Some; as by Ours, in the notion of being dried up; ^m by Others, in the other of being ashamed. So the Vulgar Latin, vinea confusa est, the ⁿ vine-yard is confounded: so the MS. Arab. الجفنة خربت the vine is ashamed: so among modern Interpreters Drusus, vitem pudet, for (saith he) succo suo est fructu spoliatae vites quasi erubescunt, ut homines solent cum illis mali aliquid præter opinionem accidit,

¹ Drus. Dan.^m So the LXX. Chaldee, Syr. printed Arab. and several modern, Mercer, *Pagn.*ⁿ Doway.

cidit, the vines deprived of juice and fruit, are said to blush or be ashamed, as men use to do when some unexpected evil happens to them, or because they fail of what is expected from them; or their being said to be ashamed, may be understood of their causing shame to their owners, who are frustrated of their expectation from them, which soever of these significations be taken, either the one of shame in a metaphorical, or the other of being dried up and withered in a proper sense, the meaning will be the same, viz. their failing of fruit, or being profitable, which is from their being dried up, and for that is their shame. And the fig-tree, אַמְלָלָהּ Umlalah, languisheth, the same verb we had before, ver. 10. and so as here by Ours rendred. How diversly it is by Others in that place rendred we have seen, and may observe that as they there rendred it, so they do here; so do the LXX. the printed Arabick, the Syriack, the Vulgar Latin, and the Chaldee express it by the same word in both places, as do likewise many among modern Interpreters, though Some change the word without much alteration of the sense. The MS. Arabick here hath انقصت Encasaphat (which may be rendred, is weakened or broken) and so I suppose ought also to have been written in that 10th verse, though there be, by leaving out a letter, in the copy which I use, only انتف Enkaffa. As to the meaning of the word I think we may well take Drusus's explication. The juice of the fig-tree being all sucked out, the tree it self languisheth, i. e. debilis ac infirma relicta est, nec amplius usum sui præbet, is left weak and feeble, so as to yield no farther profit from it self. So is the vine said to languish, Isaiah xxiv. 7. and the earth, xxxiii. 9. To these are subjoined for expression of the evils befalling them, several other trees, whose fruit is not so necessary for sustenance, yet for both pleasure and profit to men. As, the Pomegranate, the Palm-tree also, and the Apple-tree, even all the trees of the field are withered. The destruction of these is put as a cause why the vine-dressers should howl, as belonging to their care and inspection, together with their vines, the chief among them, and the fruits of which were by them gathered and dispensed for the use of themselves and all inhabitants of the land. Of these all he saith יבשו Yabeshu, that they were dried up, scorched, or withered, viz. according to the plain meaning by many followed, by the mischief of the Locusts and other noxious creatures above named, brought on them. Abarbinel, from this expression draws an argument against the taking this and other mischiefs before mentioned, for hurt done by those creatures, because though they devoured the leaves and fruits, yet it is not likely that they could kill the whole trees: but the learned Bochartus taxeth him as ignorant of the nature of those pestilent creatures, and of the mischief which they are by Others observed to do; amongst others in that kind, he cites an Arabick Author Al-Damiri, whose words (according to his copy) concerning Locusts are, لعابه سم نافع للنبات والشجر ولا يقع على شيء منه الا اهلكه that their spittle, or moisture, is a very strong poison to plants and trees, and falls not on any of them, but that it destroys them, (in my copy is only لعابه سم نافع ولا يقع على شيء منه الا اهلكه his spittle is very strong poison, which falls not on any thing, but that it destroys it.) Out of Pisidas also he cites, as affirmed of them, that they make both trees and herbs to fade and wither; and himself thinks it plain that what here is said, is spoken of such mischief as is by them done to the fruits of the earth and trees. But whatsoever, or whosoever be the instruments, so great is the calamity thereby brought on the whole land, that what cause of shame and sorrow is here described, manifestly reacheth not only to the husband-men, and vine-dressers, who are named as more immediately concerned, but to all the inhabitants thereof universally, because (saith he) joy is withered away from the sons of men. The particle ו rendered by Ours and Others, because, is by Others rendred, Imo, yea, Yea it is withered, &c. by Others, sane, certe, surely, by Others, Ideo, therefore, &c. by Munster, ut scilicet arefcat gaudium, &c. viz. that joy may wither. These and like significations the particle being found to have, as one or another of them shall be taken, there may be made some little nice difference, in connecting these words with those that go before, or inferring them from them; but all will concur in making these words a description of the extent of the calamity mentioned, to all sorts of people in the land in general, and what great cause of sorrowing there is to them: whether we look back only to the words immediately preceding, wherein the husband-men and vine-dressers are called on, or farther back to ver. 3. where they are in general bid to lament, for the evils both before and between that and this, and now again described. As to the expression, joy is withered we have in it the same ambiguous word which we had thrice before, viz. הוביש Hobish, and concerning it have the same note from R. Tanchum, which before, viz. that it may be taken in the signification of الحزي Chazyio, shame, or being ashamed, and so to import, الانتطاع والعدم failing and deprivation, or else being dried up, or withered, and accordingly have we variety of renderings in several translations. The ancient Latin appears to take it in the former of those two notions, rendring it confusum est gaudium à filiis hominum, joy is confounded from the children of men. The LXX. also before them take the same notion, but with a different construction,

VOL. I.

R r r

o Petr. à Fig. Confudit, & pudescit eos, & eorum spes frustrata est. p So Pagnin. ver. 10. excisum est oleum, ver. 12. ficus desolata est. Munst. exterminatum fit oleum. ver. 12. ficulnea enervata est. q Tarnov. r Ar. Mont. Pet. à Fig. s So Jerome here takes it. t In him it is printed التبت but, I think, ill. u Vulg. Lat. Jun. Chald. Syr. MS. Arab. اذ behold, or sith that. w Piscat. Tarnov. x Merc. y Grot: z And so Kimchi. a So the Doway. 1 struction, rendring ἡ χόρη χαρὰν οἱ υἱοὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων (whom the printed Arabick following, لان بني البشر اخزوا الفرح, because the children of men have made joy ashamed, (or put joy to shame) in which their rendring Mercer thinks they took Hobish as passively used (I suppose he means, as if the words in Hebrew founded, Joy is put to shame of, or by the children of men,) and the Vulgar Latin may be so construed also: but it is otherwise by Expositors usually understood, as we shall by and by see: only by the way we may take notice of another way which Lud. Capellus takes for adjusting the LXX. with the Hebrew. He supposeth that for הוביש Hobish, (from יבש Yebash) in the singular number they read הבישו Hebishu, as ^b from בוש Bosh, and in the plural number, and then in the following words מן בני אדם Min bene Adam, from the children of men, left out the preposition Min, from; but the former way of reconciling them seems the plainer, as not requiring that groundless different reading in the Hebrew which the other doth; in which will be found only a more irregular use of the word הוביש Hobish, by giving to it a passive signification, whereas it is by Others taken in an intransitive, as by R. Tanchum it is observed here to be דחית Dhati intransitive, nor is it usually looked on as taken by the Vulgar Latin otherwise than so, while that confusum est is looked on as signifying the same with pudet, or pudescit, in Latin, and in filiis hominum, rendred, from the children of men, not, by the children of men. The sense that ^c those Expositors, who follow that rendring, give, is to this purpose, that joy by reason of the unusual failure of those good things (as corn and wine and other fruits of the earth) from whence it was wont to arise, and was now expected to arise to them, was as it were ashamed to offer it self to them, or to expect entertainment from them. And to the same purpose are the rendrings of such among either modern or ancient Interpreters, as that of the MS. Arabick از خزي السرور من بني آدم seeing joy is ashamed from the sons of men, who take that notion of the word, and that of Drusus, Puduit gaudium à filiis hominum. Castalio in that notion also renders it, faedata humani generis voluptate, the pleasure of mankind being laid open to shame, or made shameful, or unseemly, that which was wont to be their joy being now their shame. But most modern Interpreters preferring the other notion which Ours follow, render it, ^d exaruit, is dried up; their corn, vines, olives, and other fruit-trees, their whole harvest being dried up and withered, as is described, well may their ^e joy, which was from the flourishing of these, and the enjoyment of them, ^f be said also to be dried away from them. However the word be taken, as to the proper and literal signification of it; yet as to the meaning of it, both notions will concur so as to denote a ceasing or failing of such joy, as was formerly found, and might now have been expected, if things had gone on in their ordinary course among them, when God's blessing was upon them and their land; and so it is well given by the Chaldee Paraphrast, פסקת חדות, and so the Syriack Interpreter נכח, &c. because joy is ceased (or) failed from the children of men; and Jerome himself, who renders it by the notion of being confounded, makes that to be all one in meaning here with auferri, to be taken away from.

By that general expression of the children of men, is here by ^g Some observed to be meant the inhabitants of that country, on which that calamity and cause of sorrow lighted; it may yet well be used as a thing generally spoken; for had the cause been universal, and reached to all mankind on all parts of the earth, the effect would have been likewise universal, to the cutting off of joy from them all. By this Abarbinel taking all that should befall them to be from the enemy, thinks to be noted their nations being led into captivity, עוברה ועצוברת רוח, forsaken and ^h grieved in Spirit.

13. Gird your selves, and lament, ye priests: bowl ye ministers of the altar: come, lye all night in sackcloth, ye ministers of my God: for the meat-offering, and the drink-offering is withholden from the house of your God.

However such preceding expressions, though in form hortatory as that, ver. 5, 8, 12. may be understood as not so much exhortations to repentance, ⁱ as sarcastical exprobrations for, and declarations of such behaviour and expressions of sorrow which appears or should appear in them, forced thereto by what they did or should suffer, without visible hope of redress, and to awaken them from their great stupidity, yet these words appear plainly to be a serious exhortation thereto, as a remedy against, and means for removing those evils, which did either hang over their heads, or were already fallen on them.

Gird your selves,] that is, saith R. Tanchum, as ^k Others of the Jews, and Others also, שקים with sackcloth, or clothe your selves with sackcloth, which word may here be supplied from ver. 8. חגורה שק Cbegurab sak, girded with sackcloth, or from what follows in this verse, where it is expressed in לינו בשקים linu besachim, lye all night in sackcloth, although Some think that without supplying that, the meaning may be well made out, viz. ^l Festinate, make speed to do what is in the next words expressed, or ^m parate vos ad planctum, prepare your selves for lamentation; agreeably enough to that sense in which girding up ones

self

^a Although by what we have before said, appears that he might as well have said Hobishu, which would be the same thing, and less change, since that is used in the same sense with Hebishu. ^c Mercer, Pudet gaudium hominum conspectus hominum. So Ribera, Menoch, Tirinus, Tarnov. ^d Pagn. Munst. Tig. ^e Psal. iv. 7. Isaiah ix. 3, 16, 10. & Jer. xlviii. 33. ^f Gaudium metonymicis pro illis rebus ponitur, ex quibus gaudium capiebatur. ^g Liv. 6. ^h Isaiah liv. 6. ⁱ Mercer on ver. 5. ^k Aben Ezra, Kimchi. ^l Calvin. ^m Drafc.

self to set about a thing is often taken, although " Some think no apposite example of that use of it in this kind can be given. But the most take that way in the first place mentioned as most plain, and some both ancient and modern Interpreters do in their translations express the word sackcloth, as in the Hebrew necessarily left to be understood. So the Syriack, ܠܥܠܝܬܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ

ܠܥܠܝܬܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ sacerdotes accingimini saccis.

The MS. Arab. شذرو المسوح gird about you sackcloths. So Pagnin. accingite vos saccis; and Munster. accingimini saccis, that being in those times the usual habit of mourners and penitents, as in many expressions in the Scripture appears: so that after his exciting them to this, properly follow words exciting to those acts, lament and bowl, as they are likewise joined to it, Jer. iv. 8. where the word שקים Sakkim, which is here only understood, is expressed; all of them called for as being both outward expressions, and signs of inward grief, and withal farther excitements to it, the gestures of the outward man serving to stir up and increase the affections of the heart, by which they are first produced, and conducing to the humbling thereof, without which these outward actions were to no profit. The persons called on to use these expressions of repentance are the priests, or in other words to the same purpose, the ministers of the altar, such who waited at the altar (1 Cor. ix. 13.) and there ministered about holy things, viz. whose duty was there to offer up sacrifice, and perform such services, as by the law were required to be performed to the Lord, who were the priests, whom likewise in the following words he calls the ministers of his God, ye ministers of my God, the God that he, however Others forsake, faithfully served; and his God who " sent him with this message to them, or " my God with whom I will intercede for you. The LXX. here leave out the affix my. The duty of those named was to " offer up sacrifice both for their own sins and the sins of the people, and to intercede for them; they therefore are here called on to lead them the way in the expressions of repentance; they, that the people may take example by them, are to gird themselves, to howl, and lament; and that they might seriously, and not slightly or perfunctorily do it, the next words call farther on them, come lye all night in sackcloth ye ministers of my God: באו Bou, come. This verb seems by Ours, as by Others, to be taken as a particle of " exhortation, to stir them up to the performance of what they are bid in the next word to do. By Others it is properly rendred a verb, come or go in, viz. " to the court of the temple, that there, as in a place proper for it, they may perform it, viz. there lye all night in sackcloth, not so much as there putting it off, or ceasing to mourn, Kimchi, Druf. The awfulness of the place, by reason of God's more peculiar presence there promised to reside, could not but add to the seriousness of their affections, and their long continuing in that mournful habit, would shew that they were indeed seriously and not slightly affected with the sense of their ill deservings.

What great reason there was to them for such intense, and such continued acts and expressions of penitence, as those terms of girding themselves, lamenting and bowing, and lying all night in sackcloth, call for, the next words declare, viz. to be the greatness of the calamities which their sins had brought on them, for the meat-offering and the drink-offering is withholden from the house of your God. Much the same expression have we, ver. 9. only what is here said to be withholden, נמנע Nimna, is there said הכרת Hocrat, is cut off, to the same meaning, both denoting the failing thereof, and an affix in your God, here added, which there is not, otherwise here needs not any thing for explication of the words to be added to what hath been there said. By calling him, their God, he seems to mind them of their nearer relation that he had taken them into to himself, in choosing them out of all the people, to wait on him at his altar, and to see all things belonging to his worship duly performed, and that in so doing they might live of his altar and the things thereon offered. So that the calamity expressed in these words, for the meat-offering and drink-offering is withholden from the house of your God, may be well looked on as in especial manner concerning them, and as a cause of mourning in particular to them, both out of the zeal that they ought to have had to God's service, which was by this means hindred, and in regard to their being together deprived of their own sustenance, from that portion which God had allotted to them for doing him service. How these offerings came to be withholden from the house of their God, is according to the plainest way which we have seen, by reason of the consumption of those fruits from which they were taken, and the great scarcity caused by those devouring creatures before mentioned, of which the words may well be looked on as a farther description. But " Abarbinel in his way, which we have seen, looks upon it as a threat of the destruction of the temple, the house of God, by which all offerings should be together cut off, and cease, which they were to lament, וליה זיה נאמת כי אם נחרב הבית וביטול העבודה, and this (saith he) was not really done, but by the destruction of the house of God, and the necessary ceasing of his service. But, as hath already been mentioned on ver. 9. and is observed by Bochartus, the words seem to note the quite contrary, that what is said was happened or should happen (" the verb of the præter tense being taken as in the signification of the future, was done or was to be) while the house of God, into which these offerings for God's service on his altar were to be

" Tarnov. ° Calv. Tarnov. P Mercer. Tarnov. 9 Heb. vii. 27. into the house of God, scilicet in atrium Templi, ut ibi Deum invocetis, Pisc. Notes on verse 9. See Theodoret.

" Merc. Druf. ° Enter כִּי And so Arias Mont. and Doway be brought, was yet standing; and because, by reason of the great scarcity, and defect of those things as they did consist of, they failed and could not be brought, therefore the priests, whose office was to offer them, having nothing now in that kind of meat-offerings and drink-offerings to offer, are called on to offer up ^w themselves, and to pour out at his altar, as a sacrifice that might be accepted, their own humble souls and broken contrite hearts, ^x in prayer, tears, and supplications, as the only remedy now left them for removing the calamity (of dearth) befallen them, and obtaining again from God a restoring of such plenty as might enable them for offering again such oblations in the house of God, which now by him, provoked by their sins, were cut off and withholden from it. And to this remedy are they called on here to betake themselves, and as in their own private persons (in these words) to perform such duties, and be an example to the flock, so also by their directions and injunctions to work on the whole congregation, to do the like in the next words.

14. Sanctify ye a fast, call a solemn assembly, gather the elders, and all the inhabitants of the land into the house of the Lord your God, and cry unto the Lord.

Sanctify ye a fast, &c.] קדשו צום Kaddeshu Tsom. So the LXX. ἀγιάσατε νηστειαν, the Syriack ܩܕܫܐ ܥܝܡܐ: the printed Arabick, ܩܕܫܐ ܥܝܡܐ Kaddesu Al-saum, the Vulgar Latin, sanctificate jejunium, as several modern Interpreters also, which doubtless is the literal rendring of the words: as to the meaning the Chaldee renders ܢܘܪܐ Gezaru, decree a fast: the MS. Arabick, ܥܪܐ ܥܝܡܐ, prepare a fast, as also Rabbi Tanchum explains it, ܐܥܕܘ ܐܝܡܐ ܠܠܝܒܐܡ prepare (or order) days for fasting, and R. Solomon ܠܘܡܝܢܐ ܥܝܡܐ, and Aben Ezra by another word of the same signification ܠܚܝܬܐ ܥܝܡܐ Prepare a fast, and Kimchi ܠܚܝܬܐ ܥܝܡܐ prepare the people for a fast, and to the same purpose among more modern Interpreters, ^y præparate, prepare, ^z indicate, proclaim, Drusus noting it to be an Hebraism, viz. sanctify, for indicate jejunium, or præparate jejunium, bid a fast, or prepare a fast; which is all one as if he said to the priests, curate ut plebs ad jejunium parata sit, take care that the people be prepared for a fast. So that if in this way the verb be translated, prepare, proclaim, or order a fast, dedicate, or set a-part a day or days for a fast, it is a good translation, justified by the use of the word elsewhere in scripture; but it seems more emphatical to retain the proper notion of sanctify,^w which as it includes the other, so withal seems to require how the people, to whom the fast is enjoined, ought to prepare themselves for it, and order and behave themselves in it, viz. with more than ordinary sanctity and holiness, not thinking it sufficient only to abstain from meat and drink, which is sufficient to denominate a man to fast, but withal to abstain from sin and wickedness, which is required to a holy and religious fast, such as is the duty and sign of an humble penitent, and which only is acceptable to God, and so profitable to them that exercise it, otherwise it will be but such as God will not have regard to, like that which he speaks of with loathing, Isaiah lviii. 5. Is it such a fast that I have chosen? withal declaring how that is which he delighteth in: and Zach. vii. 5. When ye fasted and mourned, did ye at all fast unto me? the fast therefore that the priests were here to proclaim, is a sanctified fast, both by themselves and the people under their charge, by their example, exhortation and instructions to be observed, and therefore he speaks not only to them as of a thing concerning their particular, but bids them call a solemn assembly. The sins were general, the calamity thereby pulled on them general, and they were therefore in general to join in the exercise of repentance, for obtaining pardon, and averting the judgments by those sins pulled on them. Call (saith he) a solemn assembly, in the Margin we have, or day of restraint; so elsewhere, where we have the same word עֲצָרָה Atsarah in the original, our Interpreters put in the Text, as here, a solemn assembly, and in the Margin, as a different, or rather indifferent rendring, day of restraint, as Levit. xxiii. 35. עֲצָרָה הִיא it is a solemn assembly, Text. Margin, day of restraint, shewing the meaning to include both, viz. a day wherein the people restrained from other their ordinary occasions, were retained together in a publick assembly for some extraordinary occasion. The verb עָצַר Atsar, from which this noun cometh, is looked on as chiefly signifying to restrain, to contain, to shut up, to forbid, to retain, to hinder, or to compel, whence may be judged of the interpretations given to the noun, which is as by Ours in the Text, and Margin, as we have seen, so by Others here something differently rendred, though by all perhaps the same thing be meant. The Vulgar Latin render it catum, an assembly, and so is it by several of the Jews expounded, and by the Chaldee Paraphrast rendred כְּנִישָׁא Cenisha, and by the Syriack ܕܢܝܫܐ Cenushyo; so by R. Solom. אֲסִפָּה Asipha, and to the same signification by ^a R. Japhet קְהֵלָה Kebalah, a congregation or company (in which sense it is also taken, Jer. ix. 2. עֲצָרָת בּוֹגְדִים an assembly of treacherous men, ^b so called לְפִי שְׁנַעְצָרִים וּמַחְזִיקִים בַּמָּקוֹם אֲסִפָּתָם because they are detained and stayed in the place where they are gathered together, and in this signification is it by several more modern rendred. Others do otherwise render it, so as not only to denote an assembly of men gathered and remaining together, but withal to intimate the reason or occasion for which they so remain, and the manner of their behaviour there. So the MS. Arabick renders ܢܐܪܘ ܒܐܠܥܬܚܬܐܢܐ Rab. Tanchum, and in much the same words ܢܐܪܘ ܒܐܠܥܬܚܬܐܢܐ proclaim a retention, or staying ing together for devotion, or waiting on God; and agreeably Kimchi on the place, that the people should be restrained, ממלאכתם ויאסרו לתפלה ולבקשה 'from their work, and gathered together for prayer and supplication. Agreeable to these have we in Christian Interpreters ^a proclamate serias, that is, diem cessationis ab opere, proclaim a day of cessation from work, and diem interdicti, which is by our Translators put in the Margin, a day of restraint: all these concur in the same meaning, and concur to make it a solemn assembly, for such performances as the occasion required; whether (as in other places for other holy duties) or (as here) to humble themselves in fasting and repentance, and joint expressions of unfeigned humiliation before God, for averting his heavy judgments from them. The LXX. here, as also in chap. ii. 15. where the same words occur, ambiguously render it κηρύξαι διατριάν, which is anciently translated in Latin, prædicare curationem, proclaim a healing. So Jerome understands their word of a curing their sins by repentance, and so Theodoret. And the Hebrew word עצור may seem capable of that signification of healing, as the root עצר Atsar, may signify to close and bind, vulnera enim constrictione curantur, in as much as wounds are cured by binding up, and so may it be applied also to the cure of the wounds of the soul; and by the signification of binding, is it by the LXX. rendred δω, Jer. xxxiii. 1. But the Greek word διατριάν, hath other ² significations by which Others prefer here to render it, as more agreeable to the place, viz. ^b cultus divinus, worship of God, and likewise, famulatus, ministerium, serving, yielding service, and attending on; in which notion the printed Arabick taking it, renders (in both places) نادوا بالخدمة proclamate ministerium, proclaim service, viz. warn them to come together for serving God. The other Greek Translators, as appears by the fragments of them left, rendred otherwise, as Symmachus, συνόδον, Synodum, an assembly; Aquila, ἡμεραν συλλογῆς, a day of gathering together. Cyril seems to join these notions together, expounding it τὴν τῶν θείων διημερῶν ἐκπλήρωσιν, the fulfilling of such things as God wills; in fine, all appear to mean the same thing, a day of a solemn assembly set apart from all other occasions, for their joining together in fasting, repentance, supplications, and like parts of service and devotion to God: for exciting to which he farther adds, Gather the elders and all the inhabitants of the land, &c. זקנים Zekenim, the elders. The same word have we above, ver. 2. but there differently rendred from what it is here, viz. not the elders, but old men, by which varying of their language it may seem that they think, that it is taken in the one place in something a different meaning from what is in the other; and so it is by Others also thought, though in both places they do use the same word, viz.

VOL. I.

S s s

senes, old men. The mind of several Others we may take in the words of Drusius, Hic senes accipiunt alio sensu quam supra, Here they take the word Old men in another sense than above, nam ibi ætatis erat, hic est officii nomen, for there it denoted age, but here office or dignity, viz. magistrates; or men in place of dignity, men in authority, rulers, counsellors, such by whose prudence, or authority others are ruled. For it is well known that ¹ the word, though primarily signifying men of more years, yet is also used in that other notion; men of riper age being usually most fit for such employments, and chosen for them. Yet are there Others that take the word in the former notion, for such who were stricken in years, to warn that the infirmity of their age should not be a pretence to exempt them from the duty enjoined, they should even lead the way ^k licet tremebundi & suis baculis innixi, though trembling and leaning on their staves, that so, canorum auctoritate juvenes ad pœnitentiam moveant, by the authority (and example) of their grey hairs they might move the younger people to repentance. Jerome seems much so to take the word, viz. for senes quorum ætas vicina morti, maturæque sententiæ, magis timorem & cultum Dei suscipit, old men, whose age near unto death, and more ripe in judgment, makes them more apt for the fear and worship of God: Others giving to the word its greatest latitude, take in both, as well those who were elder than others in age, as those who had from their office and dignity that title of elders, ¹ both of these. Some look on as particularly called to those duties of repentance, old men because their offences were greater; men in place of dignity, because their examples lead others to sin. If either sort be left out in the stricter use of the word in its place, they will be taken in here as obliged to the duty called for, by the following words comprehending them, viz. and all the inhabitants of the land, the conjunction, and, being by Ours (and ^m several Others) supplied, though not in the Hebrew, gives us plainly their mind, that both these are of those that are to be called together, viz. الشيوخ مع كل جلاس الارض the elders (or old men) with all the inhabitants of the land, as the MS. Arabick gives it, and so both nouns governed of the verb, Gather, the nominative, to which then will regularly be the same which to the foregoing verbs, viz. the priests, and so are all Orders of men, by which the Jewish nation was then distinguished, here to join, in making up this solemn assembly, viz. the priests calling it, the elders, the common people, (called the inhabitants of the land, and so by Jeremiah also as distinguished from princes and priests, the people of the land, Jer. i. 18.) called to it. This is a regular construction, and plain meaning of the words, and most generally received, yet they being capable of other constructions also, also, they are by Others given, who look no farther back for a nominative case than to these words themselves, that they may sound, either; O ye elders, gather all the inhabitants, &c. or, O all ye inhabitants of the land, gather the elders into the house of the Lord: the first of these is given by Aben Ezra, Gather אָרְבָּעָה ye, O elders, all the inhabitants of the land of Israel; and this seems Arias Montanus to like: the other is observed as a rendering in some copies of the LXX. συνάγετε πρεσβυτέρους πάντες οἱ κατοικοῦντες τὴν γῆν, Gather together the elders all ye that inhabit the land; and this among the more modern Castalio takes, convocate senes o omnes incolæ, &c. call together the elders, O all ye inhabitants, &c. Against this way Mercer cautions, that the noun is accusativus non vocativus, the accusative not the vocative, seeing it was the duty of the priests, (not of the people) to call others together (for such duties.) The Syriack goes a different way from all these, by taking the verb not in an active but a passive signification אָרְבָּעָה, &c. Be ye gathered together, ye elders, and all the inhabitants of the land; these differences in Others we may observe, but mean while have no reason to scruple at, or leave, our own translation. According to all, or whatever construction it be taken, manifest it is, that here is a summons, or exhortation to all sorts and degrees of men amongst them, to convene and join in a solemn national assembly for deprecating God's wrath, which by their national sins they had provoked, and the averting those calamities in which they were all by that means involved. The place where they are to convene is the temple, called the house of the Lord their God; he himself calleth it his house; and an house of prayer for all people, Isaiah lvi. 7. It was Solomon's ^a prayer at his first dedication of it, that if there should be in the land, famine, pestilence, blasting, mildew, locust, or caterpillar, or if their enemy should besiege them in the land of their cities, whatsoever plague or whatsoever sickness there should be, that then what prayer and supplication soever should be made by any man, or by all the people knowing the plague of their own hearts, and spreading forth their hands towards that house, (or in that house as they render it, 2 Chron. vi. 29.) God would hear in heaven, or from heaven his dwelling place, and forgive and do, &c. and in the ^o next chapter, God tells him that he had heard his prayer, and had hallowed that house, which he had built, and put his name there for ever, and that his eyes and his heart should be there perpetually. Thus then standing the case now with the people of the Jews, in whose land that temple was, great calamity and famine being by Locusts and Caterpillars devouring the fruits of the earth brought on them, (or according to Others by the invasion of enemies) thither are they called on to have recourse, there solemnly to assemble themselves, not contenting themselves with single devotions in their private closets. The occasion did require both their meeting all sorts of them together, by mutual examples to stir up the affections of one another, and their meeting in that place, which could not, being, as it is styled, the house of their God, but strike into their hearts awe and reverence, as suggesting to them that God was there present; and that therefore what they did there they should do, as in his presence, with sincerity, and in such heedful manner as should be approved in his sight; and regarded by him the searcher of their hearts, and overseer of all their intentions. To stir them up to hearken to this exhortation, and encourage them in it, may be observed an ^p emphasis in the pronoun here affixed to the name of God, viz. your God, which seems to give assurance that God will be ready to meet them, and yet to acknowledge them for his, and be there found of them, if they shall in right manner, and with hearts rightly prepared seek him, for which behaviour the next word calls upon them and directs them; and cry unto the Lord, put up with ardent desires and greatest expressions of inward affection, your prayers unto God. To fit them duly for this duty, are the former injunctions of putting on sackcloth, fasting, and assembling in the house of God directed; without this they little avail, for the right ordering of this they conduce, which when by men with truly humble hearts, and joint affections put up to God, are prevalent with him for removing publick calamities. And such prayer doth the word אָרְבָּעָה Zaaku, cry, here call for, though the word otherwise signify the lifting up the voice, yet it is manifest that here (as elsewhere in scripture) it denotes and requires the ardent affection of the heart affecting and moving the tongue and lips for such expression of it in prayer to God: that for which they are to cry to him; is that he would remove from them that heavy judgment in the former verses, as also in what follows, mentioned and described. All this (saith Kimchi) doth the Prophet bid them to do when the Locusts are come upon them, or else that they might by repentance return to God before the coming of them, that so God in his mercy might reverse the decree. They that understand the evil to be from the invasion of enemies, must look on the praying likewise directed against them. To the Lord are they to cry, who being provoked by their sins, had threatened to them or sent on them those judgments, and who alone could remove them. What great reason they had to betake themselves to this remedy, as it is evident from what hath been already spoken by the Prophet, so will farther appear by what he adds concerning the terribleness of those judgments in what follows.

^a So Aben Ezra, that no man should do any work.^f Pet. à Fig.^g Steph. Lex.^h Mercer, Druf.^d *Cast. Druf.*ⁱ Schindl. Lex.^e And so cited by Tertul. and Cyprian.^k Pet. à Fig.^l So Calv. Tarnov.^m Tig. Munst. Jun. Trem.

15. Alas for the day! for the day of the Lord is at hand, and as a destruction from the Almighty shall it come.

The connecting of these words with the former is inserted or supplied by Some at the end

^a 1 Kings viii. 37, &c.

^o Ibid. chap. ix. 3.

^p Oecolamp, Merc. Tarnov.

end of the foregoing verse, or beginning of this, saying, or and say, as follows, viz. אָבָהּ Abah, Alas, &c. so the Syriack Version, ܐܒܗܐ, the MS. Arabick likewise, وقولوا, and say; Kimchi also, אָמְרוּ אָבָהּ, say, Alas, as if it were a form by the Prophet dictated to them, what they should cry or say. So Jerome takes it for the voice sacerdotum & populi ad Deum clamantis, of the priests and people assembled crying unto God; so Some more modern, supplying therefore, dicentes, or dicendo, saying. But Others think that supply not to have place, and that the Prophet speaks here in his own person, in pathetick language lamenting the sad condition of the impenitent people, and describing the terrible-ness of the judgment that he is speaking of: whichsoever of these ways it be taken, the literal meaning of the words will be the same, Abah; the Hebrew word, אָבָהּ abah, appears both by the use of it here and elsewhere to be a particle of exclamation through grief or fear, or both together, הִיא קְרִיאה כָּךְ עַל הַצָּעַר וְעַל הָרָאנָה, It is (saith Kimchi) a crying out so by reason of anguish or solicitude; and therefore is by Interpreters rendred in their several languages in such words, as express such passion, Eheu, Heu, Hui, Hei, Ah, Abah, Oh! The LXX. ὦ μοι, woe me! but it seems, not thinking one single word sufficient to express the greatness of the passion, with which here the speaker seems affected, besides their adding ἐκτενῶς, vehemently, after the preceding word cry, do thrice repeat the particle, ὦ μοι, ὦ μοι, ὦ μοι, as likewise the printed Arabick, الويل لي الويل لي الويل لي, woe is me! woe is me! woe is me! and that perhaps may be the reason why the Vulgar Latin here, as in other places, trebling the letter a, reads, a, a, a, if they be so read distinctly as three letters; so that to pick out thence any other mystery, as Some do, will but lead to vain conjectures: but Some then think all these ought to be read together as one protracted syllable, or that it came by an error in the scribe, who should have wrote aba. The Syriack Translator likewise twice repeats, ܐܒܗܐ ܐܒܗܐ ub, ub, which ub, is a particle, اسْتَعَاثَ إِلَى اللَّهِ of crying out for help to God; and in that sense appears the Author of the MS. Arab. to take the Hebrew to be, rendring الغوث إلى الله من جهة هذا اليوم, I cry to God for help in regard to (or against) this day, and so the Chaldee Paraphrast, though here he renders it ܐܒܐ, vae, yet in some other places renders it as a particle of deprecating or beseeching, ܐܒܐ ܒܥܘܬܝ, Receive my supplication, O Lord God, as Jer. i. 6. and iv. 10. xiv. 13. xxxii. 17. Ezek. iv. 9, 8, 14. xi. 13. xx. 49. (the Greek also, Jos. vii. 7. render it ὦ μοι, I pray) That, by reason of which, or against which this lamentation is made, and he so dolefully crieth out, or implores help from God, is by no other name or indication, than the day, a single day, by what it brings with it known and distinguished from others, viz. by the grievousness and calamitousness of it; Münster therefore in his translation inserts beyond the simple letter of the Hebrew, O calamitatem diei illius! O the calamity of that day, and Mercer, Hei qualis dies! O, what a day is it! In the next words he calls it, the day of the Lord; that great name added to any word by way of epithet, usually betokeneth some great or extraordinary thing denoted by it. Here it seems to denote such a day, or such time as should be signal and notorious for some such extraordinary judgment, as God would execute on the people for their ill deserts. The word day it self, is observed to be sometimes put for judgment, (as by the Apostle man's day is taken to be put for man's judgment, and so by Ours translated, 1 Cor. iv. 3.) viz. because judgment is denounced on a set day appointed for it; so that the meaning will be, the day of the judgment of the Lord. God's judgments may appear by what goeth before, and what we have, ver. 25. to have been in no small measure upon them. So that by this day of the Lord, may seem to be meant a day of greater evils yet threatned to be sent by God upon them, except by speedy repentance averted. By whom these judgments shall be executed upon them, and the coming of which is called, that day, is not expressed, they having been above named, ver. 4. viz. the Palmerworm, Locust, Canker-worm, and Caterpillar, noxious devouring creatures, such as bring a famine to the land with them. Those we saw by diverse literally taken (which seems the plainest way) for such animals: by Others figuratively to denote such enemies as should invade the land, and lay all things waste, as they use to do. Such difference is here likewise betwixt Expositors; by those who literally understand it of these creatures, that day, is here taken for the time wherein God sent or should send them in such multitudes, as had not elsewhere been heard of, to devour the fruits of the earth, and cause an extraordinary grievous famine. So here Drusus expounds it, dies quo locustæ venient, the day of the coming of the Locusts; called the day of the Lord, because therein God did by that means execute his judgment on the Jews, and punish them for their sins. So the learned Bochartus also takes that to be called dies Domini, the day of the Lord, that in which he should sit as a judge, ut in Judæos animadvertat, locustarum agmine in eos immisso, to punish the Jews by sending a multitude of Locusts on them. Others look upon:

^a Jun. Tr. and see Mercer, Oecolamp, &c.

^r Pet. à Fig. Pisc. and see Mercer.

^s Written also sometimes without the letter a at the beginning, אָבָהּ.

^t دبر فخر it is an expression of grief, Abu Walid, هو التخزن.

of fear, saith Aben Ezra.

^u 1. Jun. Tr. 2. Drus. 3. Calv. 4. Mercer, Gualter. 5. Oecol. 6. Pag. 7. Tig.

Münst. ^w Although in some Editions it is not at all mentioned, but only put ἐκτενῶς, which Kircher therefore puts for the signification of the word.

^x Jerom. quia offenderant Trinitatem.

^y Ribera, Modo unicam distinctionem proferamus.

^z Pet. à Fig. Ribera, although it be also so put elsewhere, as Jer. i. viii.

^a Diem mœstum

& calamitosum, lugubrem & miseriarum plenam diem, Ar. Mont. Woe to men in that day, so Pet. à Fig. takes it to import, Væ hominibus in illo die.

^b Drus. Bochart.

^c Lively.

upon it as ambiguous whether really meant of those destructive creatures, or figuratively of enemies compared to them: so Cyril, "He calls that the day of the Lord in which his wrath was to be executed, either by Locusts sent on them, which should devour the fruits of the earth, and put them in fear of famine, yea of death it self, or else by the Babylonians, who should lay all things waste among them, &c." ^d Some take both in, as if the one were a forerunner of the other, as if the Prophet did here declare the decree of God, de venturis Locustis & Chaldeis omnia vastaturis, concerning the Locusts that should come, and the Chaldeans that should utterly destroy all things. But Others, without respect to Locusts, and those other creatures properly meant, understand it of the enemies, the Chaldeans, only: and for this way Abarbinel is positive; and therefore by the day of the Lord would have to be pointed out the ninth day of the month, Ab, (a month, as he observes signally fatal to the Jews) on which the temple was destroyed, and so is to them a perpetual day of sorrow and lamentation, and crying out to God in memory thereof. But I see no reason why we should forsake the first plain exposition: according to that, though they had already suffered evil things before spoken of, yet there appears yet a more grievous famine to be expected by them, if not by speedy repentance prevented. That this pathetick exclamation is to awaken them, and excite them to such repentance, is manifest; and that it might have due impressions on them for that end, here are two reasons given; first, from the nearness of the day; secondly, from the terror and unavoidableness of it by any other means. First, for the day of the Lord is at hand, suddenly like to come, speed therefore must be made in using such means as shall prevent it; no time for delay in this case, for when it is come, there will be no avoiding, no resisting it; for as destruction from the Almighty will it come, with irresistible force; prevented it may be by speedy repentance before it come, but when it is come not possibly be resisted by any strength of man, being from the Almighty. The very same expression have we, Isaiah xiii. 6. Howl ye, for the day of the Lord is at hand, it shall come as a destruction from the Almighty. The words here in the Hebrew are, וכשר משרי יבוא Uceshod misbaddai yabo, to which I look on our English Translation exactly agreeing; but it will not be amiss to see what Others also say concerning the words, and the exposition of them, or any part of them. As to the particle ce, in Uceshod, which is translated, as, the Author of the MS. Arab. Version (though he himself render it مثل as, leaving out the conjunction u, before it, yet notes that it is by Others said to be زائدة ^e redundant, and the meaning to be only שר shod, destruction shall come from Shaddai; and the Syriack Version omits it, rendring it, and spoiling shall come from God. Abarbinel though not looking on it as redundant, yet thinks it not to be taken as Others take it, for a particle of comparison or likeness, but a particle denoting ^f time (כף הזמן) as it is sometimes used, and so that the words should sound, for the day of the Lord is at hand, to take his vengeance; and when destruction shall be from the Almighty, it shall come in that day, as a day set and appointed for evil to them. This way he seems to take as agreeable to his expounding that day, particularly of the ninth day of Ab, which we mentioned: but it will not so well agree with that way which we with Others take, according to which that particle, as, will not want its due emphasis, importing that these evils in that day to come were not by chance, nor things of ordinary course, nor from any ordinary power, which could not be resisted; but such heavy things as were decreed to be inflicted, and should be suddenly, when they expected not, be inflicted on them by an irresistible power, against which they should not be able to stand out, as such things which are determined and executed by God use to be.

As for the words שר shod, destruction, and שרי Shaddai, the Almighty, there is that allusion and agreement in letters between them, as may argue between them affinity in the root, though difference in the signification. The word שר shod, is from the root שרר shadad, to destroy, and properly signifies as it is rendred, destruction. The word שרי Shaddai, by which God is here called, being from the same root, may seem properly also to signify a destroyer. And therefore though by several of the Jews, as Abu Walid, Aben Ezra, and Kimchi, as it is a name of God whereby he called himself (Gen. xvii. 1. Exod. vi. 3.) and is called in Scripture, it be referred to this root as regularly deduced from it, yet doth ^h Abarbinel except against this derivation of it from a word, which seems to import violence and injuriousness, and doing hurt, or oppressing, which cannot be attributed to God. How should the Scripture call or describe the glorious God, כתואר מנונה אשר כור ⁱ by an epithet, or name of so ill a signification as this? Nor doth it satisfy him that by Others it is from the same root rendred מנצח Menatseach, viator, or conqueror, God not waging war with any creature, nor any creature with him; the attributes of, potent, ruler, guide, governor, are attributes more convenient to be appropriated to him, and not either shoded or Menatseach, and therefore he prefers to have some other derivation assigned for the word in this use, and in that kind he seems to like of the opinion of R. Saadiab ^j who would have the word to import מי שאמר לעולם די ^k he that said to the world, enough, or sufficient; which though Aben Ezra seems to say he understands not the meaning

of

^d Pet. à Fig. ^e As here, so more at large on Jer. ii. 24. and Hosea v. 7. whence he reckons up several evil things that happened to them on that day. ^f As he takes it to be ימים ^g Jos. vii. 5. in ימים. ^h And so Ar. Montanus. ⁱ On Exod. vi. 3. and see Buxtorf de nomin. Dei. ^j Which is also said by Some before him in the Talmud. Buxt.

of, yet he looks on, as denoting that he at his good will and pleasure, by which, and not by any necessity, he created all things, set bounds and measures to them, which they should neither exceed, nor come short of, saying, when they came to that proportion, It is enough (here stop, go no farther.) He also approves of what Others say that it signifies, which is sufficient, viz. Allsufficient to and in himself, having his being of himself, and never receiving it from any other, as he with Some interprets it, or as Others, he that is sufficient for performing all things, or, who hath^k in him what is sufficient for all creatures, or is sufficient for supplying all their defects. This derivation from, י, sufficient, with the letter shin added to it, Maimonides seems to prefer (Moreh, p. 1. chap. 63.) The same appears the Author of the MS. Arabick to take, rendring מתל' אלנארה מן אלנארי, as spoil from the sufficient, or allsufficient; others he thinks not so convenient, it seems, to mention, though from Others we meet with them, as namely, that this name should be derived from שר shad, a breast or dug (and שרים shadaim, the dugs,) as if he did from his plenty, as it were from breasts and dugs, fill with good and nourish all things; again from Others that it is from שרה Shada, (in Chaldee answerable to אשר Ashad in Hebrew) to pour forth; as if it denoted the plentiful effusion of good on all his creatures, and supplying them with all things necessary for them. But sure among all these (though for meaning they are good, and much concur in one) there seems none so regular as the first mentioned referring it to שרד Shadad, and therefore we see that it is by several of as good authority as any among the Jews to it referred, and Abarbinel's exceptions against it seem not to go on any good grounds; they are (as we said) founded on this, that that root imports and implies only destructive violence, and something of injuriousness, and that the word would signify if thence taken גולן מעול וחומץ, a robber, perverse or injurious, an oppressor; things not fit to be spoken of God. But he is singular in his opinion of restraining the word to this harsh signification, going therein contrary to the authority of several Others who refer it to this root, and to the reason by which they are led. They take it to found, عزيز جليل, potent, great, תקיף מנצח, potent, conquering, overruling, (not as if this word, as he also would have it, did signify only a conqueror in battle, but one who overrules and keeps under,) and מתגבר Mithgabber, prevalent, אלקדאר predominant, (as one of them renders it) in Arabick. Their reason for so rendring it seems to be taken from the use of it in the Arabick Tongue, in which that root شدد Shaddab hath the notion of being strong, firm, (not of wasting or destroying, as in He- brew it hath) whence اشد Ashaddo, signifies the strength, or strongest part of a man's age, and شديد Sbadid (answering to שדי in Hebrew) strong, firm, which I find also put among the attributes of God by an ^p Eastern Writer; and in Syriack rendred by ܐܠܫܕܐ; and in ^a Arabick made synonymous to عزيز powerful. Hence have we grounds to think that heretofore, when the Hebrew Tongue was in common use in its latitude, שרד was used not only in the notion of wasting and destroying, but of being strong, firm, potent, as now in the Arabick it is; yea that that might be the primary notion, viz. of having power, and strength in general, which strength the being able to destroy seems also to require, and so came to be used in that notion, though it were not only to be limited to it, and may therefore, when attributed to God, so be understood as to denote in him all power, such whereby he was able to make all things, and is also able to destroy them. And if it be spoken of any other but God, then will it also denote some in whom is great and not easily resistible power. This I mention because there are some who looking on this as the signification of this word, viz. רוק strong, and powerful, or mighty, do not yet take it to be restrained, as Ours and most Others do, to the Almighty, to God, but to be an epithet, that may be attributed to any other of great power. So one of great note among the Jews cited both by Aben Ezra and Kimchi by the name of חנניד Hannagid (Prince) saith that במקום הזה אינו שם הנכבד in this place it is not the name of the glorious God, but תואר an adjective common to others also, and so denotes an irresistible destruction brought on them by some of great power, from which is no escaping: and of this Aben Ezra saith that יפרה אמר he speaks well in it: among the Latins also Ruffinus so takes it, explaining it of such a destruction, quam potentissimus quisque ultor inveheret, as any the most powerful taker of vengeance could bring on them. But whatever good meaning this way may give, the most emphatical seems that which is given by taking the word to be as Ours and most Others take it, an attribute or name of God, denoting his almightiness, and irresistible power, and so giving to look on destruction by him sent or brought on them, as such as will certainly have its effect, and cannot be possibly resisted or escaped. To avoid all ambiguity in the word whereby it might seem spoken of any other, the Chaldee couples with it the name יהוה (Jehovah) and the Syriack renders it simply by the name of God, ܐܠܗܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ ܕܡܪܝܚܐ and spoiling shall come from God. All these that we have yet had to deal with manifestly read it שרי Shaddai, but the LXX. give such an interpretation as makes some think that they did not so read, rendring, ὡς τὰ λαίπρωγα

VOL. I.

T t t

^k R. Sol. Gen. xvii. 1. ^l I suppose it ought to be אלנרה as it is in him, Isaiah xiii. 6. for as here written it signifies a spoiler. ^m Abu Walid. ⁿ Aben Ezra, Exod. vi. 3. and Kimchi in Radic. ^o So R. Samuel cited by Ab. Ezra. ^p Glossary Arab. and Syriack MS. and printed. ^q In the printed copy. ^r See in Tarnov. out of Mahana, vastitas à potente non ab omnipotente, quia non loquitur de Deo, sed viro potenti, cujus vastationi nemo resistit, which he lastly rejects.

ἐκ ταλαιπωρίας ἡζεί, shall come as misery from misery, (as the printed Arabick also following them, كمثل شقوة من شقوة بائي) which makes Capellus conjecture that they read in the second place also not as others שדי Shaddai, but only שד Shod, as in the first word, without the letter yod, and so took both in the same signification. But it is observable that whereas the same words do occur in the Hebrew, Isaiah xiii. 6. Ceshod Misbaddai Yabo, they do there render them in a very different manner, and more consonant to others, καὶ συνλεῖβῃ παρὰ τοῦ θεοῦ ἡζεί (as likewise والانكسار بائي من قبل الله) and contrition shall come from God, which seems an argument that these two books, or prophecies were not translated by the same persons. Whatever the occasion was that moved them to do as they did, we need not be solicitous, having the true reading by all others agreed on.

16. Is not the meat cut off before our eyes, yea, joy and gladness from the house of our God?

Having told them that the day of the Lord was at hand, and threatned them with the terror of it, that they might not yet through their stupidity and senselessness put it far from them, and defer their repentance, the only means by which it, and the farther ill consequences thereof, might be removed; he proceeds to set the plague as already begun before them, and to describe the nature and condition thereof to be such, as already ought seriously to affect them, and threatned yet worse things to come. Let them but open their eyes and they cannot but perceive it. How is it already with them? Is not the meat cut off before our eyes? yea, &c. The words so put interrogatively do more earnestly and evidently affirm and assure the truth of the thing spoken, so that we cannot but look on the particle הלא halo, nunquid, non, or nonne, or an non? what is not? as having its due emphasis: yet is it by the LXX. here left out, and the words simply rendred as affirmative: κατέναντι τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν ὑμῶν βρώματα ἐξωλοθρεύθη, before your eyes meats are perished, and so by the Author of the printed Arabick Version, to the loss of that emphasis. In the Syriack that that may not be, but the force of it shewed, it is changed into a demonstrative, ܐܝܢ ܗܘܐ, behold before your eyes meats are ceased. There seem, according as the words are by Ours distinguished, two things here affirmed; their being deprived of that ordinary food that they should live upon in their own houses, and of such things as they should offer up to God in his house; both which the earth with its fruits was wont to supply them with, and of which one depended upon the other, the latter on the former. For distinguishing these two, in our Translation the particle, yea, is supplied, being not mentioned in the Hebrew, which makes Some so to render as if by both expressions were meant but the same thing, viz. by meat in the first place no other than the offerings, expressed by joy and gladness of God's house, with which they were accompanied in the second. So the MS. Arabick, أليس على أعيننا أنقطع ألقربن من بيت ألهنا مع ألقربن وألقرب Is not before our eyes cut off the offering from the house of our God, with joy and gladness? and that his meaning may be understood he inserts a note, that he calls the offering أكل Ocel, meat, because it is ماأكل أنأكل that which is eaten (or devoured) of the fire. To much the same purpose are the words of the Vulgar Latin, nunquid non coram oculis vestris alimenta perierunt de domo Dei nostri, letitia & exultatio? (which the Doway Translation renders; why, are not the vittuals perished before your eyes, joy and exultation out of the house of our God?) by several Expositors interpreted, while by vittuals, &c. they understand those sacrifices brought to the house of the Lord, from which the priests had their maintenance, from which was wont to be mutual joy, tam offerentium quam sacerdotum, both of those that brought them, and of the priests; yet are they by Others so understood, as of different things, viz. meat, more generally of all things quæ ad vittum necessaria fuerunt, which were necessary for their food and sustenance, and by the other words, joy and gladness, quæ ad lætitiā & festorum celebritatem, those which pertained to mirth and the celebrity of their festivals. So that " as one expresseth the same meaning, it is by the words declared, that God had apparently cut off from them not only those things, ex quibus vivamus, by which we (the Prophet taking in his own person with them) may live, but also quæ sibi à nobis offerri jussit ex terræ fructibus, ut cum eo letaremur, those things which he commanded by us to be brought to him of the fruits of the earth, that we might rejoice with him. To the same purpose doth Cyril make the Greek of the LXX. to sound, viz. that by the first, (viz. the meat) are to be understood the fruits of the earth now ripe, the corn now calling for the reaper, and the grapes fully ripe for the treader, which now before their eyes, and seeming to be at hand for their enjoyment, being by sudden invasion of the Locusts devoured, he saith their meat was cut off from before their eyes, taken as it were out of their mouths, when they were just ready, when they were ready to eat it: and then by joy and gladness, which he saith were cut off out of the house of their God, those offerings (or sacrifices) which they offered with rejoicing, out of the great plenty which their fields afforded, as χαριστήρια, offerings of thanksgiving to him, for his bounty to them. So among the Jews, David Kimchi in very like manner distinguisheth the words, and explains them as that by the first clause, Is not the meat cut off before our eyes? - is meant, that when the fruits of the earth appeared now ripe, the Locusts came up before their eyes, and cut them off, and by the second, that after the meat was cut off, joy and glad-gladness were also cut off from the house of their God, because they brought their offerings, according to what was appointed, at the time of harvest, and then rejoiced, great being the joy of harvest, according to what is said, according to the joy in harvest, Isaiah ix. 3. Aben Ezra, for distinguishing the clauses or members of this verse, looks upon the words הלא נכרת is not there cut off, as to belong to both the former and the latter words, and to be before them repeated, Is not joy and gladness cut off from the house of our God? In which way ^w some Others also follow him, and it appears to have been the meaning of the Chaldee Paraphrast, who therefore gives two words of the like signification, one concluding the first clause, the other beginning the second, rendring the first הלא עוד דאנחנו סף bath not, even we seeing, the corn failed, and the second פסק מבית מקדשנו דאלהנא חרוא וביע Is not (for that is necessarily understood) ceased from the sanctuary of our God, joy and gladness? R. Tanchum seems to doubt how the words must be distinguished, and which of the two ways is to be taken; something he supposeth necessarily to be understood and supplied, and that to be the conjunction, and, but then looks on it as ambiguous to what word that should be joined, whether שמחה joy, so as that the words should sound, Is not the meat cut off before our eyes from the house of our God, and joy and gladness? (which way the Syriack takes, rendring, and behold before our eyes are ceased meats from the house of our God, סמסל סמסל and joy and exultation?) or else with the word בית אלהינו the house of our God, so as to sound, Is not the meat cut off before your eyes; and from the house of our God joy and gladness? which is that which our English follow, and more exactly the Geneva, which hath not, yea, but, and joy and gladness from the house of our God. The difference betwixt these is, that in the one by meat, is understood peculiarly such offerings as were brought with rejoicing to the temple, but in the other by meat, more generally what they all of them had any where to live on: and then by joy and gladness, such things distinctly as were brought into the temple for offerings to God, and served for the maintenance of the priests: which of these ways be taken it will be much to the same purpose, as to the meaning of the words, which are a necessary declaration of great scarcity. If the fruits of the earth had not failed, neither would they have failed of provisions for themselves, neither would have ceased that joy, with which those offerings by God required to be brought to his temple were to be eaten, according to his command, Deut. xii. 7. and xvi. 11. both of these failings are from the same cause, and one infers the other, the ceasing of that joy, a failing of that from which it should have arose. So that this expression may we look on as agreeing with what is said above, ver. 9, &c. The meat-

* Sa, Menoch, Tirin.

† Ar. Mont.

‡ Tarnov.

offering and the drink-offering is cut off from the house of the Lord; ver. 7. withholden from the house of the Lord, of your God, ver. 13. Aben Ezra looks on it as more particularly denoting the defect of wine, which is said to cheer (or make glad) both God and man, Jud. ix. 13. But that expression seems no proof why this here should be understood only of such joy as proceeds only from the wine-offerings, as we before saw from Kimchi (especially those at harvest) being such as were to be accompanied with joy, and God himself accepting of them might be said to ^x delight in them, as things of a sweet ^y savour to him, according to the usual expression of Scripture. By what means these things, both the meat, and the joy and gladness mentioned, are (or ^z shall be farther) cut off, is not by all agreed: the same difference which we before observed is between them: ^a many think this to be done by the enemy, and the destruction by them brought on the land. ^b Others by the Locusts and such other noxious creatures before named. ^c Some look upon the matter so doubtful as to say, dum Locusta vel hostis, while either the Locust or the enemy, bereaves us of those fruits of which we hoped even now to have received a plentiful crop; and ^d there is who ascribes it to the Locusts, as the plainest, of which ^e One takes these words to be probable proof, hic locus facere videtur pro illis qui veras locustas venisse intelligunt; this place seems to make for them who understand what is said of the coming of true (or real) Locusts upon them. And the learned Bochartus argues from it against Abarbinel, who looks on the calamities described as brought upon them by, or after the destruction of the temple by the Chaldees, to prove that it manifestly describes such evils as befel them while the temple was yet standing, to which they had not now their wonted offerings to carry, being by the Locusts deprived of them, to which that it will be agreeable to add the unseasonable drought of the weather, the next words make manifest.

17. The seed (or as in the Margin, grains) is (or are) rotten under their clods, the garners are laid desolate, the barns are broken down; for the corn is withered.

According to this rendring, which I suppose to be the most convenient of any given, and shall after endeavour to shew, this which is said, is an heightning in the description of the calamity that he speaks of, in that not only such fruits of the earth which were already grown up, and they had hoped to enjoy, were, as it were, taken out of their mouths for the present, but that there ^f was no appearance or expectation of any better condition for the future: that seed which should have grown up to them into an harvest for the next year, being grown rotten and withered under the clods in the earth, and nothing likely to spring from it: so that by reason of what they already

^w Tigur. Pet. à Fig. ^x Mercer. ^y Levit. xxiii. 13. ^z So Some take it in the future tense. ^a Abarb. Ar. Mont. Ribeta. ^b Jerome, Cyril, Kimchi. ^c Mercer. ^d Sanct. ^e Pet. à Fig. ^f Ar. Mont. Pet. à Fig.

(as we said) rendred, are scorched, or parched, it will be reducible to that which Abu Walid looks on as proper to it, To be dried, which signification also the forementioned عيس Abesa in Arabick hath. Of these rendrings of this word, and the meaning given it by these Interpreters, we shall the better judge, by seeing how they understand the next word with which this is joined in construction, which is פרדות Perudoth, by Ours rendred, the seed, in which rendring they agree with the most, both of the Jews and modern Christian Interpreters, who look on the words as so signifying, and seem to have reason so to do both from the significations of the root in the Hebrew, and such dialects as much agree with it, and from such forms as are therein derived from it. The root פרד Parad, having both in Hebrew, Chaldee and Arabick, the notion of separating, or being separate, may well have derived from it such nouns as may signify that which is single and separate, or divided from others, as grains of corn, and seed sown and scattered in the earth, and so may this noun therefore in Hebrew here be well thought so to signify, though of form single, not elsewhere ^a as a noun substantive used in Scripture, there being no occasion for it, as well as פירא Pheredio in the Syriack, which is of known use in that signification, (in the version of the New Testament), viz. of grain or seed, and in its plural, grains, or seeds, and therefore so seems it here with good reason rendred, as by some of the Jews explained גרני החטה והשעורה the grains of wheat and barley, or גרני הורע, Etc. ^a of seeds which are sown, separated, scattered under ground; and as Abu Walid in Arabick الحبوب المبدورة or المبدورات grains scattered for sowing, and R. Tanchum, الحبوب المعدودة للزراعة لانها تغرق في الارض grains prepared for sowing, so called because they are scattered in the ground. The Author of the MS. Arabick gives it the same signification, and looks on it as derived from the same root, rendring it المتفرقات Almotapharredatu (literally signifying separated) in a note explaining himself to mean, קמח אלבראר אלרי feed wheat, which is separated wheat, in which are no tares mixed, לאן כאן רסב אלנאס יברו אלנל מן אלקמח because the custom of men is to sow the chief (or choicest) of wheat. Abarbinel also looks on it as so called from the same signification of that root, though for a different reason, viz. not because separate and distinct one from another, or from being mixed with tares, but because separated (or hidden) from the sight of men, as seed in its holes under the ground is. In all these we have the same signification, and the same root of the noun, though with some difference in giving the reason of the derivation of it; and the notion seems so probable and proper, that the modern Christian Interpreters generally take it, rendring, semina, grana, sata, semina dispersa, grana seminum. But for those other rendrings by those ancient Interpreters which we have named, there is not that probable reason found, why the Chaldee Paraphrast should render the word by גרבי חמר wine vessels, I find no reason assigned but his bare authority; how the word might in his time be used, I know not. As for the Greek δαμαλεις (and the like may be said of the Syriack and Arabick following them) beifers: that that cannot be a signification of the word פרדות Perudoth seems acknowledged; and therefore do several conjecture that they read it otherwise, viz. פרות (without the letter ד, d,) Paroth, which doth so signify. The same may be for the same reason ^a said of the Vulgar Latin rendring it, jumenta, beasts, but is by ^a Some thought to have read the words, though with all the same letters, yet with other vowels; as if the Author thereof took it to be the plural number, from פרדה Pirdah the feminine gender of פרד Perid a Mule; and one sort of beast named to comprehend all the rest of the like nature, beasts or cattle in general. But this way of flying to conjectures of different readings is very uncertain: it must be proved that they did read so, and some reason why they should read so, when that reading from which they vary will give as good or better meaning as, or than that which they substitute, as here it doth.

Concerning the third word which is here used, and not elsewhere in Scripture, there is no less difference betwixt Interpreters, and Expositors, it is מגרפתיהם Megrephotehem, rendred to us, their clods. In rendring of this have Ours also going before them, both the Jewish, and most of the modern Expositors, which as to the most part, do though something in their expressions, yet not in their meaning, seem much (if at all) to differ, between themselves. ^a Abu Walid whom we look on as among the ancients of the Jewish Grammarians which we have, renders it خطوطها Catuteha, the lines thereof, and explains it اي الخطوط التي يخطها الزارع بالسكة بعد البذر which the plow draweth with his plowshare after ^a the corn is sowed, which, faith he, are as خدوش في الارض scratches in the ground. And so ^a again in another place to the same purpose, saying that they are so called تشبيها بالخدوش والجوش for their likeness to scratchings or wounds made in the skin by ones nails, which are breakings of the skin. The same words almost hath ^a R. Tanchum, viz. that תחת חתת חרשיהם tachath megrephotehem is תחת חתת חרשיהם under its scratches, i. e. תחת الخطوط التي يحفرها الحراث التي كانها كسور the lines which the plow diggeth, which are as it were breaches in the earth, (which also are elsewhere (Psalms lxx. 10.) for much like reason called גדודים Gedudim, in-cisions,

U u u

^a As a participle it is used, Ezek. i. 10. ^a And פרד in the Rabbins. ^p Ab. Ezra. ^q Kimchi, Rad. and Notes. ^r Tigur. ^s Munst. ^t Merc. Capel. ^u Grotius. ^v Ribera, Chr. à Castr. ^w In the root גרף. ^x Which will be sowing under furrow, except he mean a harrow. ^y In the root פרד. ^z Who in his Dictionary renders the words عفن الحب المبدور تحت خيب التراب المتراكم the seed is grown musty (or putrefied) under the rows of earth, heaped up together.

the grains are dried up, אלתשניע ואלתעטיס לאמר אלקחט אלדי נאלהם התי יבשה אלחבוב חחרת אלארץ אר לא יגול עליהא מטר פלם תנבת is to set forth the foulness and greatness of the matter of the famine which seized on them, so as that the seeds were dried up under the ground, by reason that no rain descended thereon, and so they could not spring up. R. Tanchum also saith that this happened through extremity of drought, and this, saith he, sheweth אלהא עם האמطار that together with the Locusts there was defect of rain, which also appears by what is said in what follows, (ver. 20.) כי יבשו אפיקי מים for the rivers of water are dried up. This expression (together with that, ver. 19. the fire hath devoured the pastures of the wilderness, the flame hath burnt up all the trees of the field, and that which follows, ver. 20. and the fire hath devoured the pastures of the wilderness) doth the forementioned learned man Bocharius, bring as an argument for proof, that it is extreme drought, and not excess of wet that is here intimated. For proof of the same he argues likewise, from that this calamity is joined to the destruction brought on the fruits of the earth by the Locusts, and other noxious animals mentioned before, because those creatures do most abound when there is much heat and drought, not in times of wet and rain, which are destructive to them, as he proves out of such Authors as write of the nature of them, and in this way (as he observes) the seed will be said, not so much putrescere, to putrefy and rot, which will be from superfluous moisture, as vanescere, to vanish away, to come to nought, which will be when it is withered and shrunk up for want of moisture, which we saw to be the notion by Abu Walid forementioned assigned to the word עבש Abash, viz. of being dried up. This tedious insisting on the words have we been forced to, by reason of the very great difference betwixt Interpreters in the rendring of them. As for the following words, which are a farther description of the calamity befallen them, we shall find them though not at so great distance, yet not altogether to agree. They are, as by Ours translated, The garners are laid desolate, the barns are broken down. The garners אצרות Otzbroth, which signifies both things laid up for use, and the repositories or places, in which they are laid up, Treasures or Treasuries, as Thesaurus in Latin, and θησαυροι in Greek, by which this is by Some translated. R. Solomon adding של יין ושמן of wine and oil, doth not express whether he mean the store of those things, or the store-houses; but I suppose he means the latter. Kimchi more plainly expresseth himself so to do, while he explains it, the treasures of the fruits of the earth are desolate (laid waste, or forsaken) because there is nothing to be carried into them, and so they be or lye waste. And so is it manifest that for the most part, modern Interpreters take it, their words, though different, tending to the same thing, as borrea, thesauri, cellæ, thecæ, apothecæ, reconditoria, granaria; all taking it for repositories, in which things are laid up, or stored; though some more generally, of any sort of things, others more peculiarly, of grain or corn, as Ours do, in rendring garners, as indeed the place seems here to require it to be understood, that being both in the words foregoing and following particularly spoken of. But the Tigurin Version, differently from them, understands it of the things laid up, rendring, vastata sunt quæ reposita fuerunt, which with the preceding words added, which according to it are, computruerunt semina dispersa subter glebas suas, will sound, The seeds that were dispersed (or sown) are putrefied under their clods, those which were laid up or wasted (or destroyed.) Both these will concur in one meaning, to shew their being deprived of that ordinary plenty of corn which they were wont to enjoy, and had need of repositories to put it up in. If there be no corn, no need of garners, if the garners be laid desolate, and let fall, it is a sign there is no corn to be laid up, and taken care of. But I think it more agreeable to the place here, and with the following words, that it be understood of the garners, or repositories, wherein those things spoken of were wont to be laid up, than of the things; and so I suppose it taken also by those ancient Interpreters the Chaldee and the Syriack, which use words from the same root, and of the same signification with the Hebrew אוצריא Otsraya, translated cellaria, or as Mercer, Apothecæ and אוצר Autzre, borrea, and so by the Greek θησαυροι, treasuries, as we before intimated, and again repeat, that we observe that in some copies instead of it is read by a manifest error ταυροι, bulls, perhaps because δαμάλας, heifers went before in that translation.

Much to the same purpose with these are the next following words, insomuch that Kimchi saith that in them כפל הענין, he doubles the sense (i. e. repeats the same thing, though in different words) inasmuch as ממגורות Memmeguroth is the same signification with אצרות Otsbroth, both signifying repositories. R. Solomon seems to make this difference here, by Otsbroth, are meant such in which wine or oil are stored up, by Memeguroth, such in which wheat or corn is put. Others seem to take it otherwise, as that by the first should be signified a receptacle of corn and like necessary provisions, by the latter such in which wine also is laid up. So seem the LXX. to take it, having rendred the first by θησαυροι treasures, the latter by λαιοι wine presses; as likewise the Syriack, who render the first by אוצר barns, this latter by מאצר Maatzrotho, wine presses (as the printed Arabick also by معاصر Maafer.) All that we may gather from the difference between them, is that the words seem (as Kimchi observes) both of them, indefinitely to signify any repository, or place, in which things for necessary use, whether corn, wine, or the like,

are

¹ Pliny, Aristot. as also out of Tertullian, &c. and Drus. ² See Ribera, and Pet. à Fig.

³ Pagn.

⁴ Basil. in fol. 1597. and see Kimchi Concord.

are brought together and laid up. As for this latter word which we are speaking of, ממגורות Memguroth (which is from the root גור gur, in that signification wherein it signifies to gather together) Aben Ezra saith of it that it is מלה ורה a word of a strange or unusual form, viz. because of the letter מ, m, doubled at the beginning of it, whereas one single m would have been more regular; and that it should have been מגורות Meguroth, and so the plural number of מגורה Megurah, which occurs, Hagg. ii. 19. and there signifies a barn: So saith R. Tanchum, חת צעד אנ בكون מגורות fradua al alim al malka mima akhri nshart memguroth Its plural number ought to have been Meguroth, but by adding of another m, to that m which forms the noun, it is made Mammeguroth. By adding of that according to him, and most of the other Jewish Expositors, and Christians also generally, is there nothing altered, either in the signification or construction, from what it would have been in that more regular and simple form. Only Kimchi observes, that his father thought otherwise, viz. that the first מ, m, was not essential to the word, but as a ministerial particle, or preposition prefixed to it, signifying, of, that so the sense should be, of the barns (some) are broken down, though that letter m, hath not that vowel which in such cases it usually hath, viz. the vowel, i, but a. Abarbinel also is of that opinion that the first letter is a particle prefixed, and in the signification of מן min, from or by reason of, and then gives another signification to the noun, viz. of fear, and would have it then with alteration of the order in construction, to sound, that the garners were desolate, and broken down, by reason of fear, viz. of the enemy, in as much as through fear of him there was neither sowing nor reaping. But the first way mentioned seems, as of the simplest in construction, so of the plainest meaning, and is as by the most, so by Ours, with good reason taken. As for the verb נהרסו Nebersu, rendred, are broken down: of the signification of it there is no question, it importing ruin and destruction. Yet doth Kimchi mollify the expression by saying it may be understood, נהרסו, כאלו, are as if they were broken down, or ruined, because there is nothing brought into them: but adding, that if it be properly taken, that they were actually destroyed, or ruined, that it was so because there was none that would take care of them, or repair them from year to year according to their usual custom, as having no use of them, and so they fell down and perished. For what reason they were so neglected and suffered to fall, is expressed in the next words; For the corn is withered. This added to what he before said, that the seed was rotten (or withered) under the clods, if it be not a repetition of the same in other words, seems to import, quod supererat ex illa semente, All that was left or remained of that seed not quite marred, (or came from it) that was also withered above ground, so that none came to perfection, and so there was nothing left to put into the barns, and so no need or use of them, that they should take care of keeping them up (which makes also for them who render the foregoing word, barns, as proper for corn, against them that take it for cellars of wine.)

The verb הביש bobish, rendred by Ours withered, we have had before occasion to speak of more than once, as on ver. 10, 11, 12. and observe it to be differently used and rendred; in the notion of two different roots, viz. of יבש Yabash, to be dry, or dried, and of בוש Bosh, to be ashamed, or confounded, as the place where it occurs seems to require. Both are here attributed to it, the one by some, the other by others. The first is embraced, as by Ours, so by many others ancient and modern, so the LXX. renders it, ὁ σῖτος ἐξηρανώθη σῖτος, because the wheat is withered. So the Syriack, ܘܒܝܫ ܘܬܝܪܐ ܕܬܝܪܐ ܕܬܝܪܐ Vibesh oburo, and the corn is dried up, (or withered.) The printed Arabick also, لان القمح جف because, &c. Among modern Interpreters also many render it by aruit, or exaruit, e secuto, saith Diodati, is dried up, in one edition, or as in another edition, e periro per la siccita, is perished through drought. But Others again take it in the other signification of being confounded, or ashamed. So the Vulgar Latin, quia confusum est triticum, because the wheat is confounded, which Others also more modern follow, using either the same word, or such other as is equivalent to it, quod pudefactum sit, because the wheat is made ashamed, and it is that which among the learned Jews Some also take. So the MS. Arabick Version خزي الدجن the corn is confounded, or ashamed, or put to shame. So R. Tanchum excepting against the taking it here in the other signification of being dried, or withered, because (saith he) لا معني لبس البر مع ري الجراد له There is no convenient meaning in saying the corn is withered, with what was shewed that the Locusts had eaten it. But this exception of his I suppose is of no necessity, if the words be taken, as above we said they may, for repeating of the foregoing words, shewing what befel the corn in the ground under the clods, or if it be understood, as we shewed by Some it is, for what did remain of the corn not devoured by the Locusts, as it is probable some might, though they made great destruction. As for the meaning of the word in his way, he taketh it not in its proper signification of confusion and shame, which cannot properly agree to corn, but in a figurative way, لعدم والانتطاع for defect, or failing, or being cut off, or taken away, which notion the Chaldee Paraphrast takes it in, expressing it by דפק, defecit, hath failed; and so as One for making the reason of so using the word, and the meaning, plainer, ex-

^p Grotius compares with it Meguria, by which the Phœnicians called their Cottages and country Villages.
^a Jun. Trem. ^r Pagn. ^s Munster. ^t 4to, 1607. Gen. ^u Munst. ^v Tig. Castalio, quippe scdata frumenta, seem all agreeable. ^x He seems to retain the Hebrew name, which I think is not of known use in Arabick in that signification. ^y Pet. à Fig: 1 explains it, defecit, & deficiendo homines confudit, pudesecit & spe frustratum est, hath failed, and by failing hath put men to confusion, and shame, and made them frustrate of their hope, which being taken for the meaning of the word, may also as well agree to the other signification of it, viz. of withering or being dried up. Whatever nicety be made otherwise in distinguishing between them, in this expression hitherto, we look on the calamity so described, as brought on them by Locusts, &c. and drought properly understood, which we take to be the plainest way. They that understand the enemies to be by those figured out, as if hath been before said that many do, look on all the mischief here mentioned, as done by them: by them all the fruits of the land devoured, by them the seed in the ground ² trampled under foot, by them the garners laid desolate, by them the barns broken down, and so the corn that was above ground and laid up in ^a heaps, marred, and spilled, as not having any covering or shelter to defend it; so Grotius renders the last words, ideo ^b fatuit triticum, therefore the wheat stinks, not as if the failing of that were the cause that the barns were let fall, but the want of the covert of the barn, and so its exposing to the weather, the cause of its being marred, and made musty. And so Abarbinel explains כי, ci, which Ours translate, for, by ולכן velacen, and therefore, as it is ^c observed sometimes elsewhere to signify, Ideo, propterea, therefore, quare, quamobrem, wherefore.

However in either of these ways, these emphatical and redoubled expressions, whereby the Prophet describes the great calamity now fallen on the people, and to befall them, in that their land, in which before they lived in great pleasure, and content, enjoying in great abundance all good things pertaining to the comforts of this life, and the ways and instruments by which they were brought on them, be understood, it appears by them, that they were such, as, if they would at all consider, and be sensible of their own condition, could not but make them see that God was highly provoked to displeasure against them, and so excite them to a serious and speedy repentance, and to return unto him in weeping, fasting, and praying, for averting his heavy judgments, before they were utterly consumed by them. If they should not so far consider these things, but look on them as things by chance befallen them, and so might go off as they came on, or they might find other remedy against, it must needs argue them very stupid and brutish, yea less sensible than the brute beasts that were among them, even which, for their better instruction, he seems to send them to in the next words, wherein he shews how they were affected by those evils, which came on the land.

18. How do the beasts groan? the herds of cattle are perplexed, because they have no
VOL. I.

pasture: yea the flocks of sheep are made desolate.

How, ^d Some render, why, &c. but Others think that not right, but rather, How, &c. The first words being put by way of interrogation, argue the great measure of the thing affirmed, or vehemency in which it is done, and so therefore the Chaldee without interrogation affirmatively renders it, לחרת מתאנחין בעירא greatly doth the beast groan. The word rendred beasts, is in the Hebrew also in the singular number, but taken ^e collectively in signification plural, as comprehending more, and the word also is ^f a general name, of which the particular kinds are after expressed, by cattle, and sheep. For the noun Behemah, בהמה is of general comprehension, יקאר ען אלחיואן אלמאשי, is spoken of such living creatures as go on four feet, as Abu Walid gives the proper signification of it: agreeable to which is بابماب Babimab in the Arabick dialect, which is كل ذات اربع قوائم any four footed living creature, ولو في الماء even such as live in the water also, yea more generally yet, كل حي any living creature without distinction. The forecited Abu Walid saith of it لفظ בהמה يوقع على نوع واحد وعلى انواع كثيرة that the word בהמה Behemah, is spoken sometimes of one sort (of beasts alone) and sometimes of many sorts of them, and sometimes of some one particular beast of them. The ^h Jewish Rabbins are observed to distinguish between it and חיה chaiyah (which is found together with it, Gen. i. 25. and rendred one, beast of the earth, the other cattle) so as that (viz. chaiyah) should be proper to wild beasts, but this Behemah, to such as are ⁱ tame, and made ordinarily use of for their service. Under this more general name then will the following kinds, denoted by herds of cattle (or kine) and flocks of sheep be comprehended, and those words be well looked on as a particular explication of what sorts of beasts are here by it more peculiarly meant, according to Kimchi's exposition, and it seems a good exposition. But the name, as appears by what we have seen, extending to other kinds of beasts besides them, as to horses, asses, mules, and most commonly, as Grotius thinks, when nothing is added to it, both in Hebrew, Chaldee, and Arabick taken for them, it is by Others here translated by a word more proper to them, viz. ^k jumentum, which peculiarly denotes such beasts as men make use of for carrying, drawing, or tillage, as if it were not used here as a general name, comprehending those two kinds here named, kine and sheep, but as a name of other different kinds; which being taken, I suppose the note of interrogation, or exclamation ought to be added, as well to the following clauses as to the first, which is by ^l Some done, but by ^m Others put only to the first, the others being expressed by simple affirmation,

X x x

² See Ar. Mont. ^a In acervis suis congesta, Grot. ^b Taking כיש to agree in signification with כאש to sink. ^c See Noldius's Concordance. ^d Vulg. Pagn. Arab. MS. لما. ^e Pisc. ^f Kimchi, Pet. à Fig. ^g Kamus. ^h Buxtorf. Lex. Talmud. ⁱ Cicur domesticum, and see Ar. Mont. on this place. ^k Interlin. Tig. Munst. Jun. Trem. ^l Jun. Trem. ^m As Ours; and Piscator warneth that the two latter clauses are not to be read with an interrogation.

firmation. The Vulgar Latin renders it by the general name of animal, the Chaldee and Syriack בעירא Beira, and כבירא Beiro, which seems well to answer to the Hebrew Behemah. It is by the Syriack Lexicographers explained as signifying البهائم الانعام Beasts, Cattle, among living creatures, כבירא בעבירא סבירא סבירא such as eat grass, of which some are for meat, some for necessary service. But between the LXX. (and the printed Arabick following them) there is a very strange difference from the Hebrew, and those who translate from it. The LXX. rendring, Τι ἀποθήσομεν ἑαυτοῖς; which in the Latin from it in Jerome is, quid reponamus nobis? What shall we lay up for our selves? But this no way agreeing with the Hebrew as ordinarily read, have put Some, who have looked into such things, to conjecture that they did read otherwise, and their conjecture is that instead of בהמה Behemah, they did read " בהמה Behemmah, or בהם babem, and instead of נאנחא Neenchah, which is from אנח Anach, and signifies, doth groan (° Ninnecha: as it were from ינח to put, or lay up) but this being supposed, it doth not yet so reconcile the Greek to the Hebrew so read, but that they are forced to fly to the conjecture of a various reading in the Greek it self, from what is usually read in the ordinary copies thereof, viz. that instead of ἑαυτοῖς to our selves, should be read either (according to Some) αὐτοῖς, to, or for them, or (according to Others) ἐν αὐτοῖς, in them. If the latter of these be received, then will it be referred ^p to the garners and barns before mentioned, laid desolate and broken down, because there was no need of them. For what shall we, what have we to lay up in them? If the first, then to the herds of cattle, and flocks of sheep, perplexed and made desolate, the mention of which follows, and so בהם in them, may stand for ^q להם labem, to, or for them, viz. ^r what shall we lay up for them (where shall we find food for them?) So have we here conjecture upon conjecture; which of them be the rightest, or whether either of them be right, we need not be solicitous, having in the usual reading of the Hebrew a far plainer and more apposite meaning, which we have all reason to adhere to. It concerns not us to enquire what they read, so much as whether they had any reason to read so. How not only one, but several sorts of beasts are thus afflicted, he proceeds more particularly to shew, adding in the first place, the herds of cattle, בקר of kine, and oxen, and ^s such as are of that kind, נבוכי Nabocu, are perplexed, the word is from the theme בוך Boc, which is not in its simple form found in Scripture; but such forms or words as are derived from it, and occur therein, have manifestly in them that notion of perplexity, or being in confusion, so Exod. xiv. 13. נביכים הם בארץ, which Ours there render by a word of like signification, are intangled in the land, which Ainsworth likewise rendring it by, yet adds as the literal meaning of it, or perplexed, and so several Latin, perplexi sunt; so Esther 3 ult. The city Sbusban נבוכה was perplexed, and thence the noun מבוכה perplexity, Isaiah xxii. 5. and Micah vii. 4. and this signification is well confirmed from the use of the same root in the Arabick Tongue, wherein from the root بوك Bawaca, باك baka, and انباك Enbaka, are spoken of men, whereas ^t راهم اختلط عليهم فلم their minds (or councils) are so confounded (or in such confusion) that they find no way to get out (or distregue themselves) whether to go or turn, which is much the same signification that Kimchi here gives of this word, that the signification of it is בלבול, confusion (perplexity) כאדם המבולבל as when a man is perplexed in his mind (or thoughts) and knows not what to do. So that there is no doubt, that Ours and such other Interpreters, who here ascribe to the word, as now in the Hebrew read, the notion of perplexity, do give to its due and proper signification. But the ^u LXX. rendring it ἐκλαυσαν βεκάβια βοῶν, the herds of oxen wept, hath given occasion to ^x several learned men to conjecture that they did otherwise read it, viz. not Nabocu, (from בוך Boc, to be perplexed) but נבכי Nibcu, from בכי to weep, against which conceit of theirs is ^y objected, that as that word or form is not elsewhere found in Scripture, so if it were found would not regularly signify, to weep, or bewail, actively, but passively, are wept for, or bewailed. But indeed I think that this version of theirs doth not make it necessary to us to conjecture, that they did read it otherwise than now it is read; though ἐκλαυσαν doth not precisely signify being perplexed, yet weeping, wailing and lamenting, being usual signs, and effects of a perplexed, troubled mind, they might, I suppose, well enough think that by expressing this particular, they might not improperly comprehend whatsoever else perplexity of mind doth import, or discover it self by. This, I imagine, is an easier and gentler way of reconciling what we find in them to what we find in the Hebrew, than to fly to such a conjecture as shall violate the rules and propriety of the language by confounding active and passive forms in it; and the same way of reconciliation will also, I suppose, serve for reconciling to the Hebrew such other translations as are given, not having the strict signification of perplexity, as, viz. that of the Vulgar Latin, mugierunt, have lowed, viz. we may well say, as expressing great perplexity; that also of Munster, oberrarunt, wander up and down, and Castalio, plorant, cry. The reason of this perplexity in or to them is expressed, because they have no pasture, all that they should feed on being destroyed

ⁿ Merc. Druf. Capel, ^o Mercer. ^p In illis, viz. βασανιστοῖς ἢ ἀγροῖς, Druf. ^q Capel. ^r Quid illis bestiis recondamus? Mercer. ^s Armenta Bucera, Grot. ^t Tig. Jun. Tremel. ^u Kamus. ^v As likewise the Syriack and printed Arabick. ^x Mercer, Druf. Cap. ^y Buxt. Vindict.

stroyed and consumed by such means as have been before mentioned, and shall again be mentioned in the following verses. For aggravating this calamity that he describes, is added that this penury and want of pasture reacheth not only to the greater sort of cattle, which require a greater plenty of grafs, or such things as they should feed on, but also to such lesser sorts of them which might be satisfied with less, as even poor sheep which might be satisfied with scantier food, and shorter grafs. So he saith, yea the flocks of sheep are made desolate, even they are in a sad desolate perishing condition, not finding wherewith to sustain themselves. This import, or emphasis, for setting forth the extremity of the calamity fallen on the land doth Kimchi observe to be in the particle גַּם Gam, by Ours rendred, yea, shewing it to be such as that even those lesser cattle, which often feed to suffice them in places where those of the bigger sort cannot; could not now find what to feed on. The word הַצֹּאן Halson, by our Translators rendred, as by several Others, ovium, sheep, as if peculiar to that kind of lesser cattle, is by the Vulgar Latin and Others rendred by a word of larger comprehension, pecorum (or pecoris) cattle: and it is noted by the learned Jew Abu Walid to be a name תַּם that comprehends both sheep and goats, so that he thinks that in Arabick it ought to be rendred by גִּנָּם Ganam, which likewise signifies both those kinds, and not by צֹאן Ddan, although in letters agreeing with it, because that in the Arabick is a name peculiar to sheep as distinct from goats. He observes likewise that sometimes בְּצֵן it is peculiarly spoken of sheep as distinct from goats. (as 1 Sam. xxv. 2. where it is said that Nabat had three thousand צֹאן Tson, sheep, and a thousand עִזִּים goats) The same is noted by Kimchi also, that it is a name common to הַבְּהֵמָה הַקְּטָנָה lesser cattle, viz. וְהַצֹּאן sheep and goats, and that sometimes כָּלֵם it comprehends them all, but sometimes is attributed peculiarly to one kind, viz. sheep, as in the forecited, 1 Sam. xxv. 2. and on the contrary that sometimes it comprehends both הַבְּהֵמָה הַקְּטָנָה not only those lesser kinds of beasts, but those bigger sorts also that come under the name of בָּקָר Bakar, kine, &c. In that latitude he thinks it to be taken, 1 Sam. viii. 17. That it cannot be so here appears, it being put as contradistinct from what is under that name בָּקָר Bakar, signifying bigger cattle before mention'd, understood, but must either be taken peculiarly for sheep, as it is by Ours, and several Others, or taking in with them goats also, as by them that render it by pecus, and the Chaldee and Syriack rendring it וֹנֹה Ono, and the Arabick גִּנָּם Ganam, which words seem common to both those sorts of smaller cattle: Of these it is here said נֶאֱשַׁמוּ Neeshamu, which our last Translators render, are made desolate, the Others more ancient to the same import, are destroyed, agreeable to what also the Greek hath ἡφαισθησαν, and the Chaldee צָרִיאוּ; the Syriack ܥܬܝܬܐ; the Arabick MS. استوحشوا (are made desolate) the printed انقرضت; the Vulgar Latin disperierunt, are perished; Munst. damno affecti sunt; Castal. multabantur: Grotius looking on desolati sunt as literally answering the Hebrew, explains it by, ad paucitatem redacti sunt, are become few in number. All these take the root אֶשַׁם Asham in that sense as it agrees with שָׁמָם Shamam, which hath the notion of desolation, destruction, wasting, which signification R. Aben Ezra and D. Kimchi also note it here to have; as it hath likewise, Hosea xiii. 16. and Isaiab xxiv. 6. But this root hath also another signification, viz. of sinning and being guilty or faulty, and in that notion doth the Tigurin Version here take it, rendring greges ovium culpæ obnoxii facti sunt, and the flocks of sheep are made (obnoxious to blame) guilty or faulty, by which I suppose he must necessarily mean obnoxious or liable to such punishment, or such evils and judgments, as their owners had by their sins provoked God to send upon them; for it were they, that had sinned, as for these poor sheep, what had they done whereby to deserve what is befallen them? and so understood, it will well agree with that explication of R. Solom. Jarchi, in which he seems to take in both those significations of the root Asham, viz. נֶחֱלְקוּ בְּאַשְׁמָתָם, which Mercer renders vastati sunt delicto suo, are wasted or destroyed by their sin: for explaining which I suppose is well added by a learned man, sc. Israelitarum, viz. the sin of the Israelites. Mean while they suffer as if they had been themselves guilty, and the sense of their sufferings they testify by their lamentable moans, and groanings, which certainly should have moved their owners, for whose sake it was they suffered, to have looked into the cause thereof, which was their sins, and so to have put up their supplications to God for removing his judgments, and those calamities which for their sakes had fallen on the poor cattle that belonged to them. We may well look on the words as including a reproof or upbraiding of their stupidity, which were not so sensible thereof, as these poor irrational creatures were. Even the cries of those ought so far to have awakened them. And seeing they did not, and would not take notice of them, The Prophet by his example whom they could not but think fit to follow, proceeds to instruct them, and lead them the way in the next words.

19. O Lord to thee will I cry: for the fire hath devoured the ^c pastures of the wilderness, and the flame hath burnt all the trees of the field.

These

* As Levit. iii. 6. where Ours render it the flock. ^a Yet may the naming one kind give to understand what shall be to the other, though the word do not signify them. ^b Where yet Ours render it sheep. ^c Which Some look on not as proper only to kine, but other bigger cattle, as horses, asses, and camels also, Druf. ^d Jo. Leusden. ^e Margin, or habitations.

These words are by ^f Some looked on as still such as were by the Prophet prescribed to the priests, to utter in their lamentations for those calamities which had befallen them, continued all along from ver. 15. But by ^g Others, as such wherein the Prophet, having in the former set forth the terribleness of the judgments that were befallen them, whereby to move them to a due consideration of the miserable condition they had brought on themselves, and all belonging to them, their land, and their cattle, he now declares what he himself doth, and will do (and so by his example incites them to do) for averting those heavy calamities, viz. by prayer and supplication making his addresses to God, that he would have mercy on them, and remove those evils from them, which by again particularly describing he shews himself, as he would have them also, the people, all with whom he hath to deal, to be duly sensible of, and to acknowledge as punishments by him for their ill deserts sent upon them. O Lord, to thee will I cry. This is the only remedy that he seeth for removing those great evils which he describes, viz. earnest prayer to God who sent them, and who only can remove them; and that only to the true God, whom he describes therefore by that glorious name proper only to him, viz. יהוה, which is therefore by some of the modern Interpreters retained as a proper name, and written in its own proper letters, ^h Jehovah; but by Ours and Others, and generally all the more ancient, rendred in the signification of Lord; and that not only here, but for the most part wheresoever else it occurs: for (to speak only of our own Translation) in very few places, among the many in which it is found, it is so expressed. We find it set down, Exod. vi. 3. where we read, by my name Jehovah, was I not known to them, and so Psal. lxxxiii. 18. Thou alone whose name is Jehovah, and Isaiah xii. 2. The Lord Jehovah is my strength, and xxvi. 4. in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength: but I believe no where else except in some compounded names, as Jehovah-jireh, Gen. xxii. 14. and Jehovah-nissi, Exod. xvii. 15. and Jehovah-shalom, Jud. vi. 24. Their expressing it in those places to be read according to its proper letters and vowels, shews that they did not think it a thing unlawful so to pronounce it, nor superstitiously abstain from it; but give us withal to think, that they thought it could not by any one word, which should fully express the force and import of it, in Ours or any other language be rendred, no such one word do we find. St. John by the Holy Ghost himself inspired, being in another language to express it, doth it in more words,

Rev. i. 4. ὁ ὢν καὶ ὁ ἦν καὶ ὁ ἐρχόμενος, he which is, and which was, and which is to come, (or ὁ ἐσόμενος, as Rev. xvi. 5. which shall be) The form of the word in it including the characteristical letters or signs of all those three tenses, or times, present, past, and future, denoting such a one as ever was, still is, and shall ever be, one and the same everlasting being. But in that they do not frequently so express it, but translate it in the notion of another name, that of denoting absolute sovereignty and dominion (Lord) they seem to follow the authority and example of other ancient Interpreters, who so have done before them, as the LXX. who do not at all read it, according to its letters, but generally render it by Κύριε, Lord; yet that when they so render it, they took that word in a singular and higher meaning, than when in ordinary use it is spoken of men in the greatest power, may appear by what is ⁱ observed, that Origen in his copies of the LXX. did over-against it in the Margin still write the letters J. H. V. H. יהוה in Hebrew, to warn the reader whom he was in that place to understand, seeming to intimate withal that the name was in it self, to them ἀνεκφώνητον, as they call it, and many so do, only because they have no proper letters according to their way of pronunciation to express the right sound of it, and again no one word by which to give the full meaning of it. No less cautious is the Author of the Vulgar Latin in abstaining from the expressing that name in its proper letters, usually rendring it Dominus, The Lord, except in one or two places where he thought it better to express it, as that it might appear to be a proper name of God peculiar to him, yet neither then doth he so express it, but put in place of it another Hebrew name of God, viz. Adonai, as Exod. vi. 3. where what is in the Hebrew, my name יהוה Jehovah, he renders nomen meum Adonai, my name Adonai, which he puts likewise in the apocryphal book of Judith, chap. xvi. 16. It appears that he thought fit out of reverence to it, altogether to abstain from pronouncing it in the proper sound of its letters, and this may he seem perhaps to have taken from the Jews, who do altogether abstain from so pronouncing it, but in lieu of it still read אדני Adonai, which signifies also Lord, except where that word is joined with it, and then read instead of it אלהים Elohim, God: (in which case Ours also with several Others render it, God;) the reason why they abstain from pronouncing it according to its letters by the Jews pretended, is because they think the right pronunciation of it, which was of old under the first temple, and for some time also under the second, well known and used, to be long since lost, so that they dare not commonly ad-adventure on it for fear of prophaning it, or calling God out of his right name. But divers learned men of late think this rather a piece of superstition, and needless fear, and that it may still rightly be pronounced, and do therefore, according to its letters and vowels with which it is written, read and express it. Ours, as we have seen, shew that they account it no way unlawful to express it, yet out of respect to it, and following, as we said, the authority and example of those more ancient, do abstain from frequent use of it, and choose to render it by Lord; and so whereas * Others here render, Unto thee, O Jehovah, Ours read, O Lord, to thee will I cry.

^f Grot. ^g Calvin, Merc. Tarn. Ab. Ezra, אלהים the words of the Prophet. ^h Pagni. Jun. Trem. ⁱ See the Preface to an Arabick Pentateuch in Bodly's Library, and see Procopius by Curterius on Isaiah. The putting of which letters, at first done out of reverence, and for good intentions, afterwards proved, as that Arabick Translator of the Pentateuch shews, an occasion of a great error to some Greeks, who being ignorant of the Hebrew language, mistook them for Greek letters, and reading them the wrong way took them for ΠΙΠΙ, which they seemed to resemble, and so took Pipi for a name of God; and so some Syrians following expressed it by פפפי Phiphi, which they thought to signify الرب the Lord, or الرب السماوي Alrabbo ssamaio, the heavenly Lord, as in Bar. Bahlul's Syrian Lexicon rendred.

Mean while the word in the original used is by all confessed the name of God, proper to him, and incommunicable to any other, his memorial, as he calls it ¹ Hosea xii. 5. by it therefore the Prophet calling on him, shews that on him, and him only, the true God, he looked, as only able to remove the great calamities which were come upon them, and who, he trusted, being sought to, would remove them for his name's sake. Unto thee, O Lord, כי אין מושע ויורחך, because there is no Saviour besides thee. These = calamities he had before described to his hearers; yet doth he here again, as the cause of his crying unto God, in pathetical terms lay open before God the same; we may suppose as to shew how sensible, he is himself of them as judgments from him, so to stir up the people to the like considerations, and withal to move God to compassion on them by the sense that they had of them. For (saith he) the fire hath devoured the pastures of the wilderness, &c. How dreadful the effects of the raging element of fire are, in devouring and consuming any combustible matters on which it seizeth, is a thing so well known, that to compare any other thing and the effects of it thereto, is the highest expression of much mischief thereby done to, and utter destruction brought on those things, by that which is so compared to fire, or called by its name; so that it may well be thought ² nomen generale adversitatum, a general name of all adversities, or things that do mischief, and a description of very great mischief brought by them. This I note, because by most Expositors the name fire is not here taken in its proper notion, but understood of other things thereto likened for their force and the mischief that they do. What thing it is that is here so called because of its power in doing mischief, is not by them agreed on. ° Some take thereby to be understood those Locusts and other noxious vermin before spoken of, which are observed to have in them a malignity like that of fire in destroying of such things which they light on; so is ^p cited from Pliny that expression, saying of Locusts, multa contactu adurunt, they do by their touch burn (or parch) many things: and in this way doth Kimchi comparatively expound the words אלו אש ולהבה עברה בהם כאשר עבר הארבה בהם As it were fire and flame passed (or seized on) those things, when the Locusts passed or seized on them. ° Others understand that extremity of drought and heat which (as above we observed) Some think to have happened to them, and to have parched up all things in the land. So they look on the ¹ immoderate scorching of the sun to be called fire; Psalms lxxxiii. 14. where he saith, As the fire burneth the wood, and the flame setteth the mountains on fire, and loca solis ardore torrida, places scorched or parched by the heat of the sun, to be called חררים Chazarim, burnt places, Jer. xvii. 6. If these two, viz. Locusts and extreme heat of the sun came both together, as we have above seen Some to think, and it is probable that they did, they may then be both well comprehended under the same name of fire; and they need not be looked on as two different expositions, nor will that of the Chaldee be much different from the last, which renders it קרם תקיף כאשר a violent east wind like fire.

Others think it to be understood of their enemies, and mischief by them brought on the land; so Abarbinel saith that he speaks על צרת האויב of the calamity from the enemy, not from the Locusts: and to this purpose ° Some among Christians, hoc tropo pictani belli imaginem volunt, will by this figurative expression have to be (as it were) painted out the face of war; and so Munster thinks this way it may be understood, hostes per ignem & gladium omnia devastaverunt, the enemies have by fire and sword destroyed all things. (And so fire will be taken in its proper signification) as well as in the former way, that pascua sunt vermibus corrosa ac si ignis exussisset ea, the pastures were gnawn by worms (or Locusts, &c.) as if fire had burnt them up. Whichsoever of these things before-mentioned be understood as the instrument of working those sad effects here described, there is no question but that by God impowered and set to work, it would have force to produce them, as great as that of fire let loose to the most combustible matter; mean while it is but his instrument, and worketh as by commission or order from him kindled, and therefore by this fire here doth a learned ° Commentator think it more convenient to understand it more generally of the fire of his burning wrath, which is called the fire of his jealousy, Ezek. xxxvi. 5. and fery indignation, rather than to name any particular which he chose whereby to exercise the fury thereof. Whatever it was that is here called fire, it was by that kindled, and what dreadful effects it wrought, the following words describe. It hath (saith he) devoured

Vol. I.

Y y y

נאור

- ¹ Pagnin. Jun. Trem. ² See notes on that place. ³ Kimchi. ⁴ Flacius Illyr. that sometimes ponitur pro re quavis valde lædente. ⁵ Drus. ⁶ Against this interpretation may lay that objection mentioned by Ab. Ez. against R. Japhet from what is said ver. 20. that the rivers of waters are dried up. (Which may seem not to be done by Locusts.) ⁷ Jan. Trem. Lively, Piscat. Bochart. ⁸ Lively, Bochart. ⁹ See Mercer. ¹⁰ Hostilis ignis, Ar. Mont. Incendio Chaldæorum, Ribera. Bellum cum incendio confertur quod omnia vastat, Tarnov. ex Winkel. ¹¹ Tarnov. To Gualter. istis vero hostilem rabiem, vel potius horribilem Dei vindictam denotat.

נֶאֱוָה Neoth, the pastures, (or as it is in the Margin, habitations) of the wilderness, which divers reading sheweth the word so rendred to be ambiguous. That so it is, appears by the different rendrings of it both among the ancient and modern Interpreters. The LXX. rendring it τὰ ὡπατα, τὰς ἐρημίας, as also the printed Arabick. The Vulgar Latin = speciosa deserti, the beautiful things of the desert; agreeably the Tigurin Version, amanissima loca deserti, the most pleasant places of the wilderness; with which may well enough be joined that which * Others have, pascua, pastures, and † loci herbifera, places that bring herbs. These all may we look on as agreeing with what we have in the Text, pastures. But the Chaldee Paraphrast hath for it דִּירוֹת מִדְּבָרָה Diroth Madbera, habitacula (mansiones, so Mercer) deserti, the habitations or mansion places of the desert. The Syriack likewise

ܡܘܬܬܝܢ ܕܥܝܪܐ, and the MS. Arabick مواطن البراري, to the very same Sense; The habitations of the desert. So among the modern, Castal. Stationes (or Mansiones in the following verse) saluum. Junius and Tremellius, habitacula deserti. Drus. habitacula, or habitationes deserti. Others, caulas, the sheep cotes, which is the same that the Jewish Expositors also take; as R. Sol. Jarchi, Aben Ezra, and Kimchi, who in other words expresseth it by אֹהֲלֵי הָרֹעִים the shepherds tents: and Rabi Tanchum, who in Arabick renders it مساكن dwelling places. The LXX. who here render it as we have seen, do, Psalms xxiii. (or according to them xxii.) 2. render it τόπος, a place. I do not doubt but that any of these mentioned did know and acknowledge the word to have both the mentioned significations, as referrible, and by the Grammarians referred to such † roots, of which some have one, and some another, as either נֶאֱוָה, to be fair or beautiful, or אֹהֶל, † to desire, or נוֹה Navah, to inhabit, to each one of which the noun in this form is looked on as referrible; but that every one of them, in the place where he found it (as in many places it occurs) gave to it that signification, which he thought most proper for the place. Mean while these significations here given, though as to the literal notion they differ, yet do seem to concur in the meaning of the place, and to be comprehended in it; inasmuch as the pleasantest places and most abounding with herbage and grafs in the wilderness and open fields, were by those that looked after their herds and flocks often chosen, there to set up cotes and cottages for shelter and habitation to themselves, as being remote from any towns or cities, so that naming one, the other would necessarily be understood, the pastures or feeding places, together with the mansions or shepherds houses in them. So saith Kimchi on the following verse, where the same words are repeated, that by the word נֶאֱוָה Neoth, he means, grassy places (מְקוֹמוֹת הָרֹעִים שֶׁהֵיוּ בַּמִּדְבָּר) which were in the wilderness, and calls them Neoth, caulas, or shepherds habitations, because the shepherds, who inhabit the desert, do there pitch their tents, though they were remote from any other habitations. R. Tanchum something differently, he looking on the word as signifying مساكن habitations, or dwelling places, yet seeing in the wilderness there are not places of habitation, thinks to be meant the trees, التي تايي اليها الوحوش ويستظل بها عباير الطريق to which the wild beasts repair for covert, and travellers for shade and shelter. According to this the following words, and the flame hath burnt up all the trees of the field, are a more particular explication of what is said in these. And by what hath been said will it appear easy to reconcile the difference betwixt Interpreters mentioned, and that whether the word be rendred by pastures, pleasant places, beautiful things, or habitations, all which the word may signify, the meaning will be still the same, and such as comprehends them all; and so sheweth that as well as in the cities, so in the fields and wilderness also, all things conducing to necessity, convenience or pleasure, whether to man or beast, were destroyed by that which in one clause is called fire, in the other flame, all that might afford shelter to men, or covert and food for beasts, all which the name of pastures, habitations of the wilderness, and all the trees of the field, which he mentions likewise, do manifestly comprehend. In farther explication of the calamity he adds in the next verse,

20. The beasts of the field cry also unto thee: for the rivers of water are dried up, and the fire hath devoured the pastures of the wilderness.

The Prophet doth not only himself out of consideration of the miserable condition of things cry unto the Lord, but hath to bear him company out of the sense thereof, even the beasts of the field, even those that live abroad, and so were not † tamed by men, and find food on the mountains, where Locusts do not usually come. The word by which their crying is expressed, is תַּעֲרוֹג taarog, which word is spoken of the heart, Psalms xlv. 1. נֶאֱוָה Neoth As the heart panteth (or brayeth, as in the Margin of one translation) after the water brooks. The word is therefore looked upon as proper to the noise or cry by them made, but manifestly here used to express the noise or cry of other beasts also, and therefore it is by several Interpreters rendred by a word of one general signification, as vociferari, clamare, to make a noise and cry, or the like. The LXX. in a different notion of the word (though to the same meaning) render

* Which Munster retains.

† Pagn.

‡ Interlin. so Ours render נֶאֱוָה Neoth Deshe, green pastures, Psalms xxiii. 2.

§ See Note on Hosea ix. 13.

¶ To which the Hebrew Concord. refers the word; so in Arabick اوى Awah, is to Take for an habitation, and then موى mawa, an habitation.

⋄ Kimchi, ferae, wild beasts

Grot. as the Syr. ܡܘܬܬܝܢ Arab. MS. موطن. ⋄ Castal. Mugire.

der it ἀνέβλεψαν, and the printed Arabick تنظر اليك denote, as likewise the Vulgar Latin, suspexerunt, look up unto thee; agreeably likewise to that of the Chaldee מסברנ קרמך Mesabro Kadamac, spectant coram te, expect or wait before thee, or as Mercer renders it, in te sperant, hope in thee. These all fall in one meaning, their cry seeming to imply expectation and hope for help. But the Vulgar Latin inserts here some words, which neither in the Hebrew, nor any translation are found, viz. quasi area sitiens imbrem, which the Doway renders, as a garden bed thirsting for a shower. The learned Grotius conjectures that instead of area, a garden bed, might at first be written, and is to be read cerva, an hart, viz. as an hart thirsting for a shower; which if so, then there needs no more to be said, than that he laboured to express the proper meaning of the word תערוג as properly signifying the cry or noise^d of the hart, crying out, or braying through thirst after water, to set forth the earnest crying of the thirsting beasts, that it was as^e earnest as that of the thirsty hart: otherwise it may be thought that he had respect to the notion of ערוג as it signifies a furrow in the earth, made for sowing of seeds in it. The words here, as to the construction, being the noun in the plural number בהמות, Behemoth, beasts, and the verb תערוג taarog, cry, in the singular, which literally found, the beasts doth cry, which in the Latin, as Ours and some other languages, being no proper construction, causeth some with a supply to render it, bestiarum agri quæque glocitat, each one of the beasts of the field doth cry, as in such cases they think it requires to be done, and so to found, as Aben Ezra also thinks, כל אחת ואחת every one of them. The Arabick Versions, both the MS. and the printed, use the same construction as the Hebrew, بهائم الصحرا تخرج MS. all the beasts of the field doth cry, (the printed تنظر doth look up) اليك unto thee, which in them yet, must properly found, do cry, and do look up; it being the general use of that tongue, so to join a verb singular of the feminine gender to a noun plural, without requiring any supply, or any alteration in the sense at all, and perhaps that use may be thought also to have been known in the Hebrew; and so no other construction need be made of it. This their cry, are these beasts said by the Prophet to direct to him, to whom he directed his, viz. the one only true God: They all (saith he) cry unto thee, as if that, even those which were void of reason, and all distinct knowledge of God, and not capable of receiving it, or being instructed in it, yet by natural instinct guided, did acknowledge a dependence on his sole providence, and to it seek for a removing of their sufferings, and supply of their wants, in such manner as they were able to do it; in loud cries, which were acceptable by him as supplications to him. This the expression of crying to him seems to import, as likewise other like expressions elsewhere, as Psalms civ. 21. where we read, the young lions roar after their prey, and seek their meat from God: again, Psalms cxlvii. 9. He giveth to the beast his food, and to the young ravens that cry (i. e. unto him;) for though that be not expressed in the original, yet is it easily understood, and therefore in several translations supplied, as in the Greek τοῖς ἐπικαλουμένοις αὐτὸν, invocantibus eum, which call upon him; and the printed Arabick الذي يصرخ اليه which cry unto him, and so in our ordinary ancienter English used in the Church Service, that call upon him, and so in Job xxxviii. 41. it is expressly said, who provided for the raven his food? when his young ones cry אל אל, El El, unto God. It is manifest, we see affirmed, that their cries are so heard and answered by God as if directly intended to him: yet is it in those parallel places cited manifest, that those irrational creatures are, as named, so, properly meant, and we doubt not but that here also we are so to understand the word in its proper notion of the beasts of the field, who as the ox is said to know his owner, and the ass his master's crib, Isaiah i. 3. may be said after their manner, to know and acknowledge God, as him on whom they depend for their livelihood, their being, and well being, and by their moans and cries in their wants or sufferings to testify it. Yet doth Abarbinel think this here to be taken otherwise, viz. by the term of the beasts of the field, to be meant those other nations, besides the Jews, whom Nebuchadnezzar conquered and destroyed, and dried up their rivers, even all those to whom the cup of God's fury was to be reached forth, Jer. xxxv. 15, &c. and him doth Arias Montanus follow in this, saying, ut familiares & fidei domestici gregum & pecorum appellatione designantur, sic gentes etiam harum animantium agri generibus componi assimilarique solent; that is, those that are of the family of God, and the household of faith, are described by the name of flocks, and sheep, so other people use to be likened and compared to other kinds of beasts of the field. But against this a learned Commentator objects, that those heathen nations did not in their troubles look up unto the true God; or cry unto him as these beasts of the field are here said to do, but unto false Gods. But sure there is no reason why we should take this name of beasts otherwise than in its proper notion. The Prophets joining the mention of their crying unto יהוה the Lord with his own, may well seem not only to set forth the greatness, and universality of the calamity which he is describing, in that it extended both to men and beasts, but to warn the people that he spake to, that they might take instruction, not only from him, but even from the beasts of the field how to behave themselves in the condition that they were in, viz. to address themselves in loud cries and supplications to the Lord, for removing those evils, which either were come already on them, or were certain to come on them, if not by their re^d Although Jerome on Psalms xlii. explains it also area.

^e See Pet. à Fig.

^f Chr. à Castro.

penitance prevented, shewing that if they did not so, they were more stupid than the very brute beasts, which appeared more sensible than they in this kind, and testified it by their cries, of which they could not but take, certainly ought to take notice, and lay it to heart, and be ashamed if they did not shew themselves to have as much respect to God, as they shewed. The reason which moved both him and these beasts, and ought to move all the inhabitants of the land to cry unto the Lord, is expressed in the following words. For the rivers of water are dried up. This may well confirm the opinions which we formerly mentioned, that the miseries in this chapter described, did consist as in the abundance of Caterpillars, Locusts, and such noxious vermin; so also in great drought, and parching heat, and want of rain, the proper effects of which, are the ^a drying up of rivers and brooks of water, which give drink to cattle and beasts, and causeth them to suffer and perish by thirst. They that ascribe this also to the mischief done by the ⁱ enemy, stopping of springs or otherwise, may alledge what is said, as in the name of Sennacherib, 2 Kings xix. 24. with the sole of my feet have I dried up all the rivers of the besieged places. Abarbinel thereby meant the overflowing of their kingdom by Nebuchadnezzar, but the former meaning seems plainer. However this shews that they suffered by thirst having nothing to drink, and the following words shew that they had neither what they might eat, so he adds, the fire hath devoured the pastures of the wilderness. These are the very same words which we have in the foregoing verse, and therefore what was there said may suffice here, I shall only add from ^{*} Kimchi for explication of the word מִדְבָּר Midbar, translated the wilderness, that it signifies מְקוֹם מְרֵעַ הַבְּהֵמָה, the place where cattle (or beasts) do feed, רְחוֹק מִן הָעִיר whether it were far from the city, or near the city, any such place, and not only wild, remote, desolate, barren places were called by that name; and so the saying that the pastures used to be found in such places, or as others will, the habitations, or such places, where shepherds were wont to find food for, or to feed their cattle, were destroyed as by fire, will import that there was nothing left, or to be found there, which they might feed on, and so were through want driven to send out their cries to God for supplies. And so have we in this chapter, the description of a sad famine, extending both to man and beast, and admonitions to them how to behave themselves, and by what means to seek for the removal of so great calamity, though as to the instruments or means of bringing on them that calamity we have seen Interpreters to differ, and so the verbs, by which it is spoken of, to be differently understood, by Some as of a thing already done or come, by Others as of what was to come, though by reason of the certainty of it, spoken of as what was either already past, or in present being. The same matter in much the same method shall we find him to prosecute in the next chapter also.

CHAP. II.

VERSE I. Blow ye the trumpet in Zion (Margin, or cornet) and sound an alarm in my holy mountain: let all the inhabitants of the land tremble: for the day of the Lord cometh, for it is nigh at hand.

THAT for sundry occasions, and for several ends, the trumpets were wont to be sounded of old among the Jews, and that by order from God himself, appears as by what we read elsewhere in Scripture, so by what we find, Numb. x. 2, &c. where we have both a command from God for making of them, and directions for the use of them, as, 1st, for calling together the congregation, for holy meetings, ver. 2, 3. 2^{ly}, For giving a sign to them for the journeying of their camps. 3^{ly}, For giving warning by sounding an alarm, in time of war, or when any should oppress them, ver. 9. 4^{ly}, In the day of gladness, and their solemn days, and the beginning of their months. According to the distinct sounds given, they seem to have been given to understand, what kind the thing or occasion, thereby given them to take notice of, was. This blowing here called on them for, seems to be referred to the third head, concerning which the ^{*} Jewish Masters note that by the words in the Text הָצַק הָעֶרֶב אֹתָם, the enemy that oppresseth you (or distressee that distresseth you) is to be understood כָּל דָּבָר שִׁיּוֹצֵר לָהֶם every thing that shall distress them, as dearth, plague, or Locusts (בְּצוּרָתָם וּדְבַר וְאֲרֵבָה) or like things; so that whatever of such kind be here looked on as instruments of the calamity here described, it will equally agree to them; and so do the words of the Prophet sound, as a description of some great distress, in some such kind, which should justly deserve to be given notice of by such sign of blowing the trumpet to alarm the people, that they might be sensible of their miserable condition, and seek some way how to free themselves from it. And this warning of his to them ought as much to affect them, as if a watchman had set the trumpet to his mouth, and actually sounded an alarm to them. This his warning he repeats in differing expressions, signifying the same thing, viz. הָרִיעוּ וְתִקְעוּ blow and sound an alarm, the more to stir up their intentions and affections: לְעוֹרֵר הַלֵּבָבוֹת עַל הַתְּשׁוּבָה to stir up their hearts to repentance (saith Kimchi). Zion also, and his holy mountain, are the same place, (as Psalms ii. 6. upon my holy hill of Sion) the mentioning of which, being the place of their solemn meetings, shews of what concernment it was that they should all have notice of the thing declared, and ⁱ Ar. Mont. Rib. Grot.

^{*} Calvin. Dan. Taanioth, chap. i. 1.

^a 1 Kings xvii. 7. ^b Ainsworth.

^{*} In his roots.

^{*} Maimon. Yad in and be admonished of, as follows, let all the inhabitants of the land tremble, not only of Jerusalem, but of all the country about. That was the usual effect of such sounding of a trumpet to them, so saith he, Amos iii. 6. Shall a trumpet be blown in the city, and the people not be afraid? It did ordinarily in such a tune sounded, give warning of some such great evil appearing as might deservedly put them in great fear. That the matter here spoken of was of such nature as might require such a sounding, and such effect of it, appears by the description of it in the following words, for the day of the Lord cometh, for it is nigh at hand. The day of the Lord, i. e. a day in which he will send very terrible judgments on the land, and take vengeance on them for their sins. It is so called likewise, chap. i. 15. (where more hath been spoken of the expression.) But though such were threatned to them, they might perhaps continue secure, as thinking he might defer his coming, and be slack in it: that they might not so deceive themselves and put far away the evil day (Amos vi. 3.) he adds, it cometh, it is nigh at hand; so that if they will prevent it, or secure themselves from the danger of it, they must not delay their betaking themselves without delay to such means whereby they may do it. For who may abide the day of his coming, and who shall withstand when he appeareth? (Malachi iii. 2.) To make them duly sensible therefore of the danger of their condition, and to awaken them from security, he proceeds to describe the terror of that day.

2. A day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and of thick darkness, as the morning spread upon the mountains: a great people and a strong, there hath not been ever the like, neither shall be any more after it, even to the years of many generations.

A day of darkness and gloominess, &c.] A very calamitous day bringing with it much mischief and distress, it being a known expression, by ^d darkness to set forth figuratively a state of misery and calamity: and on the contrary by ^e light a time, or state of prosperity. Although by some darkness be otherwise here taken, viz. properly for darkness of the air, caused by what shall then befall them in their land. So Kimchi הצרה נמשלת לחשך הצרה נמשלת לאורה affliction is likened to darkness, as joy is likened to light, or else, saith he, the exposition is כי מרוב הארבה that through the multitude of the Locusts the land is darkened, as it is said, Exod. x. 15. For they covered the face of the whole earth, so that the land was darkened. This latter way is by Piscator thought to be most agreeable to the words, as appears, he saith, by what after follows, of which the reader, when he hath seen that, will the better judge. Mean while I think it most convenient to take the first, as most applicable and agreeable to all expositions, whether they take by God's instruments in bringing the calamity spoken of on them; to be meant, either Locusts and the like hurtful creatures; or the Chaldeans, or other enemies, as in this we have above in the first chapter seen them much to differ; and shall in what follows have occasion to take notice of. This which he farther here saith, He adds in description of the condition of that calamitous day, according to the distinction of the words in our Bibles of the last translations, and several others, joining these words to the preceding, or according to that by many ^f Others made, joining them with the following, wherein he describes that people, as he calls them by whom that calamity shall be brought on them, A great people and a strong. It will be all one as to the meaning which of the ^h two ways we follow, either understanding that ⁱ day or that people to be, as שחר Shachar, the morning spread upon the mountains. In the expressions given of these words is as much difference as betwixt light and darkness, some understanding by the one, viz. light, and the other, viz. darkness. If שחר shachar be rendred as most generally, and I suppose aptly is, the morning, and the light thereof meant, then the meaning thereof seems to express the sudden coming, and the wide spreading of the thing spoken of, and so as not to be hindred, in that resembling the morning light, which in a moment discovers itself on the tops of the mountains (on which it first appeareth) though at never so great a distance one from another. So Isaiah lviii. 8. ^k To express suddenness, is said, Then shall thy light break forth as the morning, and thy health shall spring forth speedily. But although this be a very apposite and perspicuous meaning; and a known and most usual signification of the word שחר shachar be, the morning, as in the Arabick سحر sahar; yet are there who have preferred to give to it here a clean contrary notion of darkness. So Arias Montanus, of whom Christopher à Castro saith, solus Montanus intelligit de tenebris, only Montanus understands it of darkness. So perhaps among the Latin Expositors before his time: but it is plain that all that Montanus hath is found in Abarbinel, and I suppose from him taken, for confirming this opinion, he observing that the same root hath the signification of blackness or darkness; and that thence the morning it self hath that name shachar, because it is the antelucanum tempus, the time just before the day break, and the darkness gathered together is thicker than before, as Montanus expresseth it, or as Abarbinel, because the blackness of the darkness is not yet gone, nor dispersed by the light coming forth on the earth. But this interpretation is much ancients than him too. That ancient Grammarian Abu Walid puts it as his opinion, and saith he prefers it before that which Others give of light; his words, because

VOL. I.

Z z z

^c See ver. 11. of this chap.^d Amos v. 18, &c.^e Eft. viii. 16.^f See R. Sol. and Ab. Ezra.^g LXX.

printed Arab. Castilio.

^h See *Mercer.*ⁱ Some refer it to both, dies ille, & exercitus locustarum vel Babyloniorum. Pet. à Fig.^k Druf.

cause the book is not printed, I will give, that it is the exposition of Others that in the words כְּשֹׁחַר פְּרוֹשׁ עַל הָהָרִים Cashachar parush al babarim, שכר אנתשאר אלגראר פי אלבלאר באנתשאר אלצו פי אלנו הרג קול גירנא ותשביהה באנתשאר אלטלאם אולג, i. e. He likens the spreading of the Locusts in the country, to the spreading of the light in the air; this is that which Others say; but the likening it to the spreading of the darkness is more convenient. As it is said, Exod. x. 15. They covered the face of the whole earth, so that the land was darkened. But R. Tanchum, who had seen him, and, I suppose, well considered his opinion, thinks otherwise, who having given for the meaning that he likens אנתשאר אלגראר באנתשאר אלצו ענר אלצבאח the spreading of the Locusts to the spreading of the light in the morning, adds, וקיר אן שחר הנא אלטלאם משחק מן שחור אי אנה יחנב אלצו לכרתה פיציר אלטלאם מכסוטא עלי אלגנאל נמא קאר, &c. and it is said (by Some) that shachar here is darkness, being derived from shachor, black, viz. because they binder (or veil) the light through their multitude, so that darkness is thereby spread on the mountains, according to what he saith before, a day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness, agreeably to what he saith (Exod. x. 15.) they covered the face of the earth. But (saith he) אלאור אטור ואנסכ the former meaning is more perspicuous and more pertinent. Yet among modern Interpreters Junius and Tremellius, though they differ not from those who render shachar by morning, as to the signification of that word, seem, as to the meaning, to agree with those others, who take it in the contrary notion of darkness, while with a supply of a word, which they think understood, they render it, ut nubes aurora panditur super montes, so that according to them the words run, a day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness, as a morning cloud is spread upon the mountains, which is by them expounded, tempus tam injucundum atque difficile, &c. a time as unpleasant and difficult, as useth to be the day, at the dawning of which very thick clouds rise up to the mountains, which hide the sun and the heavens, at the morning light, and darken the air and threaten the certain coming of showers. But ¹ Others do wonder at them for so departing from the more usual translation, which is so agreeable to the words; and Piscator saith he rather chuseth, leaving out nubes a cloud, to render it, Ut aurora, as the morning, i. e. (saith he) splendor solis orientis, the light of the sun rising. According to one of these interpretations, the words describe, as we said, the sudden coming and wide spreading of the calamity spoken of; according to the other the greatness, or grievousness of it, and may be (as we have seen Some to take one way, Some another) joined either to the preceding words, wherein the calamity it self is described, or to the following, wherein is described the quality of those by whom it is to be brought on them. They are said to be, a great people, and a strong. ^m The same, that are above, chap. i. 6. called a nation, seem here called a people. That they that are called by one of those names, may, they signifying but the same thing, be called by the other is no question; but who they are, as there above we saw, is betwixt Expositors a difference not easy to be reconciled, some thinking thereby to be meant Locusts and those other like creatures above, chap. i. named; others, enemies, as Assyrians or Babylonians, Others thinking the Locusts to be named but the Assyrians meant. Among the Jews the ⁿ most take the Locusts to be meant, but Abarbinel the enemies, to whose coming upon them, spoiling them and carrying them captive, he refers all that is said in this and the foregoing, and some of the following verses. In that expression, blow the trumpet, &c. he looks on as alluded to the blowing of the trumpet in the year of Jubilee, Levit. xxv. though for a contrary end, that being to give notice to every one to go to his own possession, but this to warn them to depart from it into captivity, ^o שִׁצְאוּ אִישׁ מֵאֲחוּרָיו וְאִישׁ מִבְּנָיו מִמִּשְׁפַּחְתּוֹ יֵלְכוּ בְּגָלוּת that they should every man go out of his possession, and every one depart from his family to go into captivity. The ^p day of darkness spoken of, and the several words by which it is described he takes to be כְּנִי לְהָרֹבֵץ בֵּית רָאשׁוֹן וְהַצִּרּוֹת שִׁדְיוֹ בּוֹ a title or denomination of the destruction of the first temple, and of the afflictions that were at that time, by the great people, &c. those that Nebuchadnezzar brought with him against Jerusalem. From of old hath the like difference been betwixt Christians also and not yet decided. Jerome seems to be at a doubt which opinion to take, while he looks on the words as so properly denoting the Locusts, as figuratively to describe the Chaldeans, as that dum locustas legimus Babylonios cogitemus, while we read of the Locusts we cannot but think of the Babylonians. Per metaphoram locustarum describitur impetus Chaldeorum, saith he, by a metaphor of Locusts is described the force of the Chaldeans. Cyril also seems to be in doubt of which it should be understood, of Locusts, or ἐξ ὁμοιότητος αὐτῶν by likeness or comparison to them, of the Assyrians, and that it is ἐκ ἀμφοῖν ἀληθές true of both. So Theodoret saith that by what is here said he describes both, both the Locusts and cloud of the enemies. Rufinus looks on it as peculiarly spoken of Locusts. Among more modern Interpreters ^q there are, and those of note, who are peremptory for understanding the enemies, Assyrians or Babylonians: ^r Others are as positive for understanding the Locusts. ^s It will be hard to decide the controversy where are such authorities on both sides. I shall endeavour so to explain the words according to their literal meaning, meaning, as that though I apply them to the Locusts, which opinion, I think, most agreeable to them to embrace, as that yet if any chuse rather to apply them otherwise, he may have the genuine signification of them. These spoken of and called a people, have added to them the epithets of רב Rab, great, and אצום Atsum, strong: great, i. e. in number; so great, it is said of them, as we have seen, chap. i. 6. that אין מספר they are without number; and strong though not singly and simply in themselves, yet by the might of him that employs them, so strong as to bring destruction on the whole land; for he is strong that executeth his word (by them) as it is said below, ver. 11. It is added in description of them. There hath not been ever the like, neither shall be any more after it, even to the years of many generations. Much the same concerning this people (as they are called) spoken of have we been given to understand above in chap. i. 2, 3. where he puts the question to them, whether the like to what he now should speak of had ever been in their days, or in the days of their fathers, and bids them to tell their children, and their children again to tell their children, and their children also another generation; which is plainly to shew the same that is here said, that there had neither been the like to what is now seen (or should be seen) in former generations, and that the like should not again be seen in many generations; but that they, when they were told of it, should look on it as a miraculous and strange thing, not usually heard of, nor by themselves ever seen. In both these places seems to be ground for the same question, viz. (the nation or people being understood of Locusts) How what is in either of them may agree with what is said, Exod. x. 14. concerning those Locusts sent by God on the land of Egypt, that before them there were no such Locusts as they, neither after them shall be such? What solutions are given of this difficulty we have already seen on those words, which may, I suppose, suffice for clearing these also: yet if it may not be tedious to the reader, as being but a repetition of the same things, I shall here give him a translation of R. Tanchum's note on this place. If this (saith he) be taken as a narration of the coming of real Locusts, it will be contradictory to what God saith of those Locusts, which were among the plagues of Egypt, before them there were no such Locusts as they, neither after them shall be such. This contradiction some learned men solve by considering the places, viz. that that saying (in Exodus) was in respect of the land of Egypt, only concerning the Locusts that were there, and which should be never after them in it: but this here in respect to the land of Israel alone in like manner also. And it is by Others said that the meaning is, that there had not been the like in regard that there were four sorts of them together (viz. those named, chap. i. 4.) whereas in the first (viz. what was in Egypt) were only Locusts. But Some do say, that this and the like expressions in the prophecies, or books of the Prophets כלה מבלנאת פי אללפט ולים יראר בה אל תחקיק, and that it is not meant that the truth of things should exactly answer to the precise signification of the word, (but by words denoting what is excessive, meant what is very great, and exceeding the ordinary course of nature, or what is usually seen.) What is rendered in the Text in our Bibles, Of many generations, in the Margin is noted to signify literally, of generation and generation, viz. דור ודור, and so it is according to the letter translated by many both of ancient and modern Interpreters. So by the Chaldees retaining almost the same words with the Hebrew. So by the Vulgar Latin, usque in annos generationis & generationis. So the MS. Arabick ال سنې جبل وجبل and many Latin Versions. Nor do the LXX. much differ, τις ἐτῶν εἰς γενεὰς γενεῶν: nor the printed Arabick ال سنې ال جبل جبال unto years to generation of generations: the Syr. ܠܝܬܝܢ ܕܝܢܝܢ until years of generation after generation. Junius and Tremellius render it as, Ours in the Text do, ad annos multarum generationum, which seems a proper and genuine explication of the words literally sounding, to the years of generation and generation, the repetition of the word generation twice implying contrariety, multitude or plurality, not only the two next generations, but a distance of long time after the present generation, though unlimited and undetermined, as to the precise number, yet terminated by bounds of time, as much as to say, not in haste or ordinarily in every generation; not till after many years, years of more than the present and next following, and perhaps more be passed, i. e. not for a long time, such as God shall see fit, so indefinitely. Mean while the word years here added seems to imply that in process of time such may or shall again be, and not to be an utter denial that the like shall ever again be, as Some seem to understand, explaining it by ^a nunquam ultra, or ^b neque ullis seculorum annis futurus est, never hereafter, or not in any years of ages. Those that think here meant the Locusts, take it for a long time indefinitely as we said, but they that understand it of enemies restrain it to the time of the coming of the Romans many years after the Chaldeans, as among the Jews Abarbinel, and of Christians several.

¹ Lively.^m Yet Danæus thinks otherwise.ⁿ Abu Walid, R. Sol. Aben Ezra, Kimchi, R. Tanchum.^o Ar. Mont. differently explains this.^p By which he looks on particularly declared the ninth of the month Ab.^q Calvin. Munst. Grot. Danæ, Genev. notes.^r Jun. Trem. Pisc. Bochart, &c.

3. A fire devoureth before them, and behind them a flame burneth: the land is as the garden of Eden before them, and behind them a desolate wilderness, yea nothing shall escape them.

In this and some following verses proceeding to describe in several high and figurative ex-

^a See note on chap. i. 6. ^b This way Bochartus takes. ^c See R. Sol. Aben Ezra, Kimchi. ^d Ne duas tantum generationes accipe, sed pro scripturae usu multas, Merc. ^e Cujusque generationis, Lively. ^f Ar. Mont. ^g Theodoret, Rib. Castr. ^h Vat. ⁱ Castr.

expressions the sad circumstances and effects which should attend the coming of that great and strong, numerous and mischievous people in the foregoing words mentioned and described, he in the first place, saith a fire devoureth before them, or as in the ancient Geneva English, and most Latin Translators, as it is in the Hebrew in the singular number לפנין lephanau, before him: but it being referred to the noun people going before, which is a name of multitude, though in form singular, what is referred thereunto may indifferently be put in either number לפנין lephanau, before him, or them. This word is first in order in the original, and so signifies before, as to admit of some ambiguity, whether it be here to be understood of precedency in respect to time or place, as being elsewhere indifferently used for both, and is here therefore differently understood, by some in the one way, by others in the other, and in either seeming to make a good and perspicuous meaning, whatever be by that people understood: which is likewise to be said of the word וְאַחֲרָם Veacherau, which follows, and after him or them, that it may be referred either to place and position, what was behind hand, or to time, what was remaining after them. Among those who refer it to order of place seem to be the LXX. who render τὰ ἔμπροσθεν αὐτῶν πῦρ ἀναλίσκον, καὶ τὰ ὀπίσω αὐτῶν ἀναπλεμῶν φλόξ. The things that are before him a consuming fire, and behind him a kindled flame, which Cyril understanding of the Locusts, saith to be spoken because ταῖς τῶν ἀκριδῶν ἱμβολαῖς, by the incursion of the Locusts whatsoever comes in their way is straightway consumed, and if there be any thing left behind them ἔργον καὶ αὐτὸ εἶσαι τῶν ἐπομῶν ταῖς πρῶταις, that will be the work of those that follow those former (to consume that likewise.) The like mischief he supposeth may also be said to be done by enemies. The Vulgar Latin also plainly so takes it here to be meant, rendring, ante faciem ejus ignis vorans, & post eum exurens flamma, Before the face thereof a devouring fire, and after it a burning flame. St. Jerome gives for the meaning of it, Quicquid attigerit quasi vorax flamma consumet, nihilque post se integrum derelinquet, whatsoever he seizeth on he shall consume as a devouring flame, and shall leave nothing sound behind it. To the like sense R. Solomon, they consume all things as if a fire devoured before them, and a flame burnt after them. Kimchi also not much different, In the place wheresoever they settle, it looks before them and behind them, as if fire had devoured and burnt up every green thing before them, saith he, and behind them, because the place on which they are is covered (at the present) by them. According to these (the words before and behind being thus taken) there is a comparison of the Locusts, and what is by them done, to fire, and what mischief is by it when it seizeth on things, usually done; and the similitude is looked on as very agreeable to the nature of Locusts, which by reason of that noxious quality which is in them, are said to burn such things as they light on, as hath been above observed on chap. i. 7. But the learned Bochartus, though he thinks the Locusts here spoken of, and meant by that people mentioned, doth not think them compared to fire; and their doings to the effects thereof; but by the fire to be meant another thing, viz. great drought and parching heat, which precede their coming; before likewise spoken of in the foregoing chapter, ver. 17, 19. according to what we there mentioned concerning the opinion of him and Others. And then taking the word לפנין, before him to denote not order of place but of time he saith, utrobique agi de summa siccitate quæ locustarum adventum præcesserat, & secuta sit, in both places to be spoken of extreme drought, which both went before and followed (or continued) after the coming of the Locusts among them, whereby together with what mischief was by them done, all things that grew on the earth, were so scorched and consumed, as by fire and flame; & which either of these ways we take, it comes to pass (he saith) the land is as the garden of Eden before them, and behind them a desolate wilderness. Here again the words before and behind, are capable of being referred, either to order of place, or time, as that it may sound, either that part of the land which they were not come to, and that which in their going farther on, they left behind them. So Jerome, quasi hortus & paradysus voluptatis omnis terra est quam non tetigerit: quasi solitudo & desertum quicquid fuerit prædatus, As a garden and paradise of pleasure (such as was of old the garden of Eden, Gen. ii. 8, &c. called also the garden of God, and used upon comparison whereby to set forth extraordinary pleasant and delightful places, as Gen. xiii. 10. Ezek. xxxvi. 35.) is all the country that they (this people) have not touched, and as a wilderness or desert all that they have preyed upon, or else before their coming, and after their departing, viz. that that land which before their coming was so pleasant as is described, after they had been there, was left wholly desolate. This meaning is here taken even by Some who in the former understood the words of order and place, and it may seem indifferent which way it be taken, as to the thing intended, viz. the description of great mischief, the extent and generality of which to express is added, yea and nothing shall escape them, so Ours well render the meaning of the words וְגַם פְּלִיטָה לֹא הָיְתָה לוֹ vegam pelitab lo baytab lo, which literally sound, and also there shall be no escaping to him (or from him.) So the word פְּלִיטָה Pelitab, properly sounds evasio, escaping, but withal is often so used as to signify not only the act of from loca uita, see Bochart. who flights it.

^c In the printed Arab.

^d Doway Translation.

^e Tarnov. understands by fire, Zelus Dei, the zeal (or burning wrath) of God.

^f But those that understand not the Locusts but enemies to be here spoken of, look on by fire and flame to be denoted, their setting all things every where on fire.

^h Bochart.

ⁱ Mercer.

^k Mercer ei, to him, that is, ab eo, from him.

^l Druf. ^m Astio & res, Schindler. So it is in other words, as, captivity, for captives, &c. Druf. so ver. 32. the same word.

escaping, but also the things or persons that escape, and remain. So as that, there shall be no escaping to him, will mean, "no escaper, or nothing shall escape, no remainder left. So Aben Ezra explains it, אין דבר שנמלט ממנו there is nothing which hath escaped, (or may escape) from him or them. And so Kimchi, שלא הניח דבר מן הצומח שלא אנל because they have left nothing of such things as grow, which, he saith, they have not devoured. Now there is betwixt Interpreters a little difference, in that, what Ours with these that we have mentioned, and Others, attribute to things, they attribute to persons; so the LXX. καὶ ἀνασώσεται αὐτὸς, ὃς qui salvetur non erit ei, and the printed Arabick following, وليس من ينجو, and there is none that can escape. So the Vulgar Latin also, nec est qui effugiat eum, neither is there any one that can escape him, which Jerome explains, neque ullus poterit inveniri, qui illius effugiat manus, neither can any be found which may escape his hands. The Syriack ܐܢܬܐ ܕܢܐܬܐ ܕܢܐܬܐ ܕܢܐܬܐ (may indifferently be referred to person or thing) and there is not that may be delivered from him. The Chaldee plainly refers it to the person, ואף שובא ליה ליה, and also there is no escaping to him (or from him, or because of him) for the wicked. Among more modern Interpreters Some also render, not nihil, nothing, but a nemo, no body or person. These that so by what shall not escape, understand men or persons, may seem by those, from whom they shall not escape, to understand, not Locusts, and such creatures, but enemies, who, and not those sorts of creatures, use to seize on the persons of men; yet if any do so render the word, viz. no man, may it make also a convenient meaning, in as much as those vermin, universally devouring all the growth of the earth whereby men subsist, they also may be lookt on as sufferers in that general devastation, and none of them be said to escape without mischief to him, or be out of fear of suffering by a general famine. But the word פליטה being of the feminine gender, and signifying as we have above seen, doth seem rather here to favour the referring it to things in general, than particularly to persons: and that will be a plainer interpretation, to render nothing, than no man, as taking in both. Among those that think the people here spoken of to be meant enemies, and not Locusts, the former words of fire and flame, which are said to devour before and behind them, Abarbinel, by the fire devouring before them, understands, the vanguard, or fore part of the army, by the flame burning behind them, the hinder part thereof, which though in other armies it is usually made up of women, and children, and old and weaker people, not fit for fighting, yet in that army of the Babylonians was not so; but consisted of such who deserved also to be compared to a flame that burnt up all things upon the earth; and by what is said, there should be to him none that should escape, he thinks intimated that which befel Gedaliah the son of Abikam, and those that the King of Babylon left with him in the land of Judah, where after a short time Ishmael the son of Netbaniah came and slew them, so that there was none of them, that Nebuchadnezzar had spared, left remaining.

By that fire before them a learned Latin Commentator would have to be understood, and alluded to that fire which was by the Chaldeans (who worshipped that element as a deity) carried before their arraies to direct them in the way and threaten their enemies; and that behind them, that with which they should set on fire such things as they met with. This conceit though he seem much to please himself with, and may seem a nice observation, yet is by Some thought not to be here much to the purpose. The plainest meaning, if it be understood of the enemies, will be, their setting on fire round about all things, and so destroying all that they meet with. But I rather think those to be in the right who understand it of the Locusts, and such other vermin before mentioned, which, and what they did or should do, we take likewise to be farther described in the following words.

4. The appearance of them is as the appearance of horses, and as horsemen so shall they run.

מראה Marehu, visio, vultus, species, forma, facies, the sight, countenance, (or visage) the form of them, is like that of horses. That it was no unknown comparison to liken Locusts to horses, appears by what is said of these Locusts, Rev. ix. 7. (whoever are meant by them) that the shapes (or likenesses) of them were like unto horses prepared to battle, which resemblance in whatever else it may consist, we may think by what is by Others observed to be chiefly in their look, their head and face. So Theodoret on this place saith, that if any shall accurately consider the head of a Locust he shall find it ὁμοειδὲς τῇ τῆς ἵππου κεφαλῇ, very like to that of an horse, which Bochartus observes to be noted by other later writers. The Arabians, who are well acquainted with those kinds of creatures, observe the same of them, as in the words by him cited out of Damir's history of living creatures, wherein the Locusts being said, though a weak creature, yet in the make of its body, and several parts thereof, to resemble ten sorts of creatures of stronger kind, there is put in the first place;

4 A

* Non crit evasor, Pag. Reliquiæ, residuum, nempe quod quasi effugio superstes remansit, Full. Cap. Conc. The MS. Arabick literally according to the Hebrew, ולא יכן לה פליטה. Fig. Jer. xli. 23. Sanctius. Assemblies notes English. Grot. Quaqua ibit omnia lucebunt incendii. Full. Cap. Conc. Schindler. 2. The eyes of an Elephant. 3. The neck of a Bull. 4. The horn of a Hart. 5. The breast of a Lion. 6. The belly of عقرب a Scorpion, (so it is in my copy as well as in that of Bochartus, for which he thinks should be read غقاب which is a sort of Eagle.) 7. The wings of an Eagle. 8. The thighs of a Camel. 9. The feet of an Ostrich. 10. The tail of a Serpent.

place وجه فرس The face of an horse, and a Poet among them in particular manner expresseth the same saying, وانجت عليها جباد الخيل nimble horses have conferred on them the head and mouth; so that aptly we may look on the Locusts in this expression in the first clause to be compared to horses, in respect to their looks and appearance, and to the very make and form of them, to which may be added what ^z Others take it to consist of, viz. their fierceness, boldness, and undauntedness, described, Job xxxix. 19, &c. Then in the following clause have we them again compared to them, in respect to their undaunted speed and boldness in their progress, when put to it by their riders: and as horsemen so shall they run. For 'tis still the horse that runs, though pricked forward by the horseman; with such swiftness shall they overturn all before them, not to be stopped or stayed; and here it seems to many a very convincing argument, that the words are to be understood properly of Locusts, not of the Chaldeans or enemies, in regard that they are said to be like horses, and like horsemen. For the enemies were really horsemen riding on horses, not only like such, they nor their horses. Some of them therefore that will have it understood of enemies, for eluding this say, that the letter ך, c, rendered in Greek ως, in Latin sicut, usually put as a particle of likeness, is yet so put, not παραβολικώς, by way of comparison, or similitude, but, as elsewhere sometimes it is, επιτατικώς, as Theodoret speaks, ad intensiorem significandam, for the heightning of the thing spoken of, and to shew that it is eminently such as it is said to be; so that his saying, their appearance is as the appearance of horses, will be as much as to say, ^a that their horses appear to be indeed gallant horses: and as horsemen they shall run, as much as to say, they shall shew themselves to be gallant expert horsemen. Others retaining the comparative signification will have it to be understood of the foot or infantry of the army, as that even they of them appeared as fierce as horses, and were as bold and swift as horsemen. Pedites isti erunt velocissimi, saith Grotius, Their very footmen shall be so swift. And Abarbinel, after an impertinent story, as if they were likened to Centaurs, which were thought to be half men and half horses, which he thinks might here be alluded to, saith that else it may be, that their faces were great, and their members strong like the appearance of horses, and that their footmen ran with as great swiftness, as horsemen with horses. But Bochartus's censure of this is, Pedites cum equitibus conferri novum est, & inauditum, It is a new unheard of thing that footmen should be compared to horsemen, and, quis Assyrios dixerit ut equites fuisse, cum revera equites fuerint, iique magno numero? who shall say that the Assyrians were as horsemen, when they were indeed horsemen, and they in great number, and as so elsewhere described, as Ezek. xxiii. 6, 12, 23. and xxvi. 7, 10, 11. Habak. i. 8, &c. yet find we another to say, nec mirum est viros bellicosos comparari equis generosis, pedites equitibus, ad indicandum fortitudinem & celeritatem eorum, It is no wonder that warlike men should be compared to generous horses, and footmen to horsemen, for setting forth their valour and swiftness. But, I think, the most perspicuous meaning to be had, by likening the Locusts and other like insects with them, being employed by God for executing his judgments, though otherwise seeming weak and contemptible creatures, to such as are of greatest strength and power. To them likewise will the other comparative expressions in the following words, by which other circumstances attending their coming and behaviour for the same reason, aptly agree; as first, that whereby the tumult and great noise which they shall make, in the next words compared to that of chariots rattling on the tops of mountains, and to the noise of crackling fire among stubble, or dry combustible matter, and to that of a strong people set in battle array.

5. Like the noise of chariots on the tops of mountains shall they leap, like the noise of a flame of fire that devoureth the stubble, as a strong people set in battle array.

The words נקול מרכבות על ההרים Cekol Marcaboth al rofse habarim Yerakkedun, seem capable of a double construction, either so as to sound, that the Locusts shall leap (which is a proper term for their way of motion) on the tops of mountains with such a noise as that of chariots jumping, and are therefore by Junius and Tremellius rendred, Quasi strepitu curruum super cacumina (or cacuminibus) montium salient, as with the noise of chariots on the tops of mountains shall they leap, as likewise the Tigurian Version before them, Irruent strepitu quodam per cacumina montium ut currus, they shall rush (or go on) with a certain noise on the tops of the mountains as chariots; or else, secondly, as the noise of chariots which leap, (or when they leap) on the tops of mountains, with an ellipsis understanding to be supplied either, which, or when they leap on the tops of mountains: So that whereas the words, shall leap on the tops of the mountains, are in the first referred to the Locusts, or who else are spoken of likened to chariots, in the latter way they are referred to the chariots, to which they are likened. This latter way doth Drusus mention, and it is that which the Syriack takes rendring, לכאן כח צליל מרכבות על ההרים like the voice of chariots, which make a noise on the tops of mountains. But the former way ^z Merc. Pet. à Fig. Ribera. ^a Revera præ se ferunt equorum aspectum & ut vere equites current, Christ. à Castro, who observes ως, as, in Greek so to denote, John i. 14. so in our ordinary speech we say, he quitted himself as, or like a man, i. e. shewed himself truly so to be. ^b Brentius. ^c Piscator.

way is more by other Interpreters followed. So the LXX. ὡς φωνὴ ἀρμάτων ἐπὶ τὰς κορυφὰς τῶν ὄρεων ἐξαλῶνται; and so the printed and MS. Arabic, and the Vulgar Latin, sicut sonitus quadrigarum super capita montium exilient, as the sound of chariots upon the tops of mountains they shall leap, and so most of the modern; yet not without some difference again, whether only the word they, or all those words, on the tops of the mountains shall they leap, be to be referred to the Locusts, or only they shall leap, to them, and, on the tops of the mountains to the chariots. Mercer observes it as the opinion of several Jews, that all are to be understood of the Locusts, which get up to the tops of mountains, whither chariots cannot climb: so that though for the noise and leaping, they be compared to chariots, and that be common to them both, yet the doing this upon the tops of mountains be proper to them; but himself prefers rather to take a middle way and part the words, so as, to join on the tops of mountains, to the preceding, like the noise of chariots, and then to refer, they shall leap, to the Locusts understood in the word they; so that the words shall sound; such a noise as chariots make when they are driven over the tops of mountains, such do these Locusts leaping (or in their leaping) make: for though it be not usual to drive chariots in such places, yet if they be there driven, they will make a very great noise, and so the comparison is by that heightened. But whatever difference be between these Expositors mentioned, as to the construction of the words; it will be indifferent as to the scope and meaning which we take, it being still a comparison brought to express the horrid noise, which those spoken of shall make in their approach, and thereby strike terror into the people, by their coming in so dreadful a manner. How great a noise Locusts use to make where they go, may be guessed by what Remigius reports of them, from such whose territories used to be infested by them, viz. that it is such, ut a sexto milliari audiri possit sonitus eorum, that it may be heard six miles off. But it may be sufficient for illustrating the present words (if understood of Locusts) to add those of much like sound, Rev. ix. 9. where of those Locusts there spoken of, it is said that the sound of their wings was as the sound of chariots, of many horses running to battle. The joining together these two places, shews that it was looked on as a proper, and usually received comparison, to liken the noise made by the Locusts in their motions to that of horses trampling, and chariots jumping, which is known to be great. There follows in the next words another comparison, whereby the frightful noise that they shall make is expressed, like the noise of a flame of fire that devoureth the stubble, and c such noise as is of stubble burned by fire, which is known to make a great crackling noise. The noise may be said to proceed from the stubble and from the fire, when such combustible things, as stubble and small sticks, are set on fire, there is a great noise made; with which expression is much agreeable what is said, Eccles. vii. 6. as the crackling of thorns under a pot, &c. The noise in the former comparison seems to be made by their motion, leaping or flying; this probably meant of that which is made by their chawing, or eating. So Cyril appears to have understood it, who saith, they report that their falling on the field is not without a noise, and that they make also a great noise with their teeth, while they chaw the corn cast down before them, like that of the wind driving the flame of fire. And so Mercer explains the words, as the noise of flaming fire consuming the most combustible matter, talis est & ejus plantas erodentis strepitus, so is the noise of them gnawing of the plants, (or things that it feeds on) so Pet. à Fig. Devorantium Locustarum strepitum declarat, he declares the noise of the Locusts devouring things, magno strepitu volant, & in agros decidunt, & segetes dentibus commolunt, with great noise they fly, and fall down on the fields, and grind the corn with their teeth. These words may be jointly considered with those preceding, ver. 3. according to those who there take likewise a comparison to be made of Locusts to fire (as we have seen,) and so both will direct us to look on the Locusts, and those other insects with them comprehended, under the name of that great and strong people (ver. 2.) as carrying along with them fire and the sad effects thereof, wherever they go. There follows another comparison of them, As a strong people set in battle array, for connecting of which words with the preceding, Some will have to be understood, and repeated from them, either יִרְקְדוּן yerakkedun, they shall leap as, &c. or else קוֹל Kol, the noise, as the noise of a strong people, &c. so shall the noise of these be, leaving to be inferred the latter part of the similitude from the first being alone expressed, it being the usual custom of such, who are so ordered to encounter their enemies, to make a great noise and shouting, thereby to strike terror into them (as Kimchi so understanding the words explains them.) It seems to Others enough to understand, they are as, &c. est ut populus validus ad pugnam instructus, this people (or these people spoken of) are as a strong people set in battle array; as if from speaking of the noise they made, he passed to describe the order in which they went on in executing their work. Here is observable the alteration of this expression from that before in ver. 2. there those spoken of are called a great people and strong, here the same said to be as a strong people; which is an argument that in that first place they are called a people not properly, but but figuratively, because like, or as a people, so resembling them in such or such respects, that they deserve in that regard even to be called by their name, which seems an evident proof, that ^m neither the Babylonians, or any other, that as enemies should invade the land, are here meant, but really Locusts and such worms sent by God to execute his judgments on them, it being usual for amplifying, or extolling lesser things, to compare them to greater; not on the contrary greater things to lesser, except by way of diminution or vilifying them, ⁿ unless in such particulars where they do exceed them, though in others inferior to them. The respects for which these here, (according to this way of understanding these words, they are, &c.) are said to resemble a strong people set in battle array, pointed out, seem to be, 1. their number and power of doing hurt; for their number, they are as a people, for their power, strong: such by experience they are acknowledged to be, ^o Quid locustis innumerabilibus & fortius, quibus humana industria resistere non potest? what doth more exceed number, and what is stronger than Locusts, which no industry of man can resist? so Cyril saith of them, that they are devouring things, and διὰ πληθὺν ἀμήτητον ἐκ διακαταγώνισον, μᾶλλον δὲ καὶ δυσάντητον, by reason of their innumerable multitude not easy to be encountred, but rather very dangerous and unlucky to be met with, and that their breaking in is χρεῖμα ἀμαχον καὶ δυσκαταγώνισον παντελῶς ἀνδράποισ, an irresistible thing and altogether insuperable by men.

^d So of Ab. Ezra, Kimchi, and so of some among Christians, Qualem strepitum in bellico tumultu edunt currus saltantes, talem hæc bestia edent super cacumina montium salientes, Lively. ^e Druf. ^f Kimchi. ^g ἡ χεῖρα βαρυχέων, which word signifies both weak and strong, the last seems here most apt, though Bochart renders it tenuem small, but Others, non tenuem, not small. ^h Bochart. ⁱ Druf. ^k Bochart. ^l Bochart.

2. Their order and resoluteness (if I may so speak) in their progress and posture, in that he adds in description of those strong people, to whom he likens them, set in battle array; well disciplined soldiers so and on such occasion ordered, constantly keep their ranks and places, and maintain their stations. His comparing these creatures that he speaks of to such, shews that they also did so keep order in their motions. That so they are observed to do, seems intimated by what is said of them, ^p Prov. xxx. 26. (according to our Translation) that they go forth all of them by bands, and more plainly by what the Greek saith in rendering that place, that they go on as in battle array guided by one alarm, εὐτάκτως, in good order, and what the printed Arabick Version there, that all their carriage بعسكره in their army is بحسن ترتیب in excellent order. ^q By other Authors it is observed of them, that they keep as constant in their places, when they fly, as the stone squares in a chequered pavement, without any moving out of them; so by Jerome as an eye witness: their steadfast keeping their order, and not by any means suffering themselves to be put out of it, is observed by Theodoret and Cyril. ^r Arabian Au- thors, who were well acquainted with them, observe likewise their framing themselves into a body كالمسكره like an army, in which, when the first or leader moveth, the rest all move, and when he settles the rest all settle together; and therefore they call a company of them ^s منظوم Mandbum, which signifies a thing set or joined together in order: so exact are they reported to be in setting themselves therein and keeping it, that they may seem to be as expert in, and as observant of military discipline, as the best martialled soldiers. In this regard the comparison of them to soldiers set in battle array seems very apt; if we take in also, with Others, the noise that they make like to such, it will make for amplifying the terror of their coming. A dreadful thing certainly must it be to hear and see such circumstances by which it is here said to be accompanied. How people should therefore be necessarily affected with it, he describes in the next words.

6. Before their face the people shall be much pained: all faces shall gather blackness.

*פניו Mippanau, before his face, i. e. at the very sight of them, or as Vatablus, præ metu ejus, through fear of them appearing, the people, יחילו Yachilu, shall be much pained, viz. with great pain, as those of women in travail. The word, though of greater latitude, is usually applied to the signifying of those, and so where it is otherwise used may be looked on as denoting no ordinary pains, but such as are very grievous and hard to be suffered: and therefore do Ours add for giving height to the signification of it, the word much, as if it were in the notion of the verb necessarily included, although not by others so fully and distinctly expressed, they contenting themselves with one bare verb of more general signification, as ^t *dolebunt, cruciabuntur, horrent, (or contremiscent.)

How much they should be pained, how greatly disturbed, should be discovered by their looks; so he adds, All faces shall gather blackness, or as in the Margin, pot, which is by many looked on as the proper signification of the word פארור Parur, as if it were altogether the same with פרור Parur, without the letter א, a, which occurs, Numb. xi. 8. where it is by Ours rendred pannes, by Others χύτρα, and olla, ^u a pot, or cacabus, a kettle, all to the same purpose, viz. such a vessel as things are boiled in over the fire, and it being therefore taken as the same with that, is literally rendred, olla, pot. So the Vulgar Latin, redigentur in ollam, shall be made a pot, or turned to a pot, by which, what is meant is manifest, and by Others generally shewed, viz. to be made in colour ^v like a pot. So the Doway Translation, which very literally used to render the Latin, expresseth it, adding that particle of similitude in this place, all visages shall be made like a pot. The LXX. πᾶν πρόσωπον ὡς πρόβατον χύτρας, (as likewise the printed Arabick which follows them كل وجه كسخام القدر every face is (or shall be) like the burntnefs, or blacknefs of a pot. The MS. Arabick likewise all faces, قبضوا سخام الطاجر have gathered the blacknefs of a pot. The Chaldee. All faces are covered אנרוכ אונמן נקדור with soot, black as a pot. The Syriack ܕܠܐ ܕܢܬܝܢ ܕܡܝܢ ܕܡܝܢ ܕܡܝܢ and all faces shall be black like the blacknefs of a pot. All these, it's manifest, understand alike, a comparison here to be drawn from the colour of the pot, and not the matter or metal of the pot to be meant, although from that also in other respects a comparison between that and the face may be drawn, as Isaiab xlviii. 4. there he saith, their brow was brass, but here it is otherwise; and therefore as in those translations which we have seen, so generally in most of the modern, in the rendring, respect had not so much to the pot as to the colour, as Ours in the Text renders blacknefs, without mention at all of the pot which the word properly signifies. So ^b Some render it only, nigredinem, or nigrorem, blacknefs. ^c Some luridum ollæ colorem, pale pot colour. ^d Some pallorem, palenefs, which the learned Mr. Lively prefers among the rest, as proper to the meaning of this place, even though it should be granted that the word did more properly signify blacknefs; and seems to approve Mercer's explaining it, nigricantem pallorem, a black palenefs, or wanness. All of them agreeing in this, that by it is meant such alteration as is caused in the face and looks, through much fear and perplexity, and is a sign of it, which likewise is the scope of another interpretation, which is clean contrary to this, as to the rendring of the noun Parur, making it not to signify blacknefs but beauty (both here, and Napum ii. 10. where the same expression occurs) as from פאר peer, beauty, shining comlinefs, (by doubling the last radical letter) so that the words may sound, All faces have gathered in, contracted, or withdrawn their beauty, which way take several of great note among the Jews, as Abu Walid and R. Tanchum, rendring in Arabick جمعت جمالها وقبضته ^e have gathered in and contracted their beauty: So looking on the affixe their as understood with the noun. Aben Ezra also looks on the noun so to signify, viz. the same that Peer, beauty or comlinefs, and the sense of the verb to be שיתקבץ ויתאסף that it contracts or gathers it self, ^f contrary to יתפשט Yithpasbet, which is spoken of a thing when it openly shews it self (or lays it self open,) and for illustration of this expression they bring, that where it is said נכבדים אספו נגדם and the stars shall withdraw their shining, (ver. 10. of this chap. and chap. iii. 15.) as looking on אסף Asaph, and קבץ Kabats, being of the same signification, viz. of gathering, or gathering up, both alike to denote withdrawing,) or taking up, or gathering in. But here Kimchi tells us that his father excepts against this interpretation, as not proper, in regard that (as he thinks) the verb קבץ Kabats, is not used for gathering up together, or gathering in a thing that is already present, as אסף Asaph is, but of gathering together that which is dispersed, or not present, But for all this nicety, that he will have to be in the distinct signification of these verbs, Rab-Tanchum comparing both significations of the words, this last mentioned shall draw in or withdraw their beauty, and the former, viz. gather blacknefs, or palenefs, saith that this, احسن واقوم بالمعني, i. e. makes a better and righter sense. Mean while whatever difference and even contrariety there be in the literal rendring of the words, they meet in one meaning, viz. to shew a great change and alteration in the countenance, from beauty to what is contrary to it; and to say a face hath lost its beauty, or that it hath gathered palenefs or blacknefs, is much the same thing, the receding of the one introducing the other. Ours we see in rendring it as they do, have the opinion and authority of the most Interpreters and Expositors on their side.

^m Pet. 2 Fig. ⁿ As when great armies are compared to Locusts in respect of their number, Bochart. part poster. p. 467. ^o Jerome on chap. i. 5, 6. ^p Of the several interpretations of that place see Bochart. part post. p. 459: ^q See Bochart. ^r Aldamiri. ^s Kamus, as likewise منظوم in Asap. ^t Druf. Tarn. ^u Jun. Trem. ^v LXX. ^x Chald. ^y Merc. the ordinary Version of the Chald. Syr. Bochart. ^z And Judges vi. 29. 1 Sam. ii. 14. ^a Kimchi.

What just cause of such consternation, and effects and signs thereof there should be to them, sufficiently appears from the preceding words, wherein the approach of those executors of God's judgments by him sent on them, so full of terror, is described. The same is yet farther amplified in some following verses, by declaring the terror of their acting, being come and set on their work. So ver. 7.

7. They shall run like mighty men, they shall climb the wall like men of war, and shall march every one on his ways, and they shall not break their ranks.

They shall run like mighty men] i. e. they shall go on with resolution, speed, and constancy, not fearing, failing, or fainting in their way. Such a constant unwearied proceeding in their course to be denoted by this expression we may perceive, by comparing it with the like, Psalms xix. 5. where it is said of the sun, that he rejoiceth as a strong man to run a race, the word is the same in both places, viz. גבור Gibbor (there in the singular, and here in the plural Gibborim) signifying a mighty or strong man; and in both places by Some rendred Giant, a known appellation of a man of such condition. The verb also in both places is the same רוץ, ruts, denoting running apace, importing ^g speed and strength. Both concurring in these so described, shews that they should go on ^h thoroughly in their work, as farther appears by what is added, they shall climb the wall like men of war, nothing shall stop them in

4 B

Jun. Trem. ^c Tig. ^d Cast. ^e i. e. saith he, زال رونقها منها لشدة الزرع والحواف. ^f So in Arabick قبض Kabada is contrary to بسط Basata, to spread or lay open. ^g Conjuncta est enim cum fortitudinis velocitas, Rib. Tarnov. ^h Strenue manus suum obeunt, Mercer.

Jun. Trem.

^c Tig.^d Cast.^e i. e. saith he, زال رونقها منها لشدة الزرع والحواف.^f So in Arabick قبض Kabada is contrary to بسط Basata, to spread or lay open.

Rib. Tarnov.

^h Strenue manus suum obeunt, Mercer.

in their proceedings, no fence secure any thing from them. If they meet with any such they shall ὄντες ἀμείνους καὶ δαμάτων ὑπάγχασαι (as Cyril speaks) being above sloth and fear, and like resolute soldiers scaling the walls of such places as are thereby defended, climb and pass over them, so that any immured ¹ gardens in inclosures shall be devoured by them, as well as open the fields; and in such their proceeding he saith, they shall march every one on his ways, and they shall not break their ranks, they will not be stopped or put out of order, but keep themselves in battle array, as above, ver. 5. where what is said will agree to these words also. What Ours render, they shall march every one on his ways, in the Vulgar Latin is read, Viri in viis suis gradientur, which those of Doway render, the men shall march in their ways, but Ribera thinks it to be an error of the scribe, who seeing the verb plural, gradientur, they shall march, to follow, thought that the noun was therefore to be of the plural number, and made it vir, men, instead of vir, which literally answers to the Hebrew איש Ish, which signifies indeed a man, but in such constructions imports as much as, singuli, they every one of them; so that the ^k verb is to be in the plural, though the noun be singular, by reason of, they, which contain as many singulars, each of which did so, understood. Evrey one of them should in such steady order march on in his way, that none of them should in the left violate it; so he adds, and they shall not break their ranks. Which words in our language as they are of a clear meaning, so I doubt not but they give the proper meaning of the words in the Hebrew; yet because there is a difference betwixt Interpreters in their translations, as concerning the literal meaning of the verb by Ours rendered, break, it will be convenient to look something into it, that so we may see, how they and ours may be reconciled one with another, and all with the original, which they labour to express. That verb in Hebrew is יעבטון yeabbetun, of which ¹ R. Sol. Jarchi, and ^m Kimchi note, that it is not elsewhere in the Scripture found so used, which makes it necessary to enquire more diligently in what sense it is here used, and upon what grounds Expositors do or may go. For this end the Hebrew Grammarians look on these as the most probable ways. First, that in giving the signification, respect may be had to a known and usual signification of the root עבט abat, which is to give a thing, or take a thing in pawn, or for a pledge, which thing is called עבט Abot, and that because a thing so given is retained and held back till it be redeemed by him that pawned it, this verb עבט Ibbet should signify to stop, or stay, or retard and withhold. To this notion the Chaldee Paraphrast renders it ארחתון Arachthon, and they do not retard their way, or make stop in their way. In which way several Others follow him, so Abu Walid يحتبسون في طرقهم they do not retard themselves, or make stop in their ways: which rendring is also mentioned by R. Tanchum, and by Kimchi (although they mention Others also) and the reason for this use of it which we have mentioned is in R. Tanchum's words, משתק מן לעבוס עבטו ורו, אלהן לאן אלהן מחבוס מעאק עלי קימה פנאכר, it is derived from abot (in leabot aboto, Deut. xxiv. 10.) which signifies a pledge (or pawn) inasmuch as what is pawned (or given for a pledge) is restrained and stopped for the value of that by which it is to be redeemed (or till the value of what it is pawned for be paid.) Hence they look on it as evident that the root hath in it the notion of restraining, stopping, or keeping back, and in this notion is it, as by the Chaldee, so by several modern Interpreters taken, as Pagnin. neque retardabuut itinera sua, and Munster, nec tardierunt in semitis suis; and in our ancients English Translation, that was in common use, it is read, and they shall not linger in their paths; and in that from Geneva, and they shall not stay in their paths.

2. There are who do likewise look on the meaning of the word here to be taken from that of a pledge or pawn, but in a respect different somewhat from that before mentioned, viz. in regard that in giving a pledge, a thing is borrowed and so transferred by loan from one to another, as if it sounded (as Kimchi, in his book of roots, gives that way of meaning) ולא ישאלו אורחותם זה לזה, and they shall not lend their way one to another, as Mercer well observes his words to mean, and not as by ⁿ Some they are rendred, they shall not ask one another the way, as Vatablus also reports it from Some, non interrogabunt iste ab illo de semitis suis, as if they should not stand so much as to enquire of one another the way.) In this acceptance of pawning or lending the MS. Arabick may seem to take it, rendring وكل واحد في طريقه يسير ولا يرتدون سبلهم and every one shall go on in his way, and shall not give (to take) in pawn their ways, viz. they shall not recede from their ways, or part with them one to another, but every one keep constantly their own. And the word being taken in this notion, a learned ^o Commentator looks on it as an elegant expression, by which is denoted, quod non permutent inter se, vel non mutant vias suas unus alteri, that they do not change among themselves, or lend as it were one to another their ways, but every one hold their own, keeping every one their place which they first occupied.

3. There is yet a way different from this, and not having respect to that signification of a pledge, but looking on it as signifying the same that עוות Ivvet (with which it agrees in sound with a change of letters) doth, viz. to pervert, wry, or make crooked, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi say the word likewise to signify in the Arabick Tongue. I think it well observed by

¹ Pet. à Fig. ^k As likewise sometimes in Latin. none is like it in the Scripture. ⁿ Pagnin. Lex.

^o אין לו חבר במקרא it hath no like: ^m אין לו דמיון Tarnov.

by the learned L. de Dieu, that that word is not in the Arabick Lexicographers given properly in that signification, however Aben Ezra might find it in his time used, and though some other notions of it reducible thereto may be found in it, as of cleaving, &c. But however, it is thought so probable that the word in Hebrew hath that notion, that we find most to follow it, both ancient, and modern Interpreters. The LXX. seem to take it, rendring, καὶ ἡ ἐκκλίνοσι πᾶς τριβὺς αὐτῶν. The printed Arabick follows them, ولا يميلون عن سبلهم: the Syriack also ܠܐ ܢܥܠܡܐ ܕܥܠܡܐ: and in the Vulgar Latin, non declinabunt à semitis suis, all to the same purpose, they shall not decline, turn or go aside from their paths. Several among the more modern also, among whom we find these and the like rendrings, Neque de semitis suis defleunt, neither do they go aside from their paths. Nullus à semita sua defleuit, none, &c. Non pervertent semitas suas, they shall not pervert (or make 'crooked') non obturbabunt itinera illorum, they shall not disturb their ways. These and the like all appear to take the word in that signification as agreeing with יוטת Iuvet, as we said, to pervert; and their meaning doth our last translation, in language proper to the thing spoken of, so express, as that likewise it is applicable to either of the other rendrings, and all of those ways in them mentioned, either the stopping of any when they should not, or their going, or thrusting others out of their places, or their not keeping straight in their ways, or even with others, but thwarting and crossing them, being, or causing, a breaking of their ranks. By this is their orderly proceeding denoted, which is farther expressed also in the next words.

8. Neither shall one thrust another, they shall walk every one in his path: and when they fall upon the sword they shall not be wounded.

So steadily shall they keep their ranks and their places which they at first take, that though they be so exceeding many, yet they shall not throng, or jostle, or take away their room one from another, but keep every one exactly in his own path. Such accurate order being requisite to be observed in great armies, lest their number rather bring confusion to themselves, than hurt to their enemies: it is that wherein the skill of military discipline consists in bringing them to, as that without which things are not like to succeed with them, for exercitus incompotus res est turbulentissima, & hostibus captu facillima, & penitus inutilis, a disorderly army is a very troublesome thing, easy to be conquered, and altogether useless; while they hinder one another by their disorder, how shall they fight? Exercitus vero pulchre dispositus, & ordine collocatus, &

amicis pulcherrimus videtur, & hostibus prope-modum invictus, & inexpugnabilis, but an army well composed, and ranked in good order, is both a very fair shew to their friends, and a terror to their enemies, and almost invincible, and hardly conquered by them; such well ordered armies have at all times and places done great things. If the words here then should be applied to enemies, as by some they are, they would in an high manner express both their courage and skill in war, and represent them as very terrible. Being applied to Locusts and like vermin, as with others we apply them, who having no king, no commander to set them in order, yet go forth all of them in bands so exactly ordered, what less shall they give to be thought of them? the great hand of God, ex cujus iubentis dispositione volitant, as Jerome speaks, by whose command (or ordering) they proceed, must needs be acknowledged in them: they must needs be acknowledged as his great army by him instructed and sent among them (as he speaks, ver. 25.) for performance of some great work, and their appearance must needs strike such terror into them, as hath been described, ver. 6. especially, when it shall be considered with what undaunted resolution and success, not by any means to be frustrated, they shall in such their order and unretarded course proceed; which in the next words is shewed by his saying, and when they fall upon the sword they shall not be wounded. Their boldness and resolution is shewed in that they shall not fear the sword, but dare to light even upon that; and their success in that, though they do so, yet they shall not be wounded. So  Kimchi* expounds these words אין דחיל דזוה נשאר אויבם, &c. this army is not like other enemies, whom you may hinder with the sword from coming upon you, but these light even upon the very swords, and are not wounded, viz. saith he, לקלותם, by reason of their lightness. This might suffice for giving the meaning of this verse, according to our Translation which we look on as most agreeable to the Hebrew; yet because we find very different rendrings among ancient Translators, as to several of the words, it may be convenient a little more narrowly to search into the signification of them. And, first, as to these words by Ours rendred, neither shall one thrust another, which are in Hebrew לֹא יִדְחֹק אֶחָד אֶת אֶחָד veish achieu lo yidchakun, and by most translated into the same meaning, as by Ours, giving to the verb the signification of pressing or thrusting, the LXX. uses a word seeming different in sense, rendring καὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ αὐτοῦ ἕως ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ, every one shall not recede from his brother, and the printed Arabick following them, وكل واحد من اخيه لا يهرب, and each of them shall not fly from his brother, viz. they shall not one part from another. This rendring of the Greek makes ^z Some to conjecture that that instead of yidebakun, they read ירחקון irchakun, with ר instead of d, from רחק Rachak, to be distant, or far from, to remove from. But perhaps it may not be necessary to say, that they read otherwise in the Hebrew than we now do, but only took the word דחק Dachak in a larger signification than is usually given it, of pressing or thrusting, viz. that, which in the Chaldee and Syriack it hath, of repellere, propellere, &c. to drive, or put off, or thrust away, and so might think it well enough expressed by a word that signifies to abstain, to fly, or keep himself from Others, which will be of like import with putting that from himself. As to the next words they shall walk every one in his path, they are in the Hebrew גבר במסלתו ילכון Geber bimseleto yelcun: there is likewise very great and scarce reconcileable differences betwixt ancient and modern Interpreters. The first word, גבר Geber, doth usually signify a man, one of power, strength, or authority, שיש לו גבורה על האשה, who hath power over the woman,^a as Kimchi explains it, and is properly spoken על בני אדם of mankind; yet as the same Author observes, here attributed to Locusts, or such creatures as he had before compared to גבורים Gibborim, strong men, (ver. 7.) and used as איש Ish, a man, foregoing, is to denote every one of them singly. The second word, מסלה Mesillab, signifies properly, a way cast up, or paved, from סלל salal to pave or cast up, yet used for a way or path in general. These being the known and undoubted signification of the words; How comes it to pass that in the Greek there is nothing like to either of them? for in that we read, καταβαρυνόμενοι ἐν τοῖς ὅπλοις αὐτῶν περὶσσεύονται, they shall go laden in their arms (or with their weapons) what is in this reconcileable with the Hebrew? Capellus, that he may make something towards it, saith, that instead of גבר Geber a man (or each one) they read with change of letters כבר Cabed, which signifies heavy; but how then shall מסלתו Mesillato signify his armour, or what word so signifying doth he think was read by them in place of it? Perhaps it might be easy to say that they read the first word Geber, as it now is, but looking on it in its notion of a strong, great, robust man (as elsewhere they render Gibber of the same note) πολέμιος, a man of might, think it here to import a man of arms or in armour, and that instead of ἐν τοῖς ὅπλοις, in arms (which was included in that former word) was by them put ἐν ταῖς ὁδοῖς, in their ways, so that the change was made by the scribe, not in the Hebrew Text, but in their translation, except we should think that for מסלתו they read משלתו, or משלחתו Mishlachatho, his armour. This I do not mention as placing any stress in it, but as seeming almost as probable as the other: as for the whole clause we say with Mercer, that the Greek reading ad Hebræum contextum applicari non potest, cannot be made agree with the Hebrew Text, nisi sensum eos potius secutos dicamus, unless we say that they followed rather the sense, quasi etiam graviore armatura induti, non propterea impediuntur quo minus in armis suis via sua vadant, as if, though these that should so run like mighty men, &c., were clad in heavy armour, yet they should not thereby be hindered from going on even in their arms, with expedition in their way. But what may be their intention in their so rendring we need not put our selves on uncertain conjectures, having so plain a meaning from the Hebrew, both in our own and other translations agreeable with it, and with the plain meaning both of the preceding and following words, as we have. Among Others we have in the verbal rendring of this clause on our side, the Vulgar Latin, which is, singuli in calle suo vadent; but in the next clause he is farther distant from us, than either the Greek, or any other ancient or modern translations that we have, as will by a brief view of it and some of them appear. The words in Hebrew being, ובעד השלח יפלו לא יבצעו Ubead hasheleach yippolu lo yibisau, which Ours very well render, and when they fall upon the sword (or dart, as in the Margin) they shall not be wounded. The Latin renders, Et per fenestras cadent, Et non demolientur, which the Doway renders, and through the windows they shall fall, and shall not be demolished (or shall take no harm, as the Margin hath it.) A very great difference is here, we see, in the rendring the word sheleach, from what is in Ours found, while what we render sword, he renders fenestras, windows; which signification why he gives to the word I know not: a known signification of it, and by all received, is a sword, dart, or other like arms, and in it elsewhere in the same Vulgar Latin several times used. Of the same notion is likewise سلاج Salabo in the Arabick Tongue, and שלחא shalcha in the Chaldee, but the signification of it for a window, I suppose is not elsewhere given; nor for the rendring it so doth St. Jerome himself give any reason, or alledge any authority; yet doth he take notice of the difference of it from the LXX. who render ἐν βέλεισιν on darts, and whom he censures for their translation of this verse, as if it did not at all, expositionis ordini convenire, agree to the order of the exposition: but his censures, I suppose, may rather agree to them in respect of the preceding words, which we have already considered, than of this word which they take in a known signification, although he fasten the ground of their error on their so understanding this word: but sure as to this single word, they give no improper notion. The fault that is, and occasion of difficulty, must be from the other words that they join with it, as besides those that precede, so from their subjoining to it αὐτῶν theirs, their darts, which is not found in the Hebrew, and clean alters the sense from what it would be without it; for whereas without it the words found, that they should fall or cast themselves on any weapons that should be held out against them, this must either found, that they

^p Who thinks it may be illustrated rather from the Ethiopick Tongue. ^q Cast. ^r Tig. ^s Jun. Trem. ^t Non obliquus, Merc. ^u Oecol. see Diodati Edit. in 4to. ^v Lively out of Xenoph. ^x And so Abu Walid. ^y Vulg. Lat. coarctavit. The Chaldee and Syriack having the same word with the Hebrew; other Latin Versions, prement, urgebant, impellent, all to the same purpose. ^z Schindler, Capel.

^a In radic. ^b Druf. ^c Others think it ought to be rendred passively, shall not be demolished, or hurt.

they should fall ^d with their own weapons, still keeping them about them, when they light or rest any where, which seems Theodore's opinion: or that others shall fall by their weapons, which seems Cyril's, as if by their consuming the fruits of the earth, and like provisions, with their teeth, which he takes to be understood by their darts, or weapons, people fell, i. e. were killed through famine: and then in their rendring the last words לֹא יִבְטְאוּ lo yibtsau, by ὅτι καὶ μὴ σωτηρίας ἔσονται, et non consumentur, they shall not be consumed, seems some difficulty, Theodore, understanding it, they shall not be satisfied, viz. in exercising hostility; and Cyril, that they (viz. the people) shall not be yet at an end, (viz. in their suffering what they did by the loss of the fruits of the earth, but must look for farther trouble and mischief from them coming into their cities and houses as follows,) but the printed Arabick done out of Greek renders the whole clause thus, وَبِسَهْمِهِمْ يَسْقُطُونَ وَلَا يَكْمَلُونَ jaculifque suis corruent, et rem ad exitum non perducent. And shall fall with their own darts, and shall not perfect or bring the matter to an end. By which version it appears that he read, as it is observed in some copies to be read, σωτηρίαν, actively, perficient, shall perfect or bring to perfection; which rendring may be confirmed by the rendring of the Syriack Interpreter in this place, ܕܡܢ ܕܡܪܝܬܗ ܕܡܪܝܬܗ ܕܡܪܝܬܗ rendred in Latin, præ armorum suorum pondere cadent, et rem ad exitum non perducent, they shall fall through the weight of their arms, and shall not bring the matter to an head. But however these may agree one with another, they differ, which is that we are to shew, all from that which Ours take to be the true meaning, and so doth the Chaldee Paraphrast also, who gives for the meaning of this last part of the verse, גְּבַר בְּכִישָׁה אֹלֵיךְ לְאַחֵר דְּאֵנוּן every one goeth in his path, to the place (or at the place) whither they are sent, they slay (or fight) and do not take money: where it appears that he takes the word הַשְׁלַח Hasselach, which the most render arms, or weapons (only the Latin, windows), in the usual signification of the root, sending, as if it devoured the place whither it was sent, ^f or that for which they were sent; then he adds, fighting or slaying, which is not in the Hebrew; by his adding which Pet. à Figuero thinks that he understood the words to be spoken not of Locusts but of enemies; then the last word, יִבְטְאוּ Yebtsau, he takes in a different sense, from what the others that we have seen do, viz. of taking money, as if he should say that they were not as other enemies, who would be satisfied, and taken off for money; but that was not it which these desired. Yet are there among modern Interpreters, who follow him in the rendring of this, who in the other take the same way that Ours do, which gives us occasion to enquire something into the signification of that word. The root בָּצַע Batsa therefore we shall find to have several significations, as, 1. The notion of coveting, and seeking after gain or profit, as Prov. xv. 27. בֹּצֵעַ בָּצַע, be that is greedy after gain, and Habak. ii. 9. בֹּצֵעַ בָּצַע רָע, that coveteth an evil covetousness, and oft elsewhere; and in this way the Chaldee, we see, here takes it, and so the Tig. nec lucro inbiant: another (in Vatab.) non studebunt avaritiæ: and so (in Calvin) non concupiscent: the MS. Arabick also done out of the Hebrew, وَالسَّالِحُ يَقْتُونُ, They shall fall after the sword (or weapons) and shall not covet. 2. The notion of perfecting, or bringing to an end, as Isaiah x. 12. כִּי יִבְצֵעַ אֶת כָּל מַעֲשָׂאוֹ, when the Lord hath performed his whole work, and Lament. ii. 17. בָּצַע אִמְרָתוֹ, he hath fulfilled his word. In this it is here, we see, taken by the Greek, printed Arabick, and Syriack.

3. The notion of cutting, cutting off, wounding, and the like, as Job vi. 9. יִבְצֵעֵנִי Vayibtseni, and would cut me off, and Isaiah xxxviii. 12. יִבְצֵעֵנִי, he will cut me off, and Amos ix. 1. וּבְצַעֲם Ubetsaam, and cut them (or wound them), as in the Margin. In this signification it agrees with פָּצַע Patsa, (b being changed into p) which signifies to wound, and as it is confirmed by R. Tanchum from the Arabick Tongue, in which بَضَعَ Badaa signifies to cut, cleave, or to break in pieces, as also in the Chaldee; and therefore is it by him, and by Abu Walid, here rendred by يَنْجُرُحُونَ, viz. they shall not be wounded. In this notion we see Ours take it with many Others, among whom perhaps the Vulgar Latin may also be reckoned, as by ^g Some demoliri in him is interpreted by concidere, and the meaning said to be concident se, vulnerabunt se, shall cut or wound themselves. The verb, though in form active, and so also in other places used, yet is here observed by Kimchi to be עוֹמֵד Omed, intransitive, and to have a passive signification. It having manifestly these different significations, and each of them having those of good note that chuse it and prefer it, we have, we see, liberty of choice, and take which way we will, we have such as are of good credit and authority to bare us company. But as far as I am able to judge, that, which Ours with many Others take, is in this place so far more conspicuous, (as agreeable to the undoubted signification of the Hebrew words) and of so good coherence with the preceding and following words, than either of the other, as that were it not in respect to the authority of those that take them, I should think all that we have said in mention of them, to be but a digression. To this way therefore we keep, and by it are directly led on to what follows in the next words, in which is farther described, what this army of God here spoken of, being of such boldness and agility, as these and the foregoing words set forth, shall proceed to do, viz.

VOL. I.

4 C

9. They

^d Mercer otherwise, in sua ipsorum ruunt jacula. ^f R. Sol. ^g Ribera.

^e Trucidant, though Some read trucidantur (Leusden) or

9. They shall run to and fro in the city: they shall run upon the wall, they shall climb up upon the houses: they shall enter in at the windows like a thief.

They shall run to and fro, &c.] The word so rendred is יִשְׁקוּ Yashokku, and that it is properly so rendred I think may not be doubted, being from the root שָׁקַק shakak, and such forms as are derived from it. ^h Kimchi notes the proper signification to be הֵחָלִיכָה בְּהִתְמַרְרָה, a going with continuance (or continual going up and down, as in his notes on this place הֵחָלִיכָה הִתְמַרְרָה) and he (as likewise Aben Ezra) thinks it to have affinity with the word שִׁיק shok, which signifies a leg; and that it is here properly spoken of Locusts, who have long legs, and with them יָנוּחַ וְלֹא יָנוּחַ are continually going, and seldom rest. But whatever may be thought of the nicety of that conceit, it is manifest enough that our word doth so signify, and that it is elsewhere also spoken of Locusts, as Isaiab xxxiii. 4. כָּמֶשֶׁק גְּבִיבִים שָׁקֵק בּוֹ As the running to and fro of Locusts shall be run upon them. In this signification of running up and down, or going, is the word here by many Interpreters apparently taken; as by the Vulgar, rendring, Ingrudentur, they shall enter the city; by Others also, per urbem ⁱ gradi-entur, or ^k per civitatem ambulabunt, or ^l in civitate discurrunt, or ^m civitatem percurrent, or ⁿ per civitatem current, or ^o urbem pervadunt. These all manifestly take that signification of the word, nor need we to think that the Greek take it otherwise, rendring, τῆς πόλεως ἐπιλήψονται, and the printed Arabick following them, بِاخْذُونِ الْمَدِينَةَ they shall take, or, seize on the city; or the Syriack rendring כַּסְפִּיָּהּ אֶלְכֵּהּ they shall go up into the cities; and the MS. Arabick فِي الْمَدِينَةِ يَقْبِضُونَ they shall pour out themselves (or rush together) in great multitudes in the city. R. Tanchum, יִדְרֹסוּ (or rather יִדְרֹסוּ) they shall trample. But the Chaldee Paraphrast seems to go wider off from any such signification, rendring בְּקִרְתָּא מוֹרִינִין in urbe armantur, or in civitate armati, &c. they are armed in the city, they run, &c. or as Others distinguish the clauses, In the city, being armed, they run upon the wall, &c. so that according to him the verb Yashakku should signify to be armed, as if it were from נָשָׂא, which signifies armour. R. Sol. Jarchi also goes as different from what Others follow, saying that the word signifies, הַשְׁמַעְתָּ הַקוֹל to make a noise: he doth indeed seem to take it for the signification of the word in the forecited Isaiab xxxiii. 4. explaining it by נֹהֵם Nohem, ^p roaring, or making a roaring noise, of which, besides his authority, I know no proof, as neither of the Chaldees rendring it, being armed; yet doth Abarbinel seem to like both these Interpreters, and to prefer them before the other, that in the first place, as taken by Others, whom Ours choose to follow, we mentioned, and looks on both of them as יְשִׁירָה right. His reason why he doth so is plain from himself, viz. because he thinks them better so to agree to those of whom he thinks the words here spoken, viz. not of Locusts, or such creatures, but of the Babylonians, who having gotten over the walls into the city, shall shout for triumph, and not presently set themselves to eat and drink and take their pleasure (as other enemies use to do) but arm themselves for farther fighting. The exposition of R. Solomon seems to follow Arias Montanus, in the Interlineary, putting in urbe crepabunt armis, in the city shall make a noise with their arms, (and Grotius himself rendring, adversus urbem concrepabunt arma, their arms shall make a noise (or rattle) against the city) whereas Pagnin had before put, per urbem incedent, they shall go through the city. But the rendring, which Ours follow, seems much more agreeable to the words, and the known signification of them, and the following clearly agree with them, declaring, what, being got into any city, they should there do in every part thereof, leaving none free or unassaulted, none being inaccessible to them. They shall run upon the wall. Above, ver. 7. he said, they shall climb the walls, here בְּחֹמָהּ יִרְצֹן Bachomah yerutsun, they shall run upon the wall, as having gotten possession thereof, and not to be hindred from going from place to place, none being able to stay them; nor shall the houses in the city be freer from them, They shall climb up upon the houses; 'tis not the height of any of them that shall hinder them from getting into them, nor the shutting of the doors thereof against them, that shall keep them out, for if they find no other entrance, they shall enter in at the windows like a thief. That it is the practice of thieves so to make an entrance into houses, that they find otherwise shut or barred, appears, as by common experience, so by that expression of our Saviour, John x. 1. that he that entreteth not in by the door, but climbeth up some other way, is a thief: ^q This seems not here said as if they spoken of were afraid, as thieves often are, to be discovered, but to shew that they would not be hindred by any means of shutting doors, or the like, but would find out any way of entrance, were it never so high or uneasy to be come to, and so by no means kept out. These words, by which the bold carriage of those in this and the former words spoken of, is described, might well agree to a stout victorious army, such as that of the Babylonians, which Abarbinel and Others would have here to be described: yet that it may also be well spoken of Locusts, or such creatures which are God's army, may appear by what is said of them, Exod. x. 5, 6. that they should cover the face of the earth, that one should not be able to see the earth, &c. and that they ^h In his Notes. ⁱ Pag. Drusius. ^k Munst. ^l Tig. ^m Jun. Trem. ⁿ Ifc. ^o Cast. ^p Yet may it be here brought to the first mentioned notion, if it be understood of such a noise as they make with their legs, as Mercer seems to understand it. ^p Merc. Tarnov.

they should fill Pharaoh's houses, and the houses of all his servants, and the houses of all the Egyptians, &c. Of them Jerome here saith, nihil Locustis invium est, that there is nothing inaccessible to them, they not only seizing on the fields, corn, trees, but also, entering into cities, houses, and the most private chambers. Cyril also to the same purpose: Theodoret likewise, that no height of walls can keep them from entering, for that they easily get over the walls, and like thieves enter into the houses through the windows, which, saith he, as an eye-witness, ὁ μόνον ὑπὸ πολεμίων, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὑπὸ ἀκρίδων γεγενημένον πολλάκις ἰδρασάμεθα, we have seen done not only by enemies, but by Locusts, &c. To the same, that are spoken of in these words, is respect had likewise in the following words, declaring what dreadful things shall attend or ensue on their coming with such violence, and in such great multitudes.

10. The earth shall quake before them, the heavens shall tremble, the sun and the moon shall be dark, and the stars shall withdraw their shining.

רָגַזָּה אֶרֶץ Rageza arets, literally, the earth hath quaked, the verb, as likewise those that follow, being of the præterperfect tense, and so by several translated; so the Vulgar Latin renders, Contremuit terra, moti sunt celi, Sol & Luna obtenebrati sunt, & stellæ retraxerunt splendorem suum, The earth hath trembled, the heavens have been moved, the Sun and Moon have been darkened, and the stars have withdrawn their shining, all in the præter tense; so are all also in the Chaldee Paraphrase, and in the Syriack Version, and the MS. Arabic; and in some modern translations, as the Interlineary, movit se terra, &c. Munst. contremuit terra, & commoti sunt celi, &c. Drus. commota est terra: yet do^s Others render them in the present tense, contremiscit terra, &c. and Mercer in his translation of the Chaldee, though in that the verb be, as in the Hebrew, of the præter tense. Others again, whom Ours choose to follow, put all in the future tense, and that they do well in doing so there is no question, in regard that in the prophetick stile, the præter tense is usually put to signify what is yet to come, it, which is spoken of, being (God having determined and said it) as certain as if already done; and therefore in such things, as are spoken by way of prophecy, as these are, are verbs, which according to their form seem to speak of what is past, as well rendred by the future or present tense, as by the præter; and according as the matter requires, so is the time to be assigned. A greater difficulty will be to know, in what meaning the words shall be taken, whether in their proper signification, as that the earth shall really quake, the heavens tremble, the Sun and Moon be darkened, &c. or so as to give us to conceive some other thing, than what they do properly signify. For in this is no small difference betwixt Expositors. Some will have the words to be properly understood as they sound; that they ought so to be, Theodoret thinks it probable, though he thinks they may be otherwise understood. But Arias Montanus is very peremptory for it against other acceptations, saying, that he doth not interpret them hyperbolically, or spoken only of men, that by the army here spoken of (whether he understood it of Locusts or Assyrians, as I suppose he did, will be all one, as to this matter) they should be brought into such a fear, as if the earth should seem to them to tremble, the heavens to be shaken, the sun and the moon not to give light, by which kind of expressions, Poets do use to set forth great fear in men and great disturbance of things. What great fear and perplexity the people should be in, he saith the Prophet had before expressed, ver. 6. that before their face the people should be much pained, all faces should gather blackness; but what things are here spoken of, he thinks are simpliciter expectanda, simply and really to be expected, like those things by it foretold (Luke xxi. 25.) that there should be signs in the Sun, and in the Moon, and in the Stars, &c. Of the same mind with him seems to have been Drusus, in understanding it to denote, that together with the Locusts should be thunder, by which he should shake the heaven, and an earthquake by which he should cause the earth to quake, whether to shew that the army, with such signs accompanied, was from him, or rather to strike the greater terror into the ungodly people, to deter them from sinning and bring them to repentance. But whatever reason there seems to be to these for such a literal understanding of these words, yet do Others choose to embrace that way, which Montanus rejects, viz. that the words should rather be looked on as an hyperbolical expression, of what was not really so as the words sound, but such as might make men conceive things so to be, or as rare and great above what is ordinarily seen, as if they were so. This was anciently St. Jerome's opinion, viz. that these things are spoken of hyperbolically (or above what was really done) non quod Locustarum aut hostium tanta vis sit, ut possit movere celos & terram concutere, &c. not as if there were so great force, either in Locusts or enemies, as that they could move the heavens or shake the earth; but because adversa patientibus præ terroris magnitudine, & cælum ruere, & terra fluctuare videntur, to those on whom any great calamity is fallen, through the greatness of the terror they are in, the heavens seem to fall, and the earth to rock up and down, and withal (as to the last words) by reason of the multitude of the Locusts here spoken of, that should cover the heavens, the Sun and the Moon should (it is said) be turned into darkness, and the stars withdraw their light, viz. while by a cloud of them interposed, the light of them should be hindred from coming to the earth.

^s So Bochart. observes it is to be read.

^s And see Mat. xxiv. 29.

^s Tig. Castal.

^s Pag. movebit, Jun. Trem. movebitur, &c.

earth. This is the meaning of the words by him given, the like to which Theodoret, besides what we have already said of him, mentions; Cyril appears to be of the same mind, understanding it of such a confusion made by Locusts, ὡς ἢ ὅτι δοκεῖν καὶ αὐτὸν δεδονῆσθαι τὸν οὐρανόν, &c. as that even the very heaven shall seem to be shaken, and the sun and moon and stars, as it were, to restrain their light, and so with him also is this, ὑπερβολικὸς ὁ λόγος, an hyperbolical speech, denoting an intolerable and very grievous calamity to the inhabitants of the land: which he saith will hold true, as well if understood of enemies, as Locusts. The Jewish Expositors seem to be likewise of this mind, so Kimchi, הכל משל לרוב הצרה כי כן ירד הכתיב that all the expressions are parabolical (or figurative) to set forth the greatness of a calamity, it being the use of the Scripture so to speak, as Isaiah xiii. 10. The stars of heaven, and the constellations thereof shall not give their light: the sun shall be darkened in his going forth, and the moon shall not cause her light to shine, and * elsewhere. Abarbinel to the like purpose, that by saying the earth shall quake, is meant, the inhabitants of the land of Israel shall quake by reason of them, and that לרוב הצרה because of the great affliction it is said, The heavens tremble, the sun and the moon are dark, and the stars withdraw their shining, שהוא כלו משל לצרות בני יהודה, which all is a parabolical expression of the calamities of the Jews, like to what Solomon speaks in description of such accidents, as befall an old man (or, old age) * עַר אֲשֶׁר לֹא חָשַׁךְ הַשֶּׁמֶשׁ, while the sun is not darkened, &c. So that the passions or effects wrought, whether by the coming of those clouds of Locusts, which Kimchi looks on as here spoken of, or of the great army of the Babylonians, of which Abarbinel understands them, † are in the people, the inhabitants of the land, and who were wont with comfort to enjoy the orderly course of the heavens, and the pleasant light of the sun, moon, and stars, are put into such disorder, as that all those things seemed to them to be out of order, and their usual course; and not in those things themselves: yet doth Abarbinel withal say that those words, the heavens tremble, &c. may in his opinion be literally understood, so as to denote that the heavens and the powers therein, should now have evil influence on Israel, who had caused God to hide his face from them. That the words are in such parabolical, or hyperbolical meaning to be taken, is likewise the opinion of several (we may say most) modern Expositors among Christians, whether such as think Locusts, or such as think enemies here to be spoken of) viz. that men should be in such a consternation through the clouds of Locusts filling the air, and even darkening the heavens, or through the multitude and great tumults of the enemies putting all things into a great hurry, or confusion; so that things shall be in as great disorder to them, as if those things, which are literally expressed, had been really done. So Drusius on the latter words (though different from what we saw of his opinion of the whole verse) ita videtur metu confternatis; so it seems to those that are astonished with fear. He also cites that place which expresseth the old man's dimness of sight, by saying the sun light and moon were grown dark to him, Eccles. xii. 2.

There is yet another interpretation of these words by Some taken, who looking upon the expressions as allegorical, will have by the earth to be understood men, or things of a lower degree, or ordinary rank; by the sun, moon, and stars, such as are more noble, or of higher degree, and so by saying what is spoken of as to both the one and the other, under the notions of quaking, being darkened, and withdrawing their shining, to be denoted such great fear and calamities, as should befall them all in their several conditions, none escaping fire. This way † Some approve of, and Dr. Stokes in his English Paraphrase takes his words, being, "The terror of the lower and meaner sort of people may be conceived by the fearful effects of an earthquake, so may the sad ruin of the nobles by the shaking of the heavenly or higher powers, and the woful confusion of all order and command (that followed upon that) by the darkning of the sun and moon, and the stars withdrawing their wonted lustre, to the astonishment of all the spectators, as well as those eminent persons, that will be most concerned in that calamity." But however this allegory may otherwise be made good, and that which these say be also true as to matter of fact; yet I suppose it not so proper a meaning of this place, as the former, taking the words as hyperbolical, and expressing things more than ordinary in their kind, in terms agreeing properly to other of an higher nature. That such instruments of mischief as are spoken of, whether Locusts, or even the strongest enemies among men (as Others will have it) should work such dreadful effects, as the words seem to import, may seem strange; but all the wonder will be taken off, if we shall consider how and by whom they are set on work, by whose might and command they act, which the next words declare.

II. And the Lord shall utter his voice before his army: for his camp is very great: for he is strong that executeth his word, for the day of the Lord is great and very terrible, and who can abide it?

Different expositions have we of these words, though all tending to the same scope. And the Lord (saith he) נָתַן קוֹלוֹ Natan Kolo, shall utter his voice, literally, bath given (or uttered)

* Ezek. xxxii. 7. † Eccles. xii. 2. which Aben Ezra also quotes. † Aben Ezra, נָתַן אֲנִשׁוֹ אָרֶץ, the men on earth tremble. † Oecolamp. Danæus, omnibus rebus eum pavorem denuntiat futurum Joel, cum minimis quæ terræ nomine designantur, tum etiam maximis ac eminentissimis quæ solis lunæ ac stellarum vocabulis hic comprehenduntur.

uttered) his voice; for the word is of the preter-tense, and is as so by several rendred, amongst others by the Vulgar Latin, Et dominus dedit vocem suam, and the Lord has given his voice. So several others both ancient and modern, as the Syriack ܝܗܐܒ ܕܠܗܐ Yahab Koleh, hath given his voice (though the Latin Interpreter renders it dabit, shall give.) The Chaldee ܐܪܝܡ ܡܝܡܪܐ, hath lifted up his word, and agreeably to him the MS. Arab. رفع صوته, hath lifted up his voice. So among the more modern the Interlineary and Munster, &c. But the LXX. give it in the future-tense, καὶ ἀκούσει ὁ δῶσε φωνὴν αὐτοῦ, and the printed Arabick following them, والرب يعطي صوته, and the Lord will give his voice, and so some a more modern, which we see Ours choose to follow, rendring, shall utter, and it is by Some b noted that the preter-tense stands here for the future. c There be also who render it in the present-tense, edit vocem suam, or sonitum edit, doth utter his voice, or give a sound or alarm. These all have to justify them the use, which we have formerly d observed, of the prophetic stile, in putting verbs, whether they speak of things present, or yet to come, as well of things past, in that tense, by reason of their certainty, and necessary accomplishment: so that whether we look on the judgment spoken of (if it be understood of Locusts and such like nouns above named) as already begun; and having seized on them, or as yet only menaced, as to the expression it will be all one. Junius and Tremellius also leave it indifferent, in their rendring the word not in any of these tenses, but in the participle, which will be to be understood as to the time, according as that to which it is connected is. Jehovah autem edente vocem suam ante copias suas, &c. ecquis sustinebit eum? The Lord uttering his voice before his armies, &c. who shall abide that day? A greater difference betwixt Expositors is concerning that voice of his, which it is said the Lord shall utter before his army; what is meant by it we have here in the first place the opinion of e several among the Jews, who by this voice of the Lord understand, The word of the Lord in the mouth of his Prophets, foretelling of the judgment here threatened, as if he had said that these things came not (or were not to come) on them unawares, but such as they were forewarned of by the ministry of the Prophets, that so they might turn by repentance. But this interpretation another of them (Aben Ezra) faith אֵינֶנּוּ עַל רֶדֶךְ הַלָּשׁוֹן not to be agreeable to the language or letter of the words, but the voice f to be the great noise by them made, God giving them power to make such a noise, as that both the inhabitants of the land, and of the earth itself should tremble at it, and g whereby they should be encouraged and encourage one another h in their going on to execute God's command. But the first of these opinions Mercer censures as frigid. And the second (that of Aben Ezra) to be longe alienius, much less to the purpose. In the second place then among i Christians there are, who by his voice will have to be understood thunder, with which the coming of these his forces spoken of should, for testifying his presence and striking terror in men, be accompanied. For that the thunder is elsewhere called his voice is manifest. As Psalms xviii. 13. and xxix. 5, &c. Yet do Others not think it necessary to understand it of any such audible voice, but of God's ordering and ordaining such his army and camp, as he calls it, and putting courage into them for executing his command or will, k which prevailed on them as much as the voice or words of a commander animating his soldiers: his so doing shewing them that he owned them as his forces; and they, his camp being very great and numerous, requiring that they should be so directed and ordered by him, that they might all keep their rank and do their duty, which they accordingly with irresistible force and courage should do. For he is strong that executeth his word, i. e. he that is employed by him in executing his word, and is set on work by him, shall by him be endued with power and strength so as not to fail, nor possibly be hindered in performing what he is commanded to do: and by this means great calamity must needs befall them against whom they are by him sent, for the day of the Lord is great and very terrible, and who can abide it? The day of the Lord l The time when he shall make himself known, by executing such his judgments on his enemies, shall be a very extraordinary day, and very terrible, by reason of the great calamities that he shall in it by the instruments of his wrath inflict upon them, so that none shall be able to abide it. The putting it by way of question, who shall, &c. is a denying that any shall be able to do it. The learned Bochartus rendring the words, Dominus dedit vocem suam ante exercitum suum, ut magna sint castra ejus, Et multus sit, &c. The Lord hath uttered his voice before his army, that his camp may be great, that there may be many to execute his word; For great is the day of the Lord, and very terrible, and who can abide it; explains them thus, Dominus verbo suo multas conscripsit copias, ut grave in peccatores judicium exercent, quodque nemo sustinere possit. The Lord hath by his word lifted (or mustered) great m or many forces, that he may execute heavy judgments on sinners, such as none shall be able to abide: and this he faith seems to him to be the meaning of the Prophet, quomodo interpretes longe aliter sentiunt, although other Interpreters seem to think far otherwise. There are also different rendrings and expositions, as the first, so of either of the words; for whereas Ours render, for a Pagnin. b Vatab. Piscat. c Tig. Merc. Castal. d See on chap. i. ver. 4. and the verse before this. e R. Solomon, R. D. Kimchi, Abarbinel. f Verse 1. g Verse 10. h Druf. i Lively, Druf. k Mercer. l So above also called, chap. i. 15. and Maimonides observes any such day, wherein the Lord manifests any signal deliverance or execution, to be so called in this place, part. 2. chap. 29. m Druf. observes that strong men be understood as well of number as strength, or that they were many that executed his word.

be is strong that executeth his word, the Vulgar read quia fortia & facientia verbum ejus, because they (i. e. castra ejus, his camp) are strong and doing his word. The Greek ὅτι ἰσχυρὰ ἔργα λόγων αὐτοῦ, because the works of his words are strong; as likewise the Syriack and printed Arabick, مفعول حبرا مفعول and strong is the work of his word, so the printed Arab. اعمال كلماته قوية: But the MS. Arab. عظيم فاعل خطابه be is great or strong that doth his word, as Ours. But which soever of those rendrings or expositions of the words, that we find, we shall take, the scope of them still seems the same, viz. that they are to make them duly sensible of the great danger of their condition, that they must certainly expect that those heavy judgments, which have all along hitherto in this prophecy been threatned to them, shall fall upon them if not prevented, and that they cannot by any power of their own be prevented; however the instruments by which 'tis said they shall be executed may seem in themselves not of such irresistable force, seeing they act not of themselves alone, but by the command of God who employs them, and by his might, which none can be able to resist, and stand out against: so that there is no way for escaping the terror of their coming but by making peace with him, and being reconciled to him by repentance, that so he may recall his command to them, and repent him of the evil which he had employed them about; which way, as the former words all along have shewed what need they had to take, so the following exhort them to, giving hopes of good success in it.

12. Therefore also now, saith the Lord, turn ye even to me with all your heart, and with fasting, and with weeping, and with mourning.

וְגַם עַתָּה נָא יְהוָה שׁוּבוּ, literally, and also now the saying of the Lord, Turn ye, As to the construction of these words, Drusus notes that the particles, also now, are not to be joined with the verb return, so as to sound, The Lord saith now (or yet even now) turn ye; but with, The Lord saith, so as to sound, The Lord also now saith, turn ye unto me: as he had before called upon them oft by his Prophets, so even yet, now also, he calls upon them that they would return. ^a Others seem to take rather the other construction, as if that, which the Lord said, were, even now turn ye unto me: which either be taken, the meaning will be much the same, that though the heavy judgments hitherto described and threatned were such, as they could by no force resist, nor be able to stand out against; and therefore the case seemed desperate with them, yet there was a door of hope by God himself amidst his threats opened unto them, which by himself, though by them provoked to so great wrath, they were invited and called upon to make use for their escape, either by preventing them before they were come, or averting them being come. As to assigning the time to which this call is to be adapted, Abarbinel seems to take it to belong to that which was after the destruction of the first temple, and the interim of their being captives in Babylon, and to have respect to their return from captivity, and the building of the second temple; as if he should say, that though they had not repented before the coming of those things on them, yet even now after that destruction and their captivity God did say to them, Turn, &c. With him in this agrees Arias Montanus saying, that in hoc loco divina illa Judaicarum rerum restitutio prædicitur, quæ post certos annos, hoc est septuaginta, contigit, in this place is that prediction of the restoration of the Jewish affairs, which happened after a certain number of years, viz. seventy, which God so brought to pass, that he might preserve that nation, out of which the great Redeemer of the whole world was to arise, yet it not being convenient, that the greatest benefits of God's mercy should come on men without faith and repentance, etiam in hoc tempore & in hac conditione constitutos Judæos, even at that time he exhorts the Jews, being in that condition, to the exercise of repentance for that end. But this way of exposition I look on as singular to them; Others, such as look on the executioners of God's judgments before spoken of to be Locusts, and such creatures above mentioned, as we have seen, and whose opinion we think most probable, looking on these words as prescribing the only way for preventing their coming, or removing them being come; and such as look on them to be other enemies, taking them likewise to prescribe the only way for preventing them; still that way is the same, viz. such repentance as is by the words described, by its nature and requisite conditions, which will by viewing the words in order appear. Turn ye (saith he) unto me. The ways, it appears, that they had taken, and were now in, were wrong, and such as led them away from God, and caused him to turn away his gracious presence from them, and to threaten to, or send on them, all those forementioned evils, for averting which it is necessary that they change their course, and turn from those ways, that they might turn to him, and to such as pleased him, עָדָי to me, saith he, i. e. saith the Chaldee לפולחני lepulchani, to my service, as if they had forsaken his service, yielded themselves as servants to Others, whether idols or sins be meant, or most probably both, both must they necessarily turn from, that they may turn as they ought to God, who calls on them, Turn unto me, עָדָי A dai, even to me; so Ours render it, adding, above what divers others have, the particle even, to shew that there is great emphasis in the word for expressing the manner of the conversion which is required; that it be such as do not only cause them to look back-

^a Tamen si vel nunc saltem resipueritis, &c. Lively, O that even now you would return. Dr. Stokes etiam in hoc ipso temporis articulo spem veniæ restare clamitat. Tarnov. הֵם רָמוּ לַפְּקִידוֹת בֵּית שְׁנֵי.

backwards towards God, but to come fully home to him, and with what integrity and sincerity that ought to be done, the next words shew, being כָּל־לִבְכֶם with all your heart. With the heart it must be done, not in outward shew only, but with inward affection of the heart, and that of the whole heart שְׁלֵא תִהְיֶה הַתְּשׁוּבָה בִּלְבָב וּלֵב (saith Kimchi) so that their repentance be not with (or from) an heart, and an heart, * a double deceitful heart, an heart divided between God and their idols, or other sins, which, while it makes shew of turning to God, yet hath affection to those other things, so contrary to him as that he cannot be entirely loved and served together with them. 'Tis that which he requires in our love and service to him, that it be with all our heart, with all our soul, and with all our might, Deut. vi. 5. with all our mind, as our Saviour † adds in repeating that first and great commandment, (without obeying which no other can be duly observed) Mark xii. 30. In observing this the first mover and acter must be the heart, without whose setting on work, all performances of the outward man are insufficient and vain, yea displeasing. And therefore in their returning to him it is required in the first place, that it be with the heart in the inward man; but when this shall have duly performed its part, then is not the outward man left unconcerned, but hath his part to act also in performance of such things whereby he may express, how the inward man of the heart is really affected; and so by the joint concurrence of both is true conversion or repentance made up. So therefore to what is to be performed by the hidden man of the whole heart, he adds what it is to be expressed by, or accompanied with, in the outward man, And with fasting, and with weeping, and with mourning. 1. With fasting, which will make for the humbling of the heart, which pampering of the flesh is apt to puff up, and make infatiate and insensible of its own condition, and forgetful of God and his service, as Jesurun, who being waxed fat kicked, and forsook God which made him, and lightly esteemed the rock of his salvation (Deut. xxxii. 15, &c.) To waiting therefore on God's service and prayer, is it usually joined in scripture, as almost a necessary concomitant, called for by God, and by holy men practised. 2. And with weeping, and with mourning, those also are usually signs by which an heart thoroughly affected with grief and sorrow expresseth its passions, which, being by it stirred up, do also gain farther, by a reflexed act, stir up in it those passions, and work in it more sorrow, † and so have their effects on the person himself, for increase of his repentance, as well as for the shewing it: besides the use of it for stirring up in Others like passions, and provoking them also to repentance; which in publick assemblies, or days of humiliation and penitence, such as here seems called for, will be of great use, and a great help to devotion; ‡ people by their example provoking one another. Of these things named (viz. fasting, weeping, and mourning) Arias Montanus well saith, hæc enim, si pure sanæque fiant, non quidem conversio ipsa; sed laudatissima sunt conversionis argumenta. For these things, if in sincerity of heart, and in holy manner done, though they be not the very conversion, or turning to God itself, yet are they very commendable arguments or tokens of turning to him: what is required therefore in such a turning to God, as shall be acceptable to him; he expresseth farther in the next words.

13. And rent your heart and not your garments, and turn unto the Lord your God: for he is gracious, and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repenteth him of the evil.

That in token of great indignation, grief, and sorrow of heart, and like passions, it was anciently a custom among the Jews (not to speak of other nations) to rent their clothes, is made manifest by many expressions and examples in scripture, as that it will be needless to give any particular instances of it. It being grown into a custom, there is no doubt but that it might be as well done in hypocritical and feigned manner, as well as in real and sincere, as well to make a shew of sorrow only, as really to testify it. The Prophet therefore here exhorting to true and serious repentance, with hearty compunction and grief for sins, and to express the same by true signs and tokens of it, cautions together against such hypocritical behaviour, whereby if they thought to deceive God, they would certainly deceive themselves. He doth not forbid the use of such outward behaviour, by which their repentance might be expressed; his calling on them for such as are before expressed, sheweth that he rather required them, and so his expression here is not to prohibit that here mentioned, but only to require it to be done in acceptable manner, which is when it is not only done in outward shew, but accompanied with the inward affection and sincere intention of the heart, which is called here, the renting of the heart, and not of the garment (viz.) only. What is meant by renting of the garments, is easily at the first hearing understood, being plain and proper language: but what by renting of the heart not so easily, as being a figurative expression, and so something by it meant, which the words do not properly sound. For here is meant plainly something, which may be for the bettering and rectifying of the heart, not the total destruction of it, as the rending of it would necessarily be. I suppose therefore it may be sufficient to take by rending of the heart here, in opposition to the rending of the garments, to be understood, as required to be in the heart, that which by the rending of the garments they would make shew of, viz. an hearty sorrow for their sins, with a desire of being rid of them, with which a penitent nitent heart really affected is stiled a broken and contrite heart, or agreeable to the expression here a rent and torn heart; agreeably any greatly grieving thing in ordinary language is said to cut ones heart, or cut him to the heart. To this purpose is the meaning of the words given by the Chaldee Paraphrast, ואערו רשעו לכבין, and remove (or do away) the wickedness of your heart, taking the heart for things contained in or proceeding from the heart, and (that) not with the rending of your garments. (viz. alone.) * For illustrating this expression of rending the heart, * Some compare it with that other expression of circumcising the foreskin of the heart, Deut. x. 16. which cannot likewise be understood of cutting the substance, or material part of the heart, but of the removing the corrupt affections thereof, the foolishness or grossness thereof, as the Chaldee there renders it, which is the work of serious repentance, and to be wrought on, and in the inward man, without which any things wrought on the flesh or garments of the outward man are but unprofitable shews, however with it significant, and making both for stirring up and giving testimony of it. And as that is called circumcision made without hands (Col. ii. 11.) so is this also a rending of the heart without hands; both being of the heart in the spirit, and not in the letter (as he speaks of the one, Rom. ii. 29.) both consisting in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh, Col. ii. 11. The work of a truly penitent heart on itself, is cutting off from itself those sins which by long continuance were become as it were natural to it, and part of itself. When they shall have thus and for that end rent, and ript up by a narrow search the recesses of their hearts, to discover the abominations thereof, and washed them away with weeping and unfeigned repentance, resolving not to continue in committing the like. Let them not (though they have by their former sins so far provoked God as to threaten them with severe and seeming irrevocable judgments as have been mentioned) yet despair, as if there were no hope of escape, but turn unto the Lord their God, and yet beg mercy at his hands. And turn (saith he) unto the Lord your God. We have in the foregoing verse the same exhortation, as from the mouth of God himself, speaking in his own person. Turn to me. Here we have it as from the mouth of the Prophet speaking from him, with addition of such words as may give them * boldness of access with confidence, to him, whom otherwise, considering how greatly they had provoked him, and with what terror of threats and judgments he had hitherto in this Prophecy revealed himself unto them, they might have feared to approach unto, and despair of finding mercy. The names, by which he is here called יהוה and Elobim, set him forth as a God of judgment, so of mercy, as infinite in mercy also to pardon in the former he had shewed himself to them; his intent here of discovering himself to them, in the latter, viz. of mercy, is shewed sufficiently in the affixe נצח cem, yours, by his owning them yet for his people, and calling himself their God, for the Lord will not certainly forsake them whom he yet owneth for his. But this is much more fully yet declared, amplified, and ascertained to them by those other epithets and properties of his subjoined and added as a reason why they should not doubt nor delay to turn unto him, viz. that he is, gracious and merciful. These attributes of God here mentioned are agreeable to those which he proclaimed, whereby to make his name known, Exod. xxxiv. 6. The very words, all the former of them (only with the change of order in the first two) are there found; though something differently translated by Ours, there read by Ours merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth, but here gracious and merciful, slow to anger and of great kindness. The words of all these in the Hebrew are the very same in both places, though it pleased our Translators differently to english them in the one from what they do in the other, of which one may serve for the explication of the other, the meaning being in both the same, but the last attribute ונחם על הרעה and repenteth him (or repenting which Aben Ezra observes a noun adjective) of the evil, it is not there in Exodus expressly joined to them, though it may be well understood out of what there follows, forgiving iniquity, transgression and sin; for forgiving these will * include that which is meant by repenting of the evil, which he had threatned to send. The former of these attributes will to any considering man be, I suppose, as well understood of themselves, as they would be by endeavouring to explain them in other words, but as for the last, repenting of the evil, it is not so easily intelligible; the meaning of the word repenting admitting of some ambiguity. For whereas here and elsewhere it is said of God that he repenteth, as, Gen. vi. 6. that it repented him that he had made man, and 1 Sam. xv. 11. that it repented him that he had set up Saul to be king, and Jonah. iv. 2. as here, that he repenteth him of the evil: and when Moses besought the Lord that he would turn from his fierce wrath, and repent of the evil that he had pronounced against his people, Exod. xxxii. 12. and it is said, ver. 14. And the Lord repented of the evil which he thought to do unto his people, it is elsewhere on the contrary said that God doth not, or cannot repent. So Numb. xxiii. 19. God is not a man that he should lie, neither the son of man that he should repent; and 1 Sam. xv. 11. of which before cited it was said that he repented, it is in ver. 29. said, The strength of Israel will not lie, nor repent, for he is not a man that he should repent. From which seeming, at first hearing, contradictory places it is manifest, that repenting or repen-

* Psalm xii. 3. † Chron. xii. 38. ‡ Mat. xxii. 38. † Lament. iii. 51. Mine eye affecteth mine heart. * Kimchi.

* Psalm li. 17. * Kimchi also so gives the meaning. If ye would rent your heart and remove from it evil thoughts, ye should not need to rent your garments, as men use to do in time of sorrow. * Aben Ezra. * Eph. iii. 12. * Elobim is observed to be nomen judicii, יהוה nomen gratiæ. Ar. Mont. Buxtorf. * Mercer.

rance is taken in different senses ; sometimes so as to be properly and peculiarly spoken of men, but not of God, nor to be attributed to him : sometimes so as that it is spoken of God also, and attributed to him. Properly therefore and in its stricter signification taken, it imports a change of mind in the persons spoken of, with sorrow for something done, which proves or succeeds otherwise than they were aware of, or do now like and approve of, and could therefore wish it had not been done, and now seek, if it be in their power, to revoke and alter it, such is usual in men and their actions ; but sure of God and his dealings, no such thing can properly be said. He is unchangeable, and so are all his purposes, nor hath any thing that he doth, any other issue than he foreknew and foresaw, and what alteration seems to men to be in any of them is not in respect of his determination, but in respect to their opinion of them, seeing things fall out otherwise, than he seemed to them to have intended, and the event to be different from what they expected, and such as if they had been ordered by men, would have argued a real change in their minds, and intentions. So that his forbearing to send on men repenting of their sins such punishments, or evils, as he had threatned against them going on in their sin, is in such language as men use among themselves, and of their own doings, called his repenting. God repenting therefore of evil to men is indeed nothing else but his accepting of their repentance, on which the removing or stopping such judgments is not from any change of mind, or new resolution in him, but the making good a condition, in the first denouncing thereof included, as he declares it to be in all his threats, Jer. vii. 8. and xxvi. 3. and on the contrary, that in all his promises of good to any, there is included a condition of their perseverance in obedience to him. Though sometimes not mentioned, perhaps, lest it should make them careless in their repenting, as presuming too much on his mercy above his promise. So therefore the Chaldee Paraphrase gives the meaning, ומתיב מן מריה מלאיתא בישא and revokes his word from bringing (or inflicting) evil, and agreeably to him the Syriack Translation ܡܠܝܬܐ ܕܝܫܐ and turning away evil, the MS. Arabick also ويصغ عن البلية and turning away from affliction (or from inflicting evil.) These renderings give a plain sense of the words, not only shewing what is meant by repenting of the evil, but at once what evil it is, that is spoken of, viz. not of sin, but of punishment, whereas other ancient translations of great authority seem to leave the matter doubtful, as the Greek rendering, καὶ μετανοῶν ἐπὶ ταῖς κακίαις, and the Vulgar Latin, Et præstabilis super malitia, which the Doway renders, and ready to be gracious upon the malice ; for although these are by Expositors understood in that meaning, which we have before given, as appears by Jerome, Cyril, and most Others ; yet that they may be otherwise taken appears by what we have in the printed Arabick, which following the Greek renders وتواب علي قبايح البشر which is latined, Et quem pœnitet scelerum humanorum, and who repents of men's evil doings. But Cyril, though the words in the Greek, viz. and repenting for evils, may be taken otherwise, saith, that in his opinion the best meaning of them is, that though he hath set on afflicting sinners, yet he will ere long become gentle μεταχωρεῖ γὰρ διόλως ἐπὶ τῷ βελτίειναι τὰ χρεῖα, for he easily turneth himself again to will (or shew) kindness. Manifest it is that κακία, as it signifies wickedness, or evil done by men, so it also signifies evil done to men or brought on them, and is so used in the New Testament, Mat. vi. 34. And as for malitia used here in the Vulgar Latin (as likewise in Matthew) Jerome notes of it. Malitiam in hoc loco non contrariam virtutis debemus accipere, sed afflictionum, that it is not taken in this place for evil or wickedness contrary to goodness or virtue, but for evil of afflictions. Thus he describes the nature of God, and his manner of dealing, as an argument to move them, seriously, and with speed, according to his exhortation, to turn unto the Lord : For farther persuading them to which the next words also make, from the good effects, which they shall probably find on their so doing.

14. Who knoweth if he will return and repent, and leave a blessing behind him, even a meat-offering and a drink-offering unto the Lord your God.

He had affirmed of God in the former words that he is apt to return and repent, and why shall they despair of finding him in their case, though both their sins, and sufferings, or judgments threatned were greater than ordinary, and such, as if it were not such a one as he, who is here described, whom they had to deal with, might move them to despair. But now his being such, gives them to hope, though not to presume on slight terms, to obtain mercy. For such is the expression rendred by an interrogation, seeming to include doubt, ^b as spem metu miscet, doth mingle hope with with fear, ne aut securitatem foveat, aut desperatione veniæ illos in luto relinquat, as neither to cherish in them security, nor through despair of pardon to leave them to sink in the mire. The like expression have we, Jonah iii. 2. uttered by the king of Nineveh to stir up the people to repent on Jonah's preaching destruction to them ; Who can tell if God will return and repent, and turn away from his fierce anger that we perish not ? where it is manifest that his drift was not to put them in doubt, but in hope, of mercy. From the expression, seeming, as we said, to include doubting, yet together with it, hope and confidence, we may observe, that the doubt is not, whether God will be merciful to those that truly repent, which certainly he will be ; but whether he will avert his judgments, in that kind which they could wish or desire he would. For ing and repenting accept of them, and that though he had sent heavy judgments on them, yet bearing still love to them, did not thereby intend their utter destruction, but their amendment, their turning to him that he might return to them. His giving them wherewith to serve him will be an argument that he will accept of them and be pleased with their service. It is, in a distinction made by the Jewish Doctors betwixt judgments or calamities sent by God on men, observed, that such as leave ability and opportunity of serving God, however sharp and severe, are yet יסורין של אהבה Yissurin shel Ababah, chastisements of love, such as argue that he yet loves them, and intends ⁱ to do them good, and to make them capable of receiving it, by turning them from what hath withholden it from them. If God shall now conclude these evils in the former words described with such a blessing, whereby they shall be enabled still to serve him, it will be certainly a token that he hath yet a love for them, and his directing them to desire in chief such a blessing, whereby they may be enabled so to serve him, and not such things as respect their own welfare, profit and displeasure, shews that such his chastisements ^k ought also to increase their love to him from a sense of his love to them. And withal that the chief end that they propose to themselves in enjoying sufficiently of worldly good things, ought to be that thereby they may be able to serve him with cheerfulness and gladness of heart, not that they may use them only for the satisfaction of their own lusts, and worldly desires, and that they ought to look on as a blessing chiefly in that regard. And when men in any judgments sent on them by God, have such intentions in their praying to God for deliverance from them, it will serve to strengthen their faith and hope of delivery, that though they deserve no such thing, yet God will hear them in ^l respect to his own glory; and for preserving his own worship entire, and encouraging it. By the mentioning of meat-offering and drink-offering unto the Lord, which were then under the law constant and necessary parts, and requisites of his worship, all parts of it, and all things necessary to it may seem understood and included. But Abarbinel, I know not how, looks on them alone mentioned, with exclusion of other blessings, which they could not hope for, nor have left any more to them. He not taking the calamities here meant to be that of famine and scarcity, brought on them by Locusts and such creatures, destroying the fruits of the earth from whence the meat-offering and drink-offering were taken; but, looking on the former words, (as we have all along seen) as a foretelling of that destruction both of their land, and the first temple, which should be brought on them by the Chaldeans, to be a prophecy indeed of their return from that captivity, and rebuilding of the temple, and being restored again to inhabit Jerusalem, and to the worship of God;

^a With which agrees among Latin Interpreters Castalio, qui se ab inferendo malo contineat.

^b Grot.

yet withal to shew that it should not be in that glory and enjoyment of such privileges as they did formerly there enjoy: they should again be so blessed as under the second temple to offer sacrifices, meat-offerings and drink-offerings unto the Lord, but that should be all: those other glorious privileges of having among them הנבואה, prophecy, אורים ותומים, Urim and Thummim, ארון, the ark, ושכינה, and the Shecinah or majestatick presence, ושאר הדברים שחסרו שם with the other things which were there; they should not expect or find in the second temple; אבל בלבב חשב עבודה but the opportunity of offering sacrifices only should return or be restored to them. In this Arias Montanus seems to follow and agree with him; but I know not what ground the words here afford them for it; it may suffice to have mentioned it as a singular opinion of theirs, for I know not whether any else accord with them. The exposition which we before gave, is that which is more probably and generally agreed on, whether they look on Locusts and like creatures, or enemies threatening such a destruction, as should not leave them so much as whence to be supplied with what the law required they should offer to God; and that ^m while the first temple was yet standing, where they enjoyed all those other privileges.

Before we pass from these words, we may observe a difference made betwixt Interpreters in the construction, besides what we have already seen, though not much in the meaning, of some of the words, as namely in those, and leave a blessing behind him, viz. who it is that shall leave that blessing, and who meant by him, when it is said behind him, whether himself, the same person, shall leave that blessing, or some other, after whom he shall leave it. There be who understand both of the ⁿ great people, or God's ^o army before spoken of, which they understand of the Locusts. So R. Solomon והחמיר והגוים, and Aben Ezra, והשאיר זה החייל ברכה, perhaps God will repent, and that army shall leave a blessing, out of which they may make a meat-offering and a drink-offering. So Drusius in the first place, post se locusta, the Locust shall leave after himself. R. David Kimchi understands the first of God, but the second of the Locusts, והארץ יתברך, ישאיר, &c. and God shall leave behind the locust a blessing; for if ye repent, he shall far remove him, and leave remaining in the things growing out of the earth a blessing, that all shall not perish, and what remains may be for a blessing of which ye may take for a meat-offering and drink-offering, which before he said, were cut off from the house of the Lord. So Drusius in the second place, with several others rendring ^p post illum. There be again who understand both of God, viz. that he shall leave behind him, post se, behind himself, viz. after that he hath done, ^q ira deposita, his anger being now put away, in the place of the curse, a blessing. This I suppose is the obvious meaning ⁱ Psalm cxix. 71. ^k Heb. xv. 5, 6. ^l Calvin.

^p Jun. Trem. Piscator. ^q Mercer.

^m See above, chap. i. 16.

ⁿ Verse 2.

^o Verse 11.

ing of our translation, and of several Others who render, post se, after himself. It may seem indifferent which of these ways be taken, whatever is done by any as God's instrument, being done by his power and order, and their ceasing to do may be said to be his ceasing, who hath said to them, thus far they shall go, and no further, and what remains after they have fulfilled his command, said, to be left behind him. The Chaldee Paraphrast, who as we before observed, leaves out the interrogative at the beginning of the verse, goes on in rendring the latter part also assertorily, and that he may so make out the sense plainer in his way, both changeth the person spoken of, and alters both the signification and construction of the words; instead of, if he will return, and repent, and leave a blessing behind him, even a meat-offering, &c. renders, And whosoever shall repent, his sins shall be remitted unto him, and he shall receive blessings and consolations, and his prayer shall be as of a man which offereth oblations, and drink-offerings of the Lord your God, but this helps us not so much in a literal translation of the words, which we chiefly look after.

15. Blow the trumpet in Zion, sanctify a fast, call a solemn assembly.
16. Gather the people: sanctify the congregation: assemble the elders: gather the children, and those that suck the breasts: let the bridegroom go forth of his chamber, and the bride out of her closet.
17. Let the priests, the ministers of the Lord, weep between the porch and the altar, and let them say, Spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thine heritage to reproach; that the heathen should rule over them: wherefore should they say among the people, Where is their God?

The very same words have we at the beginning of the chapter, Blow the trumpet in Zion] and, we may well think, on the same occasion, and to the same purpose, that here. But Abarbinel thinks that they have respect to different occasions, and that they were in the first place to give them warning of the invasion of their land by the Chaldeans, and of their being led captive by them, and of the destruction of the first temple, and their restoration after it, but here in the second place, of the destruction of the second temple, and the exile that they are now under, and the restoration that they expect from it, בְּנֵאֲוִלָּהּ, רֵעִיתָּהּ, in a redemption yet to come: so sound his words on chap. ii. 1. שְׂנֵאָהּ בְּהֵן עַל שְׁנֵי הַגִּלְיוֹת וְהַחֲרִבּוֹת חֲרָבִין בֵּית רֵאשֹׁן וּפְקִידָתוֹ בְּפִרְשָׁהּ הָרֵאשֹׁנָה וְחֲרָבִין בֵּית שְׁנֵי וּגְאֻלָּהּ בְּפִרְשָׁהּ הַשְּׁנִיָּה. And him in this seems Arias Montanus to follow, here taking, in these words and the following, to be described all those calamities since the sacking of Jerusalem by the Romans, but by the former those brought on by the Assyrians, and other enemies; but sure we cannot follow him safely in this, it being plain that Abarbinel's drift in this, is to elude such predicting in this Prophecy, the fulfilling of which will necessarily prove against him, and those of his religion, that the Messias is come; and the granting them not to be fulfilled, will be to deny that he is yet come; and to bid men to expect yet his coming, as will appear by what we shall meet with hereafter, as particularly, ver. 28. The plainer and certainer way therefore, as to the intent of these words, is to take them as a repeating of what was before said, and on the same occasion, for a farther and more earnest exciting them to the duty of repentance exhorted to, after he had shewed what need there was to them of it, it being the only means for removing those heavy judgments, which he had shewed to hang over their heads. Their sins being national, the judgment on them national, they ought likewise to join in the use of these means by which they may obtain mercy and pardon for their sins, and a removal of the judgments by them called on them, and that they may not be backward in so doing, they are a second time earnestly exhorted to it, in proclaiming a solemn publick fast, in testimony of unfeigned repentance, and their concurring in it. For such he here calls, and prescribes methods for it, or a form of it, as by taking the words in order we shall see.

Blow the trumpet in Zion.] On what occasions the trumpet was used to be blown among them, we have above seen on ver. 1. What the occasion was, for which it was here bid to be blown, the following words declare, viz. that it was to call on them solemnly to assemble themselves, that they might observe a publick fast, and day of humiliation, and joint supplications to God, for removing those heavy things denounced against them, or which they suffered; or were in danger of suffering under, whether by Locusts, &c. or enemies, according to those different opinions which we have all along seen, so including both the first and the third of these uses which we there on ver. 1. mentioned, of blowing the trumpet. This trumpet is to be blown in Zion, which is also, ver. 1. called his holy mountain, as elsewhere, his holy hill of Zion, Psalm ii. 6. whither, as it is said of Jerusalem, (the whole of which here by naming that one part of it may well be meant) the tribes went up, the tribes of the Lord unto the testimony of Israel, viz. the ark there placed in the temple, to give thanks unto the name of the Lord, Psalm cxxii. 4. their most solemn place of their religious meetings. The assignation of this place sheweth what is bidden there to be done, to be of great and general concernment to them: What was by God commanded so to be publicly proclaimed must needs be thought so; withal the proclaiming it in that place of greatest concourse from all parts of the land, was a means of making making it publickly known to all, whether for the drawing them thither for observing it there, or whether for observing it ^u in all other places and synagogues in the whole land, at that same set time. What is the thing there to be proclaimed, the following words, with expression of several circumstances, declare, Sanctify a fast, קראו עצרה call a solemn assembly (or day of restraint, as the margin, chap. i. 14. hath it.) For these very words in Hebrew had we there before, where of what may concern the meaning and interpretation of them hath been said what may suffice.

Verse 16. Gather the people.] viz. Cause that they come together, ^u ad publicas supplicationes, to put in joint and publick supplications. Sanctify the congregation.] Of the word קדשו Kaddeshu, Sanctify, which occurs in the former verse, as likewise (as we said) chap. i. 14. hath on that first place been spoken what is here applicable to it. R. Tanchum notes that the same signification will here well agree to it as in the former place; and that he takes to be الإعداد, that of preparing or ordering, and so the MS. Arabick here also renders it عدا الجوق prepare the congregation, by which, though the word may seem elsewhere used of any ordinary preparation, the place here will seem to require to be meant a warning them so to prepare themselves to meet, ^x as for the performance of a holy duty, viz. of a solemn fast, with observance of such rules and circumstances, as by the law were required to be observed for the performing of it. By this congregation, Grotius understands peculiarly the Levites, as hereby bid to prepare themselves; but sure that the word may seem to be of larger comprehension, including all sorts and conditions of men, of whom gathered together it was to be made up, the following words by naming the particulars declare, viz. the elders, the children, those that suck the breasts, the bridegroom, the bride, and the priests. Assemble the Elders.] By the Elders, the same learned Man takes to be understood, tum illum summum senatum, tum illos qui urbibus singulis president, both the whole great council of Sanbedrim, and them also which did preside in particular cities. The same word have we above likewise, chap. i. 14. where what was spoken may agree also to this place. That it may be, and useth to be, applied to such as we may call Senators, men eminent for gravity and dignity, as well as to men exceeding in age, is no doubt, yet that it is here more particularly to be understood of such who in respect of their years are so called (which seems the more proper and strict signification of it) ^y is probable from what follows, as contradictory to it, viz. Children, and those that suck the breasts. The reason why those should be called on to assemble themselves, in a day of a national repentance, to be testified by fasting and supplications, is probably given by ^z Some, both because their sins were greatest, and because their example would be prevalent in drawing Others on in the ways of repentance. But besides this, the naming them with those that are joined with them, viz. children, and those that suck the breasts, seems to require that in this people to be gathered, and a congregation to be sanctified, there be none exempted on any pretence whatever, that not only men of better vigour, age and strength, and so better able to endure such hardships as seem'd in performance of such duties of humiliation to be required, should for the end named assemble themselves, but even from all the oldest, whose strength was decayed, to the youngest, who might seem not yet of strength. The judgments did so generally concern them all, as that it concerned all to be joined in seeking mercy from God, by such means as they were able, for the removing of them. All others then must needs be inexcusable, if they do under any pretence keep back or absent themselves.

Gather the children, and those that suck the breasts.] These innocents may not be thought to have by their sins pulled on the nation those judgments, under which they suffer, nor to be of discretion to understand the methods of repentance, and what is intended thereby; why then are these to be gathered together to the performance of that duty here enjoined? What reason there is for it will be evident, when we consider, that it is just with God to visit the sins of the fathers upon the children, and that the fathers considering the sufferings of their children, and cries, cannot but thereby be moved with greater earnestness, to seek unto God for removing those evils, in which their innocent children are for their sakes involved together with themselves, from which they are not able otherwise to relieve them. Besides that by this means they may hope to find compassion from God, who will be moved with the cry of poor children and infants. He that feedeth the young ravens, when they cry, will not neglect the cry of poor children: what tender respect he hath to them in his executing his judgments on nations, appears by what he saith to Jonah, whom he sent to denounce destruction to Nineveh, giving a reason why upon their repentance he reversed his sentence against them. Should not I spare Nineveh, Nineveh that great city, wherein are more than sixscore thousand persons that cannot discern between their right hand and their left hand, and also much cattle? Jonah iv. 11. In their solemn fast their king proclaimed, and published that neither man nor beast should tast any thing, not feed, nor drink water, &c. probably children and infants were likewise kept fasting, and as the suffering in the humiliation was extended to them, so by the words cited it appears that God had in his shewing mercy especial regard to them. That it was thought of old a motive to compassion in God to join in children also, in their addresses to him for mercy, appears by what is read in the book of Judith, chap. iv. 9, 10, 11, 12.

where

4 F

^u Danæus.

^v Pisc. Tarnov.

^x Calv. Merc.

^y Brenn.

^z Calvin. Danæus.

where the little children are said to be taken into the number, that they might with great vehemency humble their souls, and cry unto the God of Israel all with one consent earnestly. So here according to Kimchi are they bid to gather them together with the others named אחת כולם באסיפה אחת, &c. that so they might be all in one congregation, and then the little ones hindred from sucking might cry for hunger, and those of riper age moved by their crying, might humble themselves, and repent, and God might of his great mercy take compassion on the cry of those little ones. And as no age could excuse any from bearing their part in this duty of publick humiliation, so neither any circumstances they could be under, or any concerns they might pretend. If any might have been born with in that kind, probably such as were newly married might, who were by the law excused from other publick services, as of serving in the army in time of war, or the like occasions. So we read, Deut. xxiv. 5. when a man hath taken a new wife, he shall not go out to war, neither shall he be charged with any business, but he shall be free at home one year, and shall cheer up his wife, which he hath taken. But here is no such privilege granted in this case of publick humiliation. Let the bridegroom (saith he) go forth of his chamber, and the bride out of her closet. They must not (as in other cases they might) enjoy themselves, and take their pleasure, while Others perform the service required, but they also must here do their part of removing the publick calamity, though in the very day of their marriage, or while the solemnity thereof was otherwise to have been celebrated; what mirth and jollity would be otherwise seasonable, and even commendable, must now, God calling for other behaviour, be laid aside. What danger it will be at such a time to indulge to it, appears by what he saith, Isaiah xxii. 12, &c. In that day did the Lord God of hosts call to weeping and to mourning, &c. and behold joy and gladness, &c. Surely this iniquity shall not be purged from you till ye die, saith the Lord God of hosts. No pretence then may at such a time, when God calls on them for publick humiliation, excuse from it. These here named are called on to attend on it, if they shall refrain from it, what shall it be but a farther provoking that wrath, which by it they are put in hope of appeasing, and directed by that, as the only means left, to seek it. Let therefore in the time of publick calamity, even the bridegroom and the bride, laying aside those privileges of mirth and solacing themselves, which at other times they might lawfully challenge, go the one forth of his chamber, the other out of her closet, to join with others of all conditions, in publick acts and exercise of humiliation. The word חפזה Chuppah, by Ours rendred closet, is to the same purpose generally by Interpreters rendred, in their several languages, by some such word as may denote thalamus, properly a bride-chamber (as it is also taken; Psalms xix. 5.)

So sounds the Chaldee בית ננוהא, which the Syriack also hath ܠܒܢܐܢܐ, the Greek τὰ παρὰ αὐτῆς. The MS. Arab. جنتها. The printed Arabick خدرها, the same with the Hebrew חדר attributed to the bridegroom, and rendred chamber: and by him rendred جنتها which is in the MS. there خدرها as if the two words were synonymous. R. D. Kimchi saying likewise that this hath the same signification, with that former word חדר, yet gives another meaning which it may be capable of, viz. החליים והעדניים שחופצים עליה בימי החתונה that he should go out of, or put off those ornaments and attires, with which they covered her in the days of her espousal (or marriage.) The word may be indifferently capable of either of these significations, being from חפה chaphab, to cover, and so applicable to any covering. Which either of them be taken the scope will be the same, viz. that laying aside all nuptial pomps, and signs of mirth and jollity, both the bridegroom and his bride come forth and join with the assembly in such solemn rites of humiliation, and expressions of sorrow and repentance, whereby both their hearts may be duly affected with their condition, and God moved to compassion. The assembly consisting of several orders and degrees of the people being thus gathered: The priests are in the next place called on to perform their parts. Let the priests, the ministers of the Lord, weep between the porch and the altar. The priests as here, so above, chap. i. 9. called the Lord's ministers, and ver. 13. the ministers of the altar, and the ministers of my God. These are bid to weep, not as if it were not required of the Others also so to do; but that they whose duty was mainly to attend the service of God, and to direct others in performance thereof, were to lead them the way in it. What is done by them interceding is looked on as done by all with joint affections, as they ought to do, accompanying them. They are bid to weep for the sins and calamities both of themselves and the people: they are above, chap. i. 13. called on so to do, because the meat-offering and the drink-offering are withholden from the house of their God. The place where they were to perform this duty is specified between האולם Haulam and מזבח Mizbeach, the porch and the altar. What the אולם Ulam or porch was we learn, 1 Kings vi. 3. what altar here meant, 2 Chron. viii. 12. in the altar for burnt-offerings, * which Solomon built before the porch, in the inner court of the Lord's house, (Ezek. i. 16.) not that other of incense, which was within the holy place, or temple; although Drusus will have to be understood aram suffimenti, the altar of incense. But I suppose we may better conceive of the place described by a draught of the several parts of the temple, and courts belonging to it, which I find in an ancient MS. of Maimonides, in his Commentary on the Misnaioth in the tract Middoth, of the text of the Talmud, where

* Lively.

where he thus ordereth them, viz. placing on the east side, first עזרת הנשים Ezrat hannasim the women's court; 2. עזרת ישראל Ezrat Israel, the court of Israel; (or the people or men.) 3. עזרת הכהנים Ezrat hakkohanim, the court of the priests, in which was מזבח Mizbeach, the altar; 4. אולם the porch, beyond which was היכל Heical, the temple (or holy place) and in that מזבח הזהב Mizbeach hazzabab, the golden altar (that for incense) and the table and candlestick; and 5. קודש הקדשים Kodesh hakkodashim, the holy of holies. Now the place here designed, according to this, will seem to be that space, or part of the court of the priests, which was between the altar and the porch, in which court they were wont to stand and prepare their burnt-offerings; so Ezek. viii. 16. is that space, which is between the porch and the altar, said to be in the inner court. And of this place seems Kimchi to understand it, whose words sound, Because there stood the priests to perform their ministry, and their ministry ceasing; because as he said (chap. i. 9.) the meat-offerings were cut off from the house of the Lord, there in that place of their ministering let them weep, and put up their prayers unto God, in the house of his sanctuary (under which last word I suppose he understood the whole belonging to the temple, without as well as within) Aben Ezra likewise seems to understand the same place, saying by way of explication, אין נכון לבכות בבית השם ביהיכל לפני it is not convenient to weep in the house of God, in the temple before me; which Abarbinel observes to be well said by him, שאין נכון לבכות ביהיכל השם that it is not right to weep in the sanctuary of God: without it therefore, and before it are they bid to weep, though even there ^c (as Some observe) it was prohibited to shew signs of grief. The same place is thought to be that which is between the temple and the altar, where Zachariah was slain, Mat. xxiii. 35. The whole temple may be named, the porch being looked on as part of it. Why in that place they are bid to weep, other probable reasons, besides those intimated, are assigned, as first, from the conveniency of the place, so situated as that thence the people from the outward court (separated from it with a low wall of three cubits height only) might observe the humble postures and behaviour of the priests, and thereby be excited to the like, and to join with them in a general humiliation. 2. That standing in the place, which was between the temple of God and the court of the people, they might appear ^d as intercessors between them, making intercession to him for their sins: or, 3dly, In token of their humiliation, out of a sense of their unworthiness to draw nearer unto God, like that of the penitent publican, who out of sense of his unworthiness to approach nearer to God, stood afar off, &c. Luke xviii. 13.

^e Some observe, that because they were to weep and pray beyond the altar, that this was to be done after they had first appeased God with sacrifices. But by what is said, chap. i. 13. and in this chapter, ver. 14. it seems that they had not, or should not have any sacrifices to offer, and therefore, as they were wont to perform such duties as prayer and thanksgiving, which is to be performed with gladness and chearfulness of heart, in that place, they are now called on therein to weep; which why in that place they should do, such probable reasons as we have seen, are or may be assigned, but here is none expressed, and therefore is it not necessary to seek for any. It is by God ordered that in that place they should do it, and therefore necessary to them that they should, as by him required, do what he bids them to do, even there to weep in token of sorrow for both their own, and the sins and calamities of that people, and to put up their supplications for themselves and the people; for so is here to their weeping joined, as necessary, praying also, to shew that their eyes are affected by their hearts, and that what they do is not only out of sense of what they suffer, but of what they do deserve, and out of sorrow for their sins. So he adds, Let them say, prescribing also to them a form of prayer, or what they shall say, viz. Spare thy people, O Lord, which form both shews how they ought to be affected with the sense of their own, and the people's condition, and by what motives they may hope and endeavour to prevail with God to have mercy on them. They must say, Spare thy people, they acknowledge themselves to be guilty and to deserve punishment, to stand in need of mercy from God, and that they have no other hope of help but from that. He being justly provoked to wrath against them, and to inflict punishments, and send judgments on them; the motives, by which they may hope to prevail with him for pardoning their offences and removing his judgments, are first, their relation into which he had received them to himself; their acknowledging him as the only true God; his compassion to those that are in misery, and the preservation of his own honour and glory. That relation is by them to be expressed in calling themselves his people, his heritage. 2. Their acknowledging him the only true God in calling him יהוה Jehovah, rendred Lord, which was his proper name, not communicable to any other but him the true God. 3. His compassion on their misery, because if he do not spare them, but go on in executing his judgments on them, they shall be given up to reproach, and the heathen shall rule over them. 4. The preservation of his glory, for if he suffer them to be destroyed, they will say among the people, where is their God? as taking it for a sign that he was not able to make good to them those his promises, which he had made to them in their forefathers, or were worse than his word to them; and so would ^b Mercer, Ar. Montan. saith that even in that place they are now bid to weep, it was not ordinarily lawful so to do.

^c Bishop Hall's Paraphrase.

^d Merc. Calv.

^e Chr. à Castro.

would those idolaters take thence occasion of blaspheming his name, and his honour, an argument elsewhere ^f often used in scripture, to move God to shew himself what his people owned, and professed him to be, and that they might not seem in vain to put their trust in him, as their enemies were apt to object they did, as though he were not able to do for those that trusted in him more than the Gods of the heathens could do for them.

Of how great force this motive is to prevail on God, appears elsewhere not only from Moses's and David's, and other holy men's making use of it for that end, as Exod. xxxii. 12. Numb. xiv. 13, 15, 16, &c. Deut. ix. 28. Psal. lxxix. 9, 10. and cxv. 20. Dan. ix. 19. but from what he from his own mouth declar-eth; that he spared his people, whom he would otherwise have scattered, and have caused the remembrance of them to have ceased among men, because he feared the wrath of the enemy, lest their adversaries should behave themselves strangely and say, our hand is high, and the Lord hath not done all this, Deut. xxxii. 26, 27. and what he saith to the same purpose, Ezek. xx. 13, 14, 21, 22. The words למשל במ גוים Limschal bam Goim, rendred by Ours in the Text, That the heathen should rule over them, and so generally by Others to the same purpose. We have in the Margin put as a different interpretation, should use a by-word against them. They are so explained by R. Solomon Jarchi, who here expounding the word Limschal, saith that it is לשון משל ושנינה in the signification of Maschal veshaninah, which words we have in other places, as Deut. xxviii. 37. where is threatned to Israel that upon their falling away from God, they shall become לשמה למשל ולשנינה בכל העמים Leshammah lemaschal velishninah becol haammim, an astonishment, a proverb, and by-word among all nations. So likewise, 1 Kings ix. 7. and Jer. xxiv. 9. in which places the noun משל proverb being used in an ill sense, as for a taunt, reproach, and by-word, it is manifest he thinks that the verb also ought to be here taken in the same sense; and the meaning so made out would be ^g convenient enough. But it is by Others generally taken in its more ordinary signification of bearing rule, and from it so taken Jerome thinks here to be made manifest what was hitherto doubtful, viz. who it be by whom the calamities hitherto described should be brought on them, whether Locusts and other such noxious creatures, or enemies. From this expression he thinks it manifest that it is not spoken of those vermin, but of their ^h enemies among the nations. Cyril also thinks it hence made probable, that enemies are thereby meant, yet that nevertheless it may be well enough understood of Locusts. But among more modern Expositors Calvin taking hence his ground saith, Ideo ridiculum est, quod multi putant, contexti sermonem de locustis, &c. it is therefore a ridiculous thing to think that the Locusts are spoken of, and altogether different from the meaning of the Prophet. But this seems something hastily spoken by him. As Others before him, so Others after him, who had seen and considered what he saith, are yet of opinion, that it may very well, and ought to be interpreted of such ill consequences as were, by God's sending of the Locusts among them to destroy the fruits of the earth, brought on them, and so the Locusts in the preceding words most probably, properly meant. Among the Jews Aben Ezra seems so to take them, by reproach, understanding רעב famine, and explains what is said that the heathen should rule over them, because those that were oppressed by famine would fly to them, and if they should come against them, they would have no strength to fight [for themselves.] And so also Kimchi, Give not thine heritage to reproach, that the heathen should rule over them, כי כשהיה רעב בארץ ישראל, &c. because when there was a famine in the land of Israel, many went forth of it to sojourn in Egypt, and in the country of the Philistines, by reason of the famine, and this was a reproach to them, and the nations bare rule over them while they were strangers in their land. So that according to those and such as go their way, the words sound, ⁱ as one among Christians more modern well paraphraseth them, Spare thy people, in removing from them the plague of Locusts, which if it continue to run and spread among them, will bring on them a very great famine, and so thy people shall be forced for relief of it to fly to the countries of the nations, and serve them for bread, and to suffer their rule and their reproaches, as of old they fled to the Egyptians, and became their servants. ^k Other also among Christians later than Calvin look on this as the righter meaning, viz. that it is the enemy that is here said should rule over them, but those instruments of mischief to them all along before described, not those enemies among the nations, but such vermin by which they should be so impoverished, as that they should be forced to submit themselves to those nations, or be easily overcome by them.

That which is in the verse said, let the priests weep between the porch and the altar, manifestly argues, that what is spoken was to happen while the temple, with its porch and other parts belonging to it, was yet standing, and the priests had free access to it, and liberty of exercising there such offices as belonged to their function, which is contrary to what Abarbinel thinks, that it belongs to the times after the destruction thereof, yea of the second temple, and the condition that they are now under (compare this with what expressions we find, chap. i. 9, 13, 14, and 16. and 14. of this chapter.) His words in which he declares his opinion are, that he cannot understand those words, Give not thine heritage to reproach, that the heathen should rule over them,

^f Accusabunt enim gentes verum Deum infirmitatis & mendacii quasi qui suos tueri non possit, Danzus. According to Rabshakeh's blasphemous way of arguing, 2 Kings xviii. 34. ^g Mercer. ^h And see Lyr. ⁱ Pet. à Fig. ^k Pisc. Mercer, Druf. Tarnov.

כי אם על הגלות הארוכה הזה אשר אנחנו them, but of this long captivity in which we are for a reproach in the hands of the Edomites, and that the weeping here spoken of is that in this captivity, שבנו העם והתאבלו in which the people have wept and mourned in their captivity so many years. But how can this be said to be between the porch and the altar? this must concern what was done while they were standing.

Having thus exhorted them to a general humiliation and solemn repentance, out of consideration of the calamities that they were under, or in fear of, and prescribed a form for it, that they may not think it in vain to hearken to him, and duly perform what he requires them to do, in the next words he shews what good effects shall certainly ensue on their so doing, as certainly as if it were already come to pass.

18. Then will the Lord be jealous for his land, and pity his people.

So do Ours and some Others render the words in the future-tense, will be jealous, &c. will pity, and so are the verbs in the Hebrew of that tense יקנה yekanne, and יחמל yachmol, but then the conjunction ו ve, and, being prefixed to them, being of that nature as usually to give to the form of the future the signification of the preter-tense, it is by many here so rendred, hath been jealous, hath pitied; so by the Chaldee וחס and ורחם, hath spared and hath pitied; by the Greek, κενήλωσε, and κενήλωσας, hath been jealous, and hath spared; and the Syriack, ܠܬܢܐܝܬܐ Uchos; and both the Arabick versions, وغاز wagara, واشتق washaphaka, all agreeing with the Vulgar Latin & zelatus est, and, & pepercit, which the Doway render, and our Lord hath been zealous, and hath spared. Among more modern Translators also several, as Munster, and the Tigurin version, commotus est zelo, &c. hath been moved with zeal. Junius also and Tremellius, Jam Zelotypia affectus Jehovah terræ suæ, clementia usus est erga populum suum. The Lord hath been already moved with jealousy to his land, and hath used mercy towards his people. That the words are regularly so rendred in the preter-tense, for the reason which we have mentioned, there is no question; yet that they may mean while be understood of what is future is as evident, for another known observation backed with frequent examples (as we have elsewhere seen) viz. that the Prophets foretelling things to come do oft speak of them as of things already past; what is by God determined to be done being as sure as what is already done; and of that nature are these expressions here¹ by many looked on to be. So we see they are by Ours taken, and so by^m Others. Aben Ezra notes to these words, that which he saith he had observed also before on Others, כי דבר

נגזר להיות יאמרוהו הנביאים על לשון עבר that the Prophets do use to "speak of a matter determined to be, in the language of the preter-tense; and in that respect Piscator would have that of Junius and Tremellius, Jam Zelotypia affectus est, &c. changed into, tunc Zelotypia afficietur & clementia utetur, Then the Lord will be moved with jealousy for his land, and will shew mercy towards his people, &c. because, though the other be a regular construction, according to the use of that conjunction ו prefixed, yet, ipsa sententia hic significationem futuri postulat, the sense of the place here requires that the signification of the future be used. Yet is the learned Mr. Lively for the other way against it. His opinion is that the Prophet doth not here shew quid facturus aut dicturus sit Deus, what God would do or say, sed quid jam dixerit aut fecerit, but what he had already said or done, viz. that upon such repentance and acts thereof, which he had called them to, by them performed, he had shewed himself jealous for their land, and had pitied them, removing such judgments as he had sent on them: so that by him is declared both that upon God's warning given in ver. 12, 13, 15, 16. they had already repented them, and done such things as he had exhorted them to, and he had removed the evils which their sins had pulled on them, and had comforted them with the promises of many good things to them. It is objected that there is not any mention in the history of scripture of any such publick repentance, or solemn assembling for it, or fasts in token of it. This he thinks not to be of any moment against it, inasmuch as many such things, as must necessarily be taken for granted to have been done, are not yet expressly mentioned, of which he gives examples, as of Isaiah with his son Shear-Jashub going to meet Abaz, as he was commanded, Isaiah vii. 3, &c. which it is not to be doubted that he did, yet not mentioned at all there; and of Moses's being bid by God to go to Pharaoh and threaten him, except he would let Israel go, with sending swarms of flies on him and his servants, Exod. viii. 20, &c. which accordingly it follows, ver. 24. that God sent, without mentioning between, either what Moses did, or Pharaoh answered, which yet must necessarily be understood, viz. that when Moses had delivered this message from God to Pharaoh, and he refused to obey, then the Lord did so, and there came a grievous swarm of flies, &c. Then with great modesty he concludes, Hæc mea de hujus loci intelligentia sententia est, quam a doctioribus expendi cupio, this is my opinion of the meaning of this place, which I desire may by learned Men be weighed. Jerome's words, so much ancienter than he, may perhaps be so interpreted as to agree with him, as interpreting all in the preter-tense. But I know not whether any have taken his opinion into consideration. Ours, we see, with Others later than he, and who probably had seen what he saith, choose to understand what is here spoken as of the future, and as a prophecy of what should be done, rather than a narrative, of what had been already done, though • to shew the certainty of it, expressed (as we have said) in such language as might agree to what was actually past: with God is no distinction of times, what he will do is as already done, all things are present to him, and what shall be as that which hath been. Then the Lord will be jealous for his land, ויקנא יהוה לארצו. He will be jealous for, with great affection be moved for, so as to remove what is hurtful, and injurious to it, and to seek its good, that it continue not ^{to} desolate, and a reproach to its enemies. It is ¹ observed that when this verb is construed with the preposition ל le, as here it is, that it is taken in good part, denoting a being sollicitous of good to those whom one is said to be jealous for, as that when it is construed with ב be, it is taken in ill part, denoting a suspicion of evil in such as he is jealous of, or over, or being evil affected to. It is manifest that how ever the verb be otherwise used so as to denote ill of, or to those spoken of, as to be jealous of, to envy, emulate, or the like, yet that here it notes intention of good to them, for whom it is said he will be jealous. The Chaldees therefore here gives the meaning of it by וחס and the Lord hath spared. Such words denoting passion, and affections being ¹ spoken of God, do not (as elsewhere, I remember, hath been observed) denote him to be subject to such affections so as men are, but to express in language understood by men, such effects wrought by him as in men would argue such affections, and proceed from them. His being jealous for his land imports his intentions for good to it, for such reason as we have mentioned from the construction of the verb, so appears it also from the other word joined with it, which is, and pity his people, ויחמל על עמו, viz. so as not to deal with them in severity of justice according to their deserts, but upon their repentance to spare and pardon them, and remove from them those evils which they had deserved: of which they have confidence given them by those terms of near relation to himself, by which he owns them, his land and his people, as yet still more peculiarly belonging to him than any other; which necessarily imports and gives assurance that he will in peculiar manner yet take care of, and shew kindness to them, both in removing evils from them, which seems the more particular import of this verse, and also giving good things to them, as is in the following verse more expressly declared.

¹ Mercer, Druf. Ch. à Castro, Tarnov.^m On chap. i. 7.^a So Abarb.

19. Yea the Lord will answer and say unto his people, Behold I will send you corn, and wine, and oyl, and ye shall be satisfied therewith: and I will no more make you a reproach among the heathen.

Here again the Vulgar with Others, respondit, &c. So Jerome expounding both together faith, Zelatus est Dominus terram suam, quam prius quasi alienam contempserat, & passus fuerat locusta vastante populari, & in tantum pepercit penitentibus, ut eos dignos sua response faceret, diceretque, &c. The Lord hath been zealous for his land, which before he had contemned as a strange land [belonging to another] and had suffered to be laid waste by the Locust destroying it, and hath so far spared them upon their repentance as to make them worthy of an answer from himself, and to say to them, &c. But as before we said that according to most, Hath been jealous, and pitied, is taken for, will certainly be jealous and will pity (as by Ours rendred,) so here again, hath answered, &c. is taken for, undoubtedly and without delay, or putting off, will answer, &c. viz. when they had in due manner ¹ done what was in the foregoing verses required of them to do, in token of unfeigned repentance, and in so doing shewed themselves his people. What he will answer and say, and make good to them is as follows, Behold I will send you corn, and wine, and oyl, and ye shall be satisfied therewith. Behold, take notice of it, as what I will speedily and certainly make good (however contrary it be to what I threatned) that I will send corn, &c. This answer which he promiseth to return to them on their turning, and making their addresses to him, how seasonable and suitable in respect to their present condition, as well as gracious it is, appears by what that hath all along hitherto in this book been described to be. It is said in the foregoing chapter, ver. 4. That what the palmer-worm had left to them the locust had eaten, and what the locust had left the canker-worm had eaten, and that which the canker-worm had left the caterpillar had eaten. And ver. 5. The new wine was cut off from their mouth, That their vines were laid waste, &c. ver. 7, 10, &c. that the corn was wasted, the new wine dried up, the oyl languished, the harvest of the field perished, all the trees of the field withered, and such a scarcity by this means caused, that not only joy, through the plentiful enjoyment of the good things of this life, was withered away from the sons of men, but even the meat-offering and drink-offering withholden from the house of their God, and joy and gladness cut off from them also, ver. 16. yea that the very beasts did groan, and herds of cattle were perplexed for want of pasture, &c. ver. 18, &c. with like expressions shewing that they were under, or in danger of such extremity of dearth and famine, by which they were forced to seek out for relief to other people, and become a reproach to them, as not having any God to help them, chap. ii. 17. To men in such a deplorable condition, and with penitent hearts seeking for relief from God, what answer can be more comfortable, more suitable than this that the Prophet assureth them that they shall receive from God, of promise of certain and speedy alteration of their condition, from extremity of want to a plentiful enjoyment of all things things necessary for their weing, not only in some competent measure, but to a full satisfaction, so that they shall need to seek out for help to others, but confidence rely upon God as allufficient them? He will send them corn, and wine and oyl, all things necessary for their being well being, and that in such plenty, they shall be fully satisfied therewith, all things necessary for their own use, for offerings, meat offerings, and drinkings in the house of God, with joy and gladness; and will not make them any longer a reproach among the heathen, they shall no longer be forced to serve them for bread that they should scorn them as an indigent people, whose God was not able to support them, or else had forsaken them. So the Chaldee here renders, And I will not give you hunger, and famine among the people, which is, as R. Solomon expounds it, שיקראו אתהסירי לחם, that they should call you want of bread (starvings.) That which he saith I will send you corn and wine, the Chaldee renders, Behold I blefs (or will blefs) to you corn and wine and oyl; and Kimchi expounds it will cause to spring (or grow) to you the tree of the field, and the herb of the ground. At this may be brought to pass, it is necessary that those instruments of mischief, which have destroyed or would destroy those good things to them, should be restrained or removed, and taken out of the way; that therefore no obstacle may stand in the way, nothing at may make them doubt of the performance of his good promise, as to this he expressly adds his promise of removing all such as they had suffered, or were in danger of suffering, by adding what follows.

20. But I will remove far off from you the northern army, and will drive him into a land barren and desolate, with his face toward the east-sea, and his hinder part toward the west sea; and his stink shall come up, and his ill savour shall come up, because he hath done great things.

The northern army. וארץ הצפון, Veeth Hattsephoni, the northern one, that is all that is in the words expressed, the word army is here supplied is to be understood by our Translators, as he printing it in different characters gives to note. Nor is there in several translations found more, the Greek rendering ἡ ἀπὸ βορρᾶ, he Vulgar Latin, eum qui ab Aquilone est, the Syriack, ܐܪܥܬܐ ܕܩܝܡܐ, the printed Arabick, والذي من الجربا, which the Latin renders eum qui est ex Aquilone, (though perhaps the word do not properly signify so,) the MS. Arabick, ألكراساني, him that is from Chorasani. God's having called those instruments of his wrath, in the foregoing words all along described, his army, ver. 11. and here with the epithet of northern added, which may note either, he that came from the north, or is seated or placed northward, makes again a great difference betwixt Interpreters, concerning those of whom it is to be understood, whether Locusts and such vermin in great number infesting them, and devouring the fruits of their land, or else enemies invading and spoiling it. The words seem so applicable to both, that by Some they are understood of the one, by Others of the other, and Some leave it in doubt which way should be taken. So R. Tanchum, נסרה אלי צפון, he denominates him from the north, or he is called northern, قبل لان مجيء اعني الجراد من جهة العراق, as it is by Some said, because his coming, to wit, the coming of the Locusts was from that part of Erak (or Chaldea) وكذلك مجي العدو ان كان مثالا له and so likewise was the coming of the enemies, if it be a comparative expression of him. R. Solomon likewise saith that it may be expounded of the army of Locusts, or in another way, of a people coming out of the north (country) of the kings of Assyria. Cyril also having expounded it of the Assyrians, as being toward the north, saith, that if any shall expound it of the Locusts, as coming from the more northern parts of Judea, there is nothing to hinder why that exposition may not be approved of; but Others do so take the one as to reject, and disapprove the other. Abarbinel among the Jews (who, as we have formerly seen, is peremptory for having it understood of the enemy) thinks this epithet to agree to the Assyrians, the Babylonians, and the Romans, the two former being North-East, the latter North-West of Judea, and all these he will have under it comprehended, and the mischief by them all done to the Jews here pointed to, and not any by Locusts, or such creatures literally understood; and what is here said shall be done, to be that which hath been already done to the former, and shall be done to the latter. * Others think thereby denoted singly the Assyrians, who led by Sennacherib, invaded the land in Hezekiah's time; † Others the Chaldeans who carried them captive; ‡ Others the Assyrians under Holofernes, all so called from the same reason of their situation in respect of the land of Israel. But whatever reasons these, any of them, have for their opinions, they seem not so well to agree to what the Prophet expresseth both in the foregoing and following passages, as that of those other learned Men, who look upon it as denoting the Locusts, and other such noxious vermin before mentioned and described. These both Aben Ezra and Kimchi (with † Others following them) think to be called הצפוני, the northern one, as coming or brought צפון צפון out of the northern coasts to them (though Jerome thinks this a proof, that it is to be understood of the Assyrians, and not Locusts, because these more usually came

* See ver. 26.

† Ut dispergantur ad querendum panem, Ab. Ezra, as it is said of them, Lament. v. 6.

‡ The Chaldee supplies Populum. Others Inimicum, Pisc. Others exercitum, Pagn. Others Hostem, Munst.

§ Hieron. Theod. and so the English at Geneva giving for a note, That is, Assyrians your enemies. ¶ Ch. à Cast.

¶ See in him and Ribera.

‡ Druf. Castal.

came from the south than from the north.)
 Others rather think thereby to be meant such part of them, as had settled themselves on the north side of Jerusalem, or the northerly part of them. Of this part of them he saith, that he will remove them far off from them, and drive them into a land barren and desolate, that is, says Aben Ezra and Kimchi, into a land in which they shall find nothing at all that they may eat, and so die and perish for want of food, i. e. saith Bochartus, into Arabia deserta, the deserts of Arabia. Junius and Tremellius seem to understand by the northern one, partem quam in Aquilonem a regione vestra depulsurus sum, that part of the Locusts which he will drive from their country into the north, and then instead of, and will drive him, rendering, depellam ex eo, I will drive of him, i. e. of that army, understand that part which was on the south, or, he would drive toward the south, where was that horrid desert described, Deut. viii. 15. But Bochartus thinks no mention to be here made at all of the southern part of them, because the city of Jerusalem, being in the extreme southern part of the land of Canaan, paucæ erant respectu urbis & sub aliis comprehensæ, they were but few on that side of the city, and comprehended under the others that were named, so that those words, I will drive him, belong to those northern ones mentioned; then in the following words, with his face toward the sea, by his face he understands that part of them, quæ ad mundi faciem, i. e. ortum, which had settled itself toward the face of the world, that is, the east. Junius and Tremellius render it, primum agmen, the foremost troop, these he saith he will drive towards (or into) the east sea, i. e. the dead sea, which was east of Jerusalem, or as Others, Genezareth, or the lake of Tiberias; and then by his hinder part, he with Others will have to be meant, occidentalem ejus partem, the western part of them, and those he threatens to drive towards, or into the utmost sea, i. e. say they, occidentale seu meridianum, the west or Mediterranean sea: into these places driven shall they perish, be all killed and destroyed, and his stink (saith he) shall come up, and צחנתו Tsachanato, his ill savour shall come up; this last word is not elsewhere found in scripture, but its being joined with the former of more known use, באשו, his stink, shews it (as the Rabbins observe) to be of much the like signification, so that here הטעם כפיר, the signification is but doubted, or the same thing repeated in different words, as Aben Ezra speaks, and it is so by Interpreters generally taken for an ill or stinking savour, except by some copies of the Greek and their Interpreters, which render here ὁ βέβητος αὐτῶν, by his sound, but that is by Bochartus observed to be a mistake only in the writing of the Greek word, which he saith ought to be written βέβητος; that so some copies of old had it, as plainly to signify stench or ill savour, appears by what is read in the printed Arat done out of it, viz. وترتفع رايحته and his stink shall ascend, and his smell stied up: which is a sign of their lying decay great numbers in those places, as either starved or drowned in the sea, and their carcasses cast again on the shore, which to be a sign to happen to and from Locusts appears by many expressions mentioned in creditable auth and out of them cited by Bochartus; it suffices us to give what Jerome reports, that his time he saw such troops of Locusts as covered the land of Judea, quæ postea vi surgente in mare primum & novissimum præcipitata sunt, which afterwards by a wind were cast headlong into the foremost and utmost sea; and then afterwards he saith that shoars of both seas being full of heaps of dead Locusts, which the waters had corrupted, the corruption and the stink of them was noxious, that it did also corrupt the air, bred a pestilence tam jumentorum quam hominum, both among cattle and men.

This may well give us to conceive what it is, that God here threatens, & how he will deal with those instruments of his wrath, which were before described, we literally understand them of Locusts and the like vermin, the names of which are in use of. They that understand thereby our enemies, as Assyrians, Chaldeans, Romans, or the like, as we have seen, cannot so literally understand this description of their destruction. But of whomsoever this northern army (as our Translation renders) be understood and what interpretation soever be put on the expressions, in this threat of God here against em, it is plain that he promiseth to his people, upon their sincere repentance, that he will fully clear them of them, and free them from such destruction as might be feared from them, however great things they had formerly one, and it might be expected would be farther done by them, did not God by his mighty power interpose. This may the following words suggest to us, which are הנידיר לעשות, rendered by Ours in the Text, because he hath done great things; in the Margin, as more agreeable to the letter, he hath magnified to do. The English from Geneva, because he hath exalted himself to do this, as also the other ancient English translation, which as several other translations in other languages, though something differing in the way of expression, yet as to the sense will easily be reconciled, if it may be agreed who is spoken of as so doing, and likewise what is the import of the particle כי Ci, which is the first word in the clause, and shews the connexion of it with the foregoing part of the verse. It is a particle that hath diverse significations, among which it may be to our purpose to take notice of these, Quia, because, cum, postquam, when, or whereas, seeing that, or after that, etsi, quamvis, although; it is by Ours and most Others translated here in the first of these, because, and

^b Jun. Trem. Lively, Bochartus.

^c R. Sol. Ab. Ezra, Kimchi.

^d See Cyril.

^e See Drus. conjectanea.

^f See Schindl. Nold. Conc.

and so seems to give a reason why God would do what he saith in the former words, but then from it being so taken ariseth a difference between Interpreters in the application of the words following, whether they shall be attributed to the enemy, or the locusts, or to God, which of those shall be said to do, or to have done great things; some we shall find be for one of these, some for another. Those that understand before all along the enemy, whether Assyrian, Chaldean, or other, here think him also spoken of, and the reason why God will punish him, as is in the foregoing words described to be given, because he did great things; or magnified to do, or as the Vulgar Latin renders it, quia superbe egit, because he did proudly: and whereas God had sent them to chastise his people, ^e did exercise their own cruelty beyond measure, and use all insolency toward them, and thought that by their own might and power of their own hand they did all this. All things in the words may seem agreeable enough to this interpretation, whereas against those that understand it locusts, seems to lay an ^h objection, that it cannot be properly said of locusts, that there is pride or insolency in them, that they should be said superbe agere, to deal proudly, or magnificare se, to exalt themselves, or to have done it out of choice, but according to their nature, wherever they come, and are by God sent at any time for judgment. This probably may have given occasion to some, who all along before look on the locusts as spoken of, yet here to think that it are not they that are said to have done great things, but God, whose name is here to be understood as in the next verse it is expressed with the same words, and so by the verb הגדיל bath done great things, to be understood, doth, in the present-tense, or shall do, in the future: of this opinion are some very learned Men; so Junius and Tremellius render, quia magnifice Jehovah agit, for which Piscator puts aget, because God doth (or shall do) wonderfully, and so Castalio, tam magna ille faciet, adding as a note in the margin, Scilicet Jehovah, i. e. so great things shall be (that is, Jehovah) do: of which the learned Mr. Lively speaking, saith, quod valde probo, which I do exceedingly like; though there be an irregularity in the words so understood, viz. a change of the person from the first to the third, for I, in I will remove, &c. be, the third, he will do: but Drusius taking notice of this way, saith that he ^l likes not to follow it, as rather arguing with such of the Jews ^k who consent in it that it is meant of the locusts: and the Chaldee Paraphrast Jonathan interprets his doing great things, of his doing many evil things [ארי אסני למעבר בישין.] He therefore, as many Others, understands it of the locusts, of whom the Vulgar Translation quia superbe egit, because he hath dealt proudly, if it be followed, must then, as Pet. a Figu. observes, be ^l metaphorically understood, because pride cannot be properly attributed to locusts, and signify no more than others more literally render, to do great things; which anciently Ruffinus observed, superbe eum egisse pronuntians, baud vitium mentis, verum magnitudinem calamitatis exprefit, i. e. saying, that he had dealt proudly, exprefseth not any fault in the mind, (of the doer) but the greatness of the calamity (or the mischief by him wrought.) But why then should he that was sent to do this, and did it not of his own ill intention be punished, because he did it? it may be thought therefore that the particle כי ci, if so translated, because, hath not so much respect alone to the words immediately going before, I will remove, &c. and will drive him, &c. but withal to what is said in those before them, wherein it is said, the Lord will be jealous for his land, and pity his people; and so it will follow as an effect of that his mercy and his pity, that he would remove those instruments of his former displeasure, because they had done great things, as great as he would now suffer them to be done to his land and people. This seems to have been Kimchi's mind, whose words are, כי הארבה הגדיל לעשות רע בארץ והאל ית ריחם על הארץ והמיתו, because the locust bath magnified to do (or done great), evil in the land, but God blessed for ever, bath had (or will have) mercy on the land, and destroyed (or will destroy) him. This seems to take away all objection against understanding it of the locusts, though כי ci, be rendred, because. Yet are there who think it plainer in that meaning, to take one of those other significations which we mentioned, viz. after that, or although. The first of them is taken by the Reverend Diodati, who in Italian renders, dopo che haura fatte cose grande, after that he bath done great things: The other by the Reverend Mr. Gataker, who so ^m gives the meaning of these words, quamvis magna gesserit, although he hath done great things, be, locustarum scilicet agmen illud, viz. that great company of locusts, exterminabitur tamen, & interecioni dabitur, scetore solo pone relicto, yet he shall be driven out of the land, and given up to slaughter, leaving only a sink behind him. I see not what can be expected against either of these in understanding the words of locusts; and they well concur in one meaning, viz. That although those hurtful creatures, sent by God in his displeasure for punishment on the land for the sins of the people, had as commissioned by him done great mischief, yet they could do no more than God would permit; and therefore after they had done great things, such as might make the people fear, they would continue to do, and bring utter destruction upon them, yet God upon their repentance, to shew that they were but his army, and did all things only by his order, would not suffer them to do more hurt, but wholly take them out of the way, and repair such loss as had been sustained from them, ^e Isaiah xlvii. 6. ^h Lyra, and see Pet. a Figu. consentiunt. ^k R. Sol. Ab. Ezra, Kimchi.

convenit superbia.

^m In his Adversaria.

^l Quos ideo non secutus sum quia Hebræi omnes in Locust. Id quod de locustis metaphorice intelligitur, quibus proprie non them, so that the people reconciled to him should not need farther to fear them, though they had hitherto found them so terrible: Of that in the following words he proceeds to assure them. But before we pass to those words, we may as by way of digression, take notice of some allegorical expositions that are made of these, as that of Cyril, who so interprets them of Christ's expelling out of us, τῶν ἀρχιδᾶ τῶν νοστίων, those locusts conceivable in the mind, those legions of devils which he hath shut up in hell, as if drowned in the sea, and made their stink to appear odious, which before did not appear so. But more especially take notice of the exposition which D. Kimchi, and ^a Others observe the ancient Jewish Doctors to give of these, viz. that they do belong to the coming of the Messiah, and that by הַצְפוּנִי Hattsephuni, (which is usually rendred the northern one) is understood (according to another signification of the word) the bidden one, i. e. say they, יצר הרע שצפון ועומד בלבו של אדם, the evil figment or frame, i. e. as it is usually understood, evil concupiscence, natural corruption, or original sin (that fiend) which is hidden and resideth in the heart of man; and by his saying that he will drive it into a land barren and desolate, to be meant a place where are not found men לְהִתְנַחֵם בָּהֶם with whom to quarrel; and by his face toward the east sea, to be intimated, that it set its eyes on the first sanctuary (or temple) and destroyed it; and by his hinder part toward the utmost sea, that he set his eyes בְּמִקְדָּשׁ שֵׁנִי וְהַחֲרִיבוֹ on the second sanctuary and destroyed it; and slew the disciples of the wise men that were in it; and then by what he saith, and his stink shall come up, and his ill savour shall come up, to be noted; שְׂמִינִיחַ אֻמּוֹת הָעוֹלָם וּמִתְנַהֵרָה בְּשׁוֹנָאֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל, that he letting alone the gentile nations contended with the baters of Israel, (i. e. with Israel, for so is meant, and in Yalkut the word שְׂנָאֵי Sonee, baters of, is left out, and put בָּהֶם בְּיִשְׂרָאֵל with them, i. e. with Israel, and by, because he hath done great things, according to R. Abai, to be meant, וּבְתַלְמִידֵי הַכִּנְמִים יוֹתֵר מִכּוֹלֵם, that it was more busy with the disciples of the wise men, than with any others. Thus far have we the allegorical explication of the ancients Rabbins cited by Kimchi (for I suppose they meant it not for literal, though the word צְפוּנִי signify as well hidden and secret, as northern.) I shall not go to shew how agreeable their descant is to the words, nor what good meaning it makes of them. I shall only say, that if the words of the text be granted so to be meant, as to point at what should be done in the time of the Messiah for conquering that hidden enemy, lurking, devouring, and making war in the heart of men, it may be looked on as fully performed in the time of our Lord Jesus, and by him, so as that we may look on him, and not expect any other to come, as the true Messiah. For by his doctrine have we been taught, and by his grace are enabled to put off, concerning the former conversation, the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts, which is that יצר הרע Yetfar hara, that inbred corruption, which by הַצְפוּנִי that hidden one, (as they render it) they would have to be meant, and to be renewed in the spirit of our mind, and to put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness, Ephes. iv. 22, 23, 24. For with him is the old man crucified, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin, nor sin should reign in our mortal body, that we should obey it in the lusts thereof, nor yield our members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin, but should yield ourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead, and our members as instruments of righteousness unto God, sin having no more dominion over us, Rom. vi. 6, 12. For this purpose was the Son of God manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil, 1 John iii. 6. So that whatsoever things in that kind the Jews can in reason look on as by these words signified, and required to be done under the Messiah, as a proof of his being come, have certainly been so fully performed by our Lord Jesus (as we said) that if the fulfilling of them may (as by this their exposition of them appears confessed) be a proof of it, it must appear mere obstinacy in them to continue to deny him. This exposition of theirs Ribera excepts against as not congruous, first, because enemies from abroad being all along spoken of, Tsephoni cannot be well rendred the hidden one, any thing at home within them, as that natural concupiscence is; and again because they hereby seem to expect that that inbred original evil should under the Messiah be clean taken out of the heart of men, which is contrary to sound doctrine. But I suppose he in this misconstrueth their meaning, it being a known saying among them, that as long as godly men live, הֵם נִלְחָמִים עִם יִצְרָן they shall have to fight with their concupiscence: their meaning seems to be therefore that they shall then receive strength to fight against it, and quell it. Arias Montanus seems to look on it as well agreeing to the words, and as so to be understood as we have given the meaning, yet if any shall deny it so to be, as Ribera doth, I shall not contend for it, but be contented with a more literal meaning of these words, seeing we shall ere long in this very chapter meet with so plain a testimony of Christ, as cannot be denied according to the strictness of the letter. To proceed therefore here, according to the more literal exposition of the words which we first gave, upon that it follows, ver. 21.

21. Fear not, O land, be glad and rejoice: for the Lord will do great things.

How should they but fear all manner of evil, when they before heard such terrible judgments described, which were already either gone forth, or threatened as unavoidably to come upon them? They were, ver. 1. bid, even all the inhabitants of the land, to tremble, be-because of the day of the Lord; and that day, ver. 11. is said to be very terrible: yet here have we clean contrary language, they are bid not to fear, yea to be glad and rejoice. That, which so clean alters the case with them, is that duty of repentance before required, ver. 16, 17. by them duly performed: While they persevered in rebellion against God, and had him their enemy, there was occasion and reason of continual fear, of weeping and howling (chap. i. 5.) and mourning (hereby) and they were called upon for it, but now being on their repentance reconciled again to him, they are bid not to fear, but to be glad, and rejoice, Fear not, O land, be glad and rejoice. O land, i. e. O land of Israel, as the Chaldee adds for explication sake, and by that meant, as Kimchi farther explains, יושביר, let not the inhabitants thereof fear, not unlike to which is Aben Ezra's explication of the same word ארמה, where is said the land mourneth, by יושביר the inhabitants thereof, chap. i. 10. and so of the word ארץ; earth, (chap. ii. 10.) the earth shall quake, by אנשי ארץ the men of the earth. The land itself, to which his speech is directed, by a prosopopœia, being not capable of such affections as are here mentioned, it is manifest that it may only be said to be secure from fear, and to be glad and rejoice, when it yields occasion of so being, and so doing to those, whose security, joy, and gladness depends much on the thriving and prospering of it, viz. in its yielding to them food, wine to make glad their hearts, oyl to make their faces to shine, and bread to strengthen their hearts; by bringing forth grass for the cattle, and herb for the service of man. Its failing to bring forth these and like things necessary for their sustenance, must needs bring them to so sad a condition as hath been before described; his bidding it now not to fear, but rejoice and be glad, is then equivalent to a promise of making it again fruitful in such good things, which shall give sure hope and comfort to them whose well-being depends on it. That they may not doubt that they shall have just occasion of doing what he bids them to do, to put away fear, to be glad and rejoice, he backs his exhortation to it, with a reason on which it is grounded, and to enforce it. For the Lord will do great things. That the Lord can do great things, even whatsoever pleaseth him in heaven and earth, they having experience of all his wonders wrought for their forefathers, could not doubt; when then he saith he will do great things, they may be assured they shall be as certain, as if already done, and indeed the verb הגדיל Higdil, doth properly signify hath done great things, and is so by most ancient, as well as diverse modern Interpreters, translated, as by the Chaldee ארי אסני יי להעבר; by the LXX. ὅτι ἐμεγάλυνε αὐτοὺς τὰ ποιῆσαι; and by the Syriack ܐܪܝܐ ܐܫܢܝܝܐ ܠܗܥܒܪ, because the Lord hath exalted himself to do, though the Latin Interpreter of it, renders it in the future, quoniam Dominus magnifice aget; by both the Arabick versions also; the MS. אן ארלה קר עטם, and the printed, لان الرب عظم صنعته, for the Lord hath made great his works, or his doings; and so among modern Translators, by Munster, agendo magnifice egit; and in the Interlineary, magnificavit Dominus. ad faciendum; but Ours (agreeing therein with many Others) choose rather to render it in the future-tense, will do, aget, or faciet, taking it, though it be in Hebrew in the præter-tense, yet not to denote what he had already done, but what he would as certainly do; it being the usual stile of scripture, in so speaking of what God had determined to do, though not yet effected. The very same words, except that the name יהוה is not expressed with them (viz. Higdil leasoth) conclude the foregoing verse, as these do this, and are therefore (as we have seen) by several thought to have there the same meaning as here, and to be spoken of God; his name being in them understood, though not mentioned; but by Others, whom I think we may rather choose to follow, not so, but of those instruments before described, which God had made use of for executing his judgments on his people perishing in rebellion against him, and so what is here said, to be spoken, though in the same words, in opposition to what is there said, and the great things there to be meant בישן Bishan, as the Chaldee explains it, evil things, but here טובין Tobin, good things. Yet will all difference, which may seem to be between the words in that place and this, be easily reconciled, the power by which those great evil things there, and these good here were wrought, being still originally the same, viz. the power of God, though there set forth is exerted by such instruments of evil as he employed for that end, here as more immediately by himself shewed forth. Though it be there said of the locust, he hath done great things, it is because God gave him power so to do, and the same power of God is here said shall do great things, in not only taking away from him that power again, but taking even him also, that seemed to have such power, out of the way, and making good to the people that damage, which by him, while God gave him leave, they had sustained; so that the same power, which before, while they were at enmity with him, was a ground to them of fearing, is now to them, at peace with him, a ground not to fear. And on the same ground proceeds he to speak in the like consolatory words to the beasts of the field also, which though they had not reason to discern the cause, yet had sense to perceive the great alteration betwixt their former condition under God's displeasure with the people, and their present under his favour to them restored: to them therefore he saith in the next words as follows.

22. Be

° Psalm civ. 14, 15:
Kimchi.

P Or, ut faceret, Margin.

q Pagn. Tig. Cast. Jun. Trem.

r See Aben Ezra,

22. Be not afraid, ye beasts of the field: for the pastures of the wilderness do spring, for the tree beareth her fruit, the fig-tree and the vine do yield their strength.

Of those beasts of the field is above, chap. i. 18. said, that they groaned, and were perplexed, and ver. 20. The beasts of the field cry also unto thee, and the reason of their so doing given, because they had no pasture, and because the rivers of waters were dried up, and the fire had devoured the pastures of the wilderness. Here that they may not continue so to cry, or to shew that they shall not have occasion so to do, they are bid not to fear, in regard that they shall find all things contrary, as to the satisfying their necessities, through which they did formerly so cry out. Though the filling of the rivers be not mentioned, yet (as Kimchi observes) seems it necessarily understood with the expressing of the restoring of the other defects, as to the pastures of the wilderness, which having been as by fire devoured, he saith do now spring. Deservedly may this be reckoned among the great things of the Lord's doing, that so great a desolation whereby the fruitful land was turned into meer barrenness, wherein neither men nor beasts could find food, should by his power be on a sudden changed again into a garden of Eden, and afford all things necessary for the being and well being of both. For so do the words here declare, as that the parched pastures should again spring, so also the tree which above he said was withered (chap. i. 12) and the fig-tree and the vine, which there also he saith languished, and were dried up, should yield their strength, i. e. put forth plenty of fruit, the greatest that could be expected from them. What change of behaviour therefore, should be in them on this change of things, by the blessing of God reconciled to them, he proceeds farther to shew in the next verse also.

23. Be glad then ye children of Zion, and rejoice in the Lord your God: for he hath given you the former rain moderately, and he will cause to come down for you the rain; the former rain, and the latter rain in the first month.

Ye children of Zion, ye inhabitants of Jerusalem, part of which was built on mount Zion. They that before were called on to turn unto the Lord with weeping and with mourning in token of repentance, are now upon their repentance, and God's gracious acceptance thereof, bid on the contrary to rejoice in the Lord their God. In the Lord, not so much in the plenty of such good things, as upon their repentance they had received, or should receive, having been before deprived of them, as * those beasts of the field in the former words, as in the favour of the donor thereof, who thereby testified the renewing of his loving kindness towards them, and that he owned them, as their God. For to assure them that he is so, he adds in expression of his great goodness to them, For he hath given you the former rain moderately, &c. Hath given, or as Others, will give, viz. as certainly as if he had already given; this, as we have elsewhere seen, being the import of the preter-tense, put in place of the future, viz. to denote the certainty of it.

אֶתְּ הַמּוֹרֶה לְצֶדֶק Et habbamoreb litsdakab. These words our Translators rendring in the text, the former rain moderately, do in the margin put as another translation, which the words will likewise well bear, a teacher of righteousness; which is the rendring that here the Vulgar Latin, and most Others also among the modern do give, and great contention is there among Expositors about it; the ground of which is from the ambiguous signification of the word מוֹרֶה Moreb, which indifferently signifies either a teacher, or rain. The root of the word is יָרָה yarab, which is found especially in three significations. The first, perhaps more proper, of casting, darting or shooting; the second of raining (or distilling); the third of teaching or instructing, and the noun מוֹרֶה Moreb thence derived, hath agreeably thereto three significations, as first, a shooter or archer, as 1 Sam. xxxi. 3. and 2 Sam. xi. 24. Secondly, of rain, as Psalm lxxxiv. 7. and by the confession of all Expositors in what follows in this verse. Thirdly, of a teacher, as Job xxxvi. 22. Isaiah ix. 15. Habak. ii. 18. &c. The first of these doth not to any seem agreeable in this place; concerning the two latter there is (as we said) great contention, which of them should be here taken. If we should go by the number of abettors, that, I suppose, in the last place named, viz. of teacher, would have the pre-eminence. For not only the ancient Latin, and those Expositors that follow it as most authentic, but many Others more modern, who make, or follow, other translations, whether in Latin or other languages, choose to prefer it. So Pagnin, Doctorem illum justitie, that teacher of righteousness. The Tigurin version, as likewise Castalio, Doctorem ad justitiam, an instructor to righteousness. Munster, qui doceat justitiam, which may teach righteousness. So two Spanish translations, one by a Christian, and having the privilege of the Duke of Ferrara, which hath, jennador de justitia, a teacher of justice; the other, I suppose, from the Jews, yet allowed by the Inquisitors, to the same purpose hath, É amostrador de justedad. Such Expositors which follow them, being many, and of great note and learning, I omit the naming of: with these, as to the signification of this word, agree also several of the Jews, as the Chaldee Paraphrast who renders, אֶתְּ מַלְפָּכֹן לְכוֹן יָתְּ מַלְפָּכֹן hath restored to you your instructor (or as Others render instructors) to righteousness, and so R. Solomon expounds it, your Prophets, הַמּוֹרִים אֶתְּכֶם who teach you, לְשׁוֹב אֵלַי כִּדִּי לְצֶדֶק אֶתְּכֶם to return unto me that I may justify you, or as a MS.

* Calvin. † Jun. Trem. Dedit pro dabit, Druf.

MS. אֱלֹהֵי בְרוּ לְצַדִּיק אֶתְכֶם, unto him that he may justify you. R. Japhet also cited by Aben Ezra, by חמור Hammoreh, will make to be understood, הַנְּבִיאָהוּ מוֹרֶה אוֹתָם בְּדֶרֶךְ צֶדֶק, a Prophet that shall instruct them in the way of righteousness, so that good shall come unto them. Abarbinel likewise takes it in that signification expounding the words, But ye O children of Zion in particular above all other nations, be glad and rejoice in the Lord your God; for in him ye shall have perfect joy, in the time of your captivity; for he will give to you a teacher of (or instructor to righteousness,) וְהָיָה מֶלֶךְ הַמָּשִׁיחַ שִׁוִּירָה אֶת הַדֶּרֶךְ יִלְכוּ בָהּ וְאֵת הַמַּעֲשֵׂה אֲשֶׁר יַעֲשׂוּ and he is the King Messias, which shall teach them the way in which they shall walk, and such things as they shall do. Among those that so take the word in that signification, there is indeed difference concerning who should be meant by this teacher; Some understanding " any Prophets that he should send, as * Haggai, Zacharias, Malachias, &c. * Others Isaias; Others King Hezekiah, as † Ruffinus; but the most Messias or Christ; mean while agreeing all in that signification of the word. But on the other side, Others both Jews and Christians prefer the signification of rain, as thinking it to make a plainer sense, and more agreeable to the place. So Aben Ezra having mentioned the opinion of Japhet, which we have seen, saith that in his opinion מוֹרֶה Moreh here is the same that יוֹרֶה yoreh (which, Deut. xi. 14. Ours translate the first rain.) Kimchi also thinks it here to be the same that יוֹרֶה yoreh, this he saith, that in saying, he will give them לְצֶדֶק לִיטְדֶקָה in justice (or according to righteousness) he means in that righteousness (or mercy) which he shewed them, after he passed over their iniquity, and visited them with rain. R. Tanchum likewise takes it in the same signification with yoreh, and לְצֶדֶק to justice to be either the same with בְּצֶדֶק, i. e. אֵל תִּתֵּן אֵלַי in equity after you have returned by repentance to me, or else בְּלֹא אִסְחָק מִנֶּכְמָךְ of mercy without desert (in or) from you, or on your part. The MS. Arabick also (done from the Hebrew) الَّذِي اعطاكم البكر للعَدَاة who hath given you Albakir, the former rain, to equality (or in just measure). Modern Interpreters also, whether in Latin or other languages, several of them prefer this signification; so Calvin, mentioning both, saith of that other, non videtur ferre hunc sensum circumstantia loci, that the circumstance of the place doth not seem well to bear that sense; the Prophet yet speaking to them of temporal benefits (and not of spiritual, of which he speaketh not till verse 28. in these verses before) to instruct them by degrees for a right conceiving of them, and that it is therefore here to be rendred pluviam, rain; and so Junius and Tremellius, ipsum imbrem tempestivum

VOL. I.

4 I

juste, the seasonable shower itself justly, for which Piscator would have to be put pluviam tempestivam, justo tempore, the seasonable rain in its just time. So Diodati in his Italian version, e'ha data pioggia giustamente hath given you rain justly. So a French translation printed at Geneva 1637. la pluye selon justice (and I suppose others whom I have not seen or understand not) and with these agree our newest Translators (whom we follow) putting in the text, the former rain, as also Others, as that from Geneva, rain. The LXX. here give a different expression from either of those, rendring τὰ βρώματα εἰς δικαιοσύνην, meat or food to justice (or righteousness) or, as * Some copies, δικαιοσύνης, of righteousness, with which agrees the Syriack כֹּסֶם צִדְקָה escam justitiæ; and the printed Arabick with the former, rendring الاطعة للعدل cibos ad æquitatem, meat to justice: yet may we with † Some look on these, not as following any other rendring, nor taking the word מוֹרֶה moreh in any other signification than that of rain, but only to have expressed the effect instead of, or meant by the cause, viz. that of things apt for food brought so out of the earth by that seasonable rain, and so to mean the same with those that render it by rain.

For that word, which Ours in the text render moderately, and in the margin observe to sound, according to righteousness; the Geneva English render it, the rain of righteousness; but another ancient translation agreeably to the new, which hath given you moderate rain. The known and most usual signification of the word צֶדֶק Tsedekab, is righteousness, but with that latitude as to comprehend what is just and equal, and what is of bounty and beneficence also, and likewise † truth (which is the most frequent use of it in the Arabick tongue) and in any of these may it be taken, according to the matter spoken of, and as shall be most agreeable to it. It may seem in this place to comprehend all of them, viz. that God would so give them rain upon their repentance, as to approve himself just in his promises of mercy to penitent sinners; such rain as should be a token of his great bounty and free mercy to them; such as should be in † just time, and in † just measure (which Ours, I suppose, express by moderately) to supply their necessities, neither defective, so as to fail to do them good, as far as was requisite for bringing forth in plenty the fruits of the earth, so as not to wither; not excessive, so as to † corrupt and rot them: though Interpreters seem to respect and express some of them one of these significations of the root more particularly, others another; yet they cannot but at once take in the others with it: we may well comprehend all under according to righteousness.

In farther declaration of the fulness of his bounty and goodness to them, he adds in the next

* R. Solomon, R. Japhet, Lyra. * See Ch. à Castro. * Grot. † Et nonnulli alii, Ch. à Castro. † The Arab. Lexicographers, mean that الباكور Albakur. † See various readings in Bib. Francford, 1597. † See Chr. à Castro, probat hunc sensum versio LXX. quoniam dedit vobis escas seu alimenta justitiæ vel in justitiam, escas sc. quæ ex pluvia, Moreh, proveniunt, quibus escantur & lætantur. † Veracitas, Full. cap. Concord. † Justo tempore, Piscat. † Justa mensura. Lively. † See chap. i. 17.

next words, and he will cause to come down for you the rain, the former rain and the latter rain, גשם Geshem, the rain, this word seems more generally to signify rain, the other two Moreb, the former rain, and Malkush, the latter rain, more particularly such, as fell at such seasons, viz. the ^a first of them, at or after the time of sowing, which made the corn to grow; the second towards harvest time, to fill it, that it might kindly ripen; they are elsewhere also so joined together, as Deut. xi. 14. and there put as distinct sorts of rain, under the general name for rain, only that for that general name there is put מטר Mator (which so likewise signifieth in the Syriack and Arabick tongues) for which is here גשם Geshem, which is an argument that it, as we said, doth also signify the same with that, rain in general, and not only violent rain, as ^k Some seem to think; and instead of מורה Moreb, there is יורה yoreb, being, though with difference in the first letter, the same in signification. These last two St. James likewise joins, James v. 7. calling them in Greek πρῶτον and ἔσχατον, as they are here by the LXX. rendred, and by Ours there rendred the early and the latter rain, as here the former and the latter rain.

The word מורה Moreb, being the same in form and writing with that in the preceding words, and being here by general consent of Interpreters rendred in the notion of rain, seems to ¹ Some an argument that in the former place it ought to be taken in its other signification of a teacher. But it is not necessary that it should be taken in different notions, the taking it in the same in both places (viz. in the first, as it is by all in the second, for rain) will not be a superfluous repetition, but have, as joined with the other words, great weight and emphasis in it, for expressing (as we said) the full measure and perfection of God's blessings to them; while in the first place having promised that he will give them the former rain, moderately, or according to justice, of which they seemed at the present to have need: he here seems to add, yea not only so, but all convenient rain at its due season also; and as the former so the latter also, so as that his blessing shall not be imperfect or defective in any part, but such as shall supply all their needs, and at all necessary times as occasion required, which seems farther intimated by what is added בראשון, which Ours render in the first month, as it is also in former English translations read. Great difference is there in the rendring and giving the meaning of this word among Interpreters. Many so render it as Ours do by understanding ^m month, and the Chaldee Paraphrast expresseth by name, in the month Nisan, which if it be followed, this designation of time Piscator notes must be referred to only the latter word מלקוש

Malkosh, the latter rain, for between the falling of that and the Moreb, the former rain, there were betwixt the seasons or months, in which the one and the other ordinarily fell the ⁿ space of several months; so that it will not be easy to understand how they should be said to fall both in the same month. The Jews, which follow that way, strive to expedite the matter by referring it to a miracle, as Kimchi cites out of them, viz. that in that year both those rains fell in that one month, so that whereas there had not in it before that fallen any rain, there did on the first day of the month Nisan, or March, fall the former rain, which usually fell in Marchesvan October, and on the fifth, the latter rain; betwixt which days they sowed their corn, which by the sixteenth day grew to ripeness, so that in eleven days, by reason of those two rains falling otherwise than in other years, the corn came to that perfection for which ordinarily six months were required. The same story is referred to by R. Solomon, and Aben Ezra, who seems to believe it, as done במעשה נס by way of miraculous sign, according to what is said, ver. 21. that the Lord would do great things. From being put on the difficulty of believing this story, though following this rendring (viz. in the first month) we are secured by that note, that this is to be understood only of the latter rain, that it shall then be given, the former having been before in its due season given. Thus Kimchi seems to take it explaining it, to mean that he sent to them the first rain called Moreb in its proper time, which was the month Marchesvan, and likewise the Malkosh (or latter rain) in its season, which is the first month, which is Nisan: and so I suppose our Translators took it to be meant, by either putting a comma, or pause, betwixt the words, former rain, and the following words, but none between latter rain, and in the first month. But Others avoid all difficulty in this place by not looking on month at all here understood. R. Tanchum looks on it as not proper at all, that the word ראשון first, be understood for ראשון חודש the first month, which is Nisan לאן דלך ליום דלך אואן, because that, he saith, it ^o is not due season for rain. He therefore, as many Others, prefer other rendrings of the word; and different other ways are yet taken in it. He gives us them, viz. these two, 1st, That by בראשון, in the first, may be meant פ'י אול וקתר in its first time, or the first of its season, as soon as it shall be seasonable or needful. With this agrees that rendring of Junius and Tremellius, primo quoque tempore, at every first time, as likewise that of Castalio, in primis, with the first, all meaning, as Mr. Lively explains it, mature cum primum ea opus est, ^p in good time, as soon as there shall be need of it: This as the Rabbin puts in the first place, so he seems to like the best. 2^{dly}, That (as Others say) as he he observes, may be meant the same as by בראשון (as at first or formerly) viz. כחאלכם אלאולי as in (or according to) your first or former condition, viz. before the late damage, for punishment on their sins, had come upon them. This is that translation which the LXX. give of these words, Καθὼς ἔμπροσθεν, as before (or as formerly) and the printed Arabick following them كما من قبل; the Syriack also כמי ינסך בסם ut antea, as before; and the Vulgar Latin likewise, sicut in principio, as in the beginning; and in this sense is it by Others more modern also taken. This makes several here to conjecture a various rendring, and that instead of בראשון Barishon, in the first, they read בראשון Carishon, as the first; haud dubie, saith Drusius, speaking of the LXX. ב (c) pro ב (b) without doubt they read c for b. But I rather think it without doubt that they did not, but only understood the particle ב Ca, signifying as, though not expressed (as other when it is, as Ribera observes, oft omitted) or else took the meaning of in the first, or former, to be the same with as heretofore. So we see that those Jews, whom R. Tanchum speaks of, understood it, who we may be sure did not read otherwise than we now have it, which likewise is confirmed by what Abarbinel saith, that בראשון here is as much as כבראשונה, as at first, or in former times, that so in the words may be a promise שיתברכו חבואות הארץ כאשר היו ביום קדם that the fruits of the earth shall be blessed as in former days. So that if we follow this interpretation according to the opinion of them, we need not change our reading of the words, but have a perspicuous meaning of them.

^ε Calvin. ^h Druf. ¹ Reuchlin. Concord. ^k Kimchi, Rad. ^l Ribera. ^m So the MS. Arab. في الشهر الاول. ⁿ A quorum una ad alteram sex minimum menses solent intercedere, Merc. ימים רבים Many days, Aben Ezra. ^o Know not from whom. So notes Tarnovius, quod hæc pluvia in illo mense non sit data. ^p Agreeably to this way Calvin, in tempore suo, i. e. unamquamque pluviam, tempestive & opportune, so that Grotius expresseth it, both in seed time and harvest he will give seasonable weather.

Now though both those, who do render the word מורה moreh in the first place, by a teacher, and by rain, do agree all in rendring it in the second place by the former rain; yet do they in giving the meaning of it still differ: they who render it in that first place, a teacher, here many of them understanding by rain mentioned spiritual good things belonging to the kingdom of Christ: as the happy success of the gospel, and propagation of it like corn, which, by the blessing of seasonable rain watering it, groweth and increaseth abundantly, or copiam fructuum & bonorum spiritualium per Christum, plenty of good fruit and spiritual good things conferred in Christ; gratiam praevenientem & co-operantem, & copiam doctrinae & auxiliorum Dei, preventing and co-operating grace, plenty of heavenly grace and doctrine, and of helps from God, with such like other expressions, taking the words allegorice & principalius, as one of them speaks, allegorically and more principally, to be spoken of spiritual good things, as we said: but they, who render it in the first place by rain, both there and here understanding it literally of the blessing of seasonable rains, whereby should be produced to them such good effects, as were in the foregoing verse mentioned, and in the following farther described; which, as the plainer way, we follow, as likewise best agreeing to the next words, though in them also many prosecute the allegory mentioned. The words are,

24. And the floor shall be full of wheat, and the fats shall overflow with wine and oyl.

A great alteration in their condition, from what they were before in, do these words describe. The corn before, chap. i. 10. is said to be wasted, the new wine to be dried up, and the oyl to languish; and ver. 17. the garners to have been laid desolate, and the barns broken down, because there was no corn to put in them, and that both the meat-offerings and the drink-offerings were cut off, ver. 9. with the like expressions of extreme penury, and want of all things necessary for their own use, or whereby they might serve God. So was it with them while they continued in their rebellion, and God's anger and judgments were upon them. But now upon their turning to God, and his being turned unto them, and having received them into his favour, things are here described as clean contrary, and they are assured of the greatest plenty of all good things, which may be in words expressed. The floors of their barns shall be full of wheat, and their fats overflow with wine and oyl, under these three, wheat (or corn) wine and oyl, seem comprehended all things necessary for the use of man, and by the failure of these are usually described dearth or famine, and want of all good things needful for comfortable living; and on the contrary by the abounding of them, fertility and plenty of all such things, and such here is promised, even to fulness and overflowing. The verb השיקו heshiku, rendred, overflow, is (I think) not elsewhere found in scripture, in this form and that signification, which it seems here to require, but in this place, and again, chap. iii. 13. which I suppose to be the occasion that Expositors do not at all here agree in the rendring of it. In the Interlineary, as corrected by Arias Montanus, it is in the text put, strident torcularia, the wine (or olive) presses shall make a noise: and so in the Tigurin, (although in both, in the margin, redundabunt, shall overflow.) They appear to follow in it R. Solomon, who saith (I know not on what authority but his own) that it denotes השמעת קול כשהקילו יורד מן הגת אל תוך הקב, the making a noise by the stream of the liquor running from the press into the fat (or through) for so withal he notes that יקב is properly the pit or fat, which is before the press: for which reason Drusius changeth the old translation of it from torcularia, wine-presses, into lacus torcularis, as Junius and Tremellius render it, torcularium lacus, the fats of the wine-presses, which receive what is pressed out by them.

^a Geneva Notes, and Pet. à Fig.

^r Drusius, Mercer, &c. Tarnov. Pet. à Fig.

and Ch. à Castro.

^t Tirin.

^u Menoch. and see Ar. Mont.

^x Tirinus.

^y Pet. à Fig.

^w Intellige gratiam excessum, & doctrinam.

^z Mercer, and see Ribera.

them. Ab. Ezra, would have it here taken in the same sense that משיקות Masbikoth, Ezek. iii. 13. which is by Ours there rendred, touch'd, or as in the margin; kiss'd, the word being looked on as properly so signifying.) But what he would have to be the meaning, he doth not declare; perhaps he would have it meant, that through abundance of wine and oyl, they should have need of several fats or vessels to receive it, set near one to another to make room for them; but that word there is looked on as derived from the word נשק Nashak, signifying properly to kiss, and so consequently to touch one another, or the like; but this here from שוק, from which the noun שוק shok, hath the notion both of a leg and of a street. As for the verb in the form that here it is in, it is by the most, whether Jews, except those whom we have mentioned, or Christians, agreed on to have the signification of running over, or overflowing: So by the Chaldee rendring, ישיפון; and Kimchi saith it to be the same with בסיפון betsifhu, from צף, and R. Tanchum (as the MS. Arabick version) in Arabick renders it by تنفيض, which all signify to the same purpose of swimming, flowing, or overflowing, as likewise what the LXX. have υπερχεινόμενοι, the Vulgar Latin, redundabunt, the Syriack, ܒܫܝܦܝܢ, the MS. Arabick, تنفيض, the printed Arabick, تتدفق, all which will be well expressed by what Ours have, shall overflow. To which of those significations of the noun this given to the verb should be referred, seems doubted. The accurately learned Mr. Nicholas Fuller takes that wherein it signifies a leg, the instrument of running, and looks on the primary signification of it to be, currere, discurrere, excurrere, to run, to run about, or abroad, to run out, as if we should say, crurare, to leg it (or foot it) and then by way of metaphor, in things that have not legs, effluendi ac redundandi notio, the notion of running out and overflowing. But Junius and Tremellius refer it to that other notion, whereby it signifies a street, (though that also may be referred to the former, as being a place of concourse, and wherein people run about) expressing it in their rendring, plateasque perfundent torcularium lacus musto & oleo, and the fats of the presses shall overspread the streets with wine and oyl, as if they should for abundance so overflow, as even to make those liquors run about the streets; whatever be said, as to the nicety of the derivation and deduction of the word, manifest it is from what follows, that great abundance of the things named is here by it intimated: and the signification of it in this kind may also be illustrated and confirmed from the use of the same theme in the Arabick tongue, which is known much to agree with the Hebrew. For in that from the theme, ساق the first conjugation of the verb ساق Saka, denotes to drive on, or put forward; in the sixth تساق tasawaka, to follow one another, and to go so close as to press or jostle one another; and in the seventh انساق Ensaka, (as Grotius out of the Dictionary of Ebn Maruph) Fluxit & progressus est, to flow and to go forward, to note store, through which things follow one another. They, which still adhere to the allegorical meaning of the words, will tell us that the thing here understood is likewise, Evangelii diffusio per totum orbem, the overspreading of the gospel through the whole world. ^a Some go on more particularly to say, that by the floors being full of wheat, &c. are understood plenty of graces and virtues given by Christ to particular churches, which are meant by floors, olive-yards, and vine-yards, and the presses (or fats) in which wine and oyl are pressed out, to be, Gymnasia, Monasteria, Collegia, &c. Schools, Monasteries, Colleges, and other like places; and also persecutions and tribulations, quibus vinum sapientiae, & fortitudinis, ac oleum consolationis divinae exprimitur & bauritur, by which the wine of wisdom and fortitude, and the oyl of divine consolation is prest out. But however these words may by way of comparison be applied, I suppose the most plain and proper way of expounding them is here also according to the literal sense, as likewise in the two next verses, wherein he farther declares what great good things God will bestow on them upon their repentance, which he had for punishment of their sins before deprived them of, that ^b he would make them glad according to the days wherein he had afflicted them, and the years wherein he had seen evil. So he himself saith unto them by the mouth of his Prophet, ושלמתי, &c.

25. And I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten, the canker-worm and the caterpillar, and the palmer-worm, my great army which I sent among you.

The damage, which they had for several years received by those devouring creatures mentioned, which wasted all the fruits of the earth, so that they had not any thing left whereby to subsist, he would now henceforward make good to them, by giving them an extraordinary plenty, and preserving it for their use. The locust, the cankerworm, the caterpillar, and the palmer-worm; these are the same that were above mentioned, chap. i. though in different order. There the חגב baggezem, rendred the caterpillar, is put in the first place, here the last; which the learned Bochartus looks on, as an evident proof that these vermin here named came altogether in one year, and not singly, one sort in one year, and another in another, as some of the Jewish Interpreters would have it; for then he would not have named that in, or for, the fourth year, which was in the other place said to come in the first, as we have on that place observed. All these probably came together, and so continued to do for some years, as the word השנים hashanim, years, put in the plural number shews. And of these he saith, my my great army which I sent among you. We heard above, ver. 11. of this army, his very great camp: Who by that his army and camp are meant, we have expressed by the names of locust, canker-worm, caterpillar, and palmer-worm, or such creatures as are by those names in the Hebrew, which are by Ours so rendred, meant; whether they were exactly the same, or others of like nature, not so well known to us in these countries: and the reason why he calls them his army is expressed, viz. because he sent them among them. They came not by chance, nor by any ordinary natural necessary reason, but were of his sending, to do his will, and execute his commands. The question here still will be the same which hath all along been in this prophecy, even from the 4th verse of the first chapter, whether by those names are literally to be understood those creatures by them signified, or some other to them compared, in respect to the mischief by them wrought. They are by many taken in their proper signification, and to call them God's army will be a language very easily admitted by those, among whom those creatures are more usual and familiarly known. So among the Arabians to call locusts the army of God, is an expression well known, and used by Mahomet himself, who forbade to kill them, because they were جند الله الأعظم the army of God Almighty: and it is a story received among them, that there fell between his hands, or before him, a locust, on whose wings was written, نحن جند الله الأكبر in Hebrew, אנחנו צבא אלוקים הגדול, we are the army of the most great God. However fabulous this story be, it matters not, it makes good what sufficeth for our present purpose, viz. to prove that it is proper and congruous to apply the title of God's army to locusts; without its being written on their wings, it is very legible that they are so, by the great things which they have, being by him sent and impowered, often done, not usual, or beyond what could by the greatest and strongest armies of men be done for working destruction in the earth. So that there is no exception against applying to them the word literally taken, nor any reason for any incongruity in the language why we should not think it to be meant really of them; and that verb eat, being used to express that mischief that they did, well agrees to them. The rendring here of the Vulgar Latin, fortitudo mea magna, or Others to the same purpose, my great power, or strength, what before it rendred, ver. 11. exercitus, army, doth not make any difference. The Hebrew word is in both places the same, viz. צבא Chail, and hath both these significations, which in this case here seem equivalent. They are for their multitude deservedly called God's army, for the great things that by him ordered they did; his great power and strength. But notwithstanding that the words may so fitly be applied to locusts, and such like hurtful creatures, are they by Some understood otherwise, viz. of men, enemies and authors of mischief to them. So by the Chaldee Paraphrast is the verse expounded; and I will repay (or restore) to you good years for those years; דבון יתכן עמבא אומיא ולישניא ושלטוניה ומלכותא פורענות חילי רבא דשלחית בכון, in which people, nations and languages, and princes (or principalities); and kingdoms of revenge (or ordained for revenge, or, as Others, the vengeance of my great army,) my great army which I sent against you, spoiled you: who, D. Kimchi thinks, doth in so expounding them, take them to be a prophecy to be fulfilled in the times of the Messiah.) Abarbinel understands by them to be meant the four kingdoms, which before (chap. i. 4.) he would have to be intimated by those names of those four destructive creatures, and those to be called by God my great army which I sent among you חילי השם ושלוחי, השגחתו להעניש את ישראל על ידיהם, because they were the forces of God, and messengers of his providence for the punishing of Israel by them; and so thinks the good things here promised to be great plenty, which after their restoration from their captivity they shall enjoy. To omit Others which take much the same way, Grotius thinks by them to be understood Pul, Tilgathpilneser, Sbalmaneser, and Sennacherib, four Assyrian Kings, who invaded the land of Israel and Judah, and did great mischief therein. Of any of these named may it be said that they were God's army, and by him sent, as he saith of the Assyrian, that he was the rod of his anger, and that the staff in their hand was his indignation, Isaiah xi. 5. All the great things that they did were by his power, not their own; they were without that as contemptible as the vilest worms, and he could as easily destroy them, as appears by what became of Sennacherib and his army, Isaiah xxxvi. &c. And by his power could the most contemptible among creatures do as great mischief to any people; as the greatest of them, as appears in the plagues of Egypt. There is no need therefore that we should here leave the letter of the text, and fly to a figure for understanding the weak creatures here mentioned of the strongest kings or nations. Those creatures could fulfil God's command for punishment of a sinful people as fully as any of them: Nor more need have we here to fly with Others to a continued allegory, according to which the happiness here promised * will be that, which under Christ and the Gospel should be enjoyed above that under the more barren times under the law, while men were under the tyranny of death and the devil; or that here are spiritual blessings meant, and things † concerning the happiness of the soul, and those heavenly divine fruits, which the earth (or soil) of humane nature, enriched by the seed and virtue of Christ, bringeth forth; or that by the noxious creatures here named are understood, ‡ devils,

^a Mercer.^a R. Menoch.^b Psalm xc. 15.

VOL. I.

4 K

or

* D. miri. † LXX. and printed Arab. ‡ Mercer, and Pet. à Fig. § 2 Kings xv. 19. ¶ 1 Chron. v. 26. 2 Kings xv. 29. † 2 Kings xvii. 3. ‡ 2 Kings xviii. 13. § Isaiah xxxvi. 1. ¶ 2 Chron. xxxii. 1. &c. † Mercer. ‡ Ar. Mont. † Menoch.

or ^a armies of spiritual enemies, with their temptations; or by the fruits of the several years to be restored, ^o the true worship of God, which among the Gentiles was not at all, and among the Jews almost lost, while the Gentiles oppressed them. Such allegorical meanings do Some think to belong to the words, ^p apertius, more openly; but I think that may rather be said of the plain literal meaning, according to which, consequently on what hath all along before been said in this prophecy, they are given to know that all the evils before described or threatened unto them, were from God sent on them as a punishment of their sins, and that those contemptible creatures named were his powerful army, which they could not resist, nor free themselves from, as by more years experience they had found, and might justly fear utter destruction: but that upon their repentance, and making peace with him, they should find that he that sent them, and by whose power and commission they acted and had done great things, and seemed to threaten more, could as easily remove them (as ver. 20.) and not only so, but also could and would make good to them all that damage that they had sustained by them. So that whereas before they had occasion, all sorts of them, to howl and cry for the great penury and misery that they were brought to, they shall no more have such occasion, but of clean contrary behaviour, such as is in the next words described and promised.

26. And ye shall eat in plenty, and be satisfied, and praise the name of the Lord your God, that hath dealt wonderfully with you: and my people shall never be ashamed.

These words, as to the literal sense, which we follow, are plain, assuring them, that whereas they had for some years been in great want and penury, they should now have abundant plenty of all good things necessary for a comfortable livelihood to them, even as much as should fully satisfy their utmost desires; so that now they should not have any occasion to murmur or repine and crave for more, but on the contrary, to praise the name of the Lord their God, who had dealt so wonderfully with them, in giving them all things which they had need of, or could wish for; by which means that reproach, which before for their poverty they were in among other nations, was now taken away, and they looked on as a people owned, and taken care of by God, who will never suffer those whom he owns for his, to be ashamed, as if they relied on one who were not all-sufficient to them. But they are not only a description of great plenty to them, but withal a gracious promise of God's blessing with it, of power to enjoy it, and hearts to be duly sensible of God's goodness to them in it: without this blessing, they may have to eat, and eat, and yet not have enough (or not be satisfied) and drink and be not filled with drink, ⁴ Hagg. i. 6. which is an evil which the Preacher saith he saw under the sun, and it is common among men, when God giveth riches to a man, so that he wanteth nothing of all that he desireth, yet giveth not power to eat thereof, Eccles. vi. 2. this is the good gift of God, when God giveth riches and wealth, and withal giveth him power to eat thereof, and to take his portion, Eccles. v. 19. This is that which he here promiseth to these, that they shall eat in plenty and be satisfied, (which I think they well take to be the meaning of ואכלתם אכול, & comedendo comedetis, and eating ye shall eat, i. e. have still to eat as oft as ye shall have need, and never want till they be fully and constantly satisfied.) Again, there is an evil too common among men, ^r that when they have eaten and are full, they forget God and say in their heart, my power and the might of my hand hath gotten me this wealth, Deut. viii. xiv, 47. (Hosea xiii. 6.) Such behaviour turneth his blessings into a curse to men: that it may not be so with these, he promiseth them together, to give them hearts to acknowledge him the donor and be thankful unto him, so he may continue to bless them. So saith he, and ye shall praise the name of the Lord your God, who hath dealt wonderfully with you. The words seem to intimate that as they shall have manifest occasion so to do, so also they shall be so affected as to do it out of the sense of God's wonderful dealing with them, and as above, ver. 21. he speaks, doing great things: wonderful it must needs seem, that whereas all the provisions of their land, had been totally destroyed by those devouring creatures named, he should by a sudden change not only remove them, (as ver. 20.) but restore to them all that they had eaten. The words ^s Some think to import, and the wonder to consist in, this, that now in one year, he would give them as much as the locusts, &c. had devoured in four years past, or as much as they should have enjoyed in so many years, if it had not been devoured: and so shall it be by God's dealing with them, that his people shall never be ashamed. While they revolted from him, and were by him disowned, it is manifest by what we have seen, that shame and confusion had seized on them. So chap. i. 11. The husband-men are bidden to be ashamed; and that the whole nation having forsaken him, and being by him forsaken, were to become a reproach amongst other nations, appears by what they are taught to pray, ver. 17. Spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thine heritage to reproach, &c. and his promising, ver. 19. that he would no more make them a reproach among the heathen. So that it appears they had been or at present were in such condition. So was it with them when God had cast them off, and shewed his displeasure against them, but being now upon their repentance received again into his favour and owned by him, they are assured that it shall be otherwise with them; that that all reproach and cause of it shall be taken away, this being assigned as an undoubted privilege of his people, that they shall never be ashamed. What ground they would have for this assurance or security, appears in the next following words.

^a Sa. ^o Pet. à Fig. ^p Ribera. ^q Mic. vi. 14. ^r And see Deut. xxxii. 15. and Prov. xxx. 9.
^s Kimchi, which Others seem likewise to think meant, Tarnov.

27. And ye shall know that I am in the midst of Israel, and that I am the Lord your God, and none else: and my people shall never be ashamed.

By such things and good effects, as are certain signs of God's owning any people for his, and his gracious presence and peculiar providence over them, shall they know and be assured, that God now upon their being turned to him, is returned to them, and is in the midst of them, and that he is their God by a peculiar right, owning them, and being owned by them, and that there is none other that hath done or can do such things as he hath done, and will do for them, viz. in removing evil and doing good, both in such an extraordinary manner as by none but his infinite power can be done; as in the particular case here spoken of, in removing those locusts that he had sent to punish them, and making good by such extraordinary plenty the damage that they had by them sustained. By the extraordinary evils which beset the Israelites upon their rebellion and breach of covenant with God, it is said that they shall be forced to say, Are not these evils come upon us, because our God is not amongst us? Deut. xxxi. 17. Here on the contrary, by like reason, it is said, that by God's dealing wonderously with his people upon their repentance, in restoring to them the years that the locust, &c. had eaten, and given them all things richly to enjoy and to eat in plenty, &c. they should know that he was in the midst of them, and that he was the Lord their God, and none else. By God's being in the midst of them, will be manifestly understood, his being ready to hear their requests, to afford help and relief to them on all occasions; and by his being the Lord their God, that he, who is Lord over all, doth in a particular manner own them, and hath respect to them as his peculiar people, to whom he will have regard, more than to any other, to order things concerning them, for good to them; and by saying none else, that there is no other god, none among those, whom other nations, or they, when they forsook him, did worship, who could do such things as he now did, and could and would continue to do for them. This they having by experience certain assurance of, cannot have any occasion of being ashamed of his service, or finding, while they shall serve him, any thing which shall be for shame to them; as if they relied on one, who either would not or could not help them, and do good to them on any occasion, having both of his power and mercy, both infinite and such as is in none else found, engaged to them; and therefore for confirmation and full assurance sake, he again repeats it, and my people shall never be ashamed. My people, such as continue faithful with him, constant in his service, they so continuing faithful to him, shall never be ashamed, never be deceived in their hope and trust in him, but be sure to find made good to them all his promises, and a joyful issue to, and deliverance from all troubles and evils that shall befall them, and by which, were it not that he were with them, in the midst of them, and ready to deliver them, they might be exposed to reproach, and shame, and brought to confusion. This seems a plain exposition of the words, according to the literal meaning, and as by Ours aptly rendred: but they are by Others something differently rendred, and by consequence something differently understood, לעולם leolam, by Ours and Others, rendred unquam, ever, and with the negative joined to it, never, is by Others rendred in sempiternum, or perpetuo, for ever, or always; as if he said, that though they might be sometimes under afflictions and calamities, yet there should be a good issue to all, and such as should take away occasion from those that derided them, of saying, where is now their God? This well agrees with the former to make for a right understanding of it, by bidding not to judge of the condition of God's children, or people, always from their present state or sufferings, but from the end and issue that God would give to them, which should certainly be such as should not be for shame, but for joy and glory to them, if not in this present time, yet in the life to come, and mean while they should be sustained by comfort from him, and assured hope, which should keep them from being ashamed, and make them rather glory in their tribulations, than faint in them, or think themselves forsaken of God; but that hereby he manifesteth his fatherly love to them, and care of them, in humbling and proving them, that he may do them good at their latter end, Deut. viii. 2. making all things to work together for good to them that love him, Rom. viii. 28. Mean while, whether whole nations or particulars, they are here manifestly given to know, that as they will find security against shame and confusion at all times, and on all occasions, they must keep themselves near to God, acknowledging him and none else for their God, that they may by him be owned for his people. To such only is this promise here made, and such shall never fail of having it made good in such manner, as shall be best for them, and so as that they shall know and acknowledge him to be, as is here described, in the midst of them, the Lord their God, and that there is none else besides him able so to order things for good to them.

Besides

^t Kimchi. ^u Grot. on Mat. xviii. 20. Psalm xlv. 5. ^w Psalm cxlvii. 20. ^x Kimchi. ^y Hosea xiii. 4.
^z Tig. ^a Pet. à Figuer. ^b Rom. v. 5. ^c Rom. v. 5. ^d Heb. xii. 5.

Besides these significations of the word לעולם leolam, whereby it may be rendred, either, unquam, ever, at all, or perpetuo, for ever, always, and with the negative joined with it, never, not at all, or, not for ever, not always; there is another notion in which it is sometimes used, for a long time, or a good while, though known when it shall end. In this way Lyra here takes it, saying that it doth ^e not import perpetuity. And in the same notion ^f Grotius taking it, explains it to denote, per longum tempus, quamdiu vivet Ezechias, for a good while, as long as King Hezekiah shall live, in whose days we find that peace and happiness was promised, 2 Kings xx. 9. Isaiab xxxix. 8. But though the word be so elsewhere used, here it seems too narrow a restraining of God's promise to his people so keeping themselves in their relation to him, as if it were to be made good only for so short a space of time, and not a perpetual privilege belonging to them, which they ever had and always should be assured to enjoy. It is manifest that the words were, when spoken by the Prophet, spoken in particular to the Jews, in regard to the different conditions they had been in, or should be in (whether by the invasion of the Assyrians, as he with Others takes it meant, or as Others, more plainly and literally, by reason of a famine caused by the locusts devouring all the fruits of their land) while they continued in their sinful rebellious behaviour, and should be for the justice in, on their turning unto God by repentance: both which have been in the foregoing words described, the former of which made them a shame and reproach to other nations, the latter should take off that shame and all occasion thereof. The assurance of this alteration of their condition, is in these words set down as an undoubted truth, that God's people shall never be ashamed. So that it seems a privilege belonging not only to them, and that for a short while, but to all that make good to themselves that title of God's people, and as long as they shall continue to be so. Though it be applied to that their particular case, the thing asserted seems an universal truth, which shall be always made good to God's people, viz. *that all things so ^g work for good to them that cleave stedfastly to God, that they shall never be ashamed, but find occasion to joy and glory in their condition, it having ^h the promise both of this life and the life to come. Their happy condition even in this present life we have ⁱ frequently in the scripture described, both as concerning particular persons, and the whole body of nations. As those, who confine this promise to the times of Hezekiah, much take off from the greatness and graciousness of it, in respect to the duration of it; so doth Abarbinel much derogate from it on the other hand, by putting forth and delaying the time of its being made good, while he would make it not to be to take place till after* their restoration from their last exile, which they are still under, and the days of the Messiah which they expect, denying him to be yet come, which certainly frustrates, and will still frustrate the benefit of it to them, while they continue in that obstinacy of unbelief, whereby they have forfeited to themselves the right of being for the present his people, and the benefits belonging to such as are so. Nor can we yet fully assent to those among Christian Expositors, who having taken the former words and passages in an allegorical way, as we have seen; look on these also, as only a promise of such spiritual good things, as were to be conferred in ^j Christ, by whom our corrupt nature is repaired, and the shame and confusion of the law and sin taken away by the salutary doctrine of the gospel.

But however these words may be applied, or to whatsoever referred, according to the plain literal sense, which we choose to follow, they seem particularly spoken by the Prophet to the Jews of his time, with respect to their condition, as we have before seen and said, which they had been or were at present, or should certainly be, in. It will be much one which of the tenses we use, as signifying that (in prophetic language) which was as present with God, as if past or already done. They are described as by their grievous provocations, having been brought into such a calamitous condition, by penury ^k and famine brought on them by locusts and such noxious vermin, utterly destroying all the fruits of their land, and by other such means that they were become a shame and reproach, a scorn and derision to other nations. They are exhorted therefore, for removing of such evils, to turn unto God by serious repentance, and promised that upon so doing they should find such mercy from him, that he would again receive them into favour, and own them for his people, and do such great things for them, as that they, while they continued in that behaviour to him, should not longer, yea, never more, be ashamed. This good promise is concluded with such words as are, though there particularly applied to their present case, yet of universal and perpetual truth, My people shall never be ashamed. Being absolutely taken, they are an assurance to all who cleave to God, so as to approve themselves his people, that they shall never be left destitute of any thing conducing to their welfare, whether concerning their temporal or spiritual estate, so as that they shall fail of their hope in him, or have reason to be ashamed of their condition in his service: but do seem here more particularly referred and adapted to the restoring them to a flourishing condition in their land, a plentiful enjoyment of the temporal good things thereof, of which they had been for punishment of their sins and rebellion against God deprived.

A

^e As elsewhere it denotes the time only to the year of Jubilee. ^f And Others, see Pet. à Fig: ^g Rom. viii. 28. ^h 1 Tim. iv. 8. ⁱ Deut. xi. 13, 14. and xxviii. 1, &c. Psalm xci. ^j Mercer. ^k Id. Merc. Ad literam, ad probum famis hoc pertinet, quo inter gentes laborabant.

A more exprefs promise of spiritual good things we have in the following words.

28. And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh, and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, and your young men shall see visions :

29. And also upon the servants and upon the hand-maids in those days will I pour out my spirit.

He proceeds in gracious promises to them ; but such as are of a distinct nature from the former, which I suppose gave occasion to Abarbinel, who divides this book of Joel into two prophecies, or prophetic sermons, to take these words to be the beginning of the second of them, (as Others for the same reason make them to begin a new chapter.) The foregoing promises were great, but these much greater, and of an higher nature. Those, according to the expressions, of temporal things (however Some extend them farther) these plainly of spiritual, which, when they shall be conferred, what they are, and to whom they shall pertain, or shall be given, is in these words described. 1. We have the time וְהָיָה אַחֲרָיו כֵּן vehayah achare cen, and it shall come to pass afterward ; after those promises before made good. The spiritual things here promised are as first in dignity, and of a more excellent nature than those temporal before promised, so certainly before and above them to be desired, according to that method by our Saviour prescribed, Mat. vi. 33. of seeking first the kingdom of heaven, not doubting but then all other things belonging to this life, as food and raiment, shall be added to them : but it pleaseth God here in the first place to assure them by promises of those lower necessary things, in compassion of their ^m weakness, to which those things were more obvious, and their present need seemed to require ; that so by the enjoyment of those they might be brought to an acknowledgment of him, the giver of all good gifts, and so brought near unto him, and made his people, desire and receive from him these other better things also, which he here promiseth to give. But what then is the time assigned for the giving of these, by the expression אַחֲרָיו כֵּן afterwards, viz. after those things before spoken of performed, and made good, or in time that should be after ? We need not solicitously to enquire after the grounds on which Others go, who either assign it to the times of ^a Jehoshaphat (whose valley is afterwards mentioned, chap. iii. 12.) in whose time there appear to have been many Prophets, by what is said of their coming to Elisba, ^o 2 Kings ii. 15. or to the time in which Isaiab lived, as ^p Grotius appears to think, by expounding the following words (upon all flesh) i. e. super multos, non super Isaiam solum, upon many, not upon

Vol. I.

4 L

Isaiab alone ; or any ^a other like conjectures. We are infallibly directed to the time when this promise was to be, and was fulfilled by St. Peter, Acts ii. 17. where citing this place, he sheweth that then was the time, when was made good what is here said, and so the time pointed out by אַחֲרָיו כֵּן Achare cen, afterwards. This, saith he, to the people amazed to see such wonderful, and before never seen or heard of, gifts of the Holy Ghost as were conferred on the Apostles, and doubting whence it should be, This is that which was spoken by the Prophet Joel. And it shall come to pass in the last days, &c. His affirming this prophecy to have been then fulfilled, plainly argues that there was no time before, in which it had been fully made good, and likewise that there was no need of expecting after times for the completion of it, as if it were not now sufficiently verified, but such things only done, as did belong to it or were part of it. And this time was the days after Christ's coming, and his ascension again into heaven, whence, having led captivity captive, he gave gifts unto men, Eph. iv. 8. even all those here promised, so that he plainly directs us to understand by אַחֲרָיו כֵּן Achare cen, afterwards, the times after Christ usually called, the days of the Messiah. It may be observed that what the Prophet here saith Achare cen, afterward, St. Peter there expresseth by ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις ἡμέραις, in the last days, which in sense to be all one with the former, only in plainer words, we have from the confession of some of the learned Jews themselves. So R. David Kimchi saith אַחֲרָיו כֵּן Achare cen to be all one in sense with בְּאַחֲרֵית הַיָּמִים Beacharith hayamim, In the last days, Isaiab xxiii. where is designed the coming of Christ's kingdom, and doth therefore (as Others of them) confess these words here to pertain to that time, though not taking notice of the fulfilling of it, so as to be convinced thereby that he is already come ; he with the rest of them obstinately deny him to be yet come. Without doubt then, warranted by the authority of the divinely inspired Apostle, by evidence of fact, and by the acknowledged use and propriety of the word, we have all reason to understand by the expression, afterward, in our Prophet, by St. Peter explained in the last days, in which God, saith he, would bestow on men such extraordinary gifts, and in so extraordinary manner, measure, and degree, and on so many and such persons as in the following words is expressed, the days of the Messiah, the time of the Gospel. The word of which was confirmed with the signs following, Mark xvi. 20. God bearing witness to the first Preachers thereof, with signs and with diverse miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost according to his own will, (Heb. ii. 4.) and according to his promise here made. Doubtless this prophecy cannot be said at any former time to have been duly fulfilled, nor denied at that time to have been seen so, as will more appear by considering

^m Calvin. ^a See in Aben Ezra from one R. Moses.
on Acts ii. ^p See Ruffin.

^o And chap. iv. 38. ^p See him on this place, and

ing farther the good gifts here expressed; which were to be conferred, and the persons to whom they were to be conferred. 1. The gifts] i. e. a plentiful measure of God's spirit; a plentiful measure I say, for so doth the verb here used אֲשׁוּבִי, and rendring will pour out, denote, not a bare conferring, but a conferring in great abundance, in a larger manner. What he saith, he will pour out his spirit, which is the fountain, and author, on the persons named, must necessarily import a filling them with all good gifts and graces, which are the effects of the same holy Spirit; and where his gifts and working appear, there is he well said to be given to, or received by men, be they never so many, or different, being present with every one, and with all now here, or to any confirmed, as will after be occasion to tell. What we have here in the Hebrew, Ours, and other translations, אֶת רוּחִי, Eth Ruchi, my spirit, the LXX. rendreth, and the Apostle St. Peter also citeth, ἀποδοτέον τοῦ πνεύματος μου, of my spirit. Which translation of the LXX. Some find fault with, as not exact, yea that perperam verterit, they translated it wrong, as thereby diminishing (or lessening) the bountiful promise of God, ac si portiunculam aliquam Spiritus sui Deus promitteret. As if he did promise only some little portion of his Spirit. But I think we ought not so to say, seeing St. Peter doth in the same manner cite it, who would not certainly give a wrong meaning of for the Septuagint's or any Other's sake, but give the true meaning of the words. It is manifest by his different rendring the words going before, that he did not tie himself up to them, but give the true meaning of the Prophet's words, himself being inspired and taught by the same spirit that the Prophet was: nor indeed doth this expression in the Greek seem any way to differ from the Prophets in the Hebrew, nor denote any thing less than that doth. For it plainly imports, first, an inexhaustible fulness of that Spirit, which is sufficient to fill all. 2. That the gifts of the Spirit are many and diverse, enabling men for different performances, as the glory of God, and the good of his church or people shall require, and that all those good gifts spoken of, though never so many, and different, were from that one and the same spirit. And what more can be understood from the literal rendring according to the Hebrew, I will pour out my spirit. It cannot be meant that the whole spirit should in the same manner and measure be conferred on every person, according to the forecited, Heb. ii. 4. and 1 Cor. xii. 4, &c. and it appears from what follows in this very place, by that enumeration of different gifts to be bestowed on different persons; so that that reading in the Greek in both Testaments is not a diminution of what is said in the Hebrew, but a perspicuous explication of it, pointing out those different gifts (as we said) which under the general name of his spirit are comprehended; and afterwards distinctly named, as likewise those persons, on which they shall be bestowed: but before we come to either of those, here is in the order of the words given us to consider a more general name also; under which the persons are comprehended, which is כָּל בָּשָׂר Col Bafar, all flesh. כָּל, col, all, we know, is a note of universality, and בָּשָׂר, Bafar, flesh, a comprehensive term; including as well all other creatures, as men, but it is manifest, they are both here, as elsewhere also they are known to be taken, in a more restrained sense, viz. all, so as not to signify every one of all sorts, but all sorts, or some of all sorts, and every condition, and flesh so as to signify men, not other creatures. So is כָּל, All, used, 2 Kings viii. 9. when Hazael is said to take with him for a present to Elisba כָּל טוֹב דַּמָּשְׁק omne bonum Damascus, all the good of Damascus, i. e. as Ours well render it, of every good thing of Damascus, somewhat of every kind: and as for בָּשָׂר bafar, flesh, that is also used (as we said) to denote not all living creatures, but כָּל אָדָם לְבָרִים peculiarly men; so Psalms cxlv. 20. Let all flesh (that is all sorts of men) blest his holy name, and Isaiah lxvi. 23. All flesh shall come to worship before me, saith the Lord; and in this signification alone is the same word בָּשָׂר Bafar used in the Arabick tongue, attributed in it peculiarly to men among other creatures, whence Adam is called by them أَبُو بَشَر Abu Bashar, the father of men, or mankind. Thus far will all Expositors, as well Christians as Jews, necessarily agree in limiting the signification of these general words; but the Jews go yet farther (in which we may not accompany them) in restraining them to the Israelites alone, with exclusion of all other nations of men, as well as other creatures, and only to those among them also, which were in the land of Israel. So Aben Ezra, On all flesh, כָּל יִשְׂרָאֵל, viz. in the land of Israel, which, saith he, is מְקוֹם רֵאיוֹן לְהַנְבִּיאָה the place convenient to prophesy in. So Kimchi also, upon all flesh, i. e. of Israel, which were worthy on whom the holy spirit should come, and by כָּל col, all, he understands הַגְּדוֹלִים וְהַקְטָנִים great and little among them. Grotius seems as much or more to limit this prophecy, explaining, all flesh, by, super multos, non super Isaiam solum, upon many, and not upon Isaiah alone, as if it belonged only to such as were in Israel, about that Prophet's time. * R. Joseph Albo also so restraineth it as to import but a small part of the generality of Israel, not all of them, nor of other nations, and the meaning to be, on any of all flesh (of them) although he were not fitted (or prepared) for prophecy (or trained up in a prophetic office.) But that the words are to be taken in a larger extent, we are infallibly taught by the event and completion, which is the best interpreter of prophecies, and the meaning of them.

The

* With this expression of pouring out his spirit, compare Isaiah xlv. 3. though the Hebrew word be there different, Acts ii. 17. Rom. v. 5. Tit. iii. 6. * 1 Cor. xii. 11. gratia spiritualis in nobis est, quæ sunt effectus spiritus sancti, Drus. Dan. Spiritus mei, Pisc. * Calvin. * See Kimchi and Ainsw. * Ikkarim, l. 2. c. 20.

The Jews of old, at the first preaching of the Gospel (yea Peter himself) were; it appears, of the same mind with those of later times, which we have cited, viz. that the promises of the good gifts of God's spirit, did belong and were to be performed only to their nation; but by what happened to Cornelius and his family they were convinced that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost, Acts x. 45. The same word of pouring out used there in the description of the event, as here in the promise (which as we have seen is by him also cited, Acts ii. 17. to the like end) shews that to have been the making good of this, and which by virtue of this prophecy was to be expected, and was done for fulfilling it, so that by all flesh, here is manifestly to be understood (as we have said) some of all, or any sorts of men, without exclusion of any, by reason of their country, sex, age, or condition. There being in Christ, of the extraordinary benefits and privileges of whose times this prophecy (as we have seen) is, * neither Jew nor Greek, neither bond nor free, male nor female, (as the Apostle speaks) Gal. iii. 28. but all being one in Christ Jesus, all have right to the good promise of God's spirit, and shall receive the graces thereof in such manner and measure as shall be conducing to his glory, and to the good of his church and their own souls; as appears by his reciting more particularly, in the following words, both what persons, and what spiritual gifts belonging to them, are under those more general terms comprehended. But before we proceed yet to consider them, we may take notice of a different meaning which Some understand the word flesh in, from that which we have mentioned; such is given by R. Solomon Jarchi, who by כל בשר col basar, would have to be understood, מי שנעשה לבו רך כבשר, such whose heart is become tender as flesh, alledging for his taking the word in that meaning, those words, ⁊ Ezek. xi. 19. I will put a new spirit within you, and I will take the stony heart out of their flesh, and will give them an heart of flesh. By this he seems to prove that flesh may be used to denote, or be taken for a fleshly tender heart; the comparison between the two places will not farther hold to his purpose; an heart of flesh being there mentioned, as a gift or effect of God's spirit, but here he would have it, for an heart prepared for the receiving of the spirit. This exposition of R. Solomon's † Some seem to like: but Mercer saith of it, that, non est ex phrasi Hebræi sermonis, that it is not a proper phrase (or way of exposition well agreeing) to the Hebrew tongue, in which Col basar must signify omnes mortales, all mortals, i. e. all men; much alike to Abarbinel's censure of it, who will not allow of it but only as by way of דרש, or as an allegorical exposition, or descant, not a proper interpretation: Abarbinel saith, that the expression of כל בשר, all flesh, הוא באמת doth in truth comprehend all sorts of men of whatsoever nation they be, and therefore doth he not assent either to Aben Ezra, or those other Expositors, who would have the promise of the spirit here made to belong only to Israel; whereas the word בשר Basar denoting to whom it is made, is manifestly of greater extent; and then in the thing promised, the word רוח spirit, he differs from them also, not taking it as they do for the peculiar spirit of prophecy, but for that which is more common, viz. the spirit of knowledge, or which shall instruct them in the knowledge of God; for as for the gift of prophecy, which is in the next words mentioned, that he also restrains to the Israelites, and such of them as were fitted for it. The words then being necessarily of such comprehension, I know not why † Others should yet so far restrain them, as to say that the promise was made more peculiarly to the Jews, and these things not due to Gentiles by virtue of it here made, but as by grace afterward taken into the right of it. It was, as we have said at the beginning, given in these comprehensive terms, which include them also, and, after its making, was never, nor could ever be said to have been fulfilled, but by the making it good to the Gentiles, by pouring out and conferring on them the good gifts here mentioned and meant. Having began his promise in these general terms of pouring out his spirit (which may comprehend all the gifts thereof,) on all flesh, which comprehended, all sons of men, he proceeds to specify what gifts of the spirit he here more particularly means, and what sorts of men, and how they shall be conferred on. The gifts mentioned are such as seem not only to belong to the persons named for their private good, but such as may make them profitable to others also, and instruments of good to them; for making known to them also the will of God, for bringing them unto him, for propagating his doctrine, and for edification to them. The first named is prophecy, then dreams, then visions; the persons, on which the first is said to be conferred, are their sons and daughters, on which the second, the old men, on which the third, the young men.

As to the first, the gift of prophecy, Abarbinel thinks so properly and peculiarly to belong to Israel, or be made good to them under their expected restoration (כונן הגאולה) that though he grants the former word of Spirit, and what is by it meant, to belong as well to other nations, as to them, yet limits this to Israel alone, and to מוכנים מהם such of them as were rightly prepared for it, and that it never did belong, or ever shall be made good to any other nation: so are his words, מה שלא היה ולא יהיה בשאר הנויים. But sure that, with other gifts here named, plainly seem to be but (as we said) a specifying of such particular gifts as are under that more general word spirit comprehended, and so to be, as all in that comprised, to belong to all that

* See Rom. x. 12. † As likewise chap. xxxvi. 26. so as to comprehend both Jews and Gentiles) and Tarnov.

‡ Lyra (though he saith it may be understood otherwise that that did, even all flesh, any nations of men, all conditions and sexes, as naming sons and daughters shews.
⁴ Chr. à Castro.

The affix נך, cem, yours, though assuring the promise to those then spoken to by the Prophet, viz. the Jews of his time, yet doth not seem to restrain it to their children only, as if their sons and daughters alone with exclusion of others were here meant; but the sons and daughters also of all comprehended under that general term of, all flesh. The promise made being of that great latitude, as that word imports, we have no reason to think it here limited with narrower bounds, but to belong to as many as that did, viz. to the children of the believing Gentiles also, as many as ^b God should call; they should also, as well as Israel according to the flesh, be capable of receiving this good gift of God's spirit. Your sons and daughters shall prophesy. Kimchi by the naming of sons and daughters, thinks to be understood in respect of their age, such as were yet בנערותם of tender years, as yet but boys and girls (if we may so speak) כמי שמואל הנביא, as it is in Samuel the Prophet, 1 Sam. iii. who was established to be a Prophet of the Lord, from, yea even in his childhood. If the words be thus understood, then have we all ages here named, there following old men, and young men, so to shew that no ^c age is excluded from being capable of receiving the good gifts of God's spirit; as by naming daughters as well as sons, is shewed that neither sex is excluded or excepted, as of women prophetesses we have also examples in scripture. Acts xxi. 9. it is said Philip had four daughters that did prophesy; and the like is shewed by St. Paul's forbidding a woman to prophesy with her head uncovered, 1 Cor. xi. 5. Otherwise ^d naming these sons and daughters sheweth God's promise to pertain not only to the fathers, but to their children also. The promise is to you and your children, and to all that are afar off, &c. Acts ii. 39.

In the next place as comprehended under all flesh, are named these ^e old men, and the gift of the spirit that shall be conferred on them, that they shall dream dreams; and then after them, their young men, and that wherein the spirit shall manifest itself in them, that they shall see visions. On which distribution of persons ^f Maimonides looking, it seems, on such indefinitely named as belonging to any part of men, as no fit persons for receiving any degree of true prophecy, taketh what is said to be understood not of such only who had any true prophetic gifts bestowed on them, but also of any that undertook to foretell, or shew things by way of soothsaying or divination, in as much as such also have the name of Prophets given them, as the Prophets of Baal, and the groves, and it is said, Deut. xiii. 1. If there arise among you a Prophet or dreamer of dreams.

Against this exposition of his, Abarbinel wishes the reader to peg his ears, and wishes his words had never been written, as being manifestly untrue, as there is good reason to think, for how shall it be thought that the Prophet here promising an extraordinary blessing from God, should name or mean the giving of such things, such ways of pretended prophesying, as were utterly displeasing to God, and forbidden in his law, and how should he call it his spirit, i. e. as the Chaldee explains it רוח קודשי my holy spirit, which he would pour out on them? necessarily then must these dreams and visions here meant be such only, as are from God, such he himself promiseth in the law also, and they are degrees or kinds of true prophecy, or divine revelation, If there be a Prophet among you, I myself will make my self known unto him in a vision, and will speak to him in a dream, saith the Lord, Numb. xii. 6.

Your old men shall dream dreams, &c.] Kimchi, as also after him Abarbinel, here observes that the Prophet doth not here add the note of universality, all, as he did in the foregoing clause, but speak only indefinitely, your old men, and your young men, not universally, all your old men, and your young men, which, they say, is for that reason, that it may be understood only of such of them as are, מוכנים Mucanim, fit or rightly prepared for receiving the gifts, yea from their first conception, as Maimonides by Kimchi indeed observes. This observation belongeth also to the former words, your sons and your daughters, and had not they observed it, or warned of it, the reader certainly could not but easily perceive, that as that note of universality, the word all, is not here expressed, so neither ought it to be understood, nor can have place. For it was never so that all had the same gifts, that either all that had the spirit poured on them did prophesy, or had divine revelations by dreams or visions; it was never so brought to pass, and therefore never promised, God bringing surely to effect whatever he promised. In those times after Christ's ascension, when he in most plentiful manner fulfilled this prophecy, by conferring wonderful gifts of his spirit on believers, so that there were many endued with them in all the churches of the Gentiles as well as Jews, (as for example so many Prophets in the church of the Corinthians, that St. Paul was ^g feign to limit them to order in speaking, that they should not interrupt one another, yet were not all of them Prophets, nor did they all receive the same gifts of the spirit, nor all in the same measure. Are all (saith he speaking to those of that church) Apostles? ^h are all Prophets? are all teachers? are all workers of miracles, &c. No, But as he having reckoned up several ways, in which God poured out his Spirit on those that were converted to Christ,

^b Acts iii. 39. ^c Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings he can ordain his praise, even such are fit for his employment, Psal. viii. 2. Mat. xxi. 16. ^d Mercer. ^e Acts ii. 17. St. Peter citing these words inverteth the order, putting your young men, that is your sons, in the first place, but the sense is still the same. ^f Moreh Neb. l. 2. c. 32. ^g 1 Cor. xiv. 29. ^h 1 Cor. xii. 29.

Christ, in the same chapter, ver. 11. saith, that all these that one and the same spirit did work in them, dividing to every one as he willed, and that whether they were Jews or Gentiles, bond or free, ver. 13. or if we shall take the words here used, Sons and daughters, old men or young, free or servants and hand-maidens, the different giving of such diverse gifts, he ascribes to the only good pleasure of God's will, as so again, Heb. ii. 4. which will of his therefore is that which must make them מוֹנִיִּים Mucanim, fit, (as we have seen the Jews in this case to require) more than any thing in their natural constitution found in them, or by their own industry (as they will have,) acquired. That which must make them fit to receive what they do, is his gift, as well as the gift itself. Potest Deus quocunque tempore non solum munera sua conferre, sed etiam suscipientes ad id aptos efficere, God can, whensoever he will, not only confer his gifts, but also make those that shall receive them fit for it.

Which words of the Apostle furnish us also with an answer to another question, which Abarbinel here raiseth, viz. why revelation by dreams should be appropriated to old men, and by visions to young men? It may certainly suffice us, that God sheweth it to be his will that it shall be so: Nothing that he will do is certainly without great reason, though for what reason he will so or so do it, be above the reach of our weak reason; yet doth Abarbinel here go to assign the reason, why God should reveal his will, and make known what he intends to do, to old men by dreams, and young men by visions, to be from the different constitutions and tempers of those ages, by which the one are fitter for the one way, and the other for the other; of these two different kinds of prophecy, old men לְרֹב לַחַיִּים הַמִּקְרִיִּי, by reason of the much accidental moisture usually happening in that age, and the working of their imaginary faculty or fancy, increased by reason of the many men and their affairs which they have seen and known, are, he saith, fitter to receive the influence of the Spirit by dreams, but young men, in whom it is otherwise, they not so abounding with moisture, nor their imaginary faculty so full of fancies, are fitter for visions.

* Others give other reasons for it, as, viz. because such dreams, as are here meant, are an higher and nobler degree of prophecy than visions, and therefore the first promised to old men, who are by reason of their age more to be revered and honoured: the second are inferior in degree to those that are superior in dignity, because so in age. This reason Ribera gives, yet because ¹ Others seem to affirm the contrary, and that visions are an higher degree than dreams, it being a matter of greater power to take men, that are awake, from the contemplation of sensible things, about which they are occupied, and raise them to the beholding of supernatural things, than to work such effects on a soul in sleep already, abstracted from sensible things. For ascribing then preeminence to dreams, he will have by dreams understood, such dreams wherein God seems immediately to speak to them (according to what is said in the forecited, Numb. xii. 6. I will speak to him in a dream) but if in the dream be represented such visions, as are to waking men, then he thinks such dreams to be a lower degree, than that of vision to a waking man.

VOL. I.

This question, viz. why dreams are attributed here to old men, and visions to young, he thinks necessary to be raised from these words, and to this purpose gives his solution of it. But I know not what necessity there is of insisting on this question, it may be sufficient to understand for the meaning of the words here, that God promiseth such a plentiful measure of his Spirit, which in the time spoken of, and that without exclusion of any by reason of their age from receiving the gifts of it, he will confer, even that excellent gift of prophecy, both on old or young, as he shall see fit for the good of his church, revealing his will to them both by dreams and visions, those known ways of prophetic revelation. Kimchi seems not to make that difference here betwixt dreams and visions, which by a nice Grammatical distinction of the precise signification of the words may otherwise be made, the one being more properly attributed to men sleeping, the other to them being awake, yet not so as if revelations by dreams were peculiar to one age, visions to another: He explains the words, וְהַנְּבוּאָה וְהַחֲלוּם כְּמִרְאָה בְּחֵלֶם, and prophecy shall be to them in the vision of a dream, as if visions and dreams were not so distinguished, but that to whom the one of them agreed, the other also did agree, and visions might be in dreams so, that either name might agree to the revelations made to either age. Examples we have of visions appearing as well to old men as to young, as of Cornelius, Acts x. 3. and of Peter, in the same chapter, ver. 17. and chap. xi. 5. of Ananias it is likewise said that the Lord spake to him in a vision, Acts ix. 10. and of Paul, chap. xvi. 9. we read of a vision that appeared to him in the night, a man of Macedonia praying him to come to Macedonia. These named we may reckon among old men, yet it is not said that they dreamed dreams, but saw visions. That which Paul had, being said to have appeared to him in the night, may probably seem to be the same with a dream, and is so by St. Jerome called a dream, saying, senes quoque videntur somnia, quando Paulus jam senex audivit virum Macedonem, &c. old men also have seen dreams, as Paul now an old man heard a man of Macedonia, &c. which with the other named and like examples seem to confirm the two things mentioned, viz. that visions are not peculiar to young men only, and that visions and dreams do sometimes import the like or same kind of revelation; so that to say, Old men should dream dreams, and, young men should see visions, will not be nicely to distinguish

4 M

¹ Pet. à Fig. Tho. Aq.

* Ribera.

¹ Thom. Aq. by him cited.

guish betwixt those two sorts of divine revelation, but to assure them of both ages that God will communicate to them both those gifts of a prophetic spirit, sometimes in one way, sometimes in another, as he will; though^m Some would rather have the names but synonymous for one and the same thing, that so the question concerning the preeminence of one of these ways above the other (which they think would rather be given to visions, if the comparison be made betwixt them) may be taken away. But this I suppose is not a thing here to be insisted on, but that other which we mentioned, viz. that God will so liberally pour out his spirit on all flesh, that persons of all ages, as well as sexes, shall receive of his grace and bounty in that kind, the largeness of which bounty of his is yet in the next words farther enlarged, by shewing that neither any condition of men shall be accepted or excluded from the partaking of it: So saith he, 29. And also upon the servants, and upon the handmaids, &c.] and also, This connexion of these words with the precedent, shews that those here mentioned, are spoken of in a different respect, from what respect was had to in the forementioned, viz. not only their sex and their age, but the condition that they were in, viz. that though they were servants under the power of others, yet they should, as well as those which were free, and had rule over them, be capable of receiving the good gifts of God's Spirit. In those days. The days spoken of, viz. under the kingdom of Christ, in which there is no difference as to such things as concern their return to God, and right to the privileges of his kingdom, no difference betwixt bond and free, Gal. iii. 28. He that is called in the Lord being a servant, is the Lord's freeman, and likewise he that is called being free, is the Lord's servant, 1 Cor. vii. 22. The words in the Hebrew do plainly so sound, as they are by Ours literally rendred, and the import of them as so plainly seems that which we have given. But by St. Peter they are something differently cited, Acts ii. 18. as first in that he doth not say indefinitely, on the servants and upon the handmaids, which is all that is read in the Hebrew, עַל הַעֲבָדִים וְעַל הַשִּׁפּוֹת, al baabadim veal hashpachoth, but with an affix subjoined, עַל הַעֲבָדִים וְעַל הַשִּׁפּוֹת שֶׁנִּשְׁמָעוּ מִפִּי יְהוָה, al haabadim veal hashpachoth she'nisma'u mi'pe'i Yehovah, upon my servants and my handmaidens, as the Vulgar Latin here also hath it, Sed & super servos meos & ancillas, which may seem to alter the sense and acceptation of the words, as if they were not to be taken in that sense, as to denote such as were in a servile condition, and inferior to other men, but in such a sense as may agree to all orders and conditions of men, even the highest among them, it being a glory to the greatest of them to be called God's servants, and so would they comprehend even those of all sorts before mentioned.

But that they are not for all this to be taken here in that sense, but so only as to denote those of a servile and mean condition, is well observed byⁿ Some, and that my servants and my handmaidens doth not denote here all sorts of men, who are true believers and worshippers of God, but peculiarly such as being so, were yet in the condition of servants among men also, intimating that even they should, notwithstanding that their low estate, be by God made worthy of receiving any of those eminent and extraordinary gifts of his holy Spirit, as well as their masters, or any of the freest and noblest condition among men. Of persons therefore of such condition, in both places, I suppose, it ought to be understood, though Calvin here thinks that by servants and handmaids, are meant such as had before the gift of prophecy, to denote that there should be such a superabundant effusion of God's Spirit, that even they on whom he was before shed, should have him in a far greater measure. As before by St. Peter citing this text, instead of what the Hebrew sounds, I will pour out my spirit, is said of my spirit, so is it here again: what gifts of the Spirit are meant in the Hebrew we see is not expressed, but in that reading of St. Peter given, it is said to be the gift of prophecy, there being added beyond what is in the Hebrew, καὶ προφητείας, though here neither in the LXX. be any such thing expressed. By his authority we have sufficient warrant so to understand it: and in the same manner doth the Arabick MS. Version understand it, rendring, وَأُفِيضُ رُوحِي عَلَى الْعِبَادِ وَالْخَدَمِ, and also upon the servants, and upon the handmaidens: will I pour out my prophecy. Contrary to this seems what the Jewish Doctors say, אין הנבואה שורה אלא על חכם נבון ועשיר, Prophecy doth not reside on any but on one that is wise, valiant and rich, and as Grotius cites it on Acts ii. 18. Spiritus sanctus non requiescit super animam pauperis, The holy Spirit doth not rest on the soul of a poor man. They say also that prophecy doth not reside בְּמַחֲוֵי עֲצָבוֹת, where men are in sorrow. On such grounds Abarbanel taking servants and maid-servants, to be properly taken, according to the sound of the words denoting such a condition, thinks that by the Spirit cannot be here meant the gift of prophecy, but only עַל הַדַּעַת וְהַדַּעַת, of the knowledge and acknowledgment of his duty: again he saith, וְאִם כֵּן הָיְתָה צָרָה לַעֲבָדִים וְלַשִּׁפּוֹת שֶׁנִּשְׁמָעוּ מִפִּי יְהוָה, ואם כן היתה צרה לעבדים ולשפחות שמעו מפיו יישיב חסד בעצבון לא יוכלו להנבא אבל ישפך השם את רוחו עליהם כל רוח רעה ויראת השם, but as for servants and handmaidens, because by reason of their servile condition, they are continually in sorrow or trouble, they cannot be able to prophesy (or obtain the degree of prophesying) But God will pour out upon them his spirit, viz. the spirit of knowledge, and fear of the Lord.

Kimchi makes not any question here, concerning either those, who are called servants and

^m Petr. à Fig. Magis placet ut somnia & visiones pro eodem accipiantur. Possunt etiam visiones intelligi omnia visa prophetica quæ fiunt sive in somno sive vigilia, &c. ⁿ Druf. Veil. ^o There is left out in the copy, In those days. ^p Moreh. Neb. l. 2. c. 32. ^q Moreh. Neb. 2. c. 36.

and handmaidens, as to their condition denoted, or the gifts of the spirit, which are said shall be poured out upon them, but puts another restriction on the words, by limiting those called servants and handmaidens, who shall enjoy the privilege mentioned, only to such, who though of Gentile nations, should yet live in the land of Israel, and serve Israelitish masters, as if only they so doing should make them capable of the privileges of receiving the holy Spirit, which servants elsewhere are not capable of. But we find no such limitation expressed in the words, and by St. Peter's citing them are given to extend them farther, even to any servants of either sex, who were converted to God in Christ. Aben Ezra saith, שְׂעָבֵי לְחֹרֶת הָעַם, which are converted to the law of God, meaning, no doubt, the law of Moses, but we by the more certain authority of St. Peter, say to the law of Christ, or the Gospel, it being promised to those days, viz. of Christ's giving a preeminence to them above the days under the law, in which was no difference longer made betwixt nations or conditions of men, Col. iii. 11. and compare Isaiah lvi. and no doubt was then made good, God having promised it, though we have not particular instances of such, as well conditions which were then endued with the gift of prophecy, as well as other gifts of the Spirit. What the usual notion of prophesying is, every one at first hearing understands; yet it is again known to be sometimes taken in a larger sense than for what it properly signifies.

30. And I will shew wonders in the heavens, and in the earth, blood and fire, and pillars of smoke.

31. The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before the great and terrible day of the Lord come.

Having in the two foregoing verses set forth such extraordinary graces of his holy Spirit, as he would under the times of Christ liberally confer on believers, his faithful servants of all ages, sexes, conditions and nations, for comfort to them, and edifying of his church, he here proceeds to enumerate such terrible and fearful things, as he would also shew for terrifying the wicked, and to make all to fear before him. Much difficulty there is in the words, both as to the meaning of the things signified, and to the time to which they pertain, and in which they should have their completion.

The wonders and prodigious signs that he will here shew, shall be in בְּשָׁמַיִם וּבָאָרֶץ bashamaim ubaaretz, in the heavens, and in the earth. St. Peter for explication in his citing them, saith, wonders in heaven above, and in the earth beneath, τέρατα ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς ἄνω, καὶ σημεῖα ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς ἑξῆς, wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath. Although the Greek of the LXX. have barely, according to the Hebrew, τέρατα ἐν οὐρανοῖς καὶ ἐπὶ τῇ γῆ, Wonders in heaven and upon earth, which shews that he did not in citing the words out of the Old Testament, tie himself to the translation of the LXX, but gave the meaning of them in such expressions, as he saw best to make plain the meaning thereof. Among the wonders, that he saith he will shew, is reckoned in the first place blood, which seems to belong to those that he will shew on earth. Though that be named after the heavens, yet things concerning it are placed before such as concern them. Which method Aben Ezra notes to be usual in the holy tongue, viz. where two things are mentioned, to begin in shewing such things as belong unto them, with such as belong to the second, and then to return to such as pertain to the first. Blood: Of Blood in way of wonder and prodigy several examples are out of heathen Authors cited by the learned Mr. Lively, as of bloody rain, bloody springs, and wells, and the sea appearing like blood, which were reckoned as prodigies prefiging some great mischief. In the holy Scriptures we read of the waters, both of the river and the wells in Egypt, for striking fear into the hardened heart of Pharaoh, turned into blood, as an extraordinary sign of God's wrath. Here that it is named as a reason of great calamity to follow, appears by what is said that it shall be before the great and terrible day of the Lord come; several Expositors interpret it of extraordinary effusion of blood in wars. Others understand by it imbres & colores sanguineos, bloody showers. Others think to be understood by it, the same which is after meant, by saying the moon shall be turned into blood; but certainly that is put as a different sign from this, and this, though it be not expressed in what manner that blood shall be given as a prodigy, seems rather to be such as shall portend bloody wars, than the blood in them shed; yet bloody wars themselves also doth our Saviour put as signs of greater evils to come, Mat. xxiv. 6, 7. Some extraordinary appearance of blood, to the wonder and great consternation of the people, the words plainly import there shall be, though they do not particularly express how it shall be, and perhaps it may be some other than that of bloodshed in war. In the next place he nameth Fire. Several examples have we of God's making use of fire, in a wonderful and extraordinary manner, for executing his judgments on sinners, and striking terror into the hearts of men, and that in diverse kinds. On Sodom and Gomorrab in a wonderful manner he rained brimstone and fire from the Lord out of heaven, Gen. xix. 24. Among the wonderful plagues sent on the Egyptians, we read of fire mingled with hail, Exod. ix. 23, 24. When the anger of the Lord was kindled against the murmuring Israelites, * Pet. à Fig. Ribera, Tar. Sa. Menoch. Grot. Acts ii. though he take it in other things also, as the sea becoming blood, Ap. viii. 8. and the much blood to be shed under Antichrist.

* Anon. Bibliotheca Jo. Ebor.

* Mercer, Tirin.

elites, the fire of the Lord burnt among them in that place, that was called in memory thereof Tabarah, Numb. xi. 3. and xvi. 35. where there came out a fire from the Lord and consumed the two hundred and fifty men that burnt incense. At the request of Elijah, 2 Kings i. 10. there came fire from heaven and consumed the captain and his fifty that came to take him. In all these histories the fire appeared as a miracle, there being no ordinary reason for it. Here it is also said it shall be given as a wonder, but not expressed in what manner; different conjectures and opinions therefore are there concerning it. Abarbanel reckoning it among the wonders that shall be given from heaven, understands it, שִׁמְשֵׁי הַשָּׁמַיִם יִרְדּוּ וְאֵשׁ יִפְּחוּ, that God will rain upon them hail, and great hailstones in the midst of which shall be fire, referring, we may suppose, either to what was done in Egypt, or to what the Psalmist saith of God's giving hailstones and coals of fire, Psalm xviii. 12, 13. or what is, Ezek. xxxviii. 22. where God threatens to rain on Gog and Magog (whom he with other Jews thinks in this prophecy to be concerned) hailstones, fire and brimstone. Others understand it of terrible ^a lightnings, or strange fiery flaming meteors in ^w the heavens or air ^x (such as have been among heathens named also to portend cruel destructions.) There be who think it a prophecy of ^y those fiery tongues in which the Holy Ghost descended on the disciples, Acts ii. 3. But ^z Others yet, of extraordinary great fires in burning of towns and cities in the cruel war also that shall be in the times spoken of. ^a Others yet think that by it may be meant that general conflagration, with which the whole world shall be set on fire at the last day: which of these opinions be most probable will be better judged when we shall have considered, to what times the things here spoken do belong, and likewise what is meant by the next sign named, and pillars of smoke, by which ^b Some, according to their opinion of the meaning of the foregoing word, understand smoke, as should arise from such things as should be stricken and burnt by the lightning, by that name of fire by them understood. ^c Others, agreeably to their way, such smoke as should ascend from towns by the enemy set on fire. ^d Others the smoke which shall arise from the burning of the whole world. ^e Some think denoted a smoke that together came with those fiery tongues, Acts ii. Pillars of smoke] They seemed so called from their figure ascending in a right line in fashion of a pillar. The word in the original is תִּמְרוֹת Timrot from תֵּמַר which signifies a palm-tree, thence transferred to signify an high straight pillar, and as here such a body of smoke as towereth up in such a form, it being in sense the same that עֶמֶד עָשָׁן, as it is called, Jud. ii. 40. Both of these names signifying both a pillar, and palm, are appropriated to a body of smoke ascending לְשֹׁכְהָהּ from the likeness of it to each of them in figure. The LXX. considering more the matter than the figure of it, render ἀτμός αἰθήρ; the Syriack also, ܕܡܝܬܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ; and the Vulgar Latin, vaporem fumi. The printed Arabick also بخار الدخان; all of the vapour of smoke; but the MS. Arabick done out of the Hebrew, עֲדֵלֹת הַדִּיחָן עֲדֵלֹת, which, if the word be right written, must needs found, right or straight ascendings of smoke. But R. Tanchum in more usual words saith it is, أعمدة الدخان pillars of smoke ascending high, الذي يشبه الجود لتكثفه وامتداده which resembles a pillar from its thickness and extension. The Chaldee renders it יִטּוּרִין yiturin, pillars. Some take to be meant dark and ^b thick clouds: whatever be understood in this place, it must be such in its kind as is not usual or ordinary, but which hath of wonder in it, as likewise in the following signs, viz.

Ver. 31. The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood.] An expression much like this had we ver. 10. The sun and the moon shall be dark, which what it is thought to mean we there saw. As for what is here said we have also very different expositions, ¹ many understanding thereby eclipses of those luminaries, by which they shall lose their light, and change their colour; for eclipses of them do usually strike fear into men, and have been accounted ^k to bode ill things even secundum naturam suam (as Arias Montanus speaks) in their ordinary nature, and when from known and natural causes, nedum si præter naturæ ordinem hujusmodi accidant, much more if such things happen contrary to the order, or usual course of nature, and if any thing happen extraordinary in them, as these here foretold, if understood of eclipses, probably were, to have something unusual in them. By the moon's being turned into blood, Kimchi observes to be meant, the bloody aspect of it in a partial eclipse, whereas in a total it appears black, his words being, כְּשִׁיחֹרָה הַקְדֵּרוֹת שֶׁלֹּם יִהְיֶה הַיָּרֵחַ שְׁחֹר וְכִשְׁלֹא יִהְיֶה הַקְדֵּרוֹת שֶׁלֹּם יִהְיֶה אֲדוּם כְּדֹם, i. e. when the eclipse is perfect (or total,) then the moon is black, but when it is not total, then the moon is red like blood. Which Aben Ezra notes to happen, when it is far from caput draconis, the Dragon's

^a Kimchi, Druf. Rib. &c. ^w التي تنسب الي السماء لعلو مكانها which are attributed to heaven by reason of the height of their place, R. Tanchum. ^x Lively. ^y Jerome, Mercer. ^z Grot. Ribera. ^a Lyra, Sa. Men. Tirin. Pet. à Fig. who thinks likewise it may be referred to the invention of great guns. ^b Kimchi, Druf. ^c Grot. ^d Tirin. ^e Mercer. ^f R. Tanchum. ^g Kimchi, because a palm-tree is an high straight tree, therefore they liken an high and straight thing to it. ^h عدولي, from the same root, signifies a tall old tree, but it may be it should be نخلات נخلات from نخلة a palm-tree, and so it would literally answer to the Hebrew תִּמְרוֹת. ⁱ Columnas nubis, Munst. Tig. i. e. as Calvin explains it, obscuras nubes, dark clouds. ^j Aben Ezra, Kimchi, Lively, Ar. Mont. Merc. ^k Præ Eclipsi, quæ calamitatum venientium prænuntia esse solet, ejus lumen deficit, &c. Lively.

Dragon's head, and nearer than six degrees to the tail, which he thinks always to portend wars. ¹ Others by the sun's being turned into darkness, will have to be meant the obscuration thereof, by reason of the much smoke before mentioned, and by the moon's into blood, its appearing red through, or by reason of the much blood of the slain drawn up into the air from the earth.

These all understand the words in a literal sense, and that such prodigious things shall really appear; and so Kimchi observes of several Jewish Interpreters, and notes that Aben Ezra doth expound these words במשמעו according to the sound of the letter, and that in the time here designed such wonderful signs should really be; but that Moses Maimonides was of another mind, and did interpret this and like expressions על דרך משל, by way of parable, or in a figurative sense, so as to denote such great calamities as should befall people, and by the strange signs mentioned to be denoted great afflictions and wars, so that they are allegorically or figuratively, not literally to be interpreted, as likewise what is before said concerning what should be by the coming of the great swarms of locusts, ver. 10. The sun and the moon shall be dark, &c. and also what is after said, chap. iii. 15. of the time of the war of Gog and Magog, as he will have it meant, The sun and the moon shall be darkened, &c. But this is not only, nor first, that Doctor's opinion; we have it among Christians more ancient. Ruffinus so takes it, who would not have understood any such disturbance and strange accidents to have really been either in the heavens or the earth, but only in the minds of the affrighted people, who should be in such great perplexity, as if the whole frame of things were changed, and the sun seem dark, and the moon bloody to them, and all things full of fire and smoke before their eyes.

Among more modern Expositors also are there of the same opinion, that the words are not literally, but metaphorically to be meant, and by the sun's being turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, to be denoted such calamities as should deprive them of all light of comfort.

R. Tanchum observes here that, استعارة, by way of metaphor, or figurative language, kings and kingdoms are likened unto stars; and such here do some modern Expositors think to be meant by the sun and the moon; and by those strange accidents which it is here said shall happen to them, to be denoted what calamities shall befall them: Personæ quæ affligentur hic summæ autoritatis fore proculdubio significantur, saith Drusus, The persons that shall be afflicted are without doubt here signified to be such, as are of chief authority, nam eos solis & lunæ nomine designat Propheta, For the Prophet doth by the names of the sun and moon design those of such condition; and so Tarnovius notes, sunt qui allegorice in hoc versu per solem & lunam personas summæ autoritatis notari existimant, There are who think by the sun and moon in this verse to be denoted persons of chief authority, who for their rebellion against God, in serving whom they ought to have given example to others, shall be more signally punished than others, by such punishments befalling them, as shall quite eclipse and obscure their glory and lustre.

Abarbanel would have by the sun and moon ° in this place to be meant אדום וישמעאל Edom and Ismael, (i. e. in his language the Christians and Mahometans) and to point at the wars which shall be between them about the holy land; and that by the sun (by which Edom is figured out) being turned into darkness, and the moon (by which Ismael) being turned into blood, is meant נקמה the vengeance that shall be taken on them. But I think there is no reason here to depart from the literal meaning of the words, but that both sun and moon ought to be taken in their proper signification, and by those alterations in their aspect here described, to be really meant such signs as should in that kind be shewed in the time by God designed, which in the following words is pointed out by his saying, before that great and terrible, (or as Acts ii. 20. notable) day of the Lord come. But here is a main difficulty, and not seeming easy to be determined, what time is thereby described, and when these things should be.

It is a rule given by Maimonides, that כל יום תכון צב נחירה עזימה או פאדחה עזימה any day (or every day) in which shall fall out any great benefit (or prosperity) or any great misfortune (any thing greatly helpful, or hurtful) is called, the great and terrible, or domesday of the Lord, and that so above, ver. 11. he calleth the day in which the locusts should come upon them, a day of the Lord, great and very terrible, which none should abide. It being therefore without doubt that one single day or time is here by these epithets described, yet seeing there be more to which they may well agree, it has caused very great difference betwixt Expositors, which of them should be that which is here particularly meant. The now mentioned Maimonides, would have to be understood by it the day of the defeat of Sennacherib near Jerusalem. The very same is the opinion of the above cited Ruffinus among Christian Expositors. The objection which against this opinion may be made, because at or before that day appeared no such things as are here mentioned, they prevent by understanding them figuratively, of those calamities and great consternation, which should be to the Jews from his invading them, till God should bring this great and terrible day of

VOL I.

4

N

of

¹ Grot. ^m Calvin, Dan. Tarnov. ⁿ See Pelican. to much like purpose interpreting the first of the Roman Empire, and wisdom of the world, the second of the Jews pulling Christ's blood on their own heads. ^o For in other places as above, ver. 10. and chap. iii. 15. he thinks other things to be meant thereby, as in the first place the destruction of Israel, in the second vengeance on other nations. ^p Moreh. chap. xxix. ^q These words are wanting in the Hebrew translations. ^r 2 Kings xix. 35, &c. ^s Ruffin.

of destruction on his head. If this exposition like not any, saith Maimonides, then יכון וצף הלאך גוג עלי ירושלם בימי המלך המשיח, will it be a description of the destruction of Gog near Jerusalem in the days of that King Messiah: and this opinion do others of the Jews follow in the exposition of this prophecy; כאנה, saith R. Tanchum; ישר בהדה אלנבוה אלי מלחמת, he seems in this prophecy to point out the war of Gog and Magog, in as much as there is great agreement between it and what is said concerning that, Ezek. xxxviii. 22, &c. So Kimchi thinks it referred to that time of the destruction of Gog and Magog, and the people that shall accompany them; at which time shall be seen such eclipses of the heavenly lights as are here described; as tokens or presages thereof. To the same time Abarbanel also will have it to have respect, in his saying that this here said of these wonderful signs, אין ספק כי הוא מה שביאר יחזקאל במלחמת גוג ומגוג שיהיה שם רב ההרג העצום בארע, &c. i. e. there is no doubt but it is the same which Ezekiel describes in (or concerning) the war of Gog and Magog, for that there shall be the blood of great slaughter in the earth, and fire and pillars of smoke, God raining on them from heaven fire and brimstone, and an horrible tempest, &c. The day therefore here called, the great and terrible day of the Lord, he thinks to be, יום גאולה עמו, the day of the redemption (or restoration) of his people, before which and nigh unto it that war shall be, that great day of the Lord shall be, great for the salvation of his people, and terrible for the vengeance taken on their enemies.

This explication of the words, that we may rightly judge of it, puts us on a necessary digression, briefly to enquire whom they mean by Gog and Magog, and on what time they fix that bloody war and destruction of them, which they think to be that great and terrible day of the Lord. And for this I know not whether we shall find plainer directions from any, than from R. Tanchum in his notes on Ezek. xxxviii. 2. where is more express mention of Gog and Magog than any where else in the Old Testament, he there saith, הוא בלא, שך קבאיל אלתור ואלתור ובלדהם, i. e. These without doubt are the tribes of Turks and Tartars, and their country, referring for their original to Gen. x. 2. where are reckoned among the sons of Japhet, Gomer and Magog, &c. These, he saith, many other nations should follow in the war by Ezekiel spoken of, though Gog be named as chief and king over them. This for the persons; as for the time of that war, and what should then happen unto them, he saith again, הדה אלקצה בלא, שך מן אלמאעיר אלמנטרה, This description without doubt is among those promises, the completion of which is to be yet expected, in as much as for what is described in it, לם יכן, אלי אלן מתלה ולא קריב לה, there hath never hitherto any such thing been, nor any near unto it besides that, אנהא מנצח בכונהא תכון עקב אנתמאע ישראל אלי בלאדהם וקבל תחצין אלבלאר ותעמירהא, that it is particularly assigned for its event, to be after the gathering of Israel to their own country, and before the fortifying and inhabiting their cities, as he saith is shewed by what is said, ver. 10, 11, &c. and he thinks it probable that it is the same war that is pointed at in Zechariah xiv. though the circumstances and expressions betwixt them be different; but notwithstanding both prophecies, he saith, point to the same time, which is to be, ואנהא תכון, דלך בעד אנתמאע ישראל אלי בלאדהם, after the gathering of Israel unto their own country, and that to be המלך בעד טהור ארנינו המלך, after the appearance of our Lord the King Messiah, who he prays ילה מחרה may speedily be revealed. These are his words, which I put down at large, because the book is not printed: by them we perceive what he thinks meant by Gog and Magog, he referring the great and terrible day of the Lord to that of their destruction, and when, according to him and other Jews, that day is to be expected: and this is the only choice which Maimonides allows for the exposition of these words to them, that cannot embrace his other concerning the destruction of Sennacherib. But Christians who assuredly believe and confess the Messiah to be already long since come, cannot agree to this, though they neither do approve the other, and therefore find out other explications, which they think more probable than either of them, and in them do they yet differ among themselves. Some understand as here meant the time of the destruction of the city Jerusalem and the temple by the Chaldeans under Nebuchadnezzar, Others the destruction of the same rebuilt by the Romans, before which what dreadful signs appeared of like nature to those here mentioned, is recorded by Josephus in the seventh Book de Bello Judaico, as of the appearance of a fiery sword, and strange comet, to which also "Some refer those signs by our Saviour mentioned, * Mat. xxiv. 29, &c. so * Grotius thinks the words as uttered by Joel to point at that destruction brought on the Jewish nation by the Chaldeans, and as cited by St. Peter, as that afterwards brought on them by the Romans, either of which times well deserves to be called a great and terrible day of the Lord. Others refer the day here so described to the times of Christ, Some to one, Some to another; Some to the day of his ^v passion, and his resurrection, at which times great signs answerable to these here named are said to have appeared; amongst which is named the ^z sun's being darkened, which here is said should be turned into darkness, and as Some think probably * of the moon also, though not in the Evangelists as here named; the Evangelists, as St. John wit-

nesseth,

^v Here may be compared what the Arabians say of جاج and جاج, Jagog and Magog, of whom see Geogr. Arab. Clim. 5. part 9, 10. and Maginus. ^u Hammond. ^w And Mark xiii. 24. and Luke xxi. 11. ^z On Asta ii. ^y See Christ. à Castro. and Mercer from Jerome. ^a Luke xxiii. 45. ^b Mercer.

nesseth, not regarding particularly all things. Under it ^b they comprehend also the day of Pentecost, when the Holy Ghost was in such miraculous manner sent down, that St. Peter saith that by it was made good what is here spoken by the Prophet. But it being a difficult matter to adapt all these signs to any one time already past, he saying he will shew these wonders before that day described, not in; or after it, Others think it a more certain way to take that day near to be the last day, the day of judgment, at Christ's second coming, at the end of the world, which day is confessedly a day deserving to be signally called, the great and terrible day of the Lord, before which both all the signs here named, as those also reported in the Evangelists shall have a sure and certain completion. That day therefore is it by many thought here best to understand, yet by Some so as to take in other times also, yea ^c all the time betwixt Christ's first coming and his last, that whatsoever of these prodigies have appeared, or shall appear in any such signal time in that interval, may be looked on as pertaining to the fulfilling of this prophecy, so as that it is not necessary that they should all at one time be compleated, nor all till the coming of that last of them. Caperunt hæc in passione Christi, creverunt in excidio Hierosolymitano per Titum, sed perfecte complebuntur sub finem mundi, ante extremum Judicium, & excidium universi, saith a ^d learned Expositor. These wonderful things began to be shewn at the passion of Christ, (and after it at the day of Pentecost, as St. Peter in the forementioned place, Acts ii. witnesseth) and to that day Some refer it; they were farther shewn at the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, to which it is by Others referred; but they shall be fully perfected and completed near towards the end of the world, before the last judgment, and the destruction of this whole world, which time is by Others thought properly to be meant. And indeed, whatever may be objected against any other times, to that do the epithets here given to it, evidently agree. That certainly deserves signally to be called the day of the Lord, and the great day, for the great things that shall be done in it, and a terrible day, for the judgments in it to be executed on all that have ever lived in the world, when the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burnt up, 2 Pet. iii. 10. ἐπιφανής, signal certainly, and notable, for the greatness and the awfulness and terror of it, must that day needs be; which consideration, I suppose, will be sufficient to take away the necessity of supposing, as Some do here, a various reading, as if the ancient copies of the Hebrew had read otherwise, than those, which we now have, do. The ground of their supposition is the last of the epithets given here to the day of the Lord, described and in our copies read הַגָּדוֹל

Hannora, which signifies terrible, or awful, and is to that sense rendred by all Interpreters, as from נֹרָא to fear. They think therefore that the LXX. and St. Peter, who agrees with them, did of old in the copies that they used read otherwise, viz. הַנִּירָא Hannireeb, signifying apparent, as if from the root נִרָא raah, to see and perceive, they rendring it, ἐπιφανής, which Ours, Acts ii. 20. (where we said these words are cited by St. Peter) render notable; the Latin translation of the LXX. illustris, illustrious: but I think this supposition of theirs to be neither necessary nor probable. 1. Because the LXX. in several other places, where the same word occurs, and is in the Hebrew so read as it is here, נֹרָא Nora, render, as here, ἐπιφανής; so that if the Hebrew rendring here be to altered, because of their translation, it must also in all those other places be changed; and it is not probable that there should be so often mistakes in any approved Hebrew copies, or differences in one took from another. 2. Because the word נִירָא Nireah, seems not to have that height or weight of expression, which both the matter spoken of, or the Greek word ἐπιφανής seems to require, viz. something extraordinary remarkable and notable for what is eminent in it, it signifying simply that which is seen and apparent, nor I suppose any where else used in scripture as having any greater emphasis in it; and therefore I suppose cannot be here thought so proper for the description of that day, especially having the word הַגָּדוֹל that great, put before it, to which it is joined, as superadding something whereby that preceding epithet is illustrated, as where two epithets are put together for the setting forth the nature of a thing, is usually observed; and for that end the word Nireah, signifying only a thing that is seen, seems not much to make, though the Greek word ἐπιφανής will, as denoting it not only great, but notable, for something wherein its greatness shall appear, above what is found in other great days; so that we may suppose that the forecited Interpreters did not read otherwise than נֹרָא Nora, thereby denoting what is extraordinarily great for the impression that it shall make on the beholders, and meant even the same that they do, when elsewhere they render the same word by μέγας, great, χαλεπός, difficult, θαυμάσιος, or θαυμαστός, wonderful, or ἐξέτατος, strong, or φοβερός, terrible, in which places the word is by Ours and Others rendred in the same sense, as here, terrible, or fearful, which sense I do not find observed to be given by the Greek to any form from the root נִירָא raah, to see, except to the word מִירָא Moreah, Zephan. iii. 1. which is by Ours there rendred filthy, or (as in the margin) glutinous or craw, as by Others to some such sense denoting some ill condition; but by the Greek ἐπιφανής, illustris, conspicuous, I suppose for the ill condition taxed in her. The word word therefore so often occurring, where נֹרָא Nora is still in the Hebrew that we have, and נִרְאָה nireab being no where so translated by them, how shall we go to alter the Hebrew, because of their translation, and not rather read as we do nora, and think it to signify what might well be expressed by ἰσχυρὸς? This certainly is a safer way, than to offer violence to the text, by a never before observed different reading; for that which we now follow is confirmed by the joint consent, not only of modern, but also of more ancient Translators, such as lived before the invention of printing, at several places and several ages, so that they cannot be said to have all followed one copy, who rendred all in the same sense that we now take from the present ordinary reading of the Hebrew. So the Chaldee rendring it דַּחִילָא Dechila, as likewise the Syriack; the ancient Latin, terribilis. The MS. Arabick الموحف almochawaph, all sounding terrible, or dreadful: nor do we think therefore the LXX. to have meant otherwise by their rendring it as they do, than such as should be signal and notable for the dreadful-ness of it, it properly signifying supra appa-rens, Qui apparet supra alios, & conspicuus est, appearing above all others, and conspicuous for what should appear in it, which from what is described in the preceding words, necessarily appears to be matter of great terror, though they leave that here to be understood.

^b See Christ. à Castro. ^c Gualter. and Jun. Trem. ^d Tirin. ^e Cappel. and so Schindler thinks them elsewhere to have read this for the other, but his quotation of Deut. i. 19. is not warranted by our ordinary copies, which have not ἐπιφανής but φοβερός.

But the word being granted so to be read, and so to mean, then may it be questioned how these words, in this and the preceding verse, sounding threats and terror, should agree with those before them, which are promises of good and comfort. This question will be solved by considering the different sort of persons, to which respect is had, or which are spoken of. There are among them who are truly God's people, and whom he so owneth, ver. 26, 27. My people, and of whom he saith he never shall be ashamed, such who turn to him, and cleave unto him with all their hearts; and to these belong the good things promised, and they have still assurance of safety and security, whatever shall happen, though never so dangerous or terrible, and there are those who are not so, but run on and persist in rebellion against him; and on them shall all the dreadful things mentioned or threatened seize, with greatest terror, without hope of escaping, so that the promises of good, and threats of evil that we here have, are without any contradiction, or incongruity joined together: so our Saviour telling of great distress and perplexity to all nations, so that men's hearts should fail them for fear, &c. yet even then bids his to look up, and lift up their heads, for that their redemption drew nigh, Luke xxi. 26. This reason of the context, as the foregoing words direct to, so do those that follow evidently confirm, in which he saith.

32. And it shall come to pass that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord, shall be delivered: for in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance, as the Lord hath said, and in the remnant, whom the Lord shall call.

וְבַיִּיבָה Vebaiab, yet notwithstanding that day shall be so great and terrible, threatening a general destruction, that none can see in themselves any way how to escape the evil thereof, yet is there a way here shewed by the Lord how men may be delivered from it, and assurance given that as many of them as shall take it, and make use of it, shall be delivered, viz. as many as shall call upon the name of the Lord, whosoever (saith he) of whatsoever nation, sex, or condition; for so this term seems to be of as great latitude, as that of all those above, ver. 28. so that neither of these promises is to be restrained to the Jews only, to whom (but not of whom) the Prophet then, more particularly spake; but whosoever, whether Jew or Gentile, of what condition soever, shall rightly believe in God, and in faith call upon his name for help, shall even then, when there should to Others seem no hope of, or place for it, surely find it. So St. Paul applying those words to the condition as well of the Greeks, or Gentiles, as of the Jews, cites them, Rom. x. 13. This calling on the name of the Lord, though it more particularly denotes the act of earnest praying for help, yet necessarily includes sincere obedience to him, and a right acknowledgment of, and firmer belief in him, with the like properties of a true servant of God, otherwise how vain it shall be to cry, Lord, Lord, as if that were enough, we are shewed, Mat. vii. 21. This same way of prayer, accompanied with such things as may make it acceptable, is by our Saviour prescribed, where he speaking, as is most probable, of the same great day that the Prophet here points out, as the only way to escape the terrible effects of it, Luke xxi. 36. says, Watch ye therefore and pray always that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the son of man. The Chaldee Paraphrast renders it, כִּי רַצְיָי בְּשֵׁמָא דִּי, every one that prayeth, ^f in nomine Domini, as the Latin Translator renders, or ^g per nomen Domini, in the name, or through the name of the Lord; by which, though perhaps no more was by him meant, than what other translations express, ^h nomen Dei orabit, shall pray the name of the Lord, yet according to the plain letter of the words, it gives us a necessary direction in calling on the name of the Lord, for the acceptable and effectual performance of that duty, viz. that these prayers be put up in the name of the Lord Christ, in whom, and with true faith in whom always they shall prevail, that they that so pray may be delivered.

This,

^f Bib. Polyg.

^g So by Mercer's Latin Translation.

^h Merc. Pet. à Fig.

This, I say, the Chaldee reading suggests; and indeed the original itself, as literally by Some translated, omnis qui invocaverit in nomine Domini, whosoever shall invoke on the name of the Lord, may suggest the same. Mercer so looks on the preposition in, with שׁוּמִי shumi, the name joined to it, as having that emphasis in it as to import more than if he had simply said invocaverit Dominum, shall call on the Lord, viz. to call upon him in that or by that, viz. the word by which he hath made himself known to us, which is called his name: and, to illustrate what he saith, he cites those words of St. John. No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him, John i. 18. So as that invocare in nomine, seu nomen Domini, to invoke in the name (or the name) of the Lord, is Deum invocare fiducia promissionis quam Christus de celo ad nos attulit, to call on God with confidence of (or in) that promise, which Christ hath brought from heaven to us; unde ὁ λόγος dicatur ὁ ἰμᾶς Dei, whence he is called the word and the image of God, quod in Christo Deus patefacit, quo in nos sit animo, because in Christ God hath revealed himself, how minded he is to usward. What do the words, according to this explication, give us to understand, but the same that the Chaldee Paraphrast (as we said) suggests to us, as required in such prayers, as are here said shall be effectual for obtaining deliverance in that great and terrible day of the Lord, viz. that they be put up in the name of the Lord, i. e. of Christ, and with faith in him. I do not find fault with our or other Translations, which render only, shall call on the name of the Lord, but only shew what (as we said) may be looked on as suggested by the expression in the original Hebrew and Chaldee, for the right framing and directing those prayers, to which the promise is here made, that they may be effectual for that end, which is here said they shall be; what that is the next word declares. The general efficacy of prayer rightly ordered, and duly put up to God, for obtaining all good, and averting all evils, is often in the Scripture set forth. Whosoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you, saith our Saviour, John xvi. 23. That which is here said shall be obtained is deliverance from the terror of the great day of the Lord. Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered, יִמָּלֵט, Yimmalet. This word ^k Some look on as having in it great emphasis, more than if he had used a word that had simply the notion of servandi, saving, as importing that though the face of things were now such, as that there seemed no hope left to any of escaping the great evils, threatening to all inevitable destruction, so that all might seem to be in a desperate condition, yet God's faithful servants, who, casting themselves on him with assured confidence in his power and mercy, shall call on him, shall surely be delivered from the terrors of that great and evil day, and find it to themselves a day ^l of entering into the joy of their Lord, and of setting them in an estate free from all farther fear of evil. As an assurance or reason, convincing that it shall be so to them, follows in the next words. For in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance, as the Lord hath said. The day here spoken of, is said to be great and terrible, such as may threaten a general destruction to all, yet it is the Lord's day, the affairs and transactions thereof are by him ordered, so as that the evils thereof shall not without distinction seize on all, but there shall be even in that day an asylum or place of refuge for God's faithful servants, and such as cleave faithfully to him, and ^m call upon him in truth in Mount Zion and Jerusalem (the true church of God) shall be to them, to all the true members of it, deliverance. That shall be to them like the ark of Noah, to those who betook themselves into it, when God ⁿ brought in the flood upon the whole world of the ungodly, therein shall be to them, while Others that are out of it perish, deliverance.

If Mount Zion and Jerusalem should be here literally taken, for the places by those names properly meant, where, in those days, was the temple of God, or house of prayer, and whither ^o the tribes went up, the tribes of the Lord unto the testimony of the Lord, to give thanks unto the name of the Lord and call upon it; it would then favour the exposition of such as would have the great day of the Lord to be some such day of calamity, as should be to them, while Zion and Jerusalem and the temple should be the chief or only places of the true worship of God, as either before it was destroyed at all, as in Sennacherib's time, or after its being again rebuilt, as we have seen according to the several opinions that we have mentioned, and so should these words be referred to such as were then delivered and preserved. But it seems better to Others that those names should not be properly understood, but taken in a figurative sense for the church of God. It having been ^p there first seated, and thence extended all the world over, carried the name thereof along with it. So that whosoever it was spread, and the doctrine of the kingdom preached, was said to be Mount Zion and Jerusalem, even to the farthest parts of the earth: and in this notion taken will it agree with that exposition, which we look on as the plainest and surest, of understanding by the great and terrible day of the Lord, the day of the last judgment, and be an assurance of deliverance, even in that day, to the true members of the church, such whom the Lord shall call into it, and which shall in it call on the name of the Lord, i. e. (saith Mercer) of Christ, and that in truth, and with an humble heart, for otherwise not every one that saith, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, Mat. vii. 21. For assurance of it to themselves, they have the word and promise of the Lord: so saith he, as the Lord hath said; which

VOL. I.

4 O

^l Interlin. ^k Calvin. ^l Mark xxv. 13. ^m Psalm cxlv. 12. ⁿ 2 Pet. ii. 5. ^o Psalm cxxii. 4.
^p Repentance and remission of sins was to be preached to all nations, beginning first at Jerusalem, Luke xxiv. 47.

which I suppose may be well understood to denote, both ^a what is now by him, and elsewhere by the other Prophets spoken; rather than to assign any one place particularly pointed to, as Some would have to be, as R. Sol. Deut. xxviii. 10. as ^b Others, Deut. xxxii. 43. as Kimchi, Isaiah iv. 3. which refer to the time of Seimacherib, of which (as we have seen) Some will have the day of the Lord here spoken of to be meant. The mentioning of such several places, as many others may be mentioned, in which God may be said to have said what the Prophet here saith he did, may shew it to be sufficient to understand that God had spoken it by the Prophets, without particularly referring to any one place, where he said it: and if we look on what this Prophet himself ^c hath said from what is from v. 22. to this place, we may see enough to make good that God had even by him promised such deliverance to them. We may else with Others look upon, by, as the Lord hath said, to be meant as the Lord hath decreed and purposed. The import of all will be to shew the certainty of the deliverance spoken of, and promised to such as shall be thought worthy to find it. They were before mentioned in the words, whoever shall call on the name of the Lord, and are in the following words farther expressed, in his saying, and in the remnant, whom the Lord shall call. The words in the Hebrew are ובשרידים אשר יהיה קרא Ubasseridim asher Jehovab kore, of which our English is a very literal translation, and agrees with most Others. Abarbinel observes that they are capable of being rendred otherwise, viz. and in the remnant who shall call on the name of the Lord: But besides that this would be but a repetition of what is before said, if it were so to be taken, the verb would then rather have been in the plural number, as the word seridim, which would be then the nominative case of it, is, whereas it is now singular, and so seems more properly referred to Jehovab. But however this might be solved, I find not any to take that other way, but all generally to take Jehovab, as Ours do, for the nominative case, and seridim to be governed of the verb, expressing whom the Lord should call, and so will be, as we said, farther here declared who should be delivered, as in the first clause, for whom in Mount Zion and Jerusalem should be deliverance, as is in the second, where is but a description of the same persons, though in different terms, in respect to different qualifications concurring in them, one that they should call on the name of the Lord, and another that they should be called of the Lord, or the Lord should call them. It is therefore by ^d Some observed that the conjunction ו, and, is here, as in several other places, not so much a copulative to join other things to somewhat that had been before mentioned, as exegetical or declaratory of the fore-mentioned, and to signify as much as nempe, to wit, Nempe in residuum quos vocaverit Dominus. In Mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance, and in the remnant, &c. not as if the remnant were others; besides those that should in Zion and Jerusalem call on the name of the Lord, and find deliverance, but that those for whom there should be deliverance, should be that remnant whom the Lord shall call; and that both of Jews and Gentiles, though ^e Some by them peculiarly understand the Gentiles, who shall embrace that gospel which was preached first to the Jews; ^f Others of such of the Jews that should be united in Christ with the Gentiles, and gathered together into his flock and fold. These may be well reconciled by understanding the true believers of both sorts; they both take all in, though they differently think the word to refer more properly to the one than to the other; and though by joining them the number will be still increased, yet may they all be properly called but ^g a remnant, in respect to the greater number of those who are not concerned in any of the words here spoken, nor called by the Lord.

The word rendred remnant is in the Hebrew שרידים sheridim, which signifies such as remain, when others are taken away, or escape such dangers or destruction which seize on Others. Which noun together with the root or verb from whence it comes, occurs, Josbua x. 20. where is read והשרידים שרדו מהם Vehasseridim Saradu Mehem, which Ours render, the rest which remained of them. The Interlineary, Et superstites superfuerunt ex eis: the LXX. καὶ διασωζόμενοι διασώθησαν, Et superstites evaserunt, it is elsewhere joined with a word of near signification to it, שריד ופלט, Sarid upalit, Jer. xlii. 17. where Ours render (who) shall remain or escape; but the Greek looking on them as both signifying the same thing, puts but one word for them both, viz. σωζόμενοι that shall be saved. So that we see the LXX. as well as Others, acknowledge this as a known notion of the word Seridim, signifying such as remain, or are saved from such evils as fall on Others, which makes it justly questionable why in this place, to which this notion seems most aptly agreeable, they should render it by a word of a far different sound, viz. ευαγγελιζόμενοι, evangelizati; which seems so little to agree with that other acknowledged signification of the word, that it makes diverse to think that they did read otherwise in the Hebrew than is now read, viz. המבשרים, which taken passively, and read Mebussarim, will signify indeed ευαγγελιζόμενοι, i. e. as it is in the Latin Version in the Polyglott Bibles, evangelizati, such as have received good tidings (news or promises of good, or Gospel) from בשר Bisser, to report, (and more especially ^h rem bonam Et letam, some good or glad thing, and in the passive voice, if it were used (as we do not find it in the Bible used) would signify to have such tidings brought to him, as ευαγγελιζομαι in the Greek, though that

2

^a Merc. ^b Pisc. Tarn. ^c Ribera. ^d Merc. Pet. à Fig. ^e Pisc. Grot. ^f Mercer, Tarnov. Jerome, Jun. Trem. Hall's Paraph. ^g The word remnant is used also in the New Testament, to express the number of those that shall obtain salvation, Rom. ix. 27. and xi. 5. ^h Schindl.

that also be oftener used in the active signification, and so here also in Hierome out of the Greek translated, annunciants, as in several Greek copies it is read also in the singular number ἡ ἀγγελία ζῶντων.) So L. Capell. after several Others, saith, legerunt מנשרים: but sure the words Mebussarim and Seridim are so different both in sound and writing, that it can scarce be imagined that any scribe would mistake or change one for the other. And that very anciently it was read in the Hebrew, as now it is, Seridim, may appear from what is found in the fragments of Theodotion's translation, who retaining the Hebrew word untranslated did read, ἐν σαριδίν, In Saridin, as likewise from what Jerome saith, that in the Hebrew is read שרידים Seridim, quod Judæi loci nomen existimant, which the Jews think to be the name of a place, as if it were said, in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and in Seridim, (what Jews he means I know not. I think it found in none of their Expositors, nor any mention of it, but in that fragment of Theodotion.) But then if the LXX. had not read it so, as they suppose they did, how came it to pass that they translated it in that notion, proper to the word which they substitute, and not to this that is now in the Hebrew found? for this I shall not presume positively to give a reason, nor be bold in conjecturing; yet I think that without transgressing the bounds of modesty, I may propose this as not improbable, viz. that taking the word שרידים Seridim, to be of the same notion of deliverance, or escaping (as we have seen them to do, Jer. xlii. 17. where therefore we see them to make one word serve for both) so neither here willing to repeat the same word, or Some from the same theme (as the Syriack Version doth, putting for the first, مَشَاوْزُ Meshauzbutho, deliverance; for the second, مَشَاوْزُبَ Meshauzbe, the delivered) thought more convenient to put another word, though not literally answering to that in the Hebrew, which with respect to what was before, and what follows, would give a convenient meaning agreeable to the place, thus; and in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem εἰς ἀνασωζέμενται, there shall be who shall be saved, as the Lord bath said, καὶ ἡ ἀγγελία ζῶντων ὅς Κύριος προσκλήσεται, and such as shall receive the Gospel (or good tidings, viz. deliverance) whom the Lord hath called. Instead of the Hebrew word, which seems to respect the number of those, to whom deliverance is promised, they put a word that more seems to set forth their qualification; not, I suppose, that they thought the word which they translated properly so to signify, but because to all them, and only to them, whom the Lord should call, should pertain those joyful tidings, that good promise of deliverance.

This, or some like, I suppose will be a plainer and safer way of reconciling the original and the Greek translation of this word, than to change the Hebrew now read, that it may agree with the Greek. This I say, supposing that the Authors of that version did so at first write, as it is now read in them. For of that Drusus seems to doubt, when citing the Greek διαγγελλόμενοι, he saith, Si vera hæc lectio, if this reading be true; but of that I shall not now raise any question.

The following words declare how that remanent, to whom alone deliverance is here promised, obtain to be of that select number, viz. only by the free grace of God, by his bringing them home unto himself, so saith he, whom the Lord shall call, אשר יהיה קרא asher Jehovah Kore. The word Kore, being a participle, signifies by itself barely, calling, and is so rendred in the Interlineary, vocans. It is therefore necessarily in such construction to have a verb substantive understood and joined with it, to restrain it to some time, whether present, past, or future, and for either of these is a participle accordingly made to serve, as the verb understood with it shall be regulated, which may be so done as to give it the notion either of the present, præter, or future tense, and sometimes therefore so used as to denote one of these, sometimes one, sometimes another, as the sense of the place shall require. This here is by Interpreters used for either of them, or the præter, being by ^c Some rendred vocat, doth call, in the present tense, ^d by Others vocavit in the præter, hath called, as the LXX. προσκλήσονται, the Syriack ^e קרו kero, the printed Arabick دعا, the Chaldee in his Paraphrase also, though in a different signification, in the same sense; by Others in the future, as the Vulgar with several Others, vocaverit, Castalio vocabit, and ^e Ours shall call. The sense in the matter spoken of, viz. God's calling of his, as here meant, will be all one, which soever of these be taken, it being at all times certain. It will be to be considered therefore what is here meant by his calling of them. The word Kore in its general acception signifies to call to, or on any, for any thing or purpose, but sometimes more peculiarly in some particular case. So R. Solomon says, that it notes calling or inviting, למסערה או לעבורת המלך, to a banquet or some service under a king, and to be all one with הזמנה hazmanah, a preparing, destinating, or appointing for a thing, and so inviting to it, by which the Chaldee here renders it ומין, which ^f Some render, quos Dominus destinat, whom the Lord destinates; ^g Others prædestinavit, hath predestinated; ^h Others, invitat, doth invite. R. David Kimchi saith to be understood by it, either such as God אֶתְכֶם עֲבָדֵי וְאוֹהֲבֵי shall call my servants and friends, or else קִרְיַת הַגְּדֻלָּה with a call of (or to) greatness and glory, such as he shall choose to make great and glorious, as such are elsewhere named קְרוּאִים kernum, and then rendred by Ours renowned, as both Numb. i. 16. and Ezek. xxiii. 23. in the Interlineary in one place, convocati, called together, in the other invitati invited.

^a Bib. gr. Francofurti 1597.

^b Gloss. Gram. p. 415. or as in the margin 653.

c Pet. à Fig. Munst.

^a LXX: Syr.

الذي سبكون الله داعي بهم. And so the MS. Arab.

¹ In Bibl. Polyg.

Pet. à Fig.

h Mercer.

invited. Aben Ezra expounds it by נִוּר, doth decree, (or hath decreed or shall decree.) These expositions of theirs may be applied to the notion of God's being said here to call them, that shall be that remnant, who shall be delivered, all of them, looking on it as a peculiar and more than ordinary calling.

To give the meaning in plain terms, I think we may thus do it. God's calling may be taken either, 1st, more largely for a general calling on all by the preaching or publishing of his word to them, therein making them to know the only way to salvation, and for finding deliverance, and inviting them to take it, which is not by many accepted, for in this kind many be called, but few chosen, Mat. xx. 16. or, 2^{dly}, for a more peculiar call, such as hath with it efficacy to work on them who are by it called, to hearken to it and obey him, and to take such ways as he directs them to, that they may obtain the promised deliverance. The first of these is not the notion in which it appears here taken, for it is here limited to such a select remnant only who shall find deliverance; which remnant consisting of those whom God should call, it manifestly imports that all those, whom God did or should call, should be of that remnant. Such are by St. Paul described to be those who are the called κατὰ πρόθεσιν, according to purpose (or, as Ours render, his purpose) Rom. viii. 28. of whom he saith also that he did foreknow them, predestinate them, call them, justify them, and would glorify them, ver. 29, 30. So that the word call here appears to include and import more than a promiscuous calling, viz. election from before, and such a calling in due time, which shall by his grace bestowed on them be made effectual for bringing them home to him, and make them obedient to him, which all the הַזְמָנָה Hazmanah, preparation, may include, and I think he well gives the meaning who expounds the words, traxerit ad se, shall draw to himself, according as our Saviour saith, No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me, draw him, John vi. 44.

By this description of those who are that remnant, to whom shall be deliverance, viz. that they are only such as God shall call, he appears to exclude from that select number, such ^a hypocritical pretenders, who pretend to be of it, but do not approve themselves so to be, and ordained to life, by rightly calling on his name, and walking worthy of him. It shews likewise their salvation not to be from their own power, and works, or merit in themselves, but of the free grace of God, as St. Paul calleth them a remnant according to the election of grace, and if by grace, then not of works, Rom. xi. 5, 6. as he saith also, By grace ye are saved, through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast, Eph. ii. 8, 9. Besides this notion of calling, the word קָרָא hath also another, viz. of reading, and this doth Ar. Montanus, look on as very proper to this place, as that the words may sound, whom the Lord shall read, viz. in his book of life, standing there written and not blotted out; as if it should import that more, even all, had been there written, yet, à multis commissum est ut eorum nomina de libro illo delerentur, many have occasioned by their own fault, that their names should be blotted out of that book, and that remnant only, whom the Lord should read, and find remaining there, should find deliverance. That to be a notion well befitting the matter here spoken of, he thinks may be made apparent by such expressions as are elsewhere used, as Exod. xxxii. 33. where the Lord saith, whosoever hath sinned against me, him will I blot out of my book, where by saying some shall be blotted out, appears that others may be said to be still read there, besides other places out of the New Testament cited by him, as Rev. iii. 5. and xxii. 19. which seem to justify the taking the word here in that notion of reading, to which he might have added, Phil. iv. 3. There are two more out of the Old, which Abarbinel also cites as much agreeable to the expression here used, viz. Isaiah iv. 3. It shall come to pass that he that is left in Zion, and he that remaineth in Jerusalem shall be called holy, even every one that is written among the living in Jerusalem, and Dan. xii. 1. there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time, and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book.

How this expression here, if the word be taken in the notion of reading, is illustrated by those that we have last cited, and the like, is manifest. For by the same reason that they are said to be written in the book of God, or life, may they be said to be read therein; speaking of the things of God in the language of men, or according as they use to do it, or speak of things among them; as when they, who are designed to any places or privileges, are written in some book or roll, there to be publicly read, and, while they so remain, have right to those offices or privileges; but if they be thence blotted out, it is a sign that they are deprived thereof, and are not longer to enjoy them. So that if the word should be here rendred in that notion of reading, the sense will be plain, but then it will be but still the same meaning, as if it be rendred by calling (as generally it is, and we have no reason to depart from it) both importing that those spoken of are elected and destined by God to salvation, and shall find deliverance, whereas others shall perish, and both are applicable to the deliverance spoken of, whether understood of that from the evils of the last day, which may seem the most genuine meaning of it in this place, or from those national calamities, or destruction, which should befall that people spoken to, as Others (as we have seen) understand it.

CHAP.

ⁱ Druf.^k Though Dr. Hammond gives another meaning also with leaving out, his.^l Calv.^m Vatab.ⁿ Calv. Gualt.

C H A P. III.

TO prevent such confusion as might otherwise happen in the exposition of this chapter, it may be convenient to premise, that there is a very great difference betwixt Expositors concerning both the time and the persons spoken of in the words, like that which we have already taken notice of on verse 31. of the foregoing chapter; between the latter part of which chapter and these words seems to be such connexion, that what in our ordinary division is verse 28. of that, is by Others made the first of this. To begin with the opinions of the Jews concerning these things; Aben Ezra saith that many of them think that this Prophecy is לעתיד, for the future, or concerns things yet to come, and he saith, אולי כן הוא, that perhaps it is so: but that one Rabbi Moses refers it to the time of Jehoshaphat, and that history recorded, 2 Chron. xx. concerning the great destruction of the children of Ammon, and Moab, and mount Seir, who instead of fighting against Judah, the Lord so ordering it, slew and destroyed one another: for which great deliverance, Jehoshaphat and his people, assembling themselves in the valley of Beracha, blessed the Lord, and therefore the place was by him and them called the valley of Beracha, (i. e. of blessing) and that same valley here from that act of his called by his name, the valley of Jehoshaphat, as they think, at which time likewise they think that such, who had been taken captives in the days of their fathers, returned home. Thus Aben Ezra from that R. Moses: ° But that that cannot be the thing here spoken of appears (to omit other reasons) in that that was most probably done before this was here spoken by the Prophet, † who doth not report an history of things past, but foretel things to come: Yet is it by † Others looked on as an allusion to that history, for illustrating such things as God would after do, by comparing them to such as he had already done.

Kimchi thinks it to belong to the days of the Messiah; and to the war or battle of Gog and Magog, which should be in the valley of Jehoshaphat near Jerusalem. R. Tanchum also by what we have already said on ver. 31. of the foregoing chapter, appears to refer it to that time and those transactions, but with what little certainty may appear by his own words, with which he concludes what he thought concerning Gog and Magog, in his notes on Ezek. xxxviii. with words cited out of Maimonides (yad c. ult.) هذه الامور وما يشبهها ليس بيد العلماء فيها نقل محقق وانما تكلم فيها كل من تكلم بحسب ما يظهر من ترجيح النصوص وكلما ظهر منها شي اذكشف الاخبار به علي حقيقتها, i. e. As for these things and the like, there is not concerning them any certain tradition in the hands of learned men, but who soever speaks any thing of them, speaks according to what appears from the tendency of the words of the text (or what the words of the text seem most to incline to) and whensoever any such thing appears (in act) then is revealed (or made manifest) what is spoken of it, according to its true meaning.

Abarbinel, though he thinks Gog and Magog to be here had respect to, yet doth it in a different way from those Others. His opinion concerning the matters here spoken of is, that both in these words, and those above (chap. ii. 30, 31.) respect is had to the Christians, whom he calls Edom (denoted by the sun) and the Mahometans, whom he calls Ismael (denoted by the moon) which both being as enemies to the Jews, so one to another, and have had much contention one with another concerning the possession of the Holy Land, and many wars in and about it, sometimes one for several years holding it, sometimes the other, still both keeping the Jews out of it; and that it is here prophesied that God will at the time here spoken of, take vengeance on them both, for the wrong by both of them done to the Jews; and his opinion is, that by the words of the Prophet here is plainly foretold, that though the Mahometans are now in possession of it, yet the Christians shall yet again another time invade it, and destroy the Mahometans there with a great destruction, on which occasion the Mahometans shall gather themselves together from Babylon, and Assyria, and the eastern coasts, and come to war against the Christians, to revenge the blood of their brethren that was shed, and to take again the Holy Land out of their hands; and then shall be the vengeance of God both on the Christians and Mahometans, for then shall the sword of the one be against the other; and because the Mahometans from Assyria and Babel did destroy the Holy Land the first time, and the Christians the second, therefore shall it be by the judgment of God, that in the place where they did evil, there shall be his judgment on them, and it is probable that Gog shall be then head or chief of the men of the east in that war. But his stirring up himself (or intention) shall not then be to fight against Israel, as Expositors think, but against the Christians their enemies, and by reason of God's stirring up those people (so to do) is it that the Prophet saith here, I will gather all nations, &c. Thus gives he his opinion, in which he confesseth himself (we see) to be singular, and to differ from other Expositors: yet he thinks the words are plainly for him. The truth, time will discover; mean while it hath nothing of certainty, and little of probability in it. These are the chief opinions concerning the scope of this Prophecy among the Jews. Among the Christians also there is much other variety; † Cyril takes the time, in which this Prophecy was to be fulfilled, to be after the return of the

° For it seems but a groundless conjecture of Aben Ezra from that exposition only of R. Moses, that perhaps Joel lived in the time of Jehoshaphat. He is by Others looked on as living later. † Christ. à Castro. Drus. Merc. Pifc. The corners of the East. And see Theodoret.

the Jews from the Babylonish captivity by the permission of Cyrus, and refers the fulfilling of it to those transactions upon it, which are recorded of Ezra and Nebemias; so Others refer it to what should be done " to the Assyrians and Chaldeans. Others refer it to some later times, the times after Christ's coming; yea " many to the last of times, his coming to judgment at the end of the world. But Others, though they take in that also, yet will not have it to be restrained to that, but so as to be extended to all the time after his first coming until his second, and to that which shall then be done, * ad totum evangelii tempus, to the whole time under the Gospel, in which God promiseth defence to his church, and threateneth destruction to the enemies thereof, of which things though several examples appear in this world, yet a fuller and more manifest completion shall be at the last judgment. These opinions the Reverend Diodati joins together in his notes on the first words as all meant in them and in what follows. This in part and figuratively may be understood of God's vengeance upon the enemies of his people after the deliverance from Babylon; but chiefly and spiritually must be referred to Christ's judgments upon the enemies of his church by him redeemed, and especially at the final and universal deliverance at his last coming; what grounds these and other Expositors, so different in their opinions, go upon, and what to judge of such their several opinions, we shall the better perceive by going over the words in particular, as they lie in order, which, having premised this in general, we shall by God's help endeavour to do.

VERSE I. For behold, in those days and in that time, when I shall bring again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem,

2. I will also gather all nations, and will bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, and will plead with them there for my people, and for my heritage Israel, whom they have scattered among the nations, and parted my land.

כִּי הִנֵּה Ci hinneh, For behold. The participle כִּי by Ours rendred for, as generally it is in other translations by a particle of that signification in their several languages, Grotius thinks better rendred by, verum, or sed, but, (which " Others follow) as so better shewing the coherence of these words with those that go before, chap. ii. but in which he thinks intimated, that some of them which escaped should be carried away captives, and that here is a restoration promised to them. That the particle hath elsewhere that signification of, but, is no doubt, but why the signification of, for, should not here be as proper to shew the connexion of these words with those former, as shewing when and how the deliverance there promised to some, and destruction to others, should be made good, I do not see.

הִנֵּה Hinneh, behold, this particle, being a " note of attention, stirs up to it, and gives withal assurance, that though the thing spoken of be such as they might otherwise think strange, and doubt of, yet shall certainly be. In those days and in that time, when I shall bring again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem. These words intimate, that there was a time when those spoken of were made or led captives, though not before expressed, from which captivity here is a plain promise that they shall be restored. That Judah and Jerusalem here named, and literally understood for the people of the Jews, were led into captivity, is manifest out of the history of them: they were led by Nebuchadnezzar unto Babylon, 2 Kings xxiv. 14, &c. From this captivity they were again restored under Cyrus King of Persia, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 22, 23. and Ezra i. which time therefore Some think to be here meant; but it is by Others denied, because it cannot be shewed that the other things following, as of God's gathering all nations and bringing them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, " were then made good. They were again in after-times, after the coming of Christ, under Titus, and others, carried away captives by the Romans, from which captivity they were never yet restored, which yet the Jews expect " shall in due time be done, and then this Prophecy be made good. But there being no grounds to expect that, Others among Christians think it more agreeable to the meaning of the place to interpret the words, not literally of bringing back any captivity of the Jews to their ancient seat, but of freeing them from the " captivity of sin and the devil, and the yoke of the Mosaical Law, and Antichrist. And the words being in this sense expounded, by Judah and Jerusalem may (as by many it is) be meant not only the Jewish nation, but God's whole church, or all that shall be gathered into it, consisting both of Jews, and all other nations: to all which being called into it by the Gospel, will those names, according to the scripture language and use of them therein, well agree, even to all that receive the truth, which was first preached in Judah and Jerusalem, the names of those places being thenceforth made common to all such as are " fellow citizens of the " new (and true) and holy Jerusalem, there being in Christ no longer difference betwixt " Greek or Jew, but all seems one in Christ Jesus, all comprehended under the name of his church. So that instead of Judah and Jerusalem, is that by Some here put as " signifying the same thing. So by the Right Reverend Bishop Hall are the words paraphrased. In the days of the Gospel, wherein I shall restore my church, and deliver it from the spiritual captivity, wherein it hath been distressed.

" Drus. " Ribera, Christ. à Castro, Pet. à Fig. who saith, Nostri fere referunt ad diem universalis judicii, so most of them do. " Mercer, Tarnov. " Whose opinion seems to agree with Calvin's here. " Bren. Veil. " Ar. Mont. Tarnov. " Chr. à Castro. " Id. " Tirin. " Ephes. ii. 19. " Rev. iii. 12. and xxi. 2. and x. " Gal. iii. 28. Colos. iii. 11. " His nominibus Ecclesia Dei significatur, Pet. à Fig.

distressed. In this way there will be no necessity of, or place for, that question here by some Jews made, Why Israel, a name comprehending all the tribes, is not rather named than Judah or Jerusalem proper only to one; as if the promise were to that singly, which no doubt was also belonging to the others. To which they give for answer, Some, because Joel did ¹ prophecy peculiarly to and of Judah and Jerusalem, as sent ² particularly to them: Others (as Kimchi) because though all Israel should be restored, yet the Messias was to be of the tribe of Judah, and therefore he makes peculiar mention of that, as also of Jerusalem, because that was ושן Rosh, the head city of that kingdom, and because there was to be the war of Gog and Magog (of which we had mention from him above, chap. i. 31.) But these names being taken in that latitude as we before saw, agreeably to the stile of the New Testament, there will, as I said, be no place for any such doubt or question. Judah and Jerusalem will comprehend or include Israel also, and that not only as it denotes that nation only according to the flesh, but all the true Israel of God; all who are of the faith of Abraham, though not of his seed, all true believers of what nation soever, all members of that ³ heavenly, new Jerusalem, the church of Christ, of which Judah and Jerusalem of old were an image or type: of these all may it be now said in this world, that they are as strangers and pilgrims, yea captives, having it bent to exercise all acts of hostility against them. So that to these all may be well applied what he saith, When I shall bring again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem, as comprehending them all. His saying when I shall bring again, &c. includes plainly a promise, that in due time, the time appointed by him he will certainly effect what he hath promised to do for them. The time is not precisely determined, so that to it, for ought that is expressed in the words, may be applied those words of our Saviour, Mat. xxiv. 36. Of that day and hour knoweth no man, but my Father only, and so that it is no marvel that Expositors going to assign it, do so far differ betwixt themselves, as we have before seen, amongst whom it seems safest to follow those ⁴ who do not limit it to any short space, but so extend it, as to comprehend both that wherein God delivered his then peculiar people the Jews, and all the days after Christ, who leading captivity captive hath delivered, and continues, and will continue to the end of the world to deliver his redeemed ones both of Jews and Gentiles ⁵ from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the children of God, when death itself shall be ⁶ swallowed up in victory, and no enemies left which shall be able to detain them in bondage under their power, or, ⁷ separate them from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus, and the constant enjoyment of his presence, and favour; in respect to which ultimate completion of the good promises here made, and the day of the plenary redemption of God's Judah and Jerusalem, ⁸ One interprets the expression, when I shall bring again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem, by, cum completus fuerit predestinatorum numerus, when the number of the predestinated ones, or such as are ordained to salvation, shall be made up, or as we may give it in language agreeable to that of the Apostle, ⁹ when the fulness both of the Jews and Gentiles shall be come in. There shall therefore certainly be such a time, when all these promises of good to those his elect, shall be, though till then but in part, fully made good; and as certainly likewise, when that is made good to them, vengeance taken on those, who have hitherto oppressed them: that do the next words positively denounce, I will also gather all nations, and will bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, &c. For the understanding of what God saith that he will here do, and better judging what Expositors say concerning it, it will be even necessary to enquire in the first place what is here meant by the valley of Jehoshaphat, which is no where else mentioned but in this place, and again, ver. 12. of this chapter. It is by Some taken for the proper name of a place, but then it being no where else mentioned, nor here farther described, it will not be easy to determine where it was. Some, as we above said, ¹⁰ will have it to be the same with that which, 2 Chron. xx. 26. is called the valley of Beracha, (or blessing) because there Jehoshaphat and his people blessed the Lord, for the great destruction by him there wrought on their enemies, and for that act of his to have had also this name. Kimchi thinks it to be a valley near Jerusalem, so called because of some building or monument erected there by Jehoshaphat, or some notable work that he did there, for which his name was imposed on it. That it was so called because his Sepulchre was there, as is by Some thought, ¹¹ seems not so probable, because it is said, 2 Chron. xxi. 1. that he was buried with his fathers in the city of David, which must then be in mount Sion within the city, except, as ¹² some Others say, his bones might thither be removed and put in some monument there erected in memory of him. A valley ¹³ Others think it was between Jerusalem and mount Olivet, the same which Some think was called Cedron.

However these may differ about the situation and reason of that name, yet they concur in this, that it was the proper name of a place. But Others are of a different mind, and that it is not here as so to be looked on farther than by allusion perhaps to a place so called, and what was there done, but the signification of the word as it imports ¹⁴ the judgment of the Lord, and so to denote ¹⁵ any place where God shall shall execute his judgment on the enemies of the church. This difference in understanding this word necessarily causeth difference likewise in understanding what God saith he will there do, what judgment he will then execute, and on whom, they being here termed, all nations. Concerning these things there is that great difference which we have before mentioned on our entrance on this chapter, arising especially from what they take here to be understood by the valley of Jeboshaphat. From its being taken for the proper name of a place is it, that Some (as we have said) think here meant the destruction of that great multitude of several nations, which invaded Judah in the time of Jeboshaphat, 2 Chron. xx. which opinion appears not well to agree to the words here, ² both because those nations there named, viz. Moabites and Amorites, and those in mount Seir (or the Idumeans) cannot be properly called all nations: and because that action (as we mentioned) cannot well agree with the time of this prophecy, which speaks of something to be done after, rather than referring to what was before done.

¹ Abarbinel. ² Pet. à Fig. ³ Heb. xii. 22. See Dr. Hammond there; as likewise Rev. iii. 12. and xxi. 2: ⁴ As Calvin, Diodati, &c. ⁵ Rom. viii. 21. ⁶ Cor. xv. 54. ⁷ Rom. viii. 39. ⁸ Pet. à Fig. ⁹ Rom. xi. 25. and compare Eph. i. 9, 10. in the dispensation of the fulness of time he will bring certainly to pass what he hath purposed in himself. ¹⁰ Calv. Jun. Trem. Lively. ¹¹ Lively. ¹² Ribera, Menoch. ¹³ Lyra, see Lively. ¹⁴ So Abarbinel among the Jews. ¹⁵ Mercer.

On the same acception of it for a place is grounded that opinion by Kimchi followed, that by all nations, are meant those that should come with Gog and Magog against Jerusalem, and be overcome in the valley so called; an opinion as improbable that ever it should by any thing hereafter to be done, be made good, as certain that it never yet was. On the same grounds is Cyril also his understanding it of the defeat of such enemies of the Jews after their return from Babylon, who would have hindered them in rebuilding Jerusalem; for though in that story there be no mention of the valley of Jeboshaphat, yet saith he that it was παραβολῆς λόγῳ, that which was by tradition delivered; but I know not how it will be made good, as neither what he saith, that it is manifest by the Scripture, that what is here spoken is already fulfilled. Another opinion that makes more noise is, that this being the proper name of a place, and as such here put, is an argument that at the last day of the general judgment, all that ever lived being raised up, (as certainly they shall be) shall be gathered together in that place, viz. the valley of Jeboshaphat, there to appear before God, and receive their doom from him. This opinion Cyril mentions as commonly received among the Jews, and censures it as that it is Ἰσλ. σαπρὸς καὶ γεωδῆς, a meer foppery, and frivolous old wives story: of what standing or credit it was among the Jews in his time or before, I find not; but that it was common among Christians in later times ^a we find; and whereas it is by Some rejected ^b as figmentum a fiction, or spoken ^c pueriliter childishly, as, among other reasons, ^d for that that valley must be too little to hold at once all that ever lived in the world, yet it is by ^e Others still mentioned, who think that Christ shall really over it have his throne placed in the air, and that in it and about it all nations shall be gathered to be judged by him; which they think confirmed by what is said, Acts i. 11. This same Jesus, which is taken up into heaven, shall so come in like manner, as ye have seen him go into heaven. Which they think to import that in that place, from which he ascended into heaven, he should also again descend, and thither gather, and there judge all nations, which they think to be that ^f place called the valley of Jeboshaphat. There, they say, ^g he taught, there he himself was judged, there therefore it is probable that he shall come again to judge. But all that is to this purpose by any said, is by themselves looked on only ^h as probable; and it being manifest that that place in the Acts respects and points out more the ⁱ manner, than the place of his coming, and there being no cogent argument by them brought to convince the truth of what they say, that Christ shall in that place come to sit in judgment at the last day, as neither for the proof of what any others of those other opinions, which we have mentioned of such as take this for the proper name of a place, bring; it is by Others thought a plainer and securer way, to take it rather appellatively, than as a proper name; at least so as not to denote that any thing here spoken of should be farther done in that place, but only to shew that what should hereafter be done elsewhere, should be like in some measure to what had been there done, and so the place where that should be done is called by the name of that, which, in that respect, was a type of it, so as that it might justly communicate its name to it. And in these ways taking the words either appellatively, as signifying, God shall judge, or, the judgment of God, as the Chaldee renders, מִשְׁכַּל הַיָּדֵי, the valley of division (or distribution) of judgment, or else for a place that should, for the things to be done in it, resemble that place which was known by the name of the valley of Jeboshaphat, will it not be necessary to restrain it to that place that was formerly so called, but to understand by it any such ^k place, wherever it should be, where God should in such manner, as he here describes, execute judgment, and withal that in time and place by him appointed he would certainly so execute it. As for the time of it, there is that difference betwixt Expositors, which before we mentioned, Some taking it as more particularly referring to the day of the last judgment, ^l Others to all the time of the Gospel from Christ's first coming to his second. The difference between them, I suppose, is easily reconcilable; they that take it for that whole time looking on that last day as God's great day, (as ^m Some think the joining his name with judgment to import) that wherein what is said shall most apparently be performed; and they, that therefore look on that day as chiefly meant, yet not excluding what should be done at

² Drusius. ^a So in Lyra and many Others.

Others following therein the chief Schoolmen.

^b Pet. à Fig. and Sa.

ⁱ Tarnov.

^k Merc.

^b Calvin.

^c Mercer.

^d Tarnov.

^e Ribera and many

^f Vatablus from Some, and Mariana in Tarnov.

^g Sa. Tirin.

^l Calv.

^m Tarnov.

at any time before it by God's executing judgments on the enemies of his church. As for the place, though those that go this last way think it not properly to be the name of any peculiar place particularly known by that name, yet do they think, as we said, that allusion may be here made to some such, and some circumstances appertaining thereto had respect to. If that valley be alluded to, wherein these enemies which came against Jehoshaphat (2 Chron. xx.) were so wonderfully destroyed, in regard to that defeat of them, then Some think that the calling this place by its name is, by so putting God's church and people in mind of that deliverance at that time, to give them confidence and assurance of God's like dealing still for the defence of his church, and taking vengeance of the enemies thereof. 2. If the place there designed by God for executing what he saith he will do, be set forth under the name of that valley in respect to its situation near Jerusalem, and in sight thereof, then Others think by his so calling it to be intimated, that as then God brought destruction on the enemies of his people openly in their sight, so in his appointed time he will in " the sight and presence of his church execute openly judgment on their enemies, according to whom, in the valley of Jehoshaphat is all one as in conspectu ecclesiæ. Why the place where he will do this is called a valley, reasons are also by Some given. Among the Jews Abarbinel thinks it so called from the depth of the judgments of God, of manifesting which that is said to be the place, לפי שמשפטיו עמקו קורא, because his judgments are deep, therefore he calls that place which is (as he saith, רמו למשפט השם, or by its signification intimates the judgment of God) the valley of Jehoshaphat, which is the same that before him R. Sol. Jarchi gives in expounding the words, אורד עמם בעומק הדין, I will descend with them into the depth of judgment, by which words, " saith he, intelligit exactissimum judicium etiam de occultissimis, he understands a most exact judgment even of the hidden things.

Among other Interpreters we have these reasons (if I well conceive them) given, " 1. Because they shall be there so shut up and surrounded, as that there shall be no way of escape for them. " 2. By reason of the great streights they shall be in through anguish from the grief of conscience for their sins, like the trouble that a great multitude pressed together in a narrow incommodious valley, where there is not room enough for them, are in. 3. Grotius thinks so to be described God's sitting Judge in an high place, those that are to be judged in a lower, which here vallis ob similitudinem dicitur, is from its likeness thereto called a valley.

This being spoken of the name of the place here mentioned, in the other words we have declared what God will there do; he saith, I will gather all nations, and bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, and will plead with them there, &c. From that difference which we have seen to be betwixt Expositors, concerning the time and place designed by God for the doing what he saith here that he will do, and the persons for whom he will do it, ariseth necessarily a difference also betwixt them concerning the persons towards whom he saith he will do it, who are here said to be all nations, which cannot be in one and the same acception taken in all those several expositions concerning the time and place. If it be understood of the time of any restoring of the Jews from captivity, or any deliverance wrought for them, then must it be understood of such enemies as having done, or coming to do them mischief, were by God destroyed. So that all nations will not signify all, universally, but a great multitude of several nations, as " Assyrians, Chaldeans, and Others that came up with them, out of hatred to the Jews and " their religion, the then true religion, for which they were " hated by all other idolatrous nations. If of the time of the Gospel, all after Christ's first coming to his second that shall be, then will it likewise signify not so much all nations and all of them, without exceptions of any, as, all among them, whether Jews or Gentiles, of what sort soever, as are " enemies to God's church, and the true Christian Religion, and have for their injuries done to his church, felt his severe judgments, as the Jews have done by the destruction of their city and commonwealth; and so will all nations here, agree with such as, Mat. xiii. 41. are described by all things that offend, and them which do iniquity. If of the time of Christ's second coming, and the last judgment, then if those words, all nations, be taken in their greatest latitude, and strictness of signification, will the thing be true; For certain it is that then, when the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory, and before him shall be gathered all nations, and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats, &c. Mat. xxv. 31, 32, &c. All of all nations, good and bad, taking the terms in their widest latitude, shall then by him be gathered together. Yet that here, if it be understood of that time, the words are not so to taken " but restrained rather to the wicked among them, not to the true members of his church, but to the enemies thereof, may appear by the other words here joined with them, in which is declared for what end they shall be so gathered, and how he will deal with them. He will bring them down into that place of judgment, and will plead with them there for his people, &c. והורדתים and I will bring them down, or cause them to descend, a proper expression, the place being called a valley, into which

VOL. I.

4 Q

" Jun. Trem. Pisc. Glass. Bishop Hall.

" Pet. à Fig.

" Tarn.

" Merc.

" Druf.

" Grot.

" Tarn. " Hostes ecclesiæ intelligit vel Judæos vel gentes, &c. Mercer, of which the Jews, when their city and state were destroyed, may be said to have been brought into the valley of Jehoshaphat, as the other nations when they are at any time destroyed.

" Pet. à Fig.

which they that come from other places go down or descend, yet ver. 12. it is said to express the same thing by a word of contrary signification, come up to the valley of Jehoshaphat, as in its due place we shall (God willing) see: from which all that at present we shall observe, is, that the words here bring down, and there come up or ascend, being in themselves of contrary signification, yet used to express the same thing, are not strictly to be taken in their proper signification, as to denote different manners of coming to the place designed, but rather both of them to denote the certainty of his conveying them there, whether on his summons they shall descend or ascend thither: and they being come thither or convened there, He saith, he will plead with them there for his people, &c. נִשְׁפָּטִי עִמָּם Uenishphatti immam sham. And I will plead with them there. He will contend in justice against them, as one that hath been wronged, and requires justice against them that have done him wrong; not as an unconcerned Judge, who will upon complaint of the injured person pronounce sentence against him that hath done the wrong, but as one who is by the wrong done to the wronged person, himself injured and concerned in the matter, and will plead as in his own right. So the word נִשְׁפָּטִי Nishphatti in the form here used seems, as elsewhere, to import. It is by Others expounded in this, as in the first conjugation, שַׁפָּטִי shaphatti, * Judicio publico damnatos puniam, I will punish them being openly condemned, as if it implied his acting as a Judge, as no question he is, and will shew himself, as ver. 12. he saith, I will sit to judge all the heathen. Yet doth it in the more usual acceptation of it in that conjugation in which here it is, and by Ours and most Others rendred, for pleading with and contending in judgment, as a wronged person, seem to have ^z greater emphasis, as implying that communion and relation which is between God and his people. Such, as that he is concerned in whatsoever befalleth them, as if it were done to himself in person, and their cause were his, according to what he elsewhere saith, He that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of mine eye, Zach. ii. 8. whatsoever is done to any of his, is done to him, Mat. xxv. 45. Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? saith Christ to Paul persecuting his church, Acts ix. 4. This near relation to himself, in which he owneth and acknowledgeth those that he saith he will plead for with all their enemies, is set forth by the titles which he here gives them, of My people, and my heritage Israel. How they were by all other nations despised, and used with the greatest indignity, and contumely imaginable, as the very offscouring of the earth, and such as were by none had in regard, the next words shew; yet are they by him stiled, his people, and, his heritage, to whom he hath still peculiar regard, though whether for chastisement of their sins, or trial of their sincerity, or to make them know that the great reward they are to expect from him consists not in the plentiful and quiet enjoyment of the temporal things of this present world, but in better things, spiritual things belonging to a better life, he suffers such his children to be trampled upon by his and their enemies, and to be persecuted by them, yet is not this a sign that he hath cast them off, he yet owneth them for his people, his heritage which he will not part with, and accounteth all wrong done to them as done to him, for which he will in due time see justice executed on them that have done it. Which consideration, as it ought to keep them from fainting, and despair under their greatest sufferings, so is an argument that the wicked prevailing at any time in this world over God's people is not a sign of their being more acceptable to God, or that their doings please him, however for the present he suffer them to prevail, and prosper for reasons best known to himself, and such as shall end in good for his now afflicted and persecuted ones. It will certainly so appear in due time when he will plead with the one for the other. His calling them his heritage shews that he will not on any terms part with them, or suffer them to be lost, but will vindicate them to himself for ever. How greatly this title prevails with him for taking care of them and seeking their good, appears by what above, chap. ii. 17. is declared to them, as a motive, by which they should prevail with God in their prayer, that he would spare them, because his people, and not give them, because his heritage, to reproach.

Those to whom these titles are here bestowed are called Israel, and indeed that nation so called, as distinguished by that name from all others, that were before the times of the Gospel, was by those times also ^a peculiarly known; but since the preaching of that, both that name and those titles are made common to all true believers of it, of what nation soever, whether of the stock of Israel or others, all such being God's people, and God's heritage, as all God's Israel, even the whole church of true believers, so that the expression may equally be applied to both, for whatever God did or would do of old for Israel by virtue of that relation, for their Father's sake, with whom he had made his first covenant, the same doth he, and will still do by virtue of that relation into which in Christ they are received to him. And by Some are the words and things meant understood of the one of these, by Others of the other, or as comprehending both, and really verified of both, the cause of both, that Israel of old, and this Israel now, being alike, and equally espoused by God, and his promise of avenging such wrongs as are done to them, belonging to both, to all that ever were, or are, his people, his heritage, his Israel, his church. To this purpose are the words by ^c one expounded, Populum suum vocat electos omnes, quos etiam Israelis

* Pisc. Judicabo, judicium exercebo Pet. à Fig.

^z See Calvin.

^a Deut. iv. 20.

^b 1 Pet. v. 3.

^y אֶכְרֵם בְּמִשְׁפָּטִי, I will enter into judgment with, Kimchi.

^c Ribera.

Israelis nomine comprehendit, &c. He calls all the elect, his people, whom he also comprehends under the name of Israel. So that he speaks not only of that people, nor of their enemies alone, as the words seem literally to sound, but of all the elect as well in that as in the church of the Gentiles, and of all the persecutors of the elect. Populus enim ille figura erat Ecclesiæ, &c. For that people was a figure of the church, and the enemies thereof a type of all who persecute the saints. He alludes (saith ^d another) to the Babylonish captivity and the destruction of Judea by the Chaldeans, which was a type of such destructions, oppressions and miseries, which were by the enemies of the church brought or wrought in the faithful; so by his people Israel taking to be understood, not only or not so much those that were Israelites according to the flesh, but according to the spirit, and the true worshippers of God, who were by unbelievers and wicked people persecuted and afflicted. ^e Another, Israel which he speaks of, is not ille externus vel carnalis, sed spiritualis, &c. those that are outward or according to the flesh, but spiritual Israel of whom he speaks, chap. ii. 28, 29. and who, Gal. vi. 16. are called the Israel of God. So that it appears that those things that follow are to be taken, viz. so as that by such, as Israel according to the flesh did formerly suffer, are metaphorically signified, quæ verus Dei Israel semper patitur, such as the true Israel of God doth at any time suffer, or hath suffered. Having thus declared with whom he will plead and contend in judgment, he proceeds to instance in some particulars concerning what he will plead, or for what his quarrel is in the following words, whom they have scattered among the nations, and parted my land, &c. אשר פזרו בגוים Asher pizzeru Baggoim ^f quos (vel, quem) disperferunt, whom they have scattered, &c. Others render, because they have scattered them or him, the word Asher being sometimes so put for כי ^g quia or quod, because; (and then, them, or him being supplied,) among the nations, viz. by carrying them captives from their own into other countries. The Syriack renders the word passively, נאִלְכָּד, which have been scattered among the nations. This Kimébi thinks to be understood of what Titus and his army did, שהחריבו ארץ ישראל ופזרו יושביה בין הגוים which destroyed the land of Israel, and scattered the inhabitants thereof among the nations; but against this his interpretation are exceptions made, as first, ^h because those that Titus brought with him cannot properly be stiled all nations, as they with whom God will plead are. Secondly, ⁱ because the Jews at the time when he came against them, viz. after they had denied Christ crucified, and rejected him, could not be called his people, and heritage Israel; which exceptions will likewise lay against Abarbinel's understanding it of the Christians and Mahometans at several times invading the land of the Jews, driving them out of it, and dividing it among themselves. ^k Against those also who take by them to be meant the Assyrians and Chaldeans; and other nations nearer to the Jews, who relied on their help, may be objected that yet they were not so many as to deserve to be called all nations. Such objections seem to be taken out of the way by ^l those who think here the Babylonish captivity, and the destruction of the land of Judea to be alluded to, but so as a type of those devastations, spoils, and injurious dealings of the enemies of the church ever since; also against faithful believers, whom they have persecuted and driven into banishment, dividing their land (which God calls his own, and their goods, and possessions) among themselves. ^m Per ea quæ Israel secundum carnem passus est, metaphorice significat quæ verus Israel Dei patitur, by those things which Israel according to the flesh suffered (while they were God's peculiar people) doth he metaphorically set forth such things, which the true Israel of God; Christ's church, hath since suffered, and ⁿ doth still suffer from the enemies thereof, by such things as are here mentioned and other like, by their being scattered into several nations, by having their lands taken from them. Their lands, God calleth here, his land, so was of old peculiarly called the land of Israel, ^o because Israel was his people: so still whatsoever belonging to his, is, as they are, his also; their right, his, and by their being wronged in it, he looks on himself robbed and wronged.

By these words, and parted my land, Jerome looks on as understood their setting up several idols, and different sorts of idolatry, in that land in which he was wont alone to be worshipped, as so parting it among them; but the former way taking it for their parting it among themselves, by taking possession of it for their own use seems plainer.

The particulars for which he will plead against his enemies he proceeds to enumerate in the next verse, saying;

3: And they have cast lots for my people, and having given a boy for a harlot, and sold a girl for wine, that they might drink.

Great contempt that they had his people in, and great indignities that they did offer to them, are here described; such as they would offer to none that they had in any esteem; or made even any ordinary account of at all. For such as they had taken ^p captives; as if they were not worthy to be made choice of, they cast lots so to put them among themselves; without preferring one before another. Such a way of dividing those whom ^q they had taken,

^d Menoch. ^e Tarn. ^f Druf. ^g Quod disperferint eum per gentes. ^h Pet. à Fig. ⁱ Mercer. ^k Grot. ^l Menoch. Sa. ^m Ribera. ⁿ Or shall suffer, for we look on the words as in a prophetic style under the form of the preter tense, comprehending not only what hath been, but also what shall be done, till God shall call all to judgment. ^o Menoch. Terram populi mei, atque adeo meam. ^p Sors jacitur ubi est contemptus, Calvin. ^q Druf.

taken, appears to have been in use of old among nations: we find it alluded to in other places, as Nabum iii. 10. They cast lots for her honourable men; and Obadiab, ver. 11. and cast lots upon Jerusalem. It may be understood of so dividing, either their goods, lands, and possessions, or persons. Great indignity to their persons, yea great inhumanity towards them, the greatest imaginable is expressed in the next words, and have given a boy for a harlot. Concerning these words there are different opinions, both as to the signification in particular of the word זונה Zonab, rendred an harlot, and then as to the meaning of the words if it be so rendred. For, first, as to the signification, Some render it otherwise, viz. in the notion of meat, as if it were the same with זן zan, or מזון Mazon, from the root, זון to feed, which do so signify; so might it well enough agree with what follows, that they sold a girl for wine, a boy for victuals, and a girl for wine: but Others, and for the most part, look on it as more regularly derived from the root זנה Zanab, to commit whoredom, and to signify here, as it elsewhere usually and commonly doth, an harlot; it being no where else found in the other notion. But then, it being so taken, there is difference concerning the meaning, what shall be meant by giving for an harlot, whether to be used by that abominable sin of Sodom, as an harlot, or whether to be given as a reward to, or for, an harlot, or a price for the use of her body. Jerome and diverse following him take it in the first way, but most Others think the latter the true meaning, which likewise the following words seem to confirm, in which as it is said they sold a girl, ביינ Beyain, for wine, i. e. for the price of wine; so here most probably בזונה Bazonah, for an harlot, with the same prefix ב Be, must be, for the price of an harlot. So the Chaldee באנר זניחא Bagar Zanoyotho, for a reward of harlots: The MS. Arabick also, ويطوا الصبي في جمل, الترانية, and give a boy for the price of an harlot. To the same sense the LXX. τα παιδάρια πόρναις, and agreeably to them the printed Arabick, واعطوا الصبيان للزواني, and they gave boys for harlots: which soever of these ways be taken, بالجملة, in sum, as R. Tanchum speaks, the meaning will be, انهم اباعوا اولاد اسرائيل الذي سبوههم واصرفوا اغانهم في لذاتهم, that they sold the children of (God's people or) Israel whom they took captives, and spent the price of them on their pleasures, and beastly lusts, which argued certainly the greatest contempt that they could have of them, and the greatest indignity that they could shew to any, while they had them in no more esteem than to sell them for such vile base uses, as for maintaining their whoring and drinking, and at so low a rate as " Some think for no more than would serve for one drinking-bout. If histories do not afford particular instances of such usage, whether of God's people Israel of old, or Christians since, yet that such hath been, or shall be known among them; these words whether referred to what had been, or should be, are a certain proof.

4. Yea, and what have ye to do with me, O Tyre, and Zidon, and all the coasts of Palestine? will ye render me a recompence? and if ye recompence me, swiftly and speedily will I return your recompence upon your own head.

Having in the foregoing words, ver. 2. threatned to plead with all nations for his people, to call them in question for such injuries as they had done unto his heritage, he here more particularly, and by name expresseth some of them, against whom he will prosecute that his quarrel, viz. Tyre and Zidon and all the coasts of Palestine; his plea against them he begins with an interrogation, shewing that what wrong they had done, they had done altogether without cause, and that therefore they deserved that he should deal with them with such severity as he threatens to do. The people named are Tyre and Zidon, and all the coasts of Palestine, i. e. the inhabitants of these places, which (as appears by what is often mentioned of them in the scriptures) were nigh or bordering on the land of Israel. For a full explication of these words here following, ver. 5, 6, 7, 8. would be required the history of what was by those people done to the Jews, while they were God's Israel, and of what also afterwards befel them agreeable to what is here said should by God be done to them. Having not any such any where else expressly set down, it is left to us to look into the literal meaning of the Prophet's words in the present place, wherein we have a description of both: both of what they did, and of what they should suffer, whether it hath been already executed wholly on them, or remaining yet in whole or part to be executed on them, concerning which, for want of such history, there is great difference betwixt Expositors. For such expositions therefore of the words, that we may the better judge of the matter, it will be convenient to look into them, and for that end to take them in order, וגם מה אתם לי צר וצידון Vegam mah attem li Tzor vetzidon. Vegam, yea, and literally, and also, though the Vulgar Latin render it verum: but, this particle shews that while other remoter nations are threatned, who brought a general destruction on God's people, these also, though they were not as chief in power among, yet instead of being friends and helpers as neighbours to them, had yet done great mischief to them according to their power, and therefore, when God will on those others execute judgment, shall not escape, but be also called in question in particular for what they had done, and be accordingly rewarded for it, as having without any cause done, and been

* Mercer.
" Tarnov.

* The famous Grammarian Abu Walid thinks it conveniently so rendred.

* R: Tanchum.

been guilty of great injury in it to God himself. So plainly saith he, what have you to do with me? לי, li, with me, taking as done to himself what was done to his people. So the MS. Arabick in his rendring gives the meaning, ואיצא איש כאן לכם מע אמתי אנתם, ואי אהל צור וצידא, and also what was to you (or what had you to do) with my nation (or people) O ye people (or inhabitants) of Tyre and Zidon. In the same manner appears likewise R. David Kimchi to have understood it in his expounding it, מה לי ולכם, &c. what is to me and you, (or what have (or had) you to do with me) שבאתם לארצי, &c. that you came into my land, for you being my neighbours, ought to have done good to my people, but ye have not so done, but when ye saw that the kings of the nations came upon them, ye joined with them in spoiling: by which it appears, that what they are said to have had to do with God, is that which they did to, or with his people, whom what concerns he looks on himself as concerned in, as we have already seen on ver. 2. and that is it which by most is looked on as the import of the word לי, with me, in this place: the Chaldee gives somewhat a different meaning of the words by his rendring ואף מא אחון חשיבון קרמי, and also of what esteem are you before me (or with me;) with which the Syriack also agrees, ܐܢܬܡ ܕܡܐ ܐܚܘܢ ܚܫܝܒܝܢ ܩܪܡܝܐ, cujus momenti estis apud me, Tyre & Sidon, &c. The LXX. also may be looked on as so taking the meaning in such copies as read καὶ τί ὑμεῖς ἐμοί, which the printed Arabick also following hath, فانذا انتم لي, and what are you to me? (though other copies, agreeably to the more ordinary exposition, have τί ἐμοί καὶ ὑμῖν (as Cyril reads it) quid mihi & vobis?) According to this way of the Chaldee, and those that agree with it, the words by way of question will be an upbraiding of their folly in that they should think themselves able to stand out against God, as if he were not able to avenge on them that despight done to him in injuring his people. But in the other way, which seems the more probable, may they well be an expostulation with them for the wrong that they without cause had done to his people, and in them to him, who espouseth their cause as his own: why, or for what cause, have ye thus dealt with me, O Tyre and Zidon, and all the coasts of Palestine? Who Tyre and Zidon, or the inhabitants thereof, if the names be properly taken, were, is, as we said, manifest from what we read of them often in the scripture. As for the words rendred all the coasts of Palestine, being in the Hebrew, גלילות, vecol geliloth Pelehet, we find them differently interpreted; Some taking Geliloth as a proper name of a place also, viz. of Galilee; so the LXX. rendring, καὶ πᾶσα Γαλιλαία ἀλλοφύλων, and all Galilee of foreigners; and the printed Arabick following them, وكل جليل القبايل الغريبة, and all Galilee of strange nations. The Syriack also, ܐܠܠܗܐ ܕܐܡܝܢܐ

ܐܠܠܗܐ ܕܐܡܝܢܐ, and all Galilee of Palestine: but there being no example of the word's, גלילות, Geliloth, being in the plural form so used for a proper name, Others (all I think both ancient and modern) take it as an appellative signifying, coasts, bounds, or confines. So anciently the Chaldee, rendring it, תחומי פלשתאי, all the bounds (or coasts) of the Philistines. The Manuscript Arabick, accordingly renders, جميع نواحي فلسطين, all the parts (or coasts) of Palestine. So likewise Abu Walid and R. Tanchum observe the word here to signify, viz. اغوار, coasts, confines. And so the Latin, though putting the singular number for the plural, terminus; and that is by all more modern Interpreters generally followed, as well as by Ours. In the other word Palestine, the Greek (as the printed Arabick following them) go again in a contrary way from what Others do, by not taking it as a proper name, but translating it as we have seen, foreigners, or strange nations. They do indeed often, where the name of Palestine or Philistine occurs, so render it, but surely as it is the proper name of a country well known, so is it here more properly taken, and the other word Geliloth in that sense which we have seen, and so by Ours and Others both well translated, the coasts of Palestine; and so all named denote countries and people then bordering on the Jews, and exercising cruelty and inhumanity towards them. The words so taken will seem to be a threat particularly to the inhabitants of those places; yet are by Some, who take under the names of those places to be comprehended yet others besides them, as from their like dealing, deserving to be called by, or included under, their name; viz. any other dealing so with God's church and people, as they did anciently with the Jews, whilst they were more particularly so. So say ^γ Some, that the Prophet under these names comprehends all wicked people, as under the name of Jews all true believers, all God's elect, of whatsoever nation. Others that he names those for example sake, that by what is said shall befall the inhabitants of those places, who persecuted the faithful servants of God under the Old Testament, may be understood what shall befall other nations, who at any time shall be enemies to God and his people. To this purpose Dr. Stokes paraphraseth the words, Ye that are as great and close adversaries to the Christians as ever the Tyrians and Sidonians were to the Jews: So ^α Others take them to be used, as exemplum sive typus hostium domesticorum Ecclesiae, a pattern or type of enemies to the church at home, who for some reasons induced do for a time pietatis studium simulare, make a shew of friendship to it, and piety, yet upon occasion shew forth, latens animi venenum, the poison that laid hid in their heart. Whom by these names here to understand; or whom under them to comprehend, we shall the better judge by seeing what it is which he expostulates with them for, and how

^γ So in the Polyglott.^α See Grotius here and on Mat. 8. 26.^γ See Christ. à Castro.^α Gualterus.

he will deal with them for it, which in the following words he declares, saying, הַנְטוּר אַתָּם מְשַׁלְמִים עָלַי, &c. Will ye render me a recompence? and if you recompense me, swiftly and speedily will I return your recompence upon your own head. In which words there may seem to be some obscurity, for removing of which we may observe, as to the word נְטוּר Gemul, rendred a recompence, that it hath the signification either of good or bad, done by way of recompence to any, and so the verb likewise, from which we have here the participle, וְאִם נְטוּרִים אַתָּם, rendred, and if ye recompense either to do good or bad; but here they are taken in the notion of bad. Again, that by these words is signified both what is done to any in recompence of what was by them done, and also what is done first to them without occasion given by any thing that they had before done; and both these significations seem to have here respect had to, as, first, in his saying, הַנְטוּר אַתָּם מְשַׁלְמִים לִי baggemul attem Mesballemim li, will you (or do you) render me a recompence? the noun joined with a word signifying rendring, seems to require that it be taken for הַשְׁבַּת נְטוּר the rendring of a recompence for something done, but in the second place being put by itself, וְאִם נְטוּרִים אַתָּם עָלַי, which Ours render, and if you recompense me, to signify הַתְּחִלַּת הָרָעָה the beginning of doing evil (or doing in the first place) so Kimchi takes it, and so the meaning of both clauses to be, “What is the matter that ye do evil to me? Do ye think to be revenged on me, because I have done evil to you? What did I evil to you? If you say that you now do, of your own accord, evil to me (for he that doth evil to Israel, his intention is to do the evil to me, they being my sons) then will I speedily return your recompence on your own head.” So is his exposition of the words here, to which agrees what he ^a elsewhere speaks of the signification of the root נְטוּר. In much the same manner doth Abarbinel also expound, except he puts a double interrogation in them thus, Have I dealt ill with you (or done evil to you) that you come to render my recompence to me? or although you have not received ill from me, do you begin to do it to me? This seems a more perspicuous meaning, and is by ^b Several (I think, with good reason) preferred. So Castalio in his translation briefly expresseth it, utrum mibi vos refertis, an potius confertis? do you repay to me, or confer on me? or as ^c Others, utrum cogitatis mibi referre, an inferre injuriam? do ye think to recompense or to do me injury? yet do Ours in both places retain the same notion of recompence, will ye render me a recompence? and if ye recompense me: as if what they did were in both places referred to something that God (or his people) had before done to them, and for which they pretended to revenge themselves; so that in the first place there is a question asked, whether they pretend any such thing, and in the second, a declaration of what, if they pretend any such thing, he will do to them; without putting an interrogation after it in the second place (as by taking it in different significations it is done) but taking the particle אִם Im, if, as conditional, or by way of supposition, and so inferring what follows, that if, or supposing they pretended to do what he hath said, he would do then what he farther saith; and in that way do ^d several Others also translate the words. So the Chaldee, and the Vulgar Latin seem to express it, rendring, Et si ulciscimini vos contra me, cito velociter reddam vicissitudinem vobis supra caput vestrum. And if you do revenge against me, I will soon render you quickly recompence upon your head. But there are ^e those who think that in this second place is required an interrogation, and by וְאִם, and if, to be understood, An? or even by those who render it by si, if, and that whether taking Gomelim in the notion of recompensing, or of first doing. So Mercer, וְאִם, veim, and if, interrogative intelligo, I understand interrogatively; and Gamul, he renders by inferre, to do wrong. So Drusius, Hic si sumitur pro an, If is used for, Or whether, and to recompense for, injuriam inferre, to do wrong to. Grotius likewise as to the particle si, if, saith it is put for an, or else whether? as he saith it is often used in the Vulgar Latin: so that it may continue an interrogation, and the sense be, An banc vicem mibi rependitis, & hoc mibi redditis? Do you return me this recompence, and do you thus repay me? nempe pro tot in vos collatis beneficiis, to wit, for so many benefits conferred on you; but in this differing from the other, that he takes the word נְטוּרִים, Gomelim, in the notion of recompensing or repaying for what was done to them, and that of good, not of evil, as Others take it. This seems to agree with that of R. Solomon, who understands it of their recompensing them for those twenty cities, which Solomon gave to the King of Tyrus. The LXX. of old seem to have led the way, who read so the particle by an interrogation in the second place, and take the following word in the notion of recompence, and so, as we have seen, distinguish the clauses, rendring, ἢ μνησικαχεῖς ἐμὲς ἐπ' ἐμοί; which the printed Arabick literally expresseth, أَوْ ذَكَرْتُمْ, or do you remember (or retain in your heart) evil against me? Whereas the MS. Arabick doth otherwise as to both, and join the words in one clause with the following, (as Others whom we have before seen do) rendring them with the former words, הֲלֹא מְכַפְּרָה אַתָּם מְכַפְּרִין לִי וְאִם אַתָּם אֹל יִתְמוּנִי אֶלְקִיחַ כְּפִיף סָרְעָה אֶרֶץ מְכַפְּרָתְכֶם, Do ye render me a recompence, and if ye do evil in the first place to me, swiftly and speedily will I return your recompence on your heads. The Syriack renders, ܐܬܝܢ ܡܚܝܬܝܢ ܡܚܝܬܝܢ ܕܡܚܝܬܝܢ ܕܡܚܝܬܝܢ, Do you render me a recompence? ܐܬܝܢ ܡܚܝܬܝܢ ܡܚܝܬܝܢ ܕܡܚܝܬܝܢ, which the Latin Interpreter in the

Polyglott

^a Lib. Radicum. ^b Mercer, Cast. Druf. Lively. ^c Drusius and Mr. Lively. ^d Tig. Pagn. Munst.

The Arab. MS. likewise giveth those distinct notions. ^e Drusius.

Polyglott Bible renders, quod si beneficiis me cumulatis. But if ye heap up benefits on me, which I think may rather be rendred, but if ye cast (or confer on me) recompences due to me, the word, גמל, Chublo, as well, or better signifying recompence, or, חقوق واجبة, dues, that ought to be rendred, as on them benefits.

In all these interpretations hitherto mentioned, respect, we see, is had of the more usual signification of the root גמל Gamal, viz. of repaying, or returning recompence to any, on some occasion by them before given, or pretended, that notion being by Some given to it in one of the clauses, by Others in both. But that great Grammarian Abu Walid is of another opinion, who thinks that in both places yet mentioned, it is to be taken in that other notion of doing first, without provocation or occasion before given. And left in the first place it might seem restrained to the signification of recompence, by having משלמים Meshallemim, which ordinarily signifies, to repay, joined with it, he observes that root also to signify to give or do first, as well as to repay. His words in his explication of the root שלם shalem are, וקד חכון הוה אללנה לגיר אלמכפאה בר ללאילא כמא כאנת לגנה גמול פי הדין אלמענין אינא, i. e. This word is used also to signify not only to repay, but to do in the first place, as likewise the word Gamul is in both these significations used; and for example in both he citeth these words here, הגמול אתם משלמים עלי ואם גמלים אתם עלי. In which he saith of the word, from the root גמל, Gamal, in both places, both haggemul and Gomelim, as likewise of משלמים Meshallemim, that both لا يكون الا ابتداء do not denote other than a beginning, and that by both is signified ايلآ وايتداء بالفعول, a doing in the first place, and beginning to act. With him agreeth in this R. Tanchum, whose words likewise, because neither book is printed, we shall set down, האתין אללנתין אעני גמל ושלם קד יכונאן במעני אללאילא איתדא ובמעני אלמכפאה עלי מא תקדם פקולה הגמול אתם משלמים עלי ואם גומלים מן אלמעני אלאל וקולה אשיב גמולכם מן אלמעני אלתאני והוא אלאתפהאם מנה תע עלי סביל אלתהדיד, i. e. These two words, viz. Gamul and Shilleim, are sometimes in the signification of doing a thing first, sometimes in the signification of recompensing for what went before. His saying therefore, Haggemul attem Meshallemim alai veim gomelim attem alai, are of the first signification, but what he saith in the next words Ashib gemulcem of the second, viz. of recompence, and the interrogation from God is by way of threat. Of the root גמל Gamal doth Abu Walid likewise observe, that it denotes a doing in the first place, or beginning in doing, either באלאחסאן או באלאסאה, in doing good or evil. So that, according to him, we might think the words here to denote, Do ye of your own accord, or without provocation or occasion given, do injurious things to me? were it not that R. Tanchum notes ^f elsewhere, that in this signification of doing first לא יכון אלא ליר it is not used but ^g of good, which yet, if there be not some mistake in his words, I do not well understand how it can be said, inasmuch as among the examples brought for proof of that signification of the word, for doing in the first place, there are some in which it is apparently spoken of doing evil; as for instance, that of Gen. l. 15. והשב ישיב לנו את כל הרעה אשר גמלנו אותו, and will certainly requite us all the evil which we did unto him. There is גמל Gamal certainly spoken, as of doing in the first place, so of doing evil, and therefore do both Abu Walid, who was before him, and whom he in many things follows, as also Kimchi expressly say, that the word doth denote a beginning to do, or doing first, as well in doing ill as in doing good; and so are ^h Abu Walid's words, having given some examples, as namely that which we have cited and others, הוה כלל אולא ואיתדא, באלאחסאן או באלאסאה, all these signify to do first, and to begin either in doing good or doing evil. ⁱ Kimchi also, that it signifies התחלת הטובה או הרעה, a first doing, either good or evil. And so therefore, according to them, may it here be understood of doing ill or injury, where they had not received any. The observing of this, and reciting of the several rendrings of these words, to which perhaps more may be added, and the different distinction of them, by putting either once or twice an interrogation, shews that they are capable, according to the letter, of different interpretations, but the scope is still the same, viz. that they are an expostulation from God with them, concerning injuries by them done to his people, which he looks on as in them done to himself, and for which he threatens in the next words to deal with them according to their deserts, saying, קל מהרה גמלכם Kal meberab Gemulcem, your recompence, upon your own head. The word גמול Gemul here repeated, is by all agreed on to be in the signification of recompensing, or repaying them for, or returning on them what they had done; his saying that he would do it swiftly and speedily, may denote, either with great celerity, whensoever and as soon as he pleaseth, they not being able to stop or hinder him, nor ^k having time to find out way to prevent it. Or that ^l he is such, or of such power, who can as soon as, or whensoever he pleaseth, without any stop or hindrance, so do; in that sense seem to take it such who look on the word קל Kal as a noun. So Munster, leve est ut velociter reddam retributionem vestram, &c. The Tig. Facile est ut ego, &c. velociter rependam, &c. It is a light or easy thing to me that I should, &c. Vatablus making it an epithet of God festinus cum

^f In his Lexicon Morshed in גמל. ^g And accordingly he seems to give the meaning of the words here, These doings which you do unto me first, i. e. פעלם מתקדמא as a preceding beneficence. I will speedily recompense you. ^h In the root גמל. ⁱ In Rad. and Comment. on the place. ^k Ar. Mont. ^l Brenn.

cum celeritate, Calv. velox, &c. and so Piscat. levis festinatione, being light or swift with speed. These take it all as a noun adjective, yet with difference between themselves, the former making it as a description of the action, the latter as an epithet of the agent, with whom the MS. Arabick seems to agree rendering כפפ סרעא, Being light speedily. But I suppose, though as to the sense it will be much one, yet that as to the literal construction they do better, who take that first word קל Kal, as well as the following word מרהר Meherab, for an adverb, that so two words of like signification joined may give a greater emphasis to, and assurance of what is said shall be done; so is it taken by Ours who (as we see) render it, swiftly, in which they agree with many Others both ancient and modern in their several languages. For so sounds the Chaldee קליל Kalil (which is much the same in letter with the Hebrew.) The LXX. rendering it εἰς, to which I suppose the printed Arabick بدة Bebeddat may well answer, though the Latin Translator render it cum ira, with anger, (it might rather perhaps be rendered cum impetu or celeritate, with present force.) The Syriack, بصرى, which the Latin renders Brevi shortly, the ancient Latin cito, and to the same purpose among modern Translators many in several languages; so as that between it and the following מרהר Meherab, both being adverbially taken, there is little or no difference in signification, only that one adds (as we said) emphasis or confirmation to the other, so that Some think it sufficient to express them by one word put in the superlative degree, ^m velocissime most swiftly (or most speedily) which seems to import as much as the two words both of the same signification repeated do require; whether put without a conjunction between them as they are in the original, Kal Meherab, and some of the translations put, as in the Vulgar, cito, velociter, or with one, for making the language plainer and smoother, as in Ours and ⁿ Others, swiftly and speedily. Abarbinel thinks by this expression to be meant that the punishment of Tyre and Sidon (those places being properly and precisely taken) should not be deferred to be, בסוף הגלות, at the end of the captivity of the Jews, as that of other nations should, but be sooner; and that which is here threatened, was made good on them, when Alexander the great did under the time of the second temple destroy them. How or when Others think it was to be fulfilled, will after appear. He threatens that he will so in his due time return upon them, in full measure, and effectual manner, that which shall appear to be a just recompence for their evil behaviour towards him in their dealing as they did with his people, and such things as belonged to him and his name was called upon, or were called his and by his name. Their doings to have been evil, and such as he was highly provoked by, as it is in these former words, or expostulation, in general intimated, so more particularly what they were, is in those that follow expressed.

5. Because ye have taken my silver and my gold, and have carried into your temples my goodly pleasant things.

In determining what he means here by calling it my silver and my gold, and my goodly precious things, is between Expositors some difference. Among the Jews Aben Ezra expounds it, such as the Kings of Judab had given them, either שומר או לפדיון השבויים for a gift (or present) or for the redemption of captives. Whom Drusius seems to express, saying, aurum populi mei, quod viri pro redemptionis pretio solverent, aut muneris loco inferrent ad vos. Kimchi takes the silver and gold which the Israelites had, to be so called and owned by God as his, because he gave it to them. So likewise Abarbinel; so that in taking it from them, they robbed him, or took away what was his; his was the silver, his the gold of all Israel, as by him given to them, so that he might still say of it, לי הכסף ולי הזהב כל ישראל, mine is the silver, mine the gold of all Israel.

This way take ^o Several also among christian Expositors. Others both ancient and modern by it understand ^p that silver and gold, and precious vessels which were in the temple dedicated to God, and so his. Grotius thinks not these but the former to be meant, non quæ templi erant, not such precious things which belonged to the temple, and which were carried away to Babylon by the Chaldeans, but quæ populi erant, such as were the peoples goods, and by the Chaldeans having taken and spoiled the city sold to their neighbours. But I see no reason why both may not be understood and looked on as comprehended, ^q Argentum populi mei, vel argentum templi mei, either the silver, &c. of my people or of my temple, or both of my people and of my temple. So seems to be Calvin's mind, that there is no doubt that they did rob and spoil the people of their good, and that for that they were guilty, and for that are taxed; but in a more especial manner for their taking away sacra Templi vasa, the holy vessels of the temple. The silver and gold and desirable precious things of his people were indeed his, and it was just reason that he should call to account for it those that took them away, they in so doing, doing manifestly wrong to him, who owned both the possessors, and what in that kind they possessed, but more apparent wrong was certainly done to him, in taking away such things as none was looked on as owner of but himself, viz. the treasures and ornaments of his peculiar house, separated and consecrated to him, which though he had not need of, nor could be properly said to have pleasure in or for any good that he reaped thereby, yet as tokens of his peoples gratitude, and honour, and obedience by them shewed to ⁿ So the LXX. and Syriack.

^m Jun. Trem. Cyril, Tarnov.

^o Mercer, Pet. à Fig. Grotius, Dr. Stokes, &c.

^p Jerom.

^q Piscat.

to him, he did delight in and accept of, as what was of his own by them given to him. The robbing of him of those things was a great injury in itself, but much more yet heightened by the use that they put them to in carrying them into their own temples לְהִיכֶלֶבֶם lebeicelebem; the word signifies either [†] palaces or temples, and is so rendred by Some, palaces, but the rendring it temples seems to have more of emphasis in it, as greatly aggravating their crime, in that they did not only take away those things from God and convert them to their own private use, but to the greater dishonour and contempt of God, as it were in triumph over him, place them openly in the temples of their idols, as if they had gotten the victory over God. Those of Tyre and Sidon, and the coasts of Palestine being said to have done this, seems to intimate, that they by those names called, ^{*} were assisting to the Chaldeans and partakers with them in spoiling the city of Jerusalem and the temple, and for such they are in the first place taxed; and in the next words they are farther taxed for wrong done to them in respect to their persons.

6. The children also of Judah and the children of Jerusalem have ye sold unto the Grecians, that ye might remove them far from their border.

By what is said that they sold the children of Judah and of Jerusalem, to the Grecians, Kimchi expounds so as either to be meant of such young children as they stole from the Jews, while they were yet in their own country, or of such as coming and siding with their enemies, when they carried them captive, they took and got into their hands, and whether meant of one or the other, sold unto the Grecians who lived a great way from the land of Israel, that so they might not return again to their country, which is the same that Aben Ezra before him in briefer words expressed, שְׁלַקְתָּם בְּמִלְחָמָה אוֹ בְּנִיבָה, whom ye took in war, or by theft. Some observe that by saying the children of Judah and the children of Jerusalem, are not necessarily meant young children only, [†] but that it may be understood of such as were of riper age also, any of the inhabitants of Judah or citizens of Jerusalem, called the children thereof, and so Castalio renders Judæos & Hierosolymitanos, Jews and Jerusalemites; as likewise in the next place, that which literally sounds the sons of the Grecians; is by Ours and several Others rendred simply, the Grecians. For the words in the Hebrew are לְבָנֵי הַיָּוֹנִים libne bayevanim, and so accordingly by the [‡] ancient Translators according to the letter rendred, as likewise by several more modern, the sons of the Grecians, as Ours also note in the Margin, though in the Text putting what is thereby meant, viz. not children in respect of their age, but people of such a nation, and by the name Javanim here put, are particularly denoted the Grecians, so called from their father Javan the son of Japhet, Gen. x. 2. from whom they are called in their own tongue Jones; yet is it by Some observed, that that name may be also so taken as not only to design them in particular, but so as to comprehend other Gentile nations also, they being of great note among them, and their language used by them, in that large acception, which St. Paul takes that name, when in his distinction of people into Jew and Greek, he seems under it, to comprehend all nations that could not be called Jews. So Rom. i. 16. ii. 9, 10. iii. 9. and 29. x. 10, 12. Gal. iii. 28. Coloss. iii. 11. Whether by Grecians here he mean such as were properly called so (between whom and the people of Tyrus here named ^{*} appears to have been commerce of old, as in trading for other things, so also for the persons of men, Ezek. xxvii. 13.) or others to whom that name was communicated; such it appears are understood as were far remote from Judeab, and from which they should not probably return thither, by saying, that ye might remove them far from their border, that is, their own country and the limits thereof.

God having thus described the injurious dealings of Tyre and Sidon, and those of the coasts of Palestine, or of such as were under those names comprehended, towards his people, he subjoins in the two next verses a description of what he himself will, thereby provoked, do, both for his people and to his and their enemies. First, as for what he will do for his people, he saith,

7. Behold, I will raise them out of the place whither ye have sold them, [then as for what he will do to or against their enemies.] I will return your recompence upon your head.

8. And I will sell your sons and your daughters into the hand of the children of Judah, and they shall sell them to the Sabeans, to a people far off: for the Lord hath spoken it.

Of which words according to the letter, Abarbinel gives this plain explication, I will restore them, and cause them to return from the place whither you sold them, and by their hand will return your recompence on your own head, for that your sons and daughters shall be sold by them to the Sabeans, inasmuch as they are a nation far remote from you. By his saying, וְהִנֵּנִי מֵעִירָם, &c. Behold, I will raise them out of the place, though the word ^{*} properly seem to signify to raise them from sleep or the like, yet may also and here appears to import, as much as [†] reduces facio, to cause to return those that seemed to be quite lost and forgotten (like men asleep or dead, not appearing among men) he will yet raise up again, and cause to appear in their countries, from which they had been so far and so long removed. So the Chaldee וְהִנֵּנִי מֵעִירָם

וְהִנֵּנִי

[†] Some copies of the LXX. read δίκας, Others νέμω.
Syr. Arab. Vulg. Lat. [‡] Grot. ^{*} Tarnov. [†] Druf.

^{*} Drufius.

[†] Drufius, Tarn.

[‡] Chald. LXX.

אֲנִי מִתִּי לְהוֹן בְּנֵי־אֵלֶיךָ, I will bring them publickly. In his saying, I will sell your sons, &c. it is manifest that the word selling is not taken in its proper signification of passing over right to any thing for a price taken for it; this cannot be spoken of God, but so as to denote the giving over a thing to any, so as that he shall have just right to it and over it, and power to dispose of it, as over a thing which he had bought with his money. In this sense is the word selling also ² elsewhere used. So is God said to have sold the Israelites into the hands of their enemies, Judges ii. 14. iii. 8. iv. 2. and x. 7. such a deliverance the Psalmist xlii. 12. calls, God's selling his people בְּלֹא הוֹן sine pretio, without price (as the Vulgar renders it) or as Ours, for nought, or as in the Margin, without riches. In the foregoing words, The children of Judah, &c. have ye sold unto the Grecians, and those that follow, and they shall sell them to the Sabeans, it is plain that it is taken for selling for a price; but here spoken of God's dealing, it is not so, but meant of his giving or delivering up into their hands and power, so Kimchi expounds it אֲמָסְרָם בְּיָדָם, I will deliver them into their hand. The not observing this use of the word, Drusus thinks to have been occasion to Some of rendring the words, בְּיַד בְּנֵי יְהוּדָה, Beyad Beni Jebudah, opera filiorum Judæ, by the means of the children of Judah, of whom his censure is that male exponunt, they do ill expound it. So indeed doth Castalio render it; so Vatablus expounds it, and so Mercer also, yea that expression is ancienter. For so the MS. Arabick appears to have taken it, rendring עָלֵי יַד בְּנֵי יְהוּדָה, alai yad bani yehudah, by the hand of the children of Judah, nor doth that of the Vulgar Latin, in manibus filiorum Judah, differ, though the Doway render it, into the hands of the children of Judah. That בְּיַד beyad may indifferently signify either by the hand, or into the hand, there is no doubt, nor do I see, though the construction be different, what great difference there will be in the meaning; what will selling them by their hand be, but giving them up into their hand to sell them, or dispose of them, as they list?

As to the next words, And they shall sell them to the Sabeans, to a people far off; the word rendred Sabeans being in the Hebrew שְׁבָאִים Shebaim, there is difference from of old among Interpreters. The LXX. render them, καὶ ἀποδώσουσιν αὐτοὺς εἰς ἀρχαλαζείαν, &c. and they shall sell them into captivity to a nation far distant, &c. So the printed Arabick following them, وَيَسْلُونَهُم لِّلْأُمَّةِ الْبَعِيدَةِ, and they shall deliver them up for captives to a nation that is far off, upon what grounds they went in so rendring the word is apparent, viz. because the word שְׁבָא Shabah, whence they look on this as a noun derived, signifies in the Hebrew, as likewise in the Chaldee, Syriack, and Arabick, to make or lead captive, and so this to denote captivities or captives, as Jerome thinks they should rather have rendred, and so we see the Arabick to render. But no such form of a noun appellative elsewhere occurring; Others generally take it here as a proper name of a people, or nation so called, viz. Sabeans, as also their country which they inhabited, viz. Seba, or Sabah, so the other Greek Versions τοῖς σάβαιν, or τοῖς σαβαίοις; the Syriack, ܫܒܐ; the Vulgar Latin Sabais, as generally all more modern translations; the MS. Arabick لَهْلِي يَمَانَ Leahil yaman, to the people of Yaman, which is an explication of what people he thinks meant by those, who are called or here meant by Sabeans, viz. the inhabitants of Yaman, or Arabia felix, and not any others, who, or their country, might be called by the like name, as it appears Others have thought to be here meant, as Jerome, who thinks them to have been a people trans Indiam, beyond India, of whom he thinks likewise the Queen of Sheba, who came to hear the wisdom of Solomon, to have been, 1 Kings x. and whence he saith that frankincense also comes. But Drusus taxeth him, as being in this in an error, which he conceiveth to have been occasioned, by his not distinguishing betwixt שְׁבָא sheba with Schin sh, and סָבָא Sabah with Samech S. which are distinct names of different persons (who might be the fathers of different nations) and countries (which perhaps were from them called, as Psalms lxxii. 10. מְלֶכֶת שְׁבָא וּסְבָא. The Kings of Sheba and Seba; wherever Seba be placed, whether in Aethiopia, or Arabia Chusæa, of Sheba, it is more than ^c probable, and by most agreed, that it is in Arabia felix, and generally agreed that thence frankincense is brought, and most probable that thence the Queen of Sheba came, whom our Saviour, Mat. xii. 42. and Luke xi. 31. calls the Queen of the ^d South, which seems the interpretation of Yaman, and saith, she came from the utmost parts of the earth, as her country being situate on the utmost shore of Arabia might be called; as the inhabitants are here called a people ^e far off, certainly if situate in that part of Arabia, they were so far remote from Tyre and Sidon, and the coasts of Palestine, as that they might be well so called, although the words are capable of another interpretation, which will take away scruple concerning that; which is, that they shall sell them to the Sabeans, ^f who shall carry them away and sell them to nations very far off, but there is no need of any such scruple. These things being observed, as the literal interpretation of the words in these five last verses, there is no great difficulty; but as to the farther meaning of them, and how, and when, and what is said, should be fulfilled, there is much, it being added, for the Lord hath spoken it, i. e. certainly ^g determined it: there is no doubt but certainly it should in its due time, and in due manner be fulfilled: but no history plainly and certainly declaring when and ² Druf. ^a Or Pagn. in manu. ^b Theodot. ^c Mercer seems to think otherwise. ^d Kimchi saith of them, the Sabeans are the sons of Saba, and lye east and south of Israel, and Tyre, and Sidon, and Palestine. ^e See Jer. vi. 20. ^f Drusus. ^g Abarbinel.

and how it was so, hath made Expositors much to vary, Some adhering to a literal interpretation, Others preferring a figurative, which the words seem so much to incline to, that Calvin saith, stultum esset ac puerile, nimis insistere in ipsa litera, it would be a foolish and childish thing too precisely to insist on the bare letter; although he will not say that the Prophet speaks allegorically, and himself abstains from such expositions, as not having in them any thing that is firm and solid, yet he saith, aliquam figuram subesse in his verbis, that there is counted some figurative meaning in these words, viz. that the Tyrians and Sidonians shall be sold and sent up and down into far remote countries, Idque fiet in gratiam electi populi & ecclesie, ac si Judaei ipsi essent venditores, And that shall be done for the sake of God's elect people and church, as if the Jews themselves were the sellers. From such ambiguity or latent meaning, which he observes to be in the word, seems it to be also, that, as Ribera notes concerning the fulfilling of what is here said, Divinant expositores & multa dicunt, sed quæ nequeant comprobare, Expositors go by conjecture, and say many things, but such as they cannot make good. That which he follows is (having understood by the Jews all God's elect people) to understand by those of Tyre and Sidon and the coasts of Palestine, all those nations that bordered on the Christians of old, from whom they received much damage, and the time when this recompence here threatned should be to them, the day of the last judgment, and that then he will raise up those of his saints, whom they had sold to foreigners, and who had died in strange countries, to life again, that so they should be present at the judgment, and see what punishment he would inflict on those their enemies, by selling whom he thinks meant delivering them up to the saints, who sitting on thrones with him to judge the wicked, shall deliver them up to eternal captivity. By the Sabeans, to whom it is said they shall sell them, he thinks meant the devils, to whom they shall be delivered up to be tormented. The same way of exposition do Others also follow, who both goⁱ before and follow him^k, and agree with him in it: yet though the words may be so applied, is it, I think, among those which cannot be easily proved to have been the only or primary meaning of them, when, and as, spoken by the Prophet. We may well look for something more literal in them, although when and how it was ever put, or to be put in execution, for want of plainer description of the history of it in scripture, will be hard to determine.

Among the Jews Kimchi seeming to think they are literally to be understood, yet in assigning the time when what is said, should be actually performed, he doth it so as to make all things uncertain and ambiguous, and indeed so as to signify nothing. That which is said, Behold I will raise them out of the place whither ye have sold them, he expounds by, כִּי עוֹד יָשׁוּבוּ לְאֶרְצָם, &c. For they shall yet return to their own land; although the place of their captivity be far off, they shall return into their own land, הֵם אוֹ בְנֵיהֶם, either they or their children, or הֵם וְגַם בְּנֵיהֶם, both they and their children, הֵם בְּתַרְיֵית הַמָּתִים, they at the resurrection of the dead, and their children, שִׁדְּיוֹ בְּיוֹם הַיְשׁוּעָה, which shall be in the time of salvation. By his words it appears to be his opinion, that what is said should, according to the literal meaning of the words, be fulfilled, but that it is not yet fulfilled, nor shall be till the resurrection of the dead, and the times of the Messiah, or Christ, who shall bring salvation to the Jews, and is not yet come. How his opinion agrees with what other Jews think, it will not concern us to enquire: that which we shall observe is, that it is not agreeable with the verity of the christian religion, by which we are assured that Christ is already come to bring salvation to his people, and that his second coming, at which the dead shall be raised, and both quick and dead be judged by him, is not a time of such transactions as we here mentioned, of buying and selling themselves from one nation to another, and trafficking for worldly matters, when the earth, and the works that are therein shall be burnt up, when the wicked shall go into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal, Mat. xxv. 46. so that if ought of what is here understood, be to be expected to be then done, it cannot be literally to be understood. As to such a literal meaning Abarbinel speaks more intelligibly, saying, that it was done in the time of the second temple, when Alexander the Great destroyed those places, viz. Tyre and Sidon. And there are among^m Christian Expositors who do in this way agree with him. As for what is said, that the children of Judah and of Jerusalem, whom they had sold unto the Grecians, &c. he would raise them out of the place whither they had sold them, Grotius thinks to be made good under Alexander the Great and his successors, who in favour of the Jewish nation, restored to liberty many Jews who were captives, or in servitude in Greece; and as for what he threatens to those of Tyre and Sidon, that he would sell their sons and daughters into the hand of the children of Judah, and they should sell them to the Sabeans, he thinks to have had its effect, when the same Alexander took Gaza, Sidon and Tyre. Others think the fulfilling of these things to be referred to the times ofⁿ Cyrus, and the^o Maccabees. Others, that though there be no plain history which describes the compleating of them, yet that without doubt all was fulfilled as the letter sounds, God having said it should so be, certainly it will be the plainest way to understand it according to the letter. If any thing may be counted such that hath not been fully accomplished, we may (I suppose) refer that (though not the whole

ⁱ P. 211.^k Rupertus.^k Chr. à Castro, Sz. Menoch.^l 2 Pet. iii. 10.^m Grotius, Brennius.ⁿ Pet. à Fig.^o Lyra.

whole matter, as we see Some do) to the day of judgment, when the places here named, shall with all others, be called to a farther account for what they at any time did in this world. As for their particular, we learn from our Saviour telling Cborazin and Bethsaida, that, it shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment, than for them, Mat. xi. 22.

That which from this passage will, according to these expositions mentioned, to be necessarily inferred is, that though God do suffer his people sometimes to be trampled upon and to be contemptuously used, and injuriously dealt with by his and their enemies, yet he will in due time deliver them from the hand of their enemies, and to them render a just reward, proportionable to the wrong that they have done to his people. What God here promisseth to do for the Jews, then his people, may all his people at all times look on as a promise of good issue to them under any sufferings; and in what is threatened to Tyre and Sidon, &c. may other enemies to God's church and people read their own doom. This particular example will be a proof in all other like cases, and we may be assured of it, for the Lord hath spoken it, whose truth is not limited to any particular, but hold in all like cases alike. The words are by ^p Some far differently interpreted, as if by what he saith, he will sell the children of the Tyrrians, &c. to the Jews, and they should sell them to the Sabeans, were meant the Apostles, sending such as were converted to Christ into remote parts, for bringing others in to him by preaching the Gospel to them, or such like purpose: but this seems not so proper to the words, in which appears a manifest threat of evil, and not a promise of good, as that would be.

9. Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles: prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near, let them come up.

10. Beat your plow-shares into swords, and your pruning-hooks into spears; let the weak say I am strong.

11. Assemble yourselves, and come, all ye heathens, and gather yourselves together round about: thither cause thy mighty ones to come down, O Lord.

Having from the beginning of ver. 4. hitherto seemed to direct his speech to some particular nations, as those named, Tyre and Sidon, &c. he seems here again to return to speak, ^q what may in general concern all nations of whom he had spoken, ver. 2. and commands it to be taken notice of by them, as if it were by an herald, or such as he employed, proclaimed to them all. That which they are to be warned of, is that they prepare war, and that they muster up all their forces, make all possible preparations, and use their joint and utmost endeavours, even all the enemies of God and his church, comprehended under the name of the Gentiles, for resisting his power, in inflicting on them what he hath determined in his appointed time to bring on them. His calling on them so to do, and to prepare to meet him in such a manner, is a certain prediction, that however now they seem to prevail against his church, without any seeming able to resist them, yet there shall be a time when he will appear to stop their violence, rage they never so furiously, and set themselves together with never so great force, against him and his elect. His bidding them to prepare war, and make all the provisions they can for it, is a plain warning that he is preparing war against them. So much will the words simply taken import; if they be taken by way of irony or scoff (as they are by many taken to be) then will they farther give to infer, that when they have made all these preparations that they are bid to make, yet all shall be in vain, they shall not be able to resist, nor to stand out against those judgments that he will execute on them. What time is here pointed out, and when the things here spoken of should be fulfilled, and by and on whom, it being not expressed, nor by the history of scripture made plain, makes the meaning very ambiguous, and such as Expositors do not consent in. ^r Some think what was done by Nebuchadnezzar to be meant: ^s Others the battle of Arbela (between Alexander and Darius) to be especially had respect to; ^t Others, such things which should be done under Antichrist, toward the end of the world. ^u Others, to be understood as that God would stir up all nations, that were enemies to his people, one against another, to destroy one another. They seem not any of them to make things plain; I think therefore the plainest way, to be that which the learned Mr. Lively takes, who thinks that the day of the last judgment is here set forth, similitudine sumpta a bello, by a similitude taken from war, in which powerful generals bring down and destroy their enemies; so taking those here mentioned among the Gentiles for the enemies on whom God will take vengeance, and therefore calls upon them to assemble themselves together, and so to do what he bids them, that he may so do. So Jerome saith to be the opinion of the Jews, which he himself also likes. So R. Solomon manifestly takes to be meant, while he puts for explication of the words, prepare war, אם תוכלון להלחם כנגדי, if ye can be able to fight against me. Others in a clean contrary way take them for those, whom he will employ in taking vengeance on his enemies, and the enemies of his people. Such Jerome mentions to have been in his time, who did think, hæc sanctis gentibus predicari ut præparentur ad bellum, & pro populo Dei dimicent, that these things should be proclaimed to holy people, that they should prepare themselves for war, that they might fight fight for his people. So seems Cyril also of old to have thought, that he doth in these words direct his speech ἐπὶ τὰς ἰδίους προσκυνητάς, to his own worshippers, to give them confidence ὅτι καὶ τῶν ἐχθρῶν ἀμείνους ἔσονται αὐτῷ προσπιζόντες, that they shall have the better of their enemies by the help of him taking their part. This way take also several modern Expositors, who look on the words so to sound as if God did * colligere suos exercitus, & instruere suas copias, ut pœnas sumat de hostibus Ecclesiæ suæ, muster up, or gather together his armies, and draw up his troops, that he might inflict punishment on the enemies of his church, † so as to shew how great forces, how numerous armies he hath ready at his call for help to his church, and destruction to their enemies at such time as he shall think fit; for as to the time designed, I do not see them to speak any thing particularly.

^p See Pelican. Mercer, Tarnov. out of Winclm.
^q Calv.

^r Lively. ^s Tirin: ^t Grot. ^u Lyra, Pet. à Fig.

These two ways St. Jerome, as we said, mentioning, prefers that which we have put in the first place, as likewise ‡ several Others do, whom I think we may well agree with in it, it seeming most agreeable to the import of the words. It was, as he observes, the opinion of the Jews in his time, or before him, with whom among such as are later than him Abarbinel may also be reckoned in part, although as to the whole of his opinion, I suppose it may be looked on as singular to himself, and such as we shall not find any other to agree with him in, nor find reason ourselves to do it, and because it is such we shall give a brief account of it, that the reader may judge thereof. He saith, that though the words may be understood of a war, to which God shall stir up the hearts of the sons of Edom and the sons of Ismael (which in his language are the Christians and Mahometans) therein to go up to or invade the Holy Land, and there to fight one with another till they be all destroyed, yet that without doubt the Prophet doth in that declare what concerns the resurrection of the dead, in that he saith, ver. 9. העירו הגבורים, wake up the mighty men, and ver. 12. יעורו ויעלו הגוים, let the heathen be wakened and come up, using the word of wakening, and ver. 14. המנים בעמק ההרץ, multitudes in the valley of decision. From these expressions he concludes the mind of the Prophet to be, that those that sleep in the dust, shall awake and arise from their death, and that of them shall be singular or particular persons both of the children of Israel (who shall arise that they may see the fall of their enemies who persecuted them) and also particular persons of other nations, as to say, Sennacherib, Nebuchadnezzar, Titus, and such other enemies, that they may be punished together with their seed, and that they may see the destruction of their native countries, which he saith to be intimated by the words, proclaim ye this among the Gentiles, prepare war, &c. and so the meaning not to be, as R. Solomon would have it, Prepare war, if ye can war (or fight) against me; neither to be spoken concerning those that came against Jehoshaphat, according to what Aben Ezra cites from one R. Moses Mordecai, but concerning that war which shall be באחרית הימים, in the last days, of which he speaks, saying, Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles, and let them all prepare themselves for the war; for though the matter be made publicly known among the Gentiles, they shall not be able to escape it, what God hath spoken being sure always to stand; and because many kings and princes, who had done evil to Israel in their destruction and captivity, yet died in their honour; of them he speaks, saying, Wake up the mighty men, as much as to say, Awake, awake from your sleep of death, draw near and come up. For there shall be gathered together all sorts of nations to war, and of them also that dwell in the dust, and shall come thither with them. But that he means not generally, all of them shall then live again, but such as kings and counsellors of the earth, the mighty men which were of old, which fought against Israel, appears by the saying, אנשי מלחמה, anshe milchamah, the men of war, viz. such as warred with God and with his people, as the people of the generation of the wilderness are called Anshe milchamah (Deut. ii. 14.) because they did, as it were, war against God, and believed not his word. And as for them that shall then (as he thinks) arise from the dead, and come to the valley of Jehoshaphat, (ver. 12.) he saith that their rising and coming thither shall be לא להלחם, not to fight, but to see that God will then sit to judge all the heathens round about, and to behold the judgment and vengeance that he will there execute on them: and for making good his opinion he saith that there shall be (according to what some of their wise say) two resurrections of the dead, the one for that remnant whom God shall call (chap. ii. 32.) in the time of redemption, viz. of יחידים מבני ישראל, choice particulars of the children of Israel, as likewise particulars of the Gentiles, who have done evil to Israel, whose resurrection shall come before, that they may be at that time to see their fall, and that this resurrection shall not be but in the Holy Land, in the valley of Jehoshaphat; of whom he saith that Isaiah prophesied in those words, chap. lxvi. 24. And they shall go forth, and look upon the carcases of them that have transgressed against me. The second, he saith, shall be after that, and that a more general one, viz. of all the righteous Israelites, which have been in all generations, and likewise of multitudes of other nations, who were true believers, who shall rise in all the habitable parts of the world, and several regions thereof, to publish in the world the truth of the Lord, and of his law, that so men may be directed all of them to call on the name of God, and so serve him with one consent. To this purpose will he have to tend the meaning of the Prophet, but mingling in his exposition such fancies of his own, that I suppose he will have not many to agree with him.

VOL. I.

4 T

* Calvin. † Danæus. ‡ Mercer, Ribera, Pet. à Figuer. Christ. à Castro. Jun. Trem. Piscator, &c.

him. That he may seem himself to have suspected, while he saith, that if any like not to interpret these words of the resurrection of the dead, he may look on them as an excitement to go up to that war, which shall then be. But I look not on the referring the words to the time of the resurrection of the dead, to be that which is to be found fault with, but his understanding it as he doth. If it be understood to import the same time with the day of judgment, as we take it to be, I think it to be that which among the several expositions of the words may seem most probable, as setting forth the great confusion that all people shall be in at that time, which is the interpretation which Mr. Lively prefers.

Having thus premised concerning the different opinions of Interpreters, as to the scope of the words in general, the chief of my remaining business will be to give more particularly the literal meaning of some of them, that so the reader may judge how they are applicable to any of such expositions as are given.

Prepare war.] So Ours read in the Text, but in the Margin put sanctify, intimating that the word קדשו Kaddeshu in the Hebrew doth properly so signify. So it is manifest it doth, but withal, that it is used to signify the preparing for a thing in a solemn manner, as to which men were, as with a sacred obligation, which ought not to be neglected or violated, bound, and is therefore by the word of preparing thought to be aptly rendred, as elsewhere, so here, as well by Jewish as Christian Interpreters. So the Chaldee renders it, ומינו עבדי קרבא, prepare such as shall wage wars (or warriors), Aben Ezra also הכינו, Kimchi והמינו, prepare. The MS. Arabick استعدوا للحرب prepare yourselves, or be prepared, or ready, for war, as likewise R. Tanchum, who rendring it, اعدوا الحرب, prepare war (or to war,) explaining it by, استعدوا له, be prepared, or prepare yourselves for it. By which we may understand what both the Septuagint (as the printed Arabick following them) and the Syriack and Vulgar Latin, with some modern, meant, by their rendring, sanctify a war, viz. that they should wholly, as if by an holy league bound, set themselves to it, or make preparations for it as for a sacred thing, which ^a required solemn preparations. For this end (saith he) wake up the mighty men, &c. העירו Hairu, wake up (from the root עור Ur, to awake.) The same word we have, ver. 7. though in another tense מעירם Meiram, and there by Ours rendred, will raise them. It appears in this conjugation to signify any raising up, as by waking from sleep, or raising from death, or stirring up to a vigorous prosecution of any thing; and in which of these notions it is to be taken must be known by what is required by the words joined with it, and the sense of the place, which is taken. So here by those who take by the mighty men and men of war here mentioned to be meant such of them, who having once lived had since been dead and laid asleep in the dust, is it (as by ^b Abarbinel) understood of wakening, or raising from the sleep of death to life. By those who take by them to be meant such as were yet then alive, of stirring up or exciting them to prosecute with vigour the business here enjoined, viz. of preparing war, which whoever are understood are bid to do, and to draw near, and come up, viz. to come together in the presence of God, to or at the place appointed by him. By that stirring them up the Chaldee looks on as denoted the causing them to come publickly, so rendring it ייתון בגלי, yetun bigli, let them come openly. So likewise he renders, הנני מעירם, ver. 7. Behold I will bring them openly. By יעלו yaalu, let them come up, Some ^c think allusion to be had to the Situation of Judea, or Jerusalem, whether they are called, as being higher than other regions about it. That the word יעלו (from עלה) doth properly signify to ascend, or come or go up, is no doubt, yet I suppose it is not necessary that it should be always strictly so taken, as if the height of the place whither they should come was thereby denoted. It may be that the place whither they are called is meant ^d of such as was so, though not Judea or Jerusalem; but it is not necessary that from this verb it should necessarily be concluded so to be, for that it seems, in a larger signification, to signify much the same with the preceding verb יגשו, let them draw near, viz. let them come, ^e veniant, as to Some it seems, which use of it may be confirmed or illustrated by the like use of a word from the same root, and of the same signification in the Arabick Tongue, viz. تعال (from علا Ala) which, though it according to the signification of the root would properly signify, come up, and doth also so signify, yet in ordinary speech is used for no more than simply Adeſdum, ^f come hither or draw near, without respect either to the height, or lowness of the place, whence or whither he is called, that is spoken to. The words are plainly an alarm to the people here called on, to make all possible preparations to the war that they are bid to make, which is continued in very emphatical expressions in the following words also, as ver. 10. Beat your plow-shares into swords, and your pruning-hooks into spears, let the weak say, I am strong. As if all that they were to look after was to make provision for it, and there were nothing else that they should need to look after, neither the managing of such affairs which concerned their livelihood, as the culture of the ground, and tilling their fields, and dressing their vines and fruit-trees, that they might enjoy the necessary fruits thereof (which by that mention of the plow-shares and pruning-hooks, necessary instruments for those ends, and bidding to beat them into ^a See chap. i. 14. ^b Grot. ^c Who seems to look on that verb properly to import such raising from death to life, as Ribera also doth. ^d Jun. Trem. ^e As the clouds, or the air, if it be understood of the resurrection or day of judgment, as 1 Theff. iv. 17. ^f Druf. Cast. proficiscantur. Ver. 11. the word יבאו come, is rendered by the Arab. MS. تعال.

swords and spears, instruments of war, is plainly intimated,) or even the looking after their own bodily health, or in any thing favouring their infirmities, though they were weak. This manifestly declares the extraordinary trouble of the times spoken of, the greatness and grievousness of the war, which should not give them leave or leisure to look after those things, by which men do ordinarily subsist, and therefore look more especially in the first place after. That this is to be the meaning is plainly shewed, by those contrary expressions of times of peace and security elsewhere used, viz. They shall beat their swords into plow-shares, and their spears into pruning-hooks, Isaiah ii. 4. and Micah iv. 3. which Kimchi thinks to be a description of peace, which shall follow the war here spoken of: and as to the other words, and let the weak say I am strong, viz. put himself forward in this war without consideration of his weakness and inability; it tends to the same purpose, it being usual for weak infirm men to favour their bodies, and not put themselves on difficult matters, as war or the like; whereas here that is not allowed as an excuse to them, but they must put on strength, and to their uttermost, for joining in the employment here called to.

As for some of the words in this verse, how they are differently rendred by Interpreters, it will not be much material to observe, as particularly that אִתִּים Ittim (in אִתִּים Ittecem) is by Some rendred ^a aratra, plows, by Others vomer, plow-shares, as the Syriack ܐܪܬܐ ܕܥܝܪܐ by Others ⁱ Ligones, spades, by Others ^k Bidentes, forks, or any other word denoting any such instrument of iron. ^l וּשְׁחֹפְרִים בָּהֶם, with which they dig or break up the ground. And so מִזְמֶרֶתֶם Mizmerotecem, is rendred, as in our Text, pruning-books, in the margin sithes; for as to the scope it will be all one, viz. to shew that now there will be so much use of iron for instruments of war, as that whatsoever was before made of that metal for other use, should now be converted to that.

Ver. 11. Assemble yourselves and come all ye beathens; &c. וּשְׁחֹפְרִים בָּהֶם, Assemble yourselves, The word is ܠܦܬܐ ܡܩܪܕܐ, ἀπαξ λεγόμενον, no where else used in scripture, and so is to be understood (as R. Tanchum speaks) ܡܫܬܥܝܢ ܕܥܝܪܐ, according to what shall suit with the context, or connexion of the words in the same sentence joined with it, ^m and according to this rule he takes the signification of it to be, ܐܠܝܬܐ ܕܥܝܪܐ ܕܥܝܪܐ, a being driven together, and gathering together. Which is the signification by ⁿ several Expositors both ancient and modern given it, who are by Ours also in it followed; whence Aben Ezra, and Kimchi, as Others, think the constellation שׁוֹשׁ aish, or Arcturus named, Job xxxi. 32. as appearing together in a knot. Others, he saith, look on it as the ^o same with וּשְׁחֹפְרִים which signifies, hasten (by change of the guttural letters ח, and פ, one with another) and so it is by Some rendred, as by R. Solomon, and among Christians by Some ^p approved. The Vulgar Latin renders it erumpite, break out, which may seem to include the first meaning. So Ribera expounds it, Prodite magno cum impetu ex omnibus urbibus vestris, & congregamini, come out with great force out of all your cities, and be gathered together. We may well adhere, according to the common consent of all, to what Ours gives us, as a proper rendring, Assemble yourselves. The following words are of more ordinary use and known signification, as by Ours rendred, and come all ye beathens and gather yourselves together round about; although by those that will look into the Hebrew Text, it may be observed that the word וּקְבְצוּ, Nikbatzu, rendred, gather yourselves together, be, as to the Grammar of it, of ^q a form not so usual, the sense requiring it to be in signification imperative, according to the regular form of which ^r mood it would be וּקְבְצוּ bikkabetzu, as it is in other places not infrequently; but of it in this form one only example is, as by R. Tanchum, so I think ^s by any brought, viz. וּלְךָ Nikvu, Jer. i. 5. for Hillavv, be ye joined, though by Some it be otherwise taken as in its proper form of the preter tense, as by Ours in that place of Jeremy, though rendred in the signification of the imperative, as appears by their putting it as the first person plural. The words of this verse hitherto seem to be ^t part of what God bids to be proclaimed among the Gentiles, though ^u Some look on them as the words of the Prophet, but it seems plainer to take them otherwise, as we say, and then the ^v Prophet's words joining in his wish or desire on what God had declared to be his design of calling or causing to come together all nations, to be the following only, viz. Thither cause thy mighty ones to come down, O Lord. In the rendring and expounding of which we shall find much difference. The best and plainest among them I take to be that, which Ours follow in the Text, according to which וּחָבְתָּ Hancheth, is taken for the imperative mood of the conjugation Hiphil, from וּחָבַת Nachath, ^x to descend or come down, as in the Hebrew sometimes, and more frequently in the Chaldee, it signifies. So the MS. Arabick, and so Aben Ezra and Kimchi, render it, as well as many modern Interpreters. It is by Others in the same form and from the same root taken to have the signification of breaking: which notion both that ancient Grammarian Abu Walid, and also R. Tanchum, rendring it break, (following therein the Chaldee Paraphrast) seem to prefer, though mentioning without dislike the former version. R. Solomon looks upon them both so indifferent, as that he confesseth

he

^a Druf. follows him therein. ^b LXX. Vulg. ⁱ Interlin. ^k Pagn. ^l Kimchi. ^m The Arab. MS. rendring it ܐܠܬܐ ܕܥܝܪܐ (perhaps it should be ܐܠܬܐ ܕܥܝܪܐ). ⁿ Chald. Par. LXX. Syriack, printed Arabick. ^o See Note in MS. Arab. Version. ^p Tig. Mr. Lively. ^q See R. Tanchum. ^r In the conjug. Niphal from קָבַץ Kabatz, ^s See Buxtorf's Gram. l. 1. cap. 14, &c. cap. 50. in note on the imper. mood. ^t See Pifcat. ^u Druf. on the end of ver. 10. ^v Ab. Ezra. ^x Kimchi.

he knew not which to choose. For the latter we have indeed great authority, as of the Chaldee Paraphrast, and the Syriack, who render it both by the word תבר, which signifies breaking. To which may be referred that of the Vulgar Latin also, occumbere faciet. Which the Doway renders, there will the Lord make all thy strong ones to be slain. Although to the other notion of descending it may also have respect. But now in these there may be observed, besides the difference of signification from the former, another also concerning the form, in which they take the verb to be, while they render it not in the second person, and as of the imperative mood, but as in the third person, and future tense of the indicative mood. The Lord shall break, &c. It seems they looked on it as the ^y infinitive mood, which is after used for the future, which construction also Ours look on as agreeable to the words, by their putting in the margin, or, the Lord shall bring down: and so the Geneva English, then shall the Lord cast down the mighty men, and so our older English Bibles. According to this difference concerning the notion of the verb, are there different senses given of the meaning of the word by it governed, viz. גבורים, which is read thy mighty ones. Though there be no question of the word גבורים Gibborim, but that it signifies strong ones, or mighty ones; yet who are thereby meant, are according to the different senses in which the verb is taken, different opinions. They who understand the verb so as to signify to cause to come down, by those mighty do take to be meant God's holy angels, so doth Aben Ezra and Kimchi, הם המלאכים they are the angels. So Abu Walid and R. Tanchum say that if the verb be taken in the sense of causing to come down, then by גבורים Gibboreca, thy mighty ones, will be meant الملائكة angels, who have the title given them also, Psalms ciii. 20. that they are גבורי כח Gibbore Coach, mighty in strength. So that the import of the words and the Prophet's desire will be الهم انزل علينا بها ملائكتك O God, cause to come down in it (i. e. that place, or thither, where the heathen shall be gathered together,) thy angels and thy mighty ones for our succour and help; or we may say, for the destruction of these enemies there bid to assemble themselves, both being employments on which God useth to put those his mighty ones, both the defence of his people and the destruction of his enemies. As for his people he giveth his angels charge over them to keep them in all their ways, Psalms xci. 11. and how he maketh use of them for the destruction of his enemies appears by what we read, 2 Kings xix. 35. how the angel of the Lord went forth and smote in the camp of the Assyrians an hundred fourscore and five thousand. Of them here therefore dom any of ^b Christian Interpreters, as well as those of the Jews named, understand the word, agreeable to what they take the verb to signify, as we have seen, viz. to cause to come down. But if it be taken in the other notion, which we also mentioned, viz. of breaking, or beating, and bringing, or casting down, then will not this signification of the noun be proper for the place; but by mighty or strong ones be understood such as, presuming on their might and strength, proudly and rebelliously exalted and opposed themselves against God and his people: and so doth R. Tanchum in that way expound it, גיד בגבורים He means by Gibboreca, thy strong and mighty ones, those that proudly exalted themselves against thee. (Such as are called thine, viz. God's, not because they were for, but against, him.) In this sense it is plain the Chaldee takes them, as by his rendering the verb by breaking, so by his changing the person in the affixe or pronoun, rendering, the strength of his strong ones, viz. of those of the enemies assembled; and in the same is it plain that ^c all they who do in that or the like sense render the verb, do or must of necessity understand the noun. And both being so understood, the particle שמה shammab must not be rendered, thither, but, ^d there, or ^e then. These expositions, however differing between themselves, yet are both so agreeable to the words according to the known significations of them, that we see very learned Expositors in doubt, which of them should be followed, and indeed one of them named will require the other to be understood. If it be said God shall send or cause thither to come down his mighty ones, viz. his angels, it will be necessarily understood, to break the strength of, or to cast or beat down the mighty enemies there or then assembled against his people; and if it be so taken as that God will beat or cast down his strong enemies, it will at once easily be understood that he will do it by the hand of his instruments more mighty in strength, his angels, who in such, as in other cases do his pleasure. So in both these ways there is nothing irreconcilable either between themselves or with the original, of which they are translations, and ought to give the right meaning answerable to the signification that the words in it bear. But if we shall look to the Greek of the LXX. we shall find that, as not agreeing with either of these meanings which we have seen, so neither with the Hebrew original, as now read. Their translation being πρᾶνς ἔσω μαχητῆς (or as some copies πολεμιστῆς) let the mild be a fighter or warrior; which no way agreeing (as we said) with the ordinary Hebrew, ^f Some conceive that they read it otherwise than now it is, viz. הנחת יביח גבור bannachat yibyeh gibbor, instead of Jehovah Gibboreca, and taking bannachat, as having the signification of נח Nuach, or Nach, to be quiet, and changing the reading of the second word, and in the last leaving out both the note of the plural number, and the

^y Mercer, Gloss. Gram. p. 361.

^z Abu Walid in נחת.

^a Or as R. Tanchum, מלאכתك الجبارة, thy mighty angels.

^b Mercer, Tarnov. Diodati.

^c Jerome, Munster. Castal. &c.

^d Munst. Tig.

^e Druf.

^f Druf. cap. 18.

the pronoun affixed. 'Tis hard to imagine that there should be such diversity of reading in the Hebrew. Their rendring seems rather to be a repeated explication of the last clause of the foregoing verse, Let the weak say I am strong, than a proper translation of the present words. The printed Arabick follows here all along the Greek, rendring, الوديع يكون مجيرا, qui mansuetus est, bellator esto, Hethat is mild, let him be a warrior. How it came to pass that the Greek Interpreters should so read it, I know not. There is not certainly thence to be concluded any thing against the antiquity, or verity of the Hebrew reading, which all copies agree in. What alteration may be suspected must rather be from different copies of their translation, if they were to be found.

12. Let the heathen be awakened, and come up to the valley of Jehoshaphat: for there will I sit to judge all the heathen round about.

These words seem to follow, as an answer to the prayer or desire of the Prophet in the foregoing words, in which he declares that certainly he will bring to effect that which he had bidden before to be proclaimed, and which the Prophet desired, and how and where it should be effected, viz. by causing all the heathen to come together unto the place by him appointed, and there executing judgment on them, יעורו Yauru, Let be awakened. This word, though in a different form, we have above, ver. 7. where he saith, הנני מעירם Hinnenî meiram, by Ours rendred, behold I will raise them, and again, ver. 9. העירו הגבורים Hairu hagibborim, rendred, wake up the mighty men, on which place hath been spoken as much as may seem needful: There he bids such as he employs to awaken, and those here he himself calls to awake and rise up. The verbs here both rendred imperatively, let them be awakened, let them come up, are in the future tense, and may as well be rendred in the signification of that as of the imperative mood, viz. * they shall be wakened, they shall come up, and so would the meaning also be proper, and well answer to what is said in the foregoing words, where God bids his messengers, Proclaim war, and in order to it, to do what he bids them do, and the Prophets desire that he would so cause it to be done; as if he should here affirm that the things should be surely brought to pass. The heathens (or nations) shall be wakened (or raised up,) the word יעורו yauru, being applicable either to wakening from sleep, or raising up from death, or otherwise stirring or being stirred up. So do ^h Some render the words in the future tense, excitabuntur, and, ascendent, shall be stirred up, shall go up; though more generally they be rendred as they are by Ours in the imperative mood, Let them, &c. They are likewise in ⁱ the Chaldee put in the form of the future,

VOL. I.

4 U

ייתון בגלי they shall come openly, &c. whence Ribera infers from the LXX. and Vulgar Latin, rendring them imperatively, imperativum pro futuro poni, that the imperative mood is put for the future; but this note seems of no great moment, the Chaldee with other eastern tongues, as the Syriack and Arabick, having no other way of expressing the third person imperative but by the future, as well as the Hebrew, so that by which of them words of that form are best rendred, must be judged by the sense and scope of the place. Here it will be all one by which of the two it be rendred, whether God, whose purpose cannot be hindered or fail, commands a thing to be done, or says it shall be done, being a certain assurance that it shall so be. And let them come up, or, and they shall come up, to the valley of Jehoshaphat.] Above, ver. 2. he saith, he will bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, according to which it would seem more proper to say come down, as indeed men are more properly said to go down into a valley than to ascend. This some solve by saying it is spoken in respect to the higher situation of Jerusalem, or the country to which in coming up they went through that valley, or ^k towards it: But I know not what certainty there is in this; I suppose it to be a plainer way, to say, as before we observed on ver. 9. concerning the word יעלו yaulu, that though it strictly and properly signify coming up, yet it may be sufficient sometimes to take it for a coming thither, whither they are called, without respect to the situation of the place, whether it be lower or higher, so that we shall not need for salving the stricter signification of the word to refer it (with Grotius) only to those qui in subterraneis carceribus tenentur, are shut up in prisons under ground, they that are spoken to being heathen, or nations indefinitely, and so in general. Besides, their coming to appear in the presence of the most high God, may well be stiled a coming up, wherever it be. The place whither they are here summoned and bid to come, is called the valley of Jehoshaphat, as likewise above, ver. 2. and no where else under that name in the scripture mentioned; what is by Expositors thought of it, and their different opinions concerning it, we have there said what I suppose may suffice, except we shall add, or rather repeat, that the valley of Jehoshaphat, though it were at first according to the opinion of most, a name properly belonging to a particular place, viz. that, where God shewed or executed his signal judgment on the enemies of Judah, in the time of Jehoshaphat (who ^l prayed to God to judge them, seeing he and his people had no might against them, and upon God's hearkening to his prayer, and bringing destruction on those enemies, called the place where it was done, the valley Beracha, because there they blessed the Lord) yet, as Munster speaks, ob exertum Dei judicium in eo loco, in generale evasit

* Excitabuntur & ascendent, Druf. vallem, Druf. ¹ 2 Chron. xx. 12.

^h Jun. Trem. Pisc.

ⁱ As in the Syriack and Arabick.

^k Versus

evafit vocabulum, in allusion to that judgment in that place wrought, the name therefore given to it (importing the Judgment of God) passed into a general name, common to ^m any place where he should in like manner shew his power in vindicating his church and people, on his and their enemies, by minding them of what he then did, giving them assurance that he both could and would still do the like for them, as occasion should require. It is therefore, as above we said, by Others applied to the place and time, where and when, God hath executed or shall execute any signal judgment on the enemies of his church in their sight, or for their sakes. It is by Grotius applied to the destruction of the Persians by the Grecians, the executors of his judgments; it is likewise well applicable to the place whither God will gather together at the day of the last general judgment, to which many, (as we have also said) think it especially to belong, yet not so as thence to conclude with Some that the valley of Jeboshaphat, properly at first so called, shall be the particular place for the general assembling of all nations at that day, for the reasons above mentioned; but to assure them that at the time by him determined, he will cause them all to come up to that, which, from what shall there be then done, may be called by that name, to the import of which (as denoting the judgment of God) respect here seems to be had; For (saith he) there will I sit to judge all the Heathens round about. Were it not, wheresoever it shall be, so before called, yet for this act of God performed in it, may it now from henceforth take that name. That act is, that he will there sit לשפט lishpot, to judge, I will sit (saith he) so speaking of himself ⁿ humano more, according to the manner of men, or in such language as men express what is usually done among them, where the custom is for the judge examining matters and giving sentence, to sit; not as if sitting or standing were postures properly attributed to God. The Chaldee renders איתגלה Ithgele, I will manifest my self, לשפט lishpot, to judge; the word, of which the former word is in part compounded, having the name of God premised and joined with it. The same is above used ver. 2. in another form, נשפטיהם nishphatti, and there by Ours rendred, I will plead with them. It may well include his examining, or laying open matters, and accordingly passing sentence on the persons questioned and called to judgment, according to their deserts. The persons are here called כל הגוים מסביב All the heathen (or nations) round about, which according to what is understood by the valley of Jeboshaphat, may be differently, as Grotius, applicably to his way (as we have seen,) takes to be meant by it, ^o all the forces or people of Asia, or others otherwise. The plainest way seems to understand by it, such as shall come together, ^p ex cunctis terrae partibus, from all parts of the earth, or ^q all nations gathered together to be judged.

If these words were ^r not primarily spoken of the last general judgment, yet the expressions are such as may mind them, and give them a certain expectation of it, in the time by God appointed for it. And so also in the words following in the next verse, wherein he commands the judgment that he will pass, to be executed by those whom he will use as his ministers therein.

13. Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe; come, get you down, for the press is full, the fats overflow, for their wickedness is great.

If it be enquired who are these, the persons here called upon, it may be answered, that they are the same, who are before called God's mighty ones, according to that rendring of those words, ver. 11. Thither cause thy mighty ones to come down. That which these are called on to do for the executing of that judgment, which shall pass on the heathen, is set forth in metaphorical expressions, taken from what is usually done by husband-men in respect to their corn, viz. of cutting it down when it is ripe, with the sickle, and in respect to their vines, viz. of cutting off the grapes and casting them into their presses and fats, that they may press and tread them, which applied to man and enemies, will denote the cutting off and destroying them. What is here said may be illustrated by comparing it with like expressions which we have in the Scripture elsewhere. So Matt. xiii. 39. as to the first expression here used, speaking of the time when he shall destroy the wicked, compared there to tares growing among the corn, in the field of the world, he saith, the harvest is the end of the world, and the reapers are the Angels, whom the Son of man shall send forth, and they shall gather out of his kingdom, all things that offend, and them which do iniquity, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire, ver. 41. and 42. Again, Rev. xiv. 15. where, according to the first expression here used, an Angel cried to him that sat on the cloud, Thrust in thy sickle and reap, for the time is come for thee to reap, for the harvest of the earth is ripe. Then as to the second, ver. 18. where an Angel is likewise said to cry to another that had a sharp sickle, saying, Thrust in thy sharp sickle, and gather the clusters of the vine of the earth, for her grapes are fully ripe. And (saith he) the Angel thrust his sickle into the earth, and cast it into the great wine-press of the wrath of God. From these places it is manifest that the cutting down that, מן שאנה יחצתה ma shaanah an yochtsad, the property or condition of ^m The MS. Arabick version done by a Jew, here renders مرج الحاکمة the Valley (or Meadow) of calling to judgment, though ver. 2. he renders the proper name of it יהושפט the Valley of Jehoshaphat, and there notes that this Valley had several names, viz. 1. עמק החרוץ. 2. עמק רפאים. 3. עמק המלך. 4. גיא ההרגה. 5. גיא בן הייס. 1. The Valley of Decision. 2. The Valley of Rephaim, or Giants. 3. The King's Dale (Gen. xiv. 17.) 4. The Valley of Slaughter. 5. The Valley of the Son of Hinnom, Jer. xix. 6. ⁿ Druf. and see Grot. on ver. 2. ^o Omnis vis Asiae. ^p Calvin. ^q Pet. à Fig. ^r As some think they are nimis coacte, too much wrested in so doing, Calvin, on ver. 12.

of which is to be reaped, or mowed, as R. Tanchum interprets the word קציר Katzeir, by Ours rendred the harvest, or as the MS. Arabick renders it, אלמסתחצר, that which is fit or meet to be mown or reaped; and the treading or pressing grapes cut off and cast into the wine-presses or fats, there to be pressed or trodden, is used as apt language to express and describe the execution of God's judgments on his wicked enemies, his cutting them off and bringing them down in his due time. If it be applied, as by many it is, and thought particularly to belong, to the great and general judgment at the last day, to be passed by the Lord, and by the ministry of his Angels to be executed, this seems to have confirmation by what is expressly said in St. Matthew, that the harvest is the end of the world, and the reapers are the Angels. But the time of God's sitting to judge all the heathen round about, and the harvest being not so expressly here set down, Others, as we said, refer it rather to some great defeat, at some other time to be given to the enemies of God and his church, and destruction brought on them by the ministry of such as he shall imploy, when he shall see most convenient, which time he expresseth by saying, for the harvest is ripe, the press is full, by which he signifies what he in the following words more plainly expresseth, that their wickedness is great, i. e. that it is now come to a full height, and he will no longer suffer them; they are ripe for destruction, and it shall now certainly come upon them, and as it follows in the next verse, the day of the Lord is near. What time is by the day of the Lord, and the harvest being ripe, designed, it being not precisely and particularly expressed, leaves a liberty of applying it to any signal judgment or destruction, which God hath already, since these words spoken, brought on any nation or people, who have been enemies to his people, and persecutors of them, or shall yet at any time before the end of the world; but certainly to the general judgment at the end of the world, they are in their greatest latitude applicable, and shall have full completion of whatsoever they can be said to signify. The saying, that the day spoken of is near, will not any way cross, or obstruct this meaning, what is by God certainly determined, being properly said to be near at hand, and present, being as sure to be done as if it were already done. Though the time may seem long to men, yet to God it is not so, with whom one day is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day (2 Pet. iii. 8.) and what is farthest off, as near at hand, what future, as present. Mean while, his intimating here by saying, that the harvest is ripe, that he is withal long-suffering in the account of men, and doth not so soon execute judgment on the enemies of him, and his Church, as they seem to deserve, yet is not slack as men count slackness, or neglectful of what is done on earth, but hath appointed a set time for all things, as he seeth most agreeable to his justice and mercy, which being come, he will so accomplish them as to make both appear. God had devoted the Amorites and inhabitants of Canaan to destruction for their great wickedness, and promised to the seed of Abraham their land for a possession, yet delayed for many years the executing of his judgments on them, even to the fourth generation; and why he so would do, he giveth for a reason, For the iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full, Gen. xv. 16. Till it be so, he will spare them, and allow them time for repentance, but when, through their obstinate persisting and running on therein, it is come to that measure, he will surely then put a stop to it, and cut them off. In such manner it is manifest that he dealt with the old world in the days of Noah, when, though men were grown so wicked that he resolved that his spirit should not always strive with them, yet allowed them an hundred and twenty years for filling up the measure of their sins, Gen. vi. 3. but then seeing all flesh to have corrupted his ways upon the earth, he saith, The end of all flesh is come before me, for the earth is filled with violence through them; and behold I will destroy them with the earth, ver. 12, 13. The same method doth he plainly shew himself here to proceed in with them whom he now saith he will judge, the expressions used intimating that he had long forbore them, even till they were ripe in their sins, fit for an harvest, and as full of wickedness as ripe grapes, which pressed fill the fats, set to take their liquor through the abundance of their juice, with which they swell: such a ripeness and fulness of wickedness in those spoken of to be denoted by these figurative expressions of the harvests being ripe, and the presses being full, and the fats overflowing, appears by what follows in plain terms as the meaning of all, for their wickedness is great, so that they are now as ready for destruction, as the ripe harvest for being reaped, or the grapes full of liquor for being cast into the press, and trodden and emptied into the fats, which through the abundance thereof they will cause to overflow. Concerning the literal meaning and signification of the words in this verse, there is a difference betwixt Interpreters, as first concerning the word רדו Redu, by ours rendred, get you down (as by most others to the same sense) as if it were from ירד yarad, which signifies to descend, or go down. But R. Salomô Jarchi is of another mind, who takes it to be from the theme רדד radad, which signifies, dominari, to rule, or have power over, and expounds it here by לשון כבישות וירדו, the signification of bringing under, and having power over, in that sense which it is used in, in what is said, Gen. i. 28. וירדו ברגת הים, and have dominion over the fish of the sea. The Chaldee Paraphrast expresseth it by רששו conculcate, tread on (having rendred the former word באו come, by חותו Chutu, descend) which may seem well enough to agree with that signification of bringing under, except we may rather think that the

the word in that time was used in the notion of treading, it having that signification in the Arabick tongue, in which رادي Radah, signifies an hard treading, as of the trotting or prancing of an horse, calcarit terram ungulis suis equus, Ec. and that the word Radu here, whether from ירד yarad, or רדה Rada (as from either it may be formed) was looked on as having this signification in the Hebrew, may also be well conjectured from the Greek rendring it, πατάει, the Syriack ܪܕܐ Ec. the printed Arabick رادوا, all of them, Tread, which is a proper term, in speaking of grapes in the wine-press, elsewhere used in Scripture, though expressed by another word in the Hebrew. So that if it be taken, as by most it is, in the signification of going down, even that will imply this to be the business for which they are to go, viz. to tread the full ripe grapes now ready for, or even already in, or filling the press, and so full of juice, that upon the treading they will fill the fats even to overflowing: so saith he השקו היקבים, the fats overflow. The same words (though in another tense of the verb, viz. the future) we have above, chap. ii. 24. ישקו yashiku, shall overflow: in which place we have at large spoken of the derivation and signification of it, so that we shall not need here again to add to it: that which will appear from what hath been there said, and here may be observed, is, that from any different significations given it, it denotes an abundance and great measure of that which is spoken of, as there and here also literally of the liquor or juice of the grapes, and so consequently here of what is likened to such grapes, which by what follows, for their wickedness is great, may well seem to be understood of the great measure and abounding of them, and so is by Most understood, that they are as full of that as grapes of juice; yet is it by Others understood of the great effusion of the blood of those wicked nations spoken of, which shall be shed in such destruction by war, as God, who had long forborn them, in his appointed time would bring upon them. So Kimchi, הוא משר לשפירת הדם, It is a metaphorical, comparative expression for the effusion of blood, the time that they shall dye or be slain being come, because great is the evil, which they and their forefathers have done to Israel. So Grotius, Let the fats overflow, i. e. multus fundatur sanguis, qui cum vino comparari solet, "let there be shed much blood, which useth to be compared (or likened) to wine," the blood he means, of those great armies, ex omni Asia, out of all Asia, the fields filled with which he thinks compared to, and meant by, a press full of grapes; and then the words, for their wickedness is great, to denote a reason why he bids that bloody slaughter and destruction to be executed upon them, ita meruere illæ gentes, those nations have so deserved by their great wickedness.

This Exposition seems more ancient, being from the Chaldee Paraphrast, who to this purpose explains the verse, Draw out the sword against them, for the time of their end is come, go down, tread upon the slain of their mighty ones, as that is trod on which is in the wine-press: shed out their blood, because their wickedness is great. To either of these comparisons, viz. either of the greatness of their wickedness to the abundance of liquor in full ripe grapes, or else of effusion of their blood to the wine in plenty pressed out of such grapes, the words may indifferently be applied, according as that to which they are applied will require. If it be thought that here is expressed such destruction as by the sword God would at any time be brought on any enemies of his church or people, while the world standeth as it is, then will the comparison between the juice of grapes and blood be proper to express that meaning, the abundant flowing out of the one will denote the plentiful effusion of the other (although the other also of exposing the greatness of their wickedness by the fulness of the grapes, and the fats overflowing with liquor may also be looked on as not improper) and then the last words will be a reason why their blood shall be in such plenty shed, as wine out of grapes trodden in the press and filling the fats, viz. because their wickedness is great.

But if it be understood of that heavy judgment to which all wicked sinners shall be doomed at the end of the world, then will the other way of understanding by the presses being full, and the fats overflowing, the greatness of the wickedness of the men of the world, be as a reason (together with those preceding, for the harvest is ripe) why God will now sit to judge them, and so the last words their wickedness is great, be, as we before said, an expression in plain words of what is in the other figuratively given to understand, matters being so with the enemies of God and his church, their wickedness being come to the greatest height that God will suffer; he having now determined to execute his vengeance on them, to cut them as corn fit to be reaped, and tread them in the wine-press of his wrath, as grapes come to maturity and full of juice used to be pressed and trodden, there shall be no way of escape for them, neither their might nor multitude by which they have hitherto prevailed, and might think still to prevail, shall deliver them from his mighty ones, whom he will now send to execute his judgments on them. Be they never so great in strength, never so many in number, they shall all be gathered together to that place in which he hath appointed to execute his sentence denounced on them: So do the next words give us to understand by his saying.

14. Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision: for the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision.

The repeating of the noun multitudes in the plural number makes plainly for expressing the greatness, or well nigh infiniteness of the number of those spoken of, according to a rule of the Hebrew ^xGrammarians, confirmed by many examples. But then the two nouns being so put together without any verb or particle to direct for the construction, or for the understanding what is said, either to, or of, them spoken of, or what they should or shall do, or what be done to them, argues it a defective speech necessarily requiring some supply to be made for directing to, and giving the meaning of them; and about that do Interpreters differ, according as they take the nouns, some in one case, some in another. Some taking them as in the nominative case supply, ^y*cadent*, shall fall, ^z*concidentur*, shall be cut off, ^a*Others erunt*, shall be, ^b*Others congregati sunt* are gathered together. Others taking them in the vocative case supply ^c*adeſte*, come, or be present, Others, ^d*ite*, go into. In this way our ancienter English Translation hath it, O people, people come into. And that from Geneva, O multitude, multitude come into, &c. Others do not supply any verb at all, but rather look upon the words as spoken by way of exclamation, and so understand only a particle of admiration, as if seeing and representing as present what should certainly be, he cried out by way of admiration, O how great a multitude do I see gathered together! or shall there be gathered together, ^e*quantum turbæ, quantum tumultus*. In which sense the words as in the Original, and by the Vulgar translated only populi, populi: and by the Authors of our last Translation (as by diverse Others) multitudes, multitudes, without any supply expressed, will well bear. And are so by some of our English Divines paraphrased: So by Bishop Hall, O what multitudes, what infinite multitudes of wicked sinners shall then and there be adjudged, &c. and so by Dr. Stokes, O the multitude of hereticks, schismatics, irreligious and prophane livers! O the vast company of atheists, idolaters, tyrants, and other malicious enemies of the true profession, and service of God, that methinks I now see making their appearance in the valley, &c. In stead of what Ours with so many Others render, multitudes, multitudes (or in some synonymous words) the Greek more differently read ἡχοὶ ἐξήχουσαν, sounds have sounded forth (or, as some copies read, ἡχοὶ ἀκούσαν, are heard) whom the printed Arabick follows, الاجان لاحت, Concentus personuerunt; the Syriack likewise to the same purpose, ܕܢܝܚܐ ܕܢܝܚܐ, which the Latin Interpreter renders, sensus tumultus, the sense (or noise) of a tumult: Barbabul in his Lexicon rendring it by the Arabick word الضوضا, or rather الضوضا, which is الجلبة ^f*a shouting or mixed voices of men*. The sense will be much one with the former: such a tumultuous noise arguing a great multitude of people to be met together. The difference in giving the literal signification of the word appears to be from the different significations of the word המון Hamon, which signifies both a great noise, and also a multitude of people; Some taking one, Some the other. The cause of repeating the word is, as we have said, to shew the greatness of the thing spoken of. Abarbinel gives here another reason, for the diverse sorts of those of which these multitudes should consist, viz. of the dead then raised to life, and of others that were then living of the Edomites (which in his language are Christians) and Ismaelites (viz. Mahometans) which shall, according to his opinion, which we have before seen on ver. 9, &c. be assembled at that day of the resurrection of the dead, which is the time that he supposeth these transactions to belong to, and therefore by המון המון, hamonim, hamonim, multitudes; multitudes, to be meant המון החיים והמון המתים, A multitude of living, and a multitude of dead. Which conceit and expression of his may, if need were, be well enough applied to the opinion of those, who look on what is here said as belonging to the day of the general judgment, when both quick and dead, the whole world of men that ever were, shall be assembled before the judgment seat of God: but will not agree with that other opinion of those, who take here to be meant not that day, but some such wherein God should cause to assemble together vast armies (as the MS. Arabick here renders the word by عساكر) of such as had injured him in his Church, and people, and been enemies to them; that they might be cut off and destroyed; as the same Abarbinel also saith; that if the words be understood only of such as shall be then living, then the meaning of the repeated word will be only המון רב, hamonim rabbim, great multitudes. The place where they are represented as appearing by the ^hProphet speaking of what should certainly be, as if at present being, or summoned to appear, is called עמק החרוץ, Emek hacharuts, the valley of decision, as it is in the text of our last Translation; but in the margin are put two other, viz. of concision and of threshing; which notes that the word hath all those significations, and that either of them gives a meaning so agreeable to the place, that the reader may take which he pleaseth. That which they choose to put in the text, viz. of decision, gives us to look on it as so called, because God will there decide all matters concerning those there assembled before him, and pass judgment on them according to their doings and deservings, for which reason it was before called the valley of Jehoshaphat, as we have seen; wherefore the Chaldee Paraphrast renders them both by מישר פלוג דינא, the valley of the distribution of Judgment or passing judgment severally on all, according to their deserts. The LXX. also, ἐν τῇ κοιλάδι τῆς δίκης, in the valley of judgment, which the printed Arabick also follows, في وادى القضا. The Syriack also, ܕܢܝܚܐ ܕܢܝܚܐ, in valle decisionum, in the valley of decisions. The same notion ⁱthe Authors of

our

4 X

^x Buxt. Thef. l. 2. ch. 2. p. 351. Glaff. Gram. l. 3. Tract. 1. ^y Aben Ezra. ^z See Druf. ^a Jun. Trem. Pife. ^b Pet. a Fig. ^c See Druf. Mercer. ^d Grot. ^e Tig. and Vat. 4to and 8vo. ^f See Druf. and Bib. Græc. of Franckfort Edition in variis Lect. ^g Kam. ^h See Cyril. Gualter. ⁱ And so Diodati.

our more ancient English Translation took, rendring it the valley of final judgment. R. Salomo to this meaning also expounds it, ששם חרוץ המשפט אמר, because there is, or shall be, decided the judgment of truth; which exposition also Kimchi mentions, as indifferently agreeing to the word with that other of concision, which, as by Ours put in the margin as secondary, is by Others preferred to be put in the text, as indeed in place of signification it seems to have priority, and that to be a secondary or by way of * metaphor taken from it; so is it by the Vulgar Latin which renders it, in valle concisionis, in the valley of concision; so also by Others more modern, as Piscator, Junius and Tremellius; and Kimchi (as we said) in his exposition puts it in the first place, giving as a reason of imposition of that name on the valley spoken of, כי שם יהיו הגוים חרוצים וחתוכים, because the nations shall be cut off, or cut in pieces. Abarb. puts as the meaning of the word in this place, and the reason of the name, לפי שכלה ונחרצה תהיה בהם שחה (Isaiah x. 23.) because there shall be to them (or on them) the consumption, even that which is determined. The MS. Arabick renders it מרג אלקטע, the meadow (or plain valley) of cutting, or cutting off, (although it may be understood also of determining or deciding.) R. Tanchum saith that the exposition of it is خندق الهلاك, the trench (or valley) of destruction, and that it is so called, لما يقع فيه من القتل والهلاك في ذلك الوقت, from that slaughter and destruction, that shall in it fall out at that time, which is the notion that Abu Walid also (before him) prefers before any other that is given of the word in this place, it being, he saith, the same valley, which before is called the valley of Jehoshaphat, of which he saith, ^m There will I sit to judge all the beathen round about These what they give for the meaning of the word, according to what they think the place to require, look as taken from or coming under the signification of cutting, of which R. Tanchum in his ⁿ Dictionary saith that wheresoever חרץ, charats (the verb) or חריץ charits, or חרוץ charuts, nouns (from that verb) do occur מרג אלקטע the meaning thereof includes the notion of cutting or sundring. That notion Munster here taking (but seeming to look on that which others take as a noun for a participle) renders it, in valle intercisa, in the cut, or cleft, valley: obscurely enough, as I conceive; but so (as we said) as to shew that he looked on the word as having the signification of cutting. The third rendring, which Ours give choice of, is threshing, which is also by divers taken. So reads our English Translation done at Geneva, In the valley of threshing; with which agrees that which Piscator would have to be put as the most apposite rendring of the words. In valle triturationis, the Hebrew sounding as he saith, in valle tribulae, of threshing instrument, which Calvin also thinks most agreeable to this place, having in the words before had expressions in terms known to husbandmen, and belonging to what they usually are versed about, with which this will well agree, as setting forth the greatness of the wickedness of those spoken of, and their readiness for judgment, by saying the harvest is ripe, the press is full, and bidding the workmen to put in the sickle, after which the threshing of the corn being cut down will properly follow, and the place where that shall be done, viz. that judgment, for which they are ripe, executed on them, may well be called the valley of threshing. But then it will be necessary for the having the right meaning to observe, what must be meant by threshing in this place, that it may answer to the word חרוץ charuts in the Hebrew, and which is in Latin by those that we have named rendred tribula, viz. that it is not such threshing as we ordinarily call that, which is done by striking with a flail, to beat out the corn, but we must understand such as is done by such an instrument, as did break and cut the straw and husks, and so force out the corn, in which the notion of cutting will still have place. Of such instruments they have yet to this day two sorts, one of heavy planks of wood with sharp stones or flints driven into them, which being by beasts drawn over the corn laid in order, do at once (as we said) force out the grain, and beat off the husks, and cut, or break the straw into little pieces like chaff, which they keep for meat for their cattle. Thus doth Kimchi describe well this known instrument in his Dictionary of Hebrew roots, telling us that from this use of it, it is called Charuts (from the root Charats) in the notion of cutting; and that the same instrument is called also מורג Moreg; so saith also Abu Walid, but then in explaining Moreg saith, that it is the same as נורג Naurage in Arabick, which signifies any instrument بداس به الطعام with which corn is trodden out, whether it be of iron or wood, which is the very same explication that in the Arabick Dictionary is given of نورج naurage, by which he renders it. And by this explication of theirs it appears that they had another sort of instrument besides that of wood, consisting more of iron, (as to this day they have in those parts) viz. of two iron wheels dented, as I remember, with sharp teeth like a saw, and coupled with an axle-tree or beam of wood, which being drawn about on the corn in the floor, in the like manner as the former, hath the same effect as that for bruising out the grain, and breaking or cutting the husks and straw. To which manner of beating or breaking out corn with either of these instruments, allusion seems to be had, Isa. xxviii. 27. and 28. and for such acts or dealing with corn, must threshing, if we will here use that word, as that which is with us ordinarily used for the beating out of corn,

* Lively. ¹ هذا عندي أولى ما يعتقد فيه seems to agree the Tigurine version, Excussio.

^m Vers. 12.

ⁿ Called Morghed.

* With which

^p Both these come together, Isa. xli. 15.

corn, which is the end of the one word and the other, be in a larger manner than we imagine, who know perhaps no other instrument than the flail for such purpose, be understood; and that being so understood, then will the words here, the valley of threshing, give us to conceive that God will execute on the wicked there assembled such judgments, which may be resembled to the acts of the husbandman towards the ripe corn gathered into his floor. That executing sharp judgments or punishments may be so expressed, I suppose may appear by what is said, Prov. xx. 26. That a wise king scattereth the wicked, and bringeth the wheel over them. Amos i. 3. Those of Damascus are said to have threshed Gilead בחרצות הברזל bacharutsoth habarzel, with threshing instruments of iron. But perhaps in those places that is to be literally understood of execution done by those instruments, as that by David done on the inhabitants of Rabbah, 2 Sam. xii. 31. which is here only alluded to.

There is yet another signification of the word חרוץ charuts, viz. of Gold. This notion of it Jerome mentions, as if the name of the place, according as he saith to the exposition of some of the Jews, did import a place, viz. the valley of judgment (which they suppose to be Hell) in which excoctis sordibus peccatorum, purum aurum remaneat, the dross of sins (or sinners) being purged away by fire, the pure gold shall remain, viz. the elect alone shall be left (as Mercer explains his meaning.)

The meaning of this Exposition in sum will be much the same with what the former give, as if the place had its name for the execution of God's judgment on his enemies, although the word Charuts in the other hath respect, or refers to the wicked, that shall be punished or destroyed, but in this to the godly, which shall be freed and saved, both in the same place, and at the same time of Judicature, being to receive their doom. Whatever contest be about the proper literal signification of the word, and which should be most agreeable to this place, they seem all well enough to agree in the meaning, which seems not unfitly given by Castalio rendring it, in valle severitatis, in the valley of severity. They all point at a severe proceeding of God in deciding the matters betwixt his friends and his enemies, for the freeing of the one and punishing the other in the time and place by him appointed for it. Both being by him certainly determined, the Prophet here represents them all as already assembled, or summons them to assemble themselves there, and gives us a reason of his so doing, for the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision. The day of the Lord] the day, wherein he will certainly execute judgment or vengeance on his enemies is near. So certainly is the time appointed for it by him, with whom all things are as already present, and with whom a thousand years are as one day, that it well may and ought to be looked on as near at hand, though according to mens way of reckoning it may seem otherwise. In respect to those different reckonings it is said by St. Paul, Phil. iv. 5. The Lord is at hand. Yet again by him, that they should not be shaken in mind or be troubled, as if the day of the Lord were at hand, 2 Thes. ii. 2. So of those things that were to be done, or in doing, to the last of time in this world, St. John, by reason of the certainty of their being fulfilled in due time, saith that they should be fulfilled, ἐν τάχει, or shortly come to pass, Rev. i. 1. So that we may apply to that day the words of Habakkuk concerning his vision, Though it tarry, wait for it, it will surely come, it will not tarry, Hab. ii. 3. For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry, Heb. x. 37. So that it will concern all without delay to prepare to meet the Lord at that day, as if they were summoned presently to do it. And this is a certain truth, whether in respect to any more particular judgment by God determined against any nation, or applied to the day of the last general judgment, which Some (as we have formerly seen) take to be meant by it the one, some the other. And according as they differ as to the time, so do they also as to the place here designed by the name of the valley of charuts. However the name be thought to signify, according to the different opinions which we have seen concerning it, yet is it by all agreed on, that the same is meant which is above, ver. 2. and 12. called the valley of Jehoshaphat, and therefore it will not be necessary to add much concerning the fixing of it to any certain place, more than what hath already been said concerning it. Grotius according to his opinion of things here spoken, and his application of them particularly to the destruction of the Persians by the Grecians under Alexander the Great, understands it of the valley or plain by Gaugamela, where was the last battle between him and Darius, but this may be looked on as his single opinion. Mercer by giving these two different names, viz. the valley of Jehoshaphat, and the valley of Charuts to the place here mentioned, thinks to be argued, non certo loco conclusam hanc vallem, that this valley is not limited to any one particular place, sed esse eam ubicunque Dominus de impiis Ecclesie persecutoribus penas sumit & eos concidit, vel in eos certam ac definitam sententiam fert, but may be understood of any wheresoever God shall execute punishment on the wicked persecutors of his Church, and cut them off or destroy them, or decide and pronounce positive sentence of judgment against them. And surely if that name, or what is said shall be done in it, may be applied to any such place, signally then may it point to the great general judgment, and the place whither all nations shall be summoned together for receiving their doom in it, to which therefore it seems for good reason to be by many more particularly referred; the sense of whom is in the forecited Bishop Hall's Paraphrastical Exposition thus aptly given. For that

2 Pet. iii. 8. Chap. i. 15. Chap. ii. 11. and 31. and this Chap. ver. 9. Arian de expeditione Alexand.
 See Dan. on the place.

that great day of the Lord is near at hand, the terror whereof shall be unspeakable in that dreadful place of Judicature. The epithet of great is not here expressed in the text (as elsewhere it is, as chap. ii. ver. 11. and 31.) but it is necessarily understood by its being appropriated to the Lord; and that it should be a day of terror is manifest by the name, from what should in it be done, given to the place, viz. the valley of Charuts, in which soever of those significations above mentioned, as of decision, concision, or threshing so expounded, as we have seen, it be taken. But withal both the greatness and terror of it are more largely set forth by those extraordinary strange and fearful alterations of the ordinary course of things; which shall accompany the manifestation and transactions of it, in the following words expressed.

Ver. 15. The sun and the moon shall be darkened, and the stars shall withdraw their shining.

The verbs קָדָרָה kadaru, which ours render as in the future tense, shall be darkened, and אָסַף Asephu, shall withdraw, are in the Original in the preterperfect tense, and as so by the Chaldee, by the Syriack and MS. Arabick also rendred, as by the Vulgar Latin Sol & Luna obtenebrati sunt, & stellæ retraxerunt splendorem suum, The Sun and the Moon are darkened, and the Stars have withdrawn their shining, as those of the Doway render it, * and Others also. But * several Others, with whom Ours agree, chose rather to render them as in the future, denoting what should be after, not what was either past or present. In which that they do well appears, it being manifest, that the words, when spoken by the Prophet, did concern what should be, not what had been or at present was, and it is a * known and usual thing in the Prophets, when they foretel things by God determined, to speak of them as already past, or present, to denote the certainty of them, as great as if they already actually had been or were, as we have already observed on chap. ii. verse 10. where we have the same words and in the same way and construction; where also hath been spoken of such expositions as by Interpreters are given of them. They do at the first sound, and according to their literal meaning, represent to us what is great and terrible, things proper to such a day as may signally be called the day of the Lord, not any ordinary day. But whether they be so to be here understood, or otherwise, is among Expositors great difference, as in that place we saw to be. Grotius thinks by the darkening of those celestial bodies, to be meant, the intercepting of their light from men by the darkness and thickness of the air, caused by the great smoke ascending from Persopolis being set on fire, still referring, as we have seen, all here spoken to the destruction by Alexander brought on the Persians and their country. According to his way the words are not literally but figuratively to be understood, and both the day spoken of, and the great accidents or signs appearing in it; have long since had their accomplishment. Others also look on the words as figuratively to be understood; but in a way far different from him; and with no small difference betwixt themselves, both as to the fixing of the day, and to the nature of the signs by which it is made signal and distinguished from other ordinary days. Some by the Sun and Moon and Stars understand such as were of * greatest eminency and power among men, and by the darkening of those celestial bodies and withdrawing their shining, their being deprived of all their glory; and the great confusion that they shall be brought into. So Dr. Stokes paraphraseth the words, At the approach of this terrible day, the world will seem to be all in confusion. They that were the light and glory of their times, and as eminent and conspicuous in the sphere of their government, as the Sun and the Moon and the Stars are in the firmament of Heaven, shall be suddenly obscured, and lose their light. By that terrible day, he seems to understand the day of judgment particularly; but Danaus; who takes the other words as he doth, thinks to be meant by the day of the Lord, any such time as either hath been, or shall be, wherein God hath executed, or shall execute judgment, and shall execute it on nations and the great ones thereof, unto the end of the world; and that at such times what is by these expressions of the darkening of these heavenly bodies meant, hath been, and shall be verified according to such figurative meaning thereof. This exposition is found also more anciently among the Jews. Abarbinel mentions it as agreeable to the opinion of Moses Maïmonides, and himself seems well to approve of it, viz. לְפָרֶשׁ הַשֶּׁמֶשׁ וְהַיָּרֵחַ וְהַכּוֹכָבִים עַל מַלְכֵי הָאוֹמֹת, that the Sun and the Moon and Stars should be interpreted of the Kings of nations, of men of great dignity and power. He also gives another interpretation, viz. that by the Sun's and Moon's being darkened, and the Stars withdrawing their shining, should be meant that those heavenly bodies, which did portend good and prosperity to nations, should restrain their happy influence from descending on them. This seems not so far different from another Exposition both of several among both Jews and Christians, viz. that the saying the Sun and Moon shall be darkened, should be an expression of great * calamities, and consternation brought thereby on men through God's terrible judgments; to men in such condition all things seeming mere darkness, the Sun it self not to shine, nothing affording light or comfort. St. Jerome thinks the words so to sound, as if those heavenly bodies, not able to behold the sorrow of that day of God's judgments spoken of, and the cruel torments inflicted on them that shall then perish, should even out of fear to themselves withdraw their presence. He seems to refer it to the dreadful day of the last judgment, and so do others also, yet giving another reason for what is said of the obscuration of those heavenly luminaries, viz. ^b that they shall be outshined by the most glorious bright lustre of Christ, then appearing in the brightness of his glory, which shall even obscure the sun it self, as the light of the sun doth that of the moon and stars in ordinary days, not by depriving them of the light that is in them, but by out-doing and exceeding it. But there is yet another plain and more literal exposition of the words, taking them to denote ^c such prodigies as shall precede or attend that last dreadful day, and among them a real alteration in the shining of the sun, moon, and stars, not here as elsewhere used as comparative expressions by way of supposition only, but such as signify what shall then really and actually be. These I suppose we may well follow, although in assigning how, and by what means those alterations shall then be effected in those days mentioned, men may only go by conjecture, and not by certain knowledge, till the day it self appearing with its signs and wonders shall make manifest the certain truth. This mean while we are certain of, that what God hath said shall be, shall in its due time, according to his will and by his power, and in such manner, and by such means as he hath determined, be certainly brought to pass.

* Munster. Interlin. * Tig. Pag. Jun. Trem. Castalio. † Ar. Mont. ‡ Danaus, Stokes. § Kimch. on chap. ii. ver 10. and 31. Mercer. Sa. Menoch. Tirin. and to the same purpose Cyril.

16. The Lord also shall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem, and the heavens and the earth shall shake; but the Lord will be the hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel.

These words are by many taken for a farther description of such transactions as God will manifest himself by, at the day of judgment. The Lord, יהוה Jehovah. ^d Here some observe that Christ is called by the name Jehovah, which is proper to God alone, and by his being said to roar and utter his voice, many understand that terrible voice, which all that are in the graves (as well as those that are living) shall hear, and by it awakened, come forth to judgment (John v. 28, 29.) and that dreadful sentence, whereby he shall doom his enemies to everlasting fire, Mat. xxv. 41. By Sion and Jerusalem, out of which it is said he shall roar and utter his voice, according to this, will be well understood heaven; so Bishop Hall in his paraphrase, Christ the Lord shall pass a most fearful sentence of judgment from heaven upon the ungodly; and Diodati in his note on that place, namely out of the seat of his glory, the representation whereof was formerly in the sanctuary, Heb. xii. 22. and to the same purpose others, à medio sanctorum & angelorum, out of the midst of the saints and angels, the holy society of which may be called Sion and Jerusalem. This, I suppose, will be safer and plainer, so to understand those names figuratively, than by taking them more properly to say that the throne of Christ sitting in judgment and thence giving sentence in terrible manner, shall be placed over Sion and Jerusalem, or near them, as it is by ^e many understood. That these words are thus to be understood of the terrible sentence of judgment, then and there to be by Christ pronounced, Cristoph. à Castro owns all to agree in. He may say, I suppose, all that refer what is here spoken to the day of the last judgment; but there are who do not refer it to that, and so neither understand it of that place, nor of that sentence. For there are who, by Sion and Jerusalem, understand God's ^f church here on earth, of which those places were of old the peculiar seat, wherein only he was truly worshipped, but since the preaching of the gospel to all nations, give their names to it wherever spread over the face of the whole earth; and so by his roaring out of Sion, and uttering his voice from Jerusalem, will be understood those terrible judgments and tokens of his indignation, which he will ^g in due time shew in any place against the enemies of his church and faithful people, however for a while he may suffer them to be persecuted and oppressed by such enemies, as if he had not taken care of them. Grotius restrains what is here said to the victories of the Jews over the captains of Antiochus, on whose soldiers God is said to have rained fire and brimstone, as he applies what is said, Ezek. xxxviii. 22. which I suppose is his single opinion, and not necessary to be followed. All these follow the same construction that Ours do, out of Sion, and from Jerusalem, as מציון Mitzion, and מירושלם Mirushalem may well be rendered. But there is yet another given by Others, viz. for Sion, and for Jerusalem, so R. Salomon Jarchi, ממה שיעשו לציון, by reason of what they have done to Zion. So Abarbinel also saith the prefixed preposition מי, mi, is ממבאבב mem basabbab, the letter mem denoting the cause; as if he said, ממבאבב מה שיעשו לציון, By reason of what they have done to Sion, and to Jerusalem, God shall roar as a lion and utter his voice, which is also by some ^h Latin Expositors followed; but the former rendring seems the plainer. There are by Others, who differ not from the first in the construction or literal signification of the words, yet other meanings of some of them given, viz. as that by God's voice, which he shall utter from Jerusalem, are understood those comfortable words of his to his children at the day of Judgment, Come ye blessed of my Father, &c. or else, as ^k Others will, ministerium Evangelii, the ministry of preaching the gospel. Against these are exceptions made, because here it seems spoken of only such things which belong to or denote terror. Such certainly is the import of the word יושג Yishag, shall roar, which properly belongs to the voice of a lion, which among creatures is looked on as most terrible. The lion

4 Y

^b Lyra. and see Cr. à Castro. ^c Pet. à Fig. Ribera. Diodati. ^d Vat. 4^o. 8^o. ^e Vatab. in 4^o. and 8^o. Christoph. à Castro. Menoch. Tirin. see above of that opinion on ver. 2. and ver. 12. ^f Mercer. Tarnov. D. Stokes. ^g Calv. ^h Ar. Mont. ⁱ Lyra. ^k See Mercer. and Bochart. de Animal. ^l Pet. à Fig.

lion hath roared, who will not bear? Amos iii. 8. and ^m the joining the other, shall utter his voice, as a repetition of it, or addition to it, though in a word of a more large, and not necessarily so harsh a signification, seems here to require something of as great terror as the former doth, and that is by ⁿ Some thought to be terrible thunder, by which the voice of the Lord is elsewhere expressed, as well as by the former, as if the same thing were by both signified, it being called, the noise of his voice, and the sound that goeth out of his mouth, Job xxxvii. 2. and ver. 4. it is said, expressing the same thing, A voice roareth, he thundreth with the voice of his excellency, and ver. 5. God thundreth marvellously with his voice. Bochartus, who thinks these words applicable to the preaching of the gospel (as we have said others apply them) thinks these expressions of God's being said to roar and utter his voice, well to agree to it, in as much as it is, tam clara & sonora, ut per totum orbem audita fuerit, nec solum aures, sed etiam auditorum animos vi sua perculerit, & sollicitos reddiderit de salute sua cum metu & tremore procuranda, a voice so clear and shrill, that it hath been heard throughout the whole earth, and pierced not only the ears, but the hearts of the hearers by its force, and made them careful of procuring their salvation with fear and trembling. But the description of the voice here seems not so much to set forth the shrillness or loudness and efficacy of it, which may well be applied to the gospel, ^a the sound whereof hath gone into all the earth, and its words unto the ends of the world, as the horror and terribleness of it, which seems more to agree to the denouncing of dreadful judgments; and with what terrors this shall be, appears not only by what hath been already spoken of the description of it, but farther by the effects of it in the next words, And the heavens and the earth shall shake, which, however understood, whether literally or figuratively, argues certainly much terribleness in that, by which such extraordinary effects, as those expressions necessarily import, shall be produced. The heavens and the earth shall shake. A strange alteration in the ordinary course of nature do these words denote, if they be literally understood, yet such as by the power of the voice of God, to whom nothing is impossible, may be easily effected, whensoever or on what occasion soever he shall please; so that if we should understand them literally, (as Some do) I know not what exception may be made, yet are they by Expositors differently understood; by some, of such extraordinary commotions and tremblings, which are caused in the earth by earthquakes, and (as at least ^p it may seem to men) in the heavens by thunder, Ut terra terræ motu, ita cælum tonitru concuti & tremere dicitur, saith Mr. Lively. As the earth by an earthquake, so the heaven by thunder is said to be shaken: and this is language, in speaking of such thunder and earthquakes as are according to the ordinary course of nature, allowed of, but much more agreeable if it be understood of such supernatural effects, as shall be by the terror of God's roaring voice at the day of Judgment, attended with so many wonderful signs ^q as are spoken of it, by which the powers of heaven, and the whole frame of nature shall be shaken. By it so applied we may well understand as literally meant, that, as Jerome speaks, calorum cardines & terrarum fundamenta quatentur, the poles of heaven and the foundations of the earth shall be really shaken. How shall this be thought strange, when, as St. Peter ^r speaks of the terror of that day, The heavens therein shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burnt up. Others do not so literally and strictly understand them of the frame of those bodies the heaven and the earth themselves, but of the inhabitants of both, angels and men (^s as Some speak) both moved by the great terror in which the Lord shall appear: or (as Others) tam cælestes quam terreni cives, both the heavenly and earthly citizens, meaning the saints and the wicked; and Lyra interprets that, for the receiving of the one heaven shall be moved, and the earth for receiving the other, hell being said to be under the earth. R. Salomon Jarchi expounds the meaning of, the heavens and earth shall shake and tremble, יפרע משרים של מעלה, שרי האומות, he shall take vengeance on the princes that are above, the princes of the nations, ואחר כך מן האומות, and after that on the nations. Abarbinel seems to like of this opinion, as agreeing with one of his own (for he saith it may be otherwise all interpreted literally) which is, that by the heavens and the earth are meant, המפעלים העליונים והתחתונים המושפעים, The superior bodies which do influence, and the inferior which are influenced, which then shall be made ineffectual, the one from giving, the other from receiving influence. These expositions I find not in any Christian Interpreters, except we comprehend them under the general notion of inhabitants, or ^t citizens of heaven and earth, which we have above had. Others look on the words as ^u by way of hyperbole spoken to denote so great a terror in the voice of God uttered against the wicked, as were enough to cause the whole frame of the world to shake, much more frail weak men. ^v Others to this sense, that though all things in the world, heaven and earth itself, should oppose God in his proceeding against the enemies of his church, they should not be able to withstand him, at the terror of his voice they should all quake and tremble, and he prevail over them. In all these ways, to what time soever they refer the words, whether to the day of the last judgment, or to any other time wherein God hath hath brought, or shall bring, any signal destruction on the enemies of him and his church, it appears that though he do suffer those his enemies for a while to prosper and prevail, yet he will in due time take vengeance on them, and appear with such irresistible power and terror, that they, though they had the whole world on their side, shall not be able to stand against, but fail and tremble under it, without knowing where to seek, or whither to fly for succour from it: mean while, though so great be the terror with which he shall at any time appear, yet the effects thereof to those to whom he so appears shall be much different, other to his enemies, other to his friends. All cannot but fear, but that fear, while it shall cause in his enemies despair, and end in their utter destruction, shall but awaken his children, and cause them to draw nearer, and fly to him for refuge, and adhere more closely to him. So the next words shew how it shall be with them in that great day of terror and confusion to his enemies. But the Lord will be the hope of his people, &c. ^a But, for and, or, for the Lord will be, or shall be, erit, or as ^b Others, est is; for the verb being not expressed in the Hebrew is diversly understood, by Some as in the future, by Others in the present tense; that in this place makes no great difference, being spoken of the Lord, who was, is, and will or shall be always the same, as in other cases; so in what he is here said to be, or that he will, or shall be, even in the time of the greatest fear and terror to others, the hope of his people, &c. so that when others droop in despair, they may, as our Saviour bids them, look up, and lift up their head, as assured that their redemption draweth near, or is now come, Luke xxi. 28. For what is in the Text put, the hope, is in our Bibles of the last Translation, put in the Margin, Heb. (i.e. in the Hebrew it is) place of repair, or harbour. These make but the same sense, which either of them be taken, and the Hebrew indifferently signifies either, being the word מִחְסֵה Machseh, which coming from the word חָסַב chafab, which signifies both to repair, or betake one self to, and also to hope, or trust in, may be rendred by either of them, or other of like nature, and is to such purpose by most rendred, as either, ^c spes, ^d receptus, ^e refugium; yet have we in some ancient translations a more different signification: as namely in the LXX. who read the words, καὶ ὁ κύριος θεοῦ τῶν υἱῶν αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἐνισχυσαὶ τοὺς υἱοὺς Ἰσραὴλ, and the Lord shall spare his people, and shall strengthen the sons of Israel. So likewise in the printed Arabick which follows the Greek. So also in the Syriack אַלְמַן בְּאֵמָנָא יִסְכְּחוּ, which gives to conjecture, that the word חָסַב chafab was anciently used in the Hebrew, not only in that forementioned signification of repairing to, or hoping in, but also in the same that חָסַב chus is, viz. to spare, or be propitious to, for which we have a probable argument, for as much as in the Syriack of nigh affinity with it, both those roots, as well חָסַב or חָסַב Chaso, or Chasi, which answer to חָסַב chafab in Hebrew, as חָסַב chas, which answers to חָסַב chus, signify to spare, to be merciful or propitious.

^m Mercer. ⁿ Druf. ^o Rom. x. 18. ^p Tirin. iii. 10. ^q Pet. à Fig. Sa. Menoch. Ribera. ^r Chr. à Heavens understands the Angels. ^s Mercer, Menoch.

^q 1 Thes. iv. 16. Mat. xxiv. 29. Luc. 21. 25. ^r 2 Pet. Castro. ^u Shall make ineffectual. ^v Grotius by the ^z Calv.

These whose hope God will be, are his people, those whose strength he will be, the children of Israel, both appellations denote the same persons, viz. such as rightly believe in him, and faithfully serve and obey him, they are his people, they only, his Israel, not they who are descended from Israel only according to the flesh; thus we are taught to understand that title, where given to God's people; so by the Apostle telling us, Rom. ix. 7. That they are not all Israel, which are of Israel, neither all children, because they are the seed of Abraham, but as many as walk according to the rule which Israel did, in true belief and sincere obedience, and constant adherence to God, though they be not according to the flesh of Israel's seed, they are the Israel of God, (Gal. vi. 16.) To such only doth the promise here, and the like elsewhere made to the people of God under the name of Israel, or, of the children of Israel, properly belong; it is their peculiar privilege to find God their hope and strength, or a sure refuge, when he proceedeth with the greatest terror against his and their enemies, though they have perhaps seemed before most hopeless and helpless of any: what effect this dealing of God shall have with them, the words in the following verse declare.

17. So shall ye know that I am the Lord your God dwelling in Zion, my holy mountain: then shall Jerusalem be holy, and there shall no strangers pass through her any more.

By seeing what they now see effectually brought to pass, they shall now indeed, and by certain experimental proofs assuredly know, what they did before only by faith and hope rely on, viz. that however hitherto things went with them, so as might tempt them to think that God had no regard of them, yet that he in truth was the Lord their God, who still had an eye on them, and took especial care of them, and so ordered things as that they should prove in the issue for good to them. This seems the import of the words, by which God expresseth that relation, which he hitherto owneth them in, to himself, viz. that he is the Lord their God dwelling in Zion his holy mountain. They shall know that he the Lord, the God of the whole earth, of all flesh, is so to them, not only as he is to all the rest of the world, but by a peculiar right and relation their God, dwelling and residing in a more particular manner among them in Sion, as in his proper habitation and place of residence, consecrated and made holy to himself above all other places, and so necessarily having greater privileges and tokens of his presence and favour than any others. Of that expression whereby he calleth himself their God, see above,

I

^a The copulative ו, v, is in any of these significations, as the sense requires.
^d Jun. ^c Tig. Chald. חָסַב a prop. ^f Pet. à Fig.

^b Jun. Trem.

^e Vulg.

bove, chap. 2. ver. 27. of what may be meant by Zion there also, ver. 32. What peculiar signs of his presence he did of old, till Christ's coming, shew in that place so properly called, and is therefore said to dwell in his Temple there built, is well known; but it is since, besides that, in a larger sense used to denote the church, and that whether militant here on earth, and in any place thereof, or triumphant in heaven, and is here by Expositors of it understood, and by ^a Some in the one respect, by ^b Others in the other. God certainly dwelleth or sheweth signal tokens of his care of it and presence with it in both. The meaning of what God here says they shall know, by seeing what he hath done, Abarbinel thus gives. That when the children of Israel shall see that great vengeance (of God) on their enemies, and especially when they shall see the dead raised up again on the earth, they shall know and believe in truth that the Lord he is their God, that continually looks after them (or hath care of them) and that the world is not guided in its course (as to them) by way of nature or by way of accident, but that the affairs אומותנו, of our nation (saith he) are all of them ordered by way of providence, which is that which he saith, and ye shall know that I am the Lord your God; and also that they shall know that the Blessed one dwelleth in Zion, his holy mountain: as much as to say, that his glorious presence and holiness should reside there in greater measure than in former time, &c. His meaning expressed in terms agreeable to the opinion of the Jews, who challenge God and his especial care and providence as their own peculiar, and restrain his church, the seat of which was anciently their Zion, to their nation alone, would, if put into such as Christians informed by the gospel do understand and use, agree with that of those ancient Expositors, who understand what is here spoken, of God's great goodness, and signal tokens of his favour, which he shall manifest in and to his church, especially when he shall, after the resurrection, make it triumphant in heaven, when all his saints, the members thereof, shall without any intermission enjoy perpetually his glorious and gracious presence, and be freed from all fear of enemies. Surely the great benefits and tokens of God's favour to his church will not till then have their full completion, and in their perfection be made good to it; yet hath it then always Christ in so good measure communicated to it, even while militant in this world, as to justify the applying the words (as by Others is done) even to that, as enjoying God's presence and signs of his providence and protection, so as no other sort or sect of men, do or ever did; and what they want of full enjoyment of them in act and present sense of sight, is supplied to them by the sight of faith and certain hope. Which also will be to be understood in interpreting the next words. Then shall Jerusalem be holy, &c. In which, Jerusalem may be taken, and by many, yea by most is, and I suppose rightly, as Sion which was in it, not for the city properly so called, but for that of which it was a type, viz. the church of God, and that whether militant or triumphant, and by ^c Some it is here understood of that militant here on earth, by Others very many, of that triumphant in heaven, which is called the holy Jerusalem descending out of heaven from God, Rev. xxi. 10. which of those we should rather join with, will be best judged by considering what is said of it, that then it shall be holy, &c. Then, (or And) Jerusalem, that place by that name meant, shall be holy, קודש Kodesh, holiness, as Ours in the margin note the Hebrew literally to sound, the word being a substantive, and in the abstract, not in the concrete or an adjective, which may well be looked on to denote a superlative degree of holiness more than what is given to understand, when a thing is called simply in the concrete holy, that it is all holy as holiness itself, and so the place of which it is said that it should so be holy in a superlative degree above what that of that name at that present was. Jerusalem as then it was, was called the holy city, as Nebemiah xi. 1. and 18. Isa. lii. 1. Mat. iv. 5, and xxvii. 53. and elsewhere. The saying here it should be holiness, seems to argue, that it should now either obtain a greater perfection of holiness, or that another Jerusalem, than that which was then, is meant. Abarbinel thinks an allusion to be here made to the several degrees of holiness, which belonged to several places in Jerusalem, when it was in its beauty. His words in his Commentary on this place, following those already cited from him, thus sound, "That whereas in the times of the first Temple, the house of God was holy, and no man might enter into the היכל be-cal, the body of the Temple, except the priests of the Lord, much less into the Holy of Holies, into which none entered but only the High Priest once in the year, then לעתיד לבוא in the time to come, the whole city of Jerusalem shall be in degree like to the holy house, and the Temple of God, so that no uncircumcised or profane person shall enter thereinto, by reason of the manifestation of the acts of the majestick presence in the midst of it." And therefore he saith, Jerusalem shall be holy (or holiness,) and strangers shall not pass through there any more לקדשה, by reason of her holiness. Others, he saith, do otherwise interpret it, viz. that by saying, strangers shall not pass through it any more, is meant that they shall not pass through Jerusalem any more to war against it, when they see that great ruin, which shall be on those nations, which went up against it to take it; which he saith is also a convenient exposition. Much the like to both these expositions have we before him from Kimchi, whose words sound. "And Jerusalem shall be holiness, i. e. as an holy thing prohibited to strangers, (or unlawful for strangers to meddle with) and strangers shall not pass through it any more,

^a Mercer. ^b Pet. a Fig. ^c Quæ enim ista habet in re, hæc latet in spe. Pet. a Fig.

^d Mercer. Hoc de ecclesia in terris intelligo.

“ more, viz. to hurt it, as hitherto they have done. It may, saith he, be also understood, that strangers should not enter into Jerusalem, because great shall be the holiness there of לעתיד leatid, in the time to come: so that as it was unlawful (formerly) for any, even an Israelite, to enter into the Temple, so then should the whole city be holy, so that no strangers of the nations of the world should enter into it.” In these expositions are observable two things, first, that by Jerusalem they understand the city properly and literally so called. Secondly, that the great privileges of extraordinary holiness and security promised here to it, belong לעתיד לבוא to the time hereafter to come, by which Abarbinel expresseth himself to mean after ^k a resurrection of the dead. Kimchi doth not name the time, but we may well think he means, ¹ Somniant illam terrenam Jerusalem, quam expectant per Messiam edificandam, (as one expresseth,) in that earthly Jerusalem which they dream of, which they expect shall be new built by the Messias. But this conceit of theirs, viz. that there shall hereafter be such a glorious Jerusalem on earth, to which shall be made good such great privileges as are here mentioned, we look on as among those things, which the Jews vainly and groundlessly expect to be done in and for their nation in time to come, consequent on their opinion that Christ is not at all yet come. Among Christian Expositors, who know and acknowledge him to be come, such as will here by Jerusalem understand that city properly so called, must necessarily look on these things as such as referring to it have already had their completion, while that stood in its glory, but the assigning when they were made good is, I suppose, that which we shall not find any of them to satisfy us in; which is the cause, we may suppose, that Cyril and Theodoret look on the good things here promised, if referred to it, to be not an absolute, but a conditional promise, that if, or when the inhabitants of that city should purge themselves from all iniquity and false worship, and serve God in purity and sincerity, as they ought to do, then should they be in such an happy condition as is here described. If things were not so with them, it was, saith Theodoret, because their evil doings hindered them from so being, God’s promises to them requiring, that the conditions on their part required should by them be made good and observed. The same saith Aben Ezra among the Jews, supposing to be understood אם ישמרו &c. If they shall observe the law of the Lord, as it is expressed in Zech. By whom having promised many good things, as that he would dwell in the midst of them, Chap. ii. 10. he after adds, Chap. vi. 15. And this shall come to pass, if ye diligently observe the voice of the Lord your God.

Grotius hath no more on this verse than to explain that which is said, There shall no stranger pass through her, by saying hereby to be meant hostili exercitu, with an enemy Army, not mentioning of what time it is meant; but by what he saith on the foregoing verse it is manifest, that he understands it of such time as was after the defeat of Antiochus. But as to the most part of Christian Expositors, whom I have seen, I find them not to receive satisfaction from such a secure condition as can be assigned to the earthly Sion or Jerusalem, after the uttering of these words by the Prophet, and that therefore they look on those names as here figuratively taken (as elsewhere oft they are) to signify the Church of God, and that either as militant here on earth, or triumphant in heaven, in both which respects that name agreeing, and being applied to it, by Some it is here looked on a denoting it in the one, by Others in the other. In both, the things here said will well agree and be applied to it, though in the one, viz. of the Church militant, having a more evident completion, according to the utmost that the words can import, than in the other. Whereas if they be applied to the Church militant, though that may be said to be holy, or holiness, ^m being clad with the righteousness of its Spouse Christ imputed to it, ⁿ sanctified by faith in him, ^o who gave himself for it, that he might sanctify it, and cleanse it by washing of water by the word, that he might present it to himself a glorious Church, not having spot or wrinkle, &c. and, that there shall no stranger pass through it, he having said that the gates of hell shall not prevail against it, Mat. xvi. 18. Yet there seems place for exceptions against this exposition, as that the visible Church hath never been so pure and holy, but that there have been many of impure and unholy conversation in it, who have yet professed and pretended themselves to be true members of it: again, that the purest and holiest parts of the Church have been oppressed and even trampled upon and profaned by strangers and enemies to it. According to Some, these objections are solved, first; by saying, that the profane hypocrites, though mingled with the true professors in the pale of the Church, as tares growing in the same field with the wheat, yet are not members of the Church, and therefore do not make it unholy. Though to men, who are not able so well to distinguish one from the other, they may bring a scandal on it, yet in God’s sight they do not, who looks on as, and acknowledgeth for, his Church and members thereof, only such as are pure and still sincere in heart, and labouring after holiness, however liable to failings. ^p In vera enim Ecclesia, quæ Dei sponsa est sine ruga & macula, impiis etiam in hoc sæculo locus non est, &c. For in the true Church, which is the spouse of God without wrinkle or spot, profane and unholy persons have not, even in this world, any place. However they may pretend to be part thereof, and deceive men, they cannot deceive God, qui illos ex Ecclesiæ suæ numero non habet, who reckons them not

4 Z.

iii

^k For a double resurrection he thinks shall be. v. 25, 26, 27. Tit. ii. 14. ^p See Mercer.

¹ Pet. a Fig.

^m Tarnov.

ⁿ Acts xxvi. 18.

^o Eph,

in the number of his Church, or citizens of the holy Jerusalem, which in respect of the sincere part thereof, is by God sanctified, purged, and made, and called holiness, and his promise to them shall not be void. Then, as for what may be said, that even these are often overcome and oppressed by their enemies, is by ^a Some answered, that the reason of this is not from God's failing in his promise, and faithfulness to them, but from their own default in not making good in themselves what is as a condition expected on their parts, viz. that they keep themselves holy, as he hath afforded them means to do, and expects they should do. Hoc debet imputari peccatis nostris, nos enim facimus rupturas (saith Calvin), This is to be imputed to our sins, for we are those that make those breaches, by which those enemies of the Church enter in and trample on it. ^r Quoties illud fit, hoc nostro vitio fieri certum est, saith Another, As oft as it is so with the Church, it is certain that it is by their own fault; so looking on the words including as well a condition in them required, that they should keep themselves such, as God promiseth he will make them; if they will have the other promise of his defence of them from their enemies breaking in on them, made good to them. This answer is agreeable to what we before saw to be the opinion of Theodoret, though taking perhaps Jerusalem in another meaning than these do. ^s Another answer also we find given, viz. that such afflictions and persecutions which befall the Church, or the seeming of strangers or profane enemies to prevail over it, do not contradict or make void this good promise here made to it. That no such shall pass through her, nocendi scilicet causa, so as to do her hurt. For though she may be assaulted, yet God will never suffer her to be quite overcome or destroyed; so that she hath still wherewith to comfort and sustain her in her afflictions, so that they shall not do her harm, but more stir her up in the study and ways of holiness, and confirm her. These considerations will be sufficient to shew, that if by Jerusalem here be understood the Church militant here on earth, these good promises do belong even so, and are so made always good to her. Yet do Others think it more safe and plain to refer it to that triumphant in heaven, to which the words will in their most comprehensive signification agree. That shall be holy (holiness to the Lord) in all respects that that Epithet may be thought to import it, 1. Holy, ^t as pura ab omni labe culpe, the members thereof being pure and cleansed from all spot and defilement of sin. 2. Holy, ^u as a sacred thing wholly consecrated unto God, his peculiarly; and so ^x chara Deo, & sub ejus cura, favore ac tutela, &c. dear unto him, and under his care, favour, and protection, safe and free from the dominion, spoil, and possession of profane people, by which it might be profaned and polluted. 3. Holy, as not admitting or acknowledging for members of it any unholy or profane persons. For there shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination or maketh a lie, Rev. xxi. 27. which is plainly expressed here in the following words, and there shall no stranger pass through her any more. No stranger] None that are without Christ ^a aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise; the word not being taken here as importing distinction of nations, so as to account them strangers one to another in that regard. For in Christ and his Church is no such distinction or difference betwixt ^b Greek and Jew, circumcision or uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond or free, that because of any such carnal respect any should be accounted strangers to his Church, they being ^c all one in him, all the Israel of God, ^d fellow-citizens with the Saints, and of the household of God. But the strangers to his Church here are such as are so in respect of their relation to God and his truth, strangers ^e à fide, from the true faith in him, unbelievers, profane and wicked persons, and enemies to his Church. Of such it is said they shall not pass through his holy Jerusalem, his Church, either to do violence to it, or to profane it, or we may say they shall have no intercourse at all with it. The Syriack here (as it is in the copies that we have) renders it ܠܐ ܢܝܡܪܘܢ ܕܢܝܒܝܬ ܕܝܪܘܫܠܡ lo neemerun, non inhabitabunt, shall not dwell in it. Which though the meaning be good, and may be comprehended under the other which the Hebrew literally signifies, and all other Interpreters generally take, viz. that of passing through, yet I cannot but doubt whether the Author of that Version did at first so render it, and not rather, ܠܐ ܢܝܒܪܘܢ lo neeberun, which agrees as in the radical letters with the Hebrew, so in that signification which Others take; it in, of larger extent than dwelling in, which seems to import a fixed resting in a place, whereas the other notes any coming at all or having to do in it; which to be the condition of strangers or profane persons in respect of the heavenly Jerusalem the Church triumphant, to which this last opinion mentioned restrains this promise or privilege, is given us to understand by what Abraham in the parable, Luke xvi. 26. saith as from heaven to the rich man in hell, between us and you there is a great gulf fixed, so that there is no passing of the inhabitants of the one into the other. Such alteration that we conjecture to be in the Syriack copies that we have, both written and printed, from what the Author of that Translation first gave, is but by an easy mistake in some ancient Transcriber of the letter ܐ b for ܡ m, and so for Neebarun, shall pass, writing Neemarun, shall dwell, which giving a good sense might make neither him, nor any that wrote after him, to suspect any error in the reading. But 'tis not impossible that the Author himself might so at first render it, and think by not passing through the place to be meant not dwelling or having

^a Calv. Gualt.^r Gualter.^b Mercer.^t Ribera.^u Pet. a Fig.^x Lively.^y Eph. ii. 12.^c Colof. iii. 11.^d Gal. iii. 28.^e Gal. vi. 16.^f Eph. ii. 19.^g Vat. in 8vo.

having liberty of residing in it, as certainly no profane person or strangers to the true faith shall have in the Church triumphant, to which that the words here chiefly refer, may seem also shewed by the adding the particle וְעוֹד od, any more, or at all, which takes away that exception, to which the other opinion of those who refer them to the true Church even here on earth, and yet militant, seems liable, because therein the wicked and profane mingle themselves among the true members of it, though not being members of it, but meer strangers to it. Yet seeing it cannot be doubted but to that, even on earth, the great and good promises of God do belong, it seems not amiss with Others to join both these together, as both had respect to, as sharers of these great privileges here mentioned, viz. that they shall be made good in Ecclesia militante, quæ postea fiet triumphans, in the Church militant, which shall after become triumphant. Here on below, no strangers shall prevail over it, there, above, none at all assault it or approach to it.

18. And it shall come to pass in that day, that the mountains shall drop down new wine, and the hills shall flow with milk, and all the rivers of Judah shall flow with waters, and a fountain shall come forth of the house of the Lord, and shall water the valley of Shittim.

Having in the foregoing verse shewed what security the holy Jerusalem shall be in from all profanation and violence by any enemies, he here farther proceeds to shew the great happiness of the inhabitants thereof, by describing the plentiful enjoyment that they then shall have of all such good things as may conduce thereto. The words in which he expresseth himself, saying, the mountains shall drop down with wine, and the hills shall flow with milk, &c. appear at first reading to be, as R. Tanchum saith, استغارة لكثرة الخصب والبركات a metaphorical figurative speech, denoting abundance of plenty and blessings. The mountains, saith he, shall drop down עֵסִיס asis, new wine, as Ours with several Others render the word by mustum, new wine. For there is difference betwixt Interpreters in rendring it both here and elsewhere, where it occurs, as besides others, it doth above chap. i. 5. and likewise Amos ix. 13. where much the same words that here occur, and Ours render the word עֵסִיס asis, sweet wine, though putting z in the Margin, new wine, as here in the text they put it. The Chaldees in all these places put חמר מרת Chamar merat, vinum merum, mere, pure wine; which Some render here vinum inebrians, wine that maketh drunk (strong heady wine) The LXX here, and Amos ix. 13. render it γλυκασμὸν; the Vulgar Latin, dulcedinem, sweetness, the Tigurin Version here and above; chap. 1. succum expressum, juice squeezed out, and in Amos, succum dulcem, sweet juice. Castalio here, as in the other two places, laticem, juice, without any epithet added to it. On these little differences we need not much to stand, in as much as (as hath been on chap. i. 5. noted) the word being from the root עסס afas, which signifies to press or tread on, (as Mal. iv. 3.) will properly signify in general any juice or liquor that is by pressing or treading squeezed out of any fruit or other things, without limiting it by any quality of sweet, or sower, or the like; and because wine is so made, and was the most in use among other liquors so made, may it well, as the place where it occurs will require, be understood more peculiarly of that; as it is therefore here by so many done, and because that, especially when new, is usually sweet, therefore not unfitly with that epithet of new or sweet, which the LXX and Vulgar Latin, putting sweetness in the abstract, do, yet we must suppose given to be understood wine, that abounds in sweetness, the word properly signifying the substance rather than the quality. And so are the different Translations easily reconcilable, as all meaning the same thing, viz. some such sweet and pleasant liquor as was in esteem, and of ordinary and especial use, and that probably wine of grapes, though R. Tanchum, in his note on this place, say that it is by Some said more peculiarly to signify شراب الرمان wine of pomegranates (because I suppose that it seems Cant. viii. 2. so applied) although in his Rabbinical Dictionary called Morshed, he saith that it may there be understood not of the juice of pomegranates, but of red wine in colour like the pomegranate (or grains of pomegranates). This word being so understood of some such precious liquor, it is manifest that the other words, the mountains shall drop down, are not literally, but figuratively (as we said) and hyperbolically to be understood to denote so great plenty of such liquor, as should without trouble or difficulty be had from the grapes or like fruits, which in abundance should grow on those mountains, as if the mountains themselves did distil and issue it forth, not as though any should think that they should really and actually do so, a thing never seen or to be expected, a thing contrary to the nature of the creation. In like manner will the following words be understood, and the hills shall flow with milk, i. e. such plenty of milk shall there be from the milk-cattle feeding on those hills, as if they themselves did issue forth fountains and streams of milk, or were themselves dissolved into milk which ran down, for so the words הלכנה חלב telacnah chalab, would properly sound, shall go or run milk; the act of running, which belongs to the milk, being as Kimchi notes, attributed to the hills themselves, to set forth the wonderful plenty of that, שיוצא מהמרעה שהיה בהם whicb proceeds from the pasture (or cattle feeding in the pastures) which shall be on them, as Abarbinel explains it. Great abundance must that needs import of the things named; or of such as are by them meant or under their names comprehended:

1

^e Vat. edit. in 8vo and 4to. Polyglot.

^f Isa. lix. 26. Cant. viii. 2.

^z As likewise in that place of Isaiah.

^{Bib.}

hended. For whether they are properly or literally to be understood, or otherwise, will be necessary to enquire, after we have viewed the following words also according to the letter, the next of which are, and all the rivers of Judah shall flow (or go, Marg.) with waters, of which Kimchi observes the like that he did of the former, viz. that the act of flowing, or going, which is of the water, is attributed to the place in which it runs, for יְפֵי־אֶפְרַיִם Aphike, which Ours interpret, rivers, seems according to him more properly here to signify the channels, than the waters that run in them: still here is expression of great plenty of that which is named or meant. So also in the following words, and a fountain shall come forth of the bouse of the Lord, and shall water (a fountain yielding such plenty of water as to water) the Valley of Shittim. שִׁטִּים Shittim is here by Ours taken as the proper name of a place, so it is by the Chaldee (written Sittin) and by the Syriack written ܣܬܝܡ Sotim) and so likewise by most modern Interpreters, and as so doth it occur in other places of Scripture, as Numb. xxv. 1. where it is said that Israel abode in Shittim, and there committed whoredom with the daughters of Moab. Again, Josh. ii. 1. and iii. 1. as also Mich. vi. 5. it is said to have been in the land of Moab on the other side Jordan, and not far from it; so that by R. Saadias cited by Kimchi and Arbarbinel, it is taken for Jordan itself, against which * Some except, because dry places are said to be watered, not rivers; (but perhaps by Jordan he might mean the country by Jordan.) The saying that it shall water, argues that the place was of itself dry, it being so far remote from Jerusalem, that the fountain there issuing out of the house of the Lord must be a very plentiful stream, that should send out so much water as to flow so far, and then water dry ground. R. Salomo also manifestly takes it for the proper name of that place mentioned, Numb. xxv. 1. saying that the words according to the literal sound are, shall water the plain (or valley of Shittim) which do allegorically denote that it shall expiate the sin of Peor.

But amongst antient Interpreters there are, who do not so take it for a proper name, but appellatively, and also translate it, and that differently. The Greek LXX, though in those other places of Numb. xxv. 1. &c. they take it as the name of a place, putting for it σατταῖμ, Satteim, or σατταῖν, Sattein, as Josh. ii. 1. or σατταῖν, Sattiein, Josh. iii. 1. yet here render it, τὸν χειμάρρα τῶν ῥοιῶν (or as Others ῥοιῶν) which being rendred, torrentem funiculorum, the torrent of cords, Jerome would have that to denote such measuring as the Egyptians numbred by the length of cords; but others by it understand juncos, bulrushes, or some such sort of reeds, as the word also signifies, as Nazianzen in his 40th Oration, and Nicetas in his Comment on it, who saith that the torrent, or valley here mentioned, is a place not far from Jerusalem, aqua carens & juncos proferens, without water, bringing forth rushes or reeds. In which signification Cyril also takes it, viz. as a denomination χειμάρρας τινὸς, of a certain torrent or brook, by which grew many rushes, which he saith is said to be the same that is called the brook Cedron (or of Cedais) mentioned John xviii. 1.

These two interpretations of cords, and of rushes, however differing in sound, are easily reconcileable, and may be looked on as a description of one and the same place, in as much as the word ῥοιῶν signifies both a rush and also a cord, made of rushes, so that to say the brook of cords made of rushes, or of rushes of which such cords are made, will be in effect the same thing. The Latin Interpreter of the Greek, though he here determine the word to the notion of cords, yet Micab. vi. 5. where it again occurs, leaves it ambiguous, rendring it Schanis, (which we may almost think they put as a name of a place) in which place seems a manifest error in the printed Arabick (which seems in these Books of the Prophets done out of the Greek) there being in it put من جبال Men gebal, from the mountains, far different from the Greek; whereas here agreeable to it is read من حبال Men Hebal, from the cords, by an easy mistake between the letter ح and ج, betwixt which the difference consists only in the adding of a point or omitting it. In that place Jerome notes also in his opinion to be an error in the Greek itself, which if it concern that place, may equally seem to concern this, viz. that whereas now is there read ῥοιῶν, which by the Latin Interpreter is there rendred Schanis, and here funiculorum, it was at first in the Greek rendred and written ῥοιῶν, which signifies lintisk or mastick trees, and by the error of the scribes turned into ῥοιῶν, ropes. That would more agree with the Vulgar Latin, both taking it for the name of a tree, though of different kinds; for that ancient translation, though in Micab taking it as a proper name, it is read de Setim, from Setim, yet here renders נַחַל הַשִּׁטִּים nachal hashittim, torrentem spinarum, the torrent of thorns, as if the word shittim, signifies thorns: that Shittab is the name of a tree, we find Isa. xli. 19. and in other places is mention of Shittim wood, as a wood of especial note, and therefore reckoned among the chiefest things, which the Israelites were to offer for making the tabernacle, Exod. xxv. 5. and of which things of greatest esteem therein were made, as the Ark, ver. 10. the staves, ver. 13. the table, ver. 23. as likewise chap. xxvi. of the same Book is mention of boards of the wood so called, ver. 15. and of bars, ver. 26. and of pillars, ver. 32. and of the altar to burn incense upon, chap. xxx. 1. and so among the offerings, which were to be offered by the people for the tabernacle, is reckoned Shittim wood, Exod. xxxv. 7 and 24. and Deut. x. 3. it is said that Moses made an Ark of Shittim wood, in which he put the two tables of the Law, of all these places mentioned, only in the first, viz. that of Isaiah, is the word as here rendred in that ancient Latin Version, spina, thorn, in the other the Hebrew word being

* Kimchi העמקים שגורים בהם המים

* Pet. à Fig.

¹ p. 1067.

being retained and written Setim, as if that were the known name of the tree of which that wood was; but by the uses which in those places that wood is said to be put to, it is manifest that it cannot be thought meant an ordinary thorn; and so ^m Jerome himself therefore declares himself to think that it is not properly to be meant the thorn tree, but a tree so called because it is like to the spina alba, or white thorn, viz. colore & foliis, in the colour and leaves, non magnitudine, not in bigness, as being a tree of such great bigness that of it are cut very large boards, and that the wood thereof is, as very strong, so exceeding light and beautiful, and withal such as will not putrify and corrupt, and therefore by the LXX in the places out of the Law cited, rendred by ἀσπλην imputribilia, wood that would not rot or putrify, which trees, he saith, grew not in any cultivated places, or in the Roman territories, but in the deserts of Arabia. This he speaks as of what he was an eye-witness to, and therefore Mr. Fuller thinks ought to be believed in the matter, yet ⁿ Kimchi saith it is a kind of the best sort of cedar, and so Junius and Tremellius here render it, vallem cedrorum lectissimarum, the valley of the choicest cedars, as Isa. xli. 19. They also so render שטח, which Ours render the Shittah-tree, by lectissimam cedrum, so distinguishing it from ארז Arez, the known common cedar there joined with it, as also in those other places of Exodus and Deuteronomy before mentioned, ligna cedrorum lectissimarum, wood of the choicest cedars. Amongst those different acceptions of the word שטח Shittim, our Translators choose to follow those who take it for a proper name of a place, so called probably because many trees so called grow in or about it; though ^p Others think the trees there growing, and the wood thence brought, so called from the name of the valley where they did in abundance grow, ^q not the valley from them, but from some town there situated, or for some other reason. The word נחל nachal, here by Some rendred torrentem, by Others vallem, is by several examples manifestly proved to have both those significations, of a torrent and valley, some low place fit for water to run or be received in, בין ים וים, whether there be in it water or not, as ^r Kimchi explains it; so that it may be by either of these indifferently rendred, as the place where it occurs requires, and shews to be most convenient. Here, as we have seen, it is by Some rendred one way, by Others the other, yet doth that which renders it by valley seem much more agreeable to the place: Some who follow the Vulgar, who renders it torrentem, think that word not to be restrained to its strict and proper signification of a torrent, but to be more largely taken so as to denote a valley or plain, like such as brooks or torrents usually run in, though there be no such at present in them; in which larger notion the same word is observed to be used elsewhere also in that ancient Latin Version, as Gen. xxvi. 19. where it is said that Isaac's servants, foderunt in torrente, digged in the torrent, as those of the Doway render it, noting in the margin, that it is, the channel where sometimes a vehement stream runneth, sometime none at all. And so 1 Sam. xv. 5. tetendit Saul insidias suas in torrente, Saul laid ambushments in the torrent, which can signify no otherwise, than as it is by Others rendred, in the valley, & sic in presenti, saith Pet. a Figuero, and so also in this present place, which Kimchi in his Dictionary cites as an example to prove that נחל nachal signifies a valley as well in which no water is, as a water-brook; if it had water in it, there would be no need of its being watered.

What is said, a fountain shall come forth of the house of the Lord, and water the valley, seems to agree much with what is said of those holy waters, Ezek. xlvii. 1. &c. and those living waters that are said shall go out from Jerusalem, Zech. xiv. 8. So observes R. Tanchum of it, הלא ממה ינאסב קול וכריה This is agreeable to what is said in Zechariah, living waters shall go out from Jerusalem, which is likewise the river mentioned by Ezekiel; and Mr. Lively thinks that for the right understanding of these words here, they ought to be compared with those in those places.

This being said of the signification of the words, there remains to us questionable when and how what is here promised should be made good and fulfilled, and whether what is here said be literally or figuratively to be understood? Abarbinel observes, that Aben Ezra saith only, שהיה זה משל, that the words here spoken are parabolical, or by way of similitude, and that R. Salomo on the other hand saith, שהיה נכשיו, that what is said is to be understood according to its simple or literal meaning: And so doth Kimchi say, והוא נכשמו, that this is to be understood as it sounds; neither of them farther explaining what they think meant. Abarbinel himself gives a meaning according to either of these ways; according to that which will have the words literally understood, he thinks that here is a miracle promised, that whereas there was formerly great scarcity of waters in Jerusalem, in so much that they used waters drawn out of wells, and put in pools and cisterns, as it is said in Isaiah, The conduit of the upper pool, c. 7. 3. and c. 36. 2. he here mentions that in the time of salvation, that Jerusalem might be in the earth a blessing intire in all things, and nothing should be wanting in it, God should create a creation, so as that there should be in it a fountain of living waters, the coming forth of which should be under the house of the Lord, so that all the inhabitants of the world should perceive and know, that the nature of that land was altered, and the hard rock, which was as dry as a stick, was by God turned into a fountain of water, and that this miracle should be for the merits sake of Jerusalem.

VOL. I.

5 A

^m See him on his place, and on Isa. xli. 19. ⁿ In Rad. ^o Schindler. Ribera. ^p Ferrar. Syr. Dictionary in {בבב}. ^q Non ab arbore illa, &c. sed vel ab oppido, vel alia ratione ita dicta. Christ. à Castro. ^r And so in Rad. as also Abu. Walid. ^s Pet. à Fig. ^t Id. ^u So indeed he saith at the beginning of the verse. ^v Or make a new thing, Numb. xvi. 30.

Jerusalem. This promise he saith is not to be wondred at, inasmuch as other promises, greater than it, are here spoken of to us by the Prophet. This meaning he thinks the words, if literally understood, will require: but if הַיְעוֹד הַזֶּה מִשָּׁל the expressions in which this promise is, be figurative, and by way of similitude, which, saith he, is in my opinion, הַיְעוֹד הַזֶּה מִשָּׁל, the more solid and satisfactory, he then points at what * Isaiah prophesied of, viz. that in the time of redemption, the mountain of the Lords house should be established on the top of the mountains, and many people should go thither to receive his Law, and should say, out of Sion shall go forth the Law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. For in as much as the Law and divine doctrines are compared to water, by reason of the likeness that is between them, therefore doth the Prophet in his promise that the divine truth (or true knowledge of God) shall go forth of Jerusalem from the house of God into all the world, say, and a fountain shall come forth from the house of the Lord, and shall water the valley of Shittim, as if he should say, the whole world, which is a valley of such as err and decline from following the Lord; and according to this way Zechariah saith (c. 14. 8.) and it shall be in that day that living waters shall go out from Jerusalem: half of them towards the former sea, and half of them towards the hinder sea: in summer and winter shall it be: For there also doth that expression come after the threat of a great war, which shall be in the latter times, as it doth here, and is written after that promise: And the Lord shall be King over all the earth: and in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one. This being the end of the fountain mentioned, and the necessity of it (or that for which it should be necessary) and this is in truth a wonderfully excellent comparison, and most apt and elegant expression, that out of Jerusalem, which was a dry land without water, should go forth living waters which should be poured out on the seas, to intimate that from Jerusalem, which ^v was tributary, ^z burnt with fire and cut down from among men, should go forth a Law, doctrine, and true belief, unto all the inhabitants of the world. These expositions of Abarbinel I have at large set down in his words, because I find them not so fully expressed in any other of the Jewish Expositors, that so we may compare them with such as are by Christians given; amongst whom also we find Some who more adhere to a literal, Others to a figurative meaning of the words. Among them Grotius seems to take the literal, who having expounded these words, the rivers of Judah shall flow with water, that the people being freed from fear of enemies, and in secure peace shall cleanse their ditches and water-courses, so that the water shall have free passage in them, expounds this fountain that shall come forth of the house of the Lord, and water the valley of Shittim, of an aqueduct, which he thinks the same which ^a Ezekiel describes, which shall be drawn from the Temple to and beyond the mare mortuum, (or dead sea.) But this exposition of his seems to take to be described by the words a more ordinary matter than they seem to require, as is by Abarbinel noted, that something extraordinary or miraculous is by them expressed and given to be expected. By them therefore more generally is this expression looked on as a figurative describing what great good things God will confer on the members of his Church. By the house of the Lord they take to be meant the Church of Christ; by the fountain that shall thence come forth ^b Some understand the font of baptism, that fountain opened to the house of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem ^c for sin and for uncleanness, or separation for (or from) uncleanness, Zeck. xiii. 11. ^d Others fontem verbi Domini, the fountain of the word of God; both which we may well look on as understood, but I withal cannot but look on as comprehended under the word all other benefits and graces by God conferred on the members of his Church, taking by the fountain head to be meant ^e Christ himself, and by the waters from that fountain flowing, both God's holy ordinances, and all the good gifts and graces of his holy Spirit, and all his good benefits conducing to their happiness, all things pertaining to grace and glory from Christ derived, and conferred on them in and through him; so as that the promise may belong to the whole estate of Christ's Church both militant and triumphant, assuring to them a plentiful supply of all good things pertaining to their real felicity in both. By what is said that this fountain shall water the valley of Shittim, which was a place far distant from Jerusalem, where the house of the Lord was, out of which it is said it should come forth, we may with Some observe to be noted in that regard the large extent of God's blessings and favours, viz. ^f Dei benedictionem longe lateque diffusam iri, ita ut universam Ecclesiam perfundat, that the blessing of God shall be far and wide shed abroad, so as to water the whole Church, not now confined to the narrow compass of Jerusalem, or the land of Israel, but conveyed to the most remote and barbarous nations by the preaching of the gospel, the ^g sound of which should go forth into all the earth and the words thereof unto the ends of the world.

2. In another regard, that that place (the valley of Shittim) is looked on as a dry and barren place, apt only to bring forth thorns and rushes, may by the watering of it by that fountain which shall come forth of the house of the Lord, be looked on as denoted the efficaciousness of the grace of God conveyed by the Gospel, which should make them, that were by nature barren and unfruitful, apt to bring forth good fruit. This efficaciousness thereof do Others seem to look on as pointed at by the words, though other ways translating them, as Junius and Tremellius, who translating them, viz. shall water the valley of the most most choice cedars, note by that valley to be noted the Church, in qua iusti plantati crescunt ut cedri lectissimi, in which the righteous being planted grow as most choice cedars, according as the comparison is used. Psal. xcii. 12. The righteous shall flourish like a palm-tree, he shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon.

* Isa. ii. 2. ^v למס. ^z Psal. lxxx. 16. ^a Chap. xlvii. ^b See Merc. and Tarnov. ^c In expiationem peccati, Pagn. Pro separatione ex immunditia. Jun. Trem. ^d Mercer. ^e Cyril. ^f Lively. ^g Rom. x. 18.

3. In regard that God's graces and blessings are compared to the continually running waters of a never failing fountain, will be understood both the plentiful communication and the constant and perpetual continuance of them to his servants. Waters that are constantly fed by a fountain are not so likely to fail as others, which have no such constant supply.

Quod si alii fontes aliquando aruerint, hic nunquam arefcet, qui a domo Domini egreditur, But if other fountains do sometimes dry up, yet will that which cometh out of the house of the Lord never be dried. And by that therefore may well be expressed that most perfect happiness and fulness of joy, which in the life to come the blessed saints in the presence, of God, drinking of the river ¹ of his pleasure and ² by the Lamb lead unto living fountains of waters, shall perpetually without interruption enjoy. And that happy condition do ³ Several think here especially pointed out, though to the blessings which the members of the Church militant even in this life also enjoy the words may be deservedly applied.

All these meanings and considerations will the words suggest unto us, and may well comprehend them all; whichsoever of them shall be by any preferred, they are manifestly a promise of great and precious privileges to the people of God, which his and their enemies shall have no share in. What different condition they shall be in he describes in the following words.

19. Egypt shall be a desolation, and Edom shall be a desolate wilderness, for the violence against the children of Judah, because they have shed innocent blood in their land.

We shall find amongst Expositors both Jews and Christians different opinions, as concerning the acception of the nations here mentioned; some taking them as particularly meant of those that are properly by those names known, others farther extending those names so as to comprehend others, who did in that, which they appear here taxed of and threatened for, resemble them. Among the Jews R. Salomo seems to take the names in their proper and literal signification, but without farther explication of what is spoken concerning them, than that Egypt was formerly the cause ^m of the preservation of Edom, and that now they are both joined in that vengeance which shall be taken on them. Aben Ezra likewise literally understanding those people, saith that they were brought to desolation in the time of Nebuchadnezzar, (and so this prophecy then fulfilled) and if it should be objected that Egypt was then remaining, he seems to resolve it by saying, that Egypt (or the chief city of it, as I suppose he means) was not that ancient former Egypt (or city.) But Abarbinel not approving this opinion of his, saith, that though the seat of the metropolis or chief city was changed, yet the nation was still the same, and the people the posterity of the ancient Egyptians; and so that is no proof that the fulfilling of the prophecy is not yet in due time to be expected. R. David Kimchi goes in another way, taking by the names Egypt and Edom not to be meant those countries or people properly so called, but by them to be understood the Ismaelites (or Mahometans) and the Romans, which two nations, saith he, have for these many years been prevalent, and shall so be עַר עַתָּה till the time of the Redemption. The Ismaelites, he saith, are denoted by the name of Egypt, because Hagar the mother of Ismael was an Egyptian. The Roman Empire by Edom, because that did most consist of Edomites (as he fancies) and therefore though in it many other nations were mixed with them, as likewise such a mixture was in the Empire of the Ismaelites, yet the name of the major part was given to the whole. Cæsar, saith he, (the first of them he must mean) and so the Emperors in Rome after him: these two nations, saith he, did mischief to the tribe of Judah and Benjamin, who were captives among them, and shed their blood as water in their lands. Edom which is the Empire of Rome, was it, saith he, that destroyed the second Temple by Titus, and that shed their blood, and made them captives amongst the nations, and that of this captivity of theirs is to be understood what is said in this verse, and therefore here is no mention made of any of the tribes but Judah, because the ten tribes which the King of Assyria carried away captive, and who were never yet returned, were not under the power of these two nations. This is Kimchi's explication of these words at full; and Abarbinel seems to like well of it, although he himself in some things differ from it, as namely in that he will have Egypt particularly spoken of that people properly so called, and they here named because their great wars above-mentioned shall be in the first place on them, inasmuch as the Christians in their going up to subdue the land of Israel shall destroy Egypt and smite it with a very great destruction, and shall take the land of Judah and Jerusalem, which should be then under the dominion of Egypt; for which cause, and upon which shall the people of the East and the North be raised up, to come and wage war with the Christians, for revenging their brethren the Egyptians, and to take the holy land out of the hands of the Christians, and then shall be a very great ruin of the kingdom of Edom, so that there shall be no remainder of them, so as hath not been done in other nations, &c. These expositions of Kimchi and Abarbinel, seem ⁿ for several reasons sons both groundless and impertinent; but that which may suffice us, without farther examination, for rejecting them is, that they go upon a false principle of theirs, that the Messiah is not yet come, whose coming according to them these things are to forerun, and make way for his settling the Jews in a most flourishing state above all nations. Which is so contrary to the truth of the Scripture as well of the old as new Testament, assuring his being long since come, that if we will have a true meaning of these words, we must seek for some other which will not contradict that article of our faith. We must see therefore what Christians say of the meaning of them. Among them Grotius taking the names of Egypt and Edom in their proper signification, thinks what is threatned against Egypt made good in the spoiling thereof by Antiochus, and what against Edom by the destruction of it by the Maccabees. But others more generally take not these words as strictly restrained to those nations properly so called, but more largely to denote all others who are enemies to God's Church and people at any time, as the Egyptians and Edomites were to the Jews, then God's peculiar people, and by their being made desolate understand that their condition should be contrary to that happy condition of God's people in the former words described. Instead of those good gifts and blessings promised to those under the terms of the mountains distilling new wine, and the hills flowing with milk, and the rivers with waters, and the being continually watered with a fountain constantly coming forth of the house of the Lord, it is threatned to these their enemies, that they should not at all be partakers, nor have any share or part with them in what they enjoy, but while they flourish and prosper, shall be as desolate as the most barren wilderness; as elsewhere it is threatned, that they that hate the righteous shall be desolate, Psal. xxxiv. 21. by which we cannot but understand that they shall be, as destitute of all good, so overwhelmed with all evil things. This different condition of God's children and his and their enemies, as it is in good measure made apparent in this life, so shall be much more in the world to come, and to that therefore are by many these words looked on as having especially respect. Asseritur hujus promissionis veritas etiam in hoc sæculo, quando Christus in medio inimicorum suorum dominatur, suosque inter quotidianas afflictiones protegit, exempla in hostes suos borrenda edit, plene tamen præstabitur in cælis, &c. i. e. the truth of this promise is made good even in this world, whilst Christ beareth rule in the midst of his enemies, and protecteth his among their daily afflictions, and sheweth forth fearful examples on his enemies, but it shall fully be performed in heaven [in the world to come] when his being placed out of all fear or danger, shall eternally reign with Christ, but his enemies shall be given up to perpetual destruction and perdition: Another, that by their being threatned to be made desolate, he means, æternæ damnationi esse addicendos, that they shall be condemned to eternal damnation: they shall be, saith One, in deserto perditionis, sc. infernalis, a wilderness of destruction, viz. destruction in hell. The reason of their being threatned with such desolation is given in the next words, for the violence against the children of Judah, because they have shed innocent blood in their land. The violence against the children of Judah; that appears plainly to be the meaning of the words מַחֲמַס בְּנֵי יְהוּדָה mechamas bene Jebudab, which literally sounds, for the violence of the sons of Judah, propter injuriam filiorum Judæ. The like construction to which occurs Obadiab, ver. 10. מַחֲמַס אַחִיךָ יַעֲקֹב mechamas achica yaacob, for the violence of thy brother Jacob, i. e. as Ours well translate it, for thy violence against thy brother Jacob. The LXX. as likewise the Syriack and Arabick in their Translations more precisely following the letter (as ἐξ ἀδικιών υἱῶν Ἰσραὴλ, ex iniquitatibus filiorum Judæ, from or for the wrongs of the children of Judah) leave the words more obscure, though the meaning necessarily manifest itself. Concerning who are meant by the children of Judah is still some difference. They who literally understand by Egypt and Edom those people and places properly so called, here also will understand by the children of Judah particularly the inhabitants of that country properly known by that name; but they who so understand those names as to comprehend more largely all the enemies of God's Church, do here by the sons of Judah understand the Church of God and the members thereof. Against which, however understood, the greatness of the violence of their enemies is farther expressed by saying, because they have shed innocent blood in their land, such it was as not only to spoil and rob them of their goods, which Some by their violence in the former word take to be meant, but so far to proceed, as to the shedding of innocent blood in their land, the blood of those who in any respect to them were innocent, and deserved no such cruel usage at their hands. Some difference there is in rendring these words, though not to the causing any difference in the sense, Some rendring them as ours do, quia, because, &c. Others quod, &c. and because, &c. Others qui insontem sanguinem in terra sua fuderint, which have shed innocent blood in their land. The vulgar Latin, et effuderunt, &c. and have shed, &c. Others in quorum terra effuderunt sanguinem innocentem, in whose land they have shed innocent blood. Others quorum, &c. whose innocent blood, &c. These, I say, make not much difference in the meaning; as to the former words, the chief difference will be in applying the affix in the last word בְּאַרְצָם in their land, to whose land it is to be referred, whether to the land of Egypt and Edom,

2

¹ Ribera. ² Psal. xxxvi. 6. ³ Rev. vii. 17. ⁴ Ribera, Chr. a Castro. ^m 1 Kings xi. 17, &c. ⁿ See Pet. a Figuero's censure of Kimchi.

2

° For which he cites, Dan. xi. 40. &c. see his notes there. ° For which he cites Josephus XII. 11. 12. and Isa. LXIII. ° See Lyr. ° Gualter ° See Veil. ° Lyr, ° i. e. in Ecclesiæ Merc. in pios quosvis Tarnov. ° Pet. a Fig. ° Pagn. Munst. lxx. sa. ° The Chaldee. Castal. ° Jun. Trem. See MS. Arab. ° Vatab. his. edit. in 4to. and 8vo.

Edom, or of the Children of Judab; it seeming so doubtful to Kimchi, that he only saith it may be referred to either, but determines not the matter. Calvin saith it may be referred to either, if to the first, then to signify that they inhumanly murdered those of them that betook themselves into their land for refuge and protection; if to the second, then to aggravate the crime, in that they polluted that land which God had consecrated to himself, with unjust murders. But this will seem to make the words particularly to be referred to the inhabitants of the land of Judab, and so not be in that larger sense as it is by Others taken, to comprehend all the members of his Church in their own country, whatsoever it were, which will still be a note of great and barbarous cruelty. Be it taken how any will as to the place, the shedding of innocent blood is such an heinous sin, as God will certainly avenge on such as are guilty of it. In these words wherein God here threatneth so to do, is comprehended both what is comminatory, and what is consolatory, according as respect shall be had to different persons. Here is manifestly a threat to the enemies of God's people, who for their violence against them and cruelty towards them, though they now flourish and prevail over them, shall certainly be punished with utter desolation and destruction. There is together manifestly included matter of comfort of his people, in that their sufferings for their adhering to God are not an argument that they are neglected by God, but that their blood is precious in his sight, and he will in due time revenge it on those who have shed it and done violence to them, which will together necessarily include a repaying of good to them for the evils they have wrongfully suffered; and that for their being cut off from their short fading enjoyments here, they shall be received into everlasting habitations; which, though these words concerning especially the doom of their enemies is only hinted here, we are given by the following words more fully to conceive.

20. But Judab shall dwell for ever, and Jerusalem from generation to generation.

Contrary to the doom in the foregoing verse denounced against those comprehended under the names of Egypt and Edom, is promise of good here made to those who are meant by Judab and Jerusalem: Who are by those former names, by Expositors of different sorts and opinions understood, we have seen on those words; who are meant by these we are for the like reason here to inquire, there being like variety of Interpretations between them, Some taking them as literally meant of the places properly so called, Others taking them figuratively in a larger acceptation, as meant not strictly of them, but attributed to such as are in such regards as they of old were, peculiarly owned by God, as above all other places or persons dear unto him, that so we may understand what by saying they shall dwell for ever, and from generation to generation, is here promised. This we shall make way for, by looking first on the words in order and according to the sound of the letter. Judab shall dwell for ever, &c. By Judab, according to the known use of that name elsewhere in Scripture, may be understood that people or tribe descended from the Patriarch Judab, and bearing his name, inhabitants of that country from them so called, or that part of the country, which was by them possessed and inhabited, usually known by the name of Judab: and so by Jerusalem, either the city itself so called or the inhabitants of that city, as appears, as by several other places of Scripture, so by what is said, Mat. iii. 5. Then went out to him all Jerusalem and all Judea: of these it being here said תשב Tesheb, if that verb be rendered, as it is by Ours in the Text, shall dwell, it will seem to be understood of the people or inhabitants: if, shall abide, as by Many it is, it may indifferently be referred to either the people or the place. The Vulgar Latin refers it to the place changing the name into Judea, and rendering the verb passively; habitabitur, shall be dwelt in, as likewise the LXX before it. The sense will be much the same which soever we follow, denoting that those places shall perpetually (for so will import, for ever, and from generation to generation) remain habitable; and the race of the ancient inhabitants shall dwell in them. This will be the literal sound of the words; according to which the Jews taking them; will have this to be a prophecy of a flourishing estate, to which Judab and Jerusalem, now desolate; shall hereafter be restored and perpetually be continued in, viz. ביום המשיח In the days of the Messiah, when the שכינה Shecinab, or majestatick presence shall return thither, as Kimchi in his note on the next verse speaks, or a promise לעתיד לבוא for the time to come, by which God assures to the Israelitick nation, שלא תשוב עוד לכסלה ולא חגלה that they shall no more afterwards return to folly, nor be led into any other captivity, (as Abarbinel on these words speaks) but the kingdom of Judab and the house of David, to which shall be the dominion over all Israel and Jerusalem, comprehending under that name all the cities of Israel, shall remain for ever בשובה ונחה וברבקה האלהי in returning and rest, and in cleaving to God.

But this opinion of theirs is manifestly grounded on false principles and suppositions of theirs; viz. that the Messiah is not at all yet come, and that when he comes he shall establish a flourishing temporal kingdom on them, the falseness of which manifestly appears by comparing the prophecies concerning him and his kingdom in the Old Testament, and the history of him and his fulfilling of them in the New, the one directing us how what is said of him was to be fulfilled, and the other how far it hath been fulfilled, and what remains yet, and how it is to be fulfilled, so that it is manifest that that he is both already come, and that what was to be expected from him in this world hath been already performed, and is in performing in such manner as it ought to be, and that what is to be expected as not yet performed, belongs לעתיד לבוא leatid lebo (that we may make use of their language) in the future, i. e. to the world to come; and therefore if we will have the true meaning of these words, must we here also look for another meaning than what they give.

Among Christians Grotius seems to take it as a prophecy of such a state of the Jews, as was to be made good to them in their country, after the destruction of their enemies Egypt and Edom, and so hath been long since made good by that peaceable estate, which for several years they did enjoy in the interval between their return from the Babylonish captivity, and their destruction by the Romans. That no exception may be made against this from what is said, they shall dwell or abide for ever, and from generation to generation, he thinks it sufficient to interpret those expressions, by per longum tempus in pace erit, shall be for a long time in peace, and per aliquot hominum ætates, for some ages of men: but sure that seems to come short of what is here said, or must be meant by this high language. Others therefore generally do think what is here promised not to have been yet ever fulfilled, and made good to the Jews in respect to their temporal state, or to be expected so to be to Judab and Jerusalem as properly and literally so called, but to be meant of the Church of God, borrowing the names of those places, which anciently were the more peculiar seat of it, and that the promise here made will well agree, in respect to the militant, and (and that more properly) to the triumphant state of it.

Not to trouble the reader with a particular enumeration of several Expositions tending to the same purpose, I suppose that, in which they concur, well expressed by Gualterus, whose words are (both in respect to the desolation of God's enemies here threatened under the names of Egypt and Edom, and the good promises to his people under the names of Judab and Jerusalem) Asseritur hujus promissionis veritas etiam in hoc sæculo, quando Christus in medio inimicorum suorum dominatur, suosque inter quotidianas afflictiones protegit, & exempla in hostes suos horrenda edit: plene tamen præstabitur in cælis, quando extra omnem teli jactum constituti, cum Christo æternum regnabimus: The truth of this promise is made ^f good even in this world by Christ's ruling in the midst of his enemies, and his protecting his amidst their daily afflictions, and shewing terrible examples on his enemies; but it shall be fully performed in heaven, when being placed out of all fear of danger, we shall eternally reign with Christ. The perpetuity (saith he) here promised, sufficiently sheweth that this place ought to be understood not of the carnal Judab but the spiritual, viz, the Church; the nation of the Jews (carnal Judab) having been (long since) cast out of the promised land, and lost the form both of Church and Commonwealth. But as to the Church and the perpetual duration of it (Church militant here on earth) as long as the world shall last, Christ (when he was to withdraw his bodily presence from them, and ascend up to heaven) makes them this promise, Lo, I am with you alway even unto the end of the world, Mat. xxviii. 20. And that it shall never fail or be desolate, appears by what is elsewhere said, that at Christ's second coming at the end of the world, there shall be such of them surviving, as shall be translated into the heavenly Jerusalem, the Church triumphant in heaven, there to reign with him for ever, as Mat. xxiv. 31. where he saith that he shall send his angels, and they shall gather his elect from the four winds, from the one end of heaven to the other; and St. Paul, 1 Cor. xv. 51. tells of those that being then alive shall be changed as well as others raised from the dead; and 1 Thes. iv. 15, 17. of those who being members of Christ's Church shall be alive (in this world) and remain unto the coming of the Lord, and shall then together with the dead be raised to life, be caught up into the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall ever be with the Lord. So that in all respects to the utmost of the sound and meaning of the words, for ever, and from generation to generation, as they denote perpetuity and eternity, will agree to the Church of Christ, and no other Judab and Jerusalem.

This is the sum of ^e his Exposition, which we have more at large set down, because it comprehends what is by most Christians said for giving of the meaning of this place, which to the same purpose is also briefly and perspicuously given by Bishop Hall, in his Paraphrase of these words, thus; But the elect of God shall dwell for ever in his holy habitation, and after their translation from the Church militant upon earth, shall reign everlastingly in the glory of heaven.

By what means God will declare his favour to, and care of his, besides his perpetual preservation of them, is farther shewed in the next words.

21. For I will cleanse their blood that I have not cleansed, for the Lord dwelleth in Zion.

Such variety and difference of Expositions is there of this verse, as is not of any other in this Prophecy, or, we may say, is scarce in any other of the whole Scripture to be found. So that I know not how to do what may be more for the satisfaction of the Reader, than to give him a particular account of the chief of them which we find. The words in Hebrew are ונקיתי דמם לא-נקיתי, venikketi damam lo nikketi, which are literally rendred, & mundabo sanguinem eorum, non mundavi, and I will cleanse their blood I have not cleansed: which words according to the different distinction ε See Christ. à Castro. f See also Danæus. e With which also may be compared that of Danæus.

distinction by way of construction, and the different signification given to them by Expositors, and such supplies which they make, seem to yield those different meanings, which we are to give an account of. To begin with those of the Jews: Rabbi Tanchum reckons up four, which they were thought capable of.

1. So as to refer the affix in דָּמָם damam, their blood, taken in its usual signification of blood, to the Israelites, so as that the words should sound, וְאִם נִקְיִי דָּמָם לֹא נִקְיִי נִקְיִי, i. e. and or but if I shall cleanse, I will not cleanse from their blood, i. e. And although I shall cleanse (or absolve) their enemies from all other sin, yet I will not absolve them from their blood, viz. the Edomites and Egyptians before mentioned, that he will require from them (or avenge) on them, (viz. the blood of the Israelites shed by them) and not pardon it to them.

2. So as to refer the affix to the same (Israelites) but to take their blood in the signification of their sin, as he takes it to be meant, Hof. xii. 14. and the verb נִקְיִי nikketi, twice repeated, which Ours render by the notion of cleansing, to be in the first place in that notion of cleansing, or making clean, as it is in those words וְנִקְיִי וְנִקְיִי (which Ours render) she shall be free and conceive seed, Num. v. 28. so as to sound, I will make them clean, or innocent from their sin; but in the second place in the signification of the word אֶסְתַּבֵּל taking clean away, as he looks on it to signify in what is said Jer. xxx. 11. וְנִקְיִי אֶסְתַּבֵּל venakeb lo anakkecab, which Ours there render, and will not leave thee altogether unpunished; but the Chaldee וְשִׁינְאָהּ לֹא אֶשְׁחַד perdendo te non perdam, I will not utterly destroy thee; and Pagnin. et succidendo non succidam te, and I will not utterly cut thee off, and some Others to like purpose: so he would have it here to signify, and the words to sound, I will cleanse away their sin, and will not (in rigour) punish them to the utmost, to their destruction; so that there will be a supply of another affix in the last word required, as if it were וְנִקְיִי דָּמָם וְלֹא אֶנְקֵם, I will cleanse (or take away) their blood, i. e. their sin, and will not clean take away, or utterly destroy them.

3. So as to take again דָּמָם damam, their blood, in the notion of דָּנְבָהֶם danbahom, their sin, and to refer the affix מִן m, their, to the enemies, and נִקְיִי in the first place to be in the signification of אֶסְתַּבֵּל going to the root or, requiring to the uttermost; but in the second place (wherein there is again to be supplied the affix, and נִקְיִי to be for אֶנְקֵם) in the signification of cleansing, or, taking for clean and innocent, that so the meaning may be אֶסְתַּבֵּל עַל אֲשֶׁר בְּדָנְבָהֶם וְלֹא אֶרְיֵם, I will require to the uttermost punishment of them for their sin, and will not clear them (or hold them guiltless.)

4. In the fourth place, he gives another Exposition, which he saith seems to him more proper, and nearer to the words than any of the other, which is only by the supply of אֶשֶׁר asher, which, often left out for brevity's sake, as if he said וְנִקְיִי דָּמָם אֶשֶׁר לֹא נִקְיִי, which (taking the word נִקְיִי nikketi in both places in the signification of אֶסְתַּבֵּל alestisal (going to the root or uttermost) and referring the affix in דָּמָם damam, their blood, to Judab and Jerusalem, in the foregoing verse mentioned, and looking on that word דָּמָם damam, their blood, as signifying דִּיּוּתָהֶם diyatahom, the price of their blood, or mult for their blood that was shed, as he saith it is taken in ¹ Ein lo Damim, Exod. xxii. 2. no price of blood shall be for him required, and דָּמִים לוֹ Damim lo, ibid. v. 3. there shall be blood for him) will give this meaning استأصل طلب ديوتهم التي لم استأصلها الي ذلك الوقت Waeftafelo talba diyatahom allati lam estafelba ela dbaleca akwakt; And I will proceed to the uttermost, in requiring the price (or revenge) for their blood, which till that time I had not fully required.

These four meanings he gives of these words known in his time, of which he (and I think deservedly in respect of the plainness in the construction) prefers the last. But the most known to us of the Jewish Expositors, R. Salomo Jarchi, Aben Ezra, and David Kimchi, follow the first without any account of the others, referring the word דָּמָם their blood, to the latter clause, that the words so distinguished may signify, Although I cleanse (or acquit) those nations from other sins that they have committed, yet I will not cleanse or acquit them from the blood of the Israelites. David Kimchi most largely among them thus expounds them, From their gold and silver which they have taken, I will cleanse or acquit them, because the Israelites shall take also as spoil from them the like in the time to come; but from the blood which they have spilt I will not clear them, but נֶפֶשׁ חַיָּה נֶפֶשׁ חַיָּה soul shall be for soul (or life for life) either the soul or life of those that shed that blood, or of their children after them, for if they should give all the silver and gold in the world for the redemption of their souls, they shall not thereby be cleared from their blood (which they have shed.) Whilst he with those two Others before him thus refer their blood to the latter words, he observes the Chaldee to refer to the foregoing word, וְנִקְיִי venekketi, and I will cleanse, while he renders עֲמַמִּיא מִן amamia min and whereas I have avenged their blood on the nations, I will again revenge them: but doth not give any farther explication or censure of the words. I wonder he did not seem to take notice of the particle לֹא lo, not, clean left out by him: the omission of which, I suppose makes ^k Some to think his Interpretation not well to agree with the

2

^a This word from אָסַל root, seems to signify either to take away to the very root, clean to destroy, or to go to the very root, or to do the utmost in a thing. ⁱ So Abu Walid in רִמָּה. ^k Mercer. Pet. à Fig.

the Hebrew, with which I think it may well be reconciled, and what he renders in affirmative words, to include that negative as to the sense, leaving it out as to the words, while to say, I will again revenge them, is equivalent to say, I have not yet revenged as much as I mean to do.

Among those also who in construction refer the word דָּמָם damam, to the preceding veniketi, is the Jewish Author of the Arabick Translation out of the Hebrew, who renders the words, وابري من مطالبة دماهم الذي الى الان لم ابر. And I will be clear, or clear me, from requiring their blood, from which I have not to this time been cleared: of which I suppose the meaning must be, that he will fully clear himself by fully requiring or revenging their blood, which he had not yet done. Abarbinel also having mentioned the Explication which we saw Kimchi and Others to follow, doth yet prefer another, in which Damam, their blood, is also referred to the foregoing verb, though making out the meaning in a different way from what we have seen Others to do, while he looks on the first words as interrogative, and thus explains the whole clause, האם נקיתי אני את האומות מדם ישראל אשר שפכו על הארץ באמת לא נקיתי ולכן אפרע מהם i. e. Have I cleared (or cleansed) the nations from the blood of Israel, which they have poured out upon the earth? In truth I have not cleansed (them,) but (or and therefore) I will be revenged of them. That this way of so distinguishing the words, and placing them in construction, as that דָּמָם damam their blood, should be governed by the preceding verb, is of all the renderings we have the most antient, and that that verb, in the verse twice put, was by some anciently taken in those two places in different significations, appears by the ancient Translation that we have, viz. the Greek of the LXX, who thus render the words, ἡ ἐκζητήσω τὸ αἷμα αὐτῶν, ἡ ἔ μὴ ἀθώσω, and I will require, or avenge their blood, inultumque esse non patiar, and will not suffer it to be unrevenged.

This variety of Interpretations and Expositions of these words have we from the Jews, modern and ancient. If we look now to the Christians, whether Translators or Expositors, we shall find yet more, Some of them agreeing with Some of those, which we have seen, Others differing from them all. As for Translations, there is one^m of good authority, though modern, who taketh the same way of distinction and construction, as we have seen Kimchi and those other Jews, which we mentioned with him, to do; he renders the words, mundabo quidem, sed sanguinem eorum non mundabo, I will cleanse indeed, but their blood will I not cleanse. Others more generally, whether ancient or modern, take as plainer the other way of construction which we mentioned, referring the noun governed to the first clause, though as to the meaning that they give of the words so taken, much differing between themselves. So the Syriack, rendering them, ואני אכפר דמאם, And I will

And I will avenge their blood, and will not spare. The printed Arabick also following the Greek, وانتقم دمهم ولا اغفر, to the very same sense. The Vulgar Latin, Et mundabo sanguinem eorum, quem non mundaveram, And I will cleanse their blood that I had not cleansed: which we see Ours agree with, only differing in that they render the conjunction ve by for, which that, according to its most usual signification, renders by and; which likewise the Italian Version of Diodati doing, exactly agrees with it. The Tigurian Latin likewise, only instead of quem, which, supplying, quos, whom, so referring to the persons what that refers to the blood.

Neither of these is indeed expressed in the Hebrew, and so are byⁿ Some both left out in the Translation, they putting only mundabo sanguinem eorum, non mundavi, I will cleanse their blood I have not cleansed: but then if they go to give the meaning, one of them will be necessarily understood, either, which blood, or, whose blood, or, those whom, as Castalio supplies it by quos, viz. the blood of them whom, &c. as he renders it, eorumque sanguinem expiabo, quos non expiavero, and I will expiate the blood of them whom I shall as yet not have expiated; in giving the meaning of this, (viz. whichsoever of these be supplied), will not make great difference. Very great difference indeed there is betwixt Expositors, but that is from other occasions, viz. the understanding of the words, blood, and cleansing, and what is meant by them, and who are the persons spoken of. From their disagreement, as to these things, have we variety of Expositions, as chief of which we look on these first, that some taking the word נִקְּהָה nikkeh in its ordinary signification of cleansing, or purging; and blood, in a large notion, as comprehending all heinous sins (as being like blood in its quality of polluting, or deserving death, or that the blood of the sinner should be shed) make the meaning to be, that God promiseth fully to cleanse his Church, his elect ones, from the pollution of those sins, which hitherto they have been defiled with. This do the Authors of the Geneva English Translation, which in this place altogether agrees with our newer, give in their note for the understanding of it, which is, he hath suffered his Church hitherto to lye in their filthiness, but now he promiseth to cleanse them and make them pure unto him. With them doth Bishop Hall also agree in his Paraphrase, For I will cleanse and purge away the sins of those mine elect, which I had not before done away, and will deliver the chosen of the Gentiles from those iniquities where-with they were polluted. Diodati likewise in his note on his Italian Translation: I will perfectly sanctify my Church from all imperfections and spots of sin, which yet remained in her in this world. The same meaning of the words do several among Latin Expositors give, yet with difference between them concerning the time when

I

^l. Or as some Copies ἐκζητήσω.

^m. Pagnin.

ⁿ. Munst. Calv.

when this promise should be made good, some looking on it as belonging to the time of the preaching of the Gospel, wherein God would cleanse, in Evangelio, under the Gospel, quos in lege peccantes immundos reliquerat, those whom sinning under the Law he had left uncleansed, as Jerome speaks, when as * Others more largely give the meaning, that he would make clean the Gentiles received into his Zion, the Church which was before profane, & dead in sins and trespasses, without Christ, aliens from the common-wealth of Israel, strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, or without God in the world, making them nigh by the blood of Christ which cleanseth from all sin; and purifying their hearts by faith (Acts xv. 9.) yet (as † Others add) the Jews also whom the law, with all its ceremonies, and rites of purification, could not so cleanse but that they were still † concluded under sin; that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them, by believing in whom only, to them as well as to the Gentiles, is † opened a fountain for sin and uncleanness, viz. for cleansing them from their sin. To both, both having need of it, is it only in Christ opened, and by faith in him the virtue of it made effectual to them, even in this life; yet because they are not perfectly cleansed, do Some which we have already seen, and several Others, rather understand this promise of what shall be made good to faithful believers in the other life, when having put off mortality together with the frailties and corruptions thereof, they shall be translated into that heavenly Jerusalem, into which † nothing that is defiled, none that is not cleansed from his sins, shall enter.

If this way of interpreting the words be taken, viz. that by cleansing their blood be meant the making them clean from their sins, I suppose both of these may be understood, viz. both that purity which in this life here he will confer upon them, and that also with which in the life to come he will perfect them; both being his free gift, for receiving which they are only by faith in Christ made capable, but the † first consisting in the pardon of sin to them repenting of it, the other in an absolute abolishing it in them, and fully freeing them from it, in which perfect measure, though in this life he doth not fully cleanse them from their sins, though remitted to them, he will then do it, and make them perfectly clean, both pardoning those their greatest sins, for their heinousness called blood, and which might seem impardonable (as * Some think the words to imply) and also so sanctifying them, that they shall no more commit any, but live pure from all. These ways of expounding do the words afford, the verb being taken in the signification of cleansing, and that being in the ordinary notion of it understood, and the noun blood being looked on as comprehending any heinous sins: Not much differently from these, as to the signification of the words, doth Petrus a Figuero seem to render, when he proposeth to be considered whether the meaning may not be, that the Jews toward the end of the world on their repentance, and turning to Christ, shall be cleansed from the guilt of his blood which they pulled on themselves, saying, His blood be upon us, &c. and do suffer for hitherto, and shall suffer for, till such of them as then live, shall then upon their turning to him, be cleansed from it. But, 2. The verb being taken by Others in a different signification, viz. of avenging, or revenging, and the noun blood, in its more strict and proper meaning, will necessarily give another meaning, which is by Them taken, viz. † that the innocent blood of his elect people that had been shed by their enemies, which he had not yet revenged, he would yet, in his appointed time, revenge. This Exposition the Greek, Syriack, and Arabick, as we have seen, direct to; Grotius taking it, saith that the verb נקם nikke, doth in this place signify ulcisci, to revenge; and saith that the sense is very well expressed by the Chaldee, who, he saith, thus paraphraseth on the words, si quis adhuc esset Judeorum sanguis effusus, quem ultus nondum fuero, etiam hunc ulciscar. If there shall be any blood of the Jews shed, which I have not yet revenged, I will avenge this also. This though we may grant to be the meaning of the Chaldee, yet in giving his words, I know not what reading or copy he followed; none that I find so reading as he doth, but so as we have above given an account of. And this he thinks made good on the Ammonites and Moabites. But in this his Exposition he seems too much to limit the words, in referring the blood shed only to that of the Jews, and those on whom it should be revenged, to the Ammonites and Moabites. We may suppose (if this way of exposition be taken) that the blood is to be understood of the blood of God's people, wrongfully shed, and the persons on whom for shedding it, vengeance shall be executed, of all the bloody enemies and persecutors of God's Church: which Exposition will be justified by that which we have seen of the foregoing verse, wherein Egypt and Edom are taxed for the violence against the children of Judah, and their shedding innocent blood in their land; and illustrated by what we read, Rev. vi. 9, 10. where the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held, are said to cry with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? Yet here there is another by † Such as had, no doubt, considered this, preferred, who take by cleansing here to be meant, manifesting and declaring to be clean, and so the words to import, that he will then at the last judgment, wherein the truth in all things shall be made manifest, declare the blood of his people adhering to him and his truth, which in this world had been shed (and by their enemies thought justly and deservedly, as of guilty persons, so to have been) to have indeed

5 C

* Jan. Trem. † Eph. ii. 12. † Tarnov. Rib. Danæus. † Gal. iii. 22. † Zech. xiii. 1. † Rev. xxi. 27. † See Piscator. * Munster. and see Christ. à Castro. † Christ. à Castr. † Lyra, Mercer. Druf. Lively.

indeed been innocent, by absolving them from eternal destruction, to which he shall then adjudge their enemies for shedding of it. These we look on as chief Expositions given of these words, and of them the two last seem most agreeable to the words and place. The two last, I say, because as to the words they seem much different, yet as to the matter of such expressed to be done, they seem coincident, and the one to require or infer the other, God avenging the blood of his Saints, being a manifest declaring of them to be clear and innocent; and there being no other way of declaring them so to have been, than by adjudging those who had shed it, for that their sin, to just punishment.

According to all, here is a consolatory promise to God's faithful people, of the certain performance of which, if not fully in this present world, yet in the next at the last judgment, the following words give assurance. For, saith he, The Lord dwelleth in Zion, his dwelling is Zion, i. e. his Church, his elect, which by that name may be well meant, and understood, as R. Tanchum explains it, دوام العناية بها وظهور نور السكينة فيها, the continuance of his providence over it, and the manifestation of his majestick presence in it. And certainly where they are, can be nothing hurtful to any remaining, nothing conducing to the good and happiness of inhabitants thereof wanting. His presence will necessarily dispel all evil, and bring with it all good to them: as an assurance to them of what good he promiseth to his, doth this rendring of our Translators in rendring ve by, for, give us (as we said) to understand those words, and I suppose they do in so doing give us the right, and most proper meaning of them, though, for what I can find, that rendring be peculiar to them; they themselves give another, in different words I mean, though in sense it will appear the same, viz. even I the Lord that dwelleth in Zion, for what doth that particle of emphasis, even I, import other than that that, which he saith shall certainly be done, for, or because he that saith it is the Lord that dwelleth in Zion.

It is generally by Others rendred by, and, the most usual signification of it in Hebrew, but as in that it is often used for, nam, for, so I suppose, &, and, by which it is rendred, to be taken in the same sense, as giving a reason of the truth and certainty of what is said, and not as a meer copulative connecting what follows with what goes before. I know not who so make it, except Junius and Tremellius in their Version; but then for making the meaning they supply before it Ego, I, ^a rendring ego & Jehovah habitans Tzijone, I, and Jehovah (or the Lord) who dwelleth in Zion. So by, ego, which they supply understanding God the Father, and by Jehovah, God the Son, as in a ^b Note they explain their sense. Which as to the matter it is a truth, and would likewise give assurance of the promised good, yet is a forcing of the words by adding to them, and the other literal Translations seem more plain and simple. And that in the Text of our Translation may well direct us in making out the meaning of them all, in the way which in the first place we gave, so as to look on them as a reason to ascertain them, of the which the foregoing words give promise and expectation of. And as so, viz. as giving assurance of that promise, doth the Chaldee Paraphrast appear to look on that particle, while instead of it he puts אמר amar, ait, saith, rendring, saith the Lord who hath placed (or made to dwell) his majesty in Zion. What he, that is, Jehovah, the Lord infinite in power, of eternal being, and giving necessary being to all his purposes and promises in their due time, hath made to those whom he owns for his, and to whom he vouchsafes peculiar signs of his presence and favour, cannot but be certainly made good, that will the saying, that the Lord who hath fixed the habitation of his Majesty in peculiar manner in Zion, give certain assurance of to the members and inhabitants of that place. And as in such relation to those here spoken of doth he describe himself, viz. he that is every where present, and whose majesty filleth both heaven and earth, as yet in a peculiar manner, vouchsafing to dwell among them calling himself שכן shocen, he that dwelleth in, or the inhabitant of Zion.

The very same words occur in ver. 17 where we have spoken of them what might concern that place; that which we shall here add is, that the word שכן shocen, being the participle, and properly signifying habitans, dwelling, is applicable either to the present, preter, or future tense, so as to import either, which doth dwell, or, which hath dwelt, or, which shall dwell, and accordingly is by ^d Some rendred habitai, doth dwell, by ^e Others, shall dwell. If there be any difference in the sense between These, it must be discerned by the different understanding of the place, where it is said he doth or shall dwell, viz. Zion. That we know is differently taken, either for the place properly so called, where the temple of old stood, or for the Church of God, and that again either militant or triumphant, of the one of which it is by Some understood, by Others of the other. For the place so properly called, and by that name literally understood, Kimchi, as I suppose all the Jews, taking it, so looks on the word as to refer not only to God's dwelling there at that present, when these words were spoken by the Prophet, but to his return thither, when after its desolation it should be again restored to its glory. For so sound his words, and the Lord dwelling in Zion (שכן shocen Betzion) and so also for ever, for ever shall be שכינתו shenitenu the habitation of his Majesty in Zion, אחר שתשוב שם, after that it shall return thither in the days of the Messiah. R. Tanchum also takes it as import-

ing

^a Tarnovius follows them in this rendring. ^b The note is, Verba sunt Dei Patris loquentis Deo filio, Jehova qui manet in nobis & nos in illo, & in quo Pater nos purgat ut seramus fructum. ^c Of the name, see on Hosea p. 650. ^d Pag. Tig. Munst. &c. ^e LXX. printed Arab. Piscator. Diodati and Castal.

ing the future, looking on it as to be supplied by the verb ויהיה, and shall be, that the words may sound as if it were written ויהיה שוכן יי בציון, and the Lord shall be inhabiting (or shall dwell) in Zion. But Abarbanel looks on it as rather denoting the preter tense, and what was or had been, taking the words in a clean different meaning, viz. not as a promise of what good God would for the future do, but as a narrative of what he had formerly done, and looking on them as a reason for which he would take vengeance on their enemies, viz. because they should destroy and burn up that holy place in which was his dwelling and his house.

Among Christians also Grotius appears to understand Sion of that place properly and literally so called, while he gives for the meaning of the words, cultus Dei manebit Hierosolymis, The worship of God shall remain or continue in Jerusalem. But that then cannot be understood of longer continuance than that of Jerusalem itself, and the Temple in which he there with signal manifestation of his presence dwelt, and to which his worship was then restrained. And our Saviour Christ, John iv. 21. telleth the Samaritan woman, The hour cometh, when ye shall no longer worship the Father at Jerusalem, yea, ver. 23. that the hour then was. Calvin also seems to understand this of the earthly Sion, looking on the words as a minding the Jews of God's favour to them, according to his covenant made in their favour with them, in that he chose for an habitation among them, Sion (an house to himself in Mount Sion.) But it is more generally looked on as an assertion of God's perpetual dwelling with them spoken of, in that place of his residing called Sion, which being not to be affirmed of that Mount Sion at Jerusalem properly so called, is by them understood of the Church, to which that name is manifestly elsewhere also attributed, as, Heb. xii. 22. Rev. xiv. 1. and the Church being distinguished into that militant (as 'tis called) on earth, and that triumphant in heaven, to both of them are the words here applicable, it being truly to be said of both, that the Lord dwelleth in them, and that perpetually. Of the first will be verified what our Saviour Christ saith, Lo I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world, Mat. xxviii. 20. and of them of whom it consists (saith St. Paul) that they are of the household of God, Eph. ii. 19. that they are an holy Temple in the Lord, in whom they are builded together for an habitation of God through the spirit; ver. 21, 22. Of the second there is no doubt both that he doth and would there dwell and manifest his glorious presence for ever. Of this therefore do Many more especially understand the words; and as so understood doth Bishop Hall paraphrase them, And the number of the elect being fully made up, the Lord shall dwell everlastingly with them in his heavenly Zion. Dr. Stokes seems to take in both in his paraphrase, which is, And thus will God ever abide with his Church, and preserve his servants in their greatest dangers, or reward them with that which shall exceed a present delivery, and be a sufficient vindication of their virtue and innocence. In any of these ways the words, as we said, are an assurance that what good he hath promised to his Church, and the members thereof, and whatsoever may conduce to their happiness, shall certainly be made good to them, both from the consideration of what he is that hath promised, viz. יהוה Jehovah; which name being proper to him alone (to the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost) not communicable to any other, denotes as his being in himself, so his giving (as we said) necessary being to his word and promises; and so also from the consideration of what relation he owneeth them in to himself, in saying, that he dwelleth (or will dwell) in Sion: Which imports his perpetual presence with the inhabitants and members thereof, which is equivalent to a promise of making them fully and eternally happy; For in his presence is fulness of joy, and at his right hand are pleasures for evermore. Psal. xvi. 12. For which beautiful fruition of his presence, he of his infinite mercy prepare us, and make us in due time partakers of it, through Jesus Christ our Lord, to whom with the Father and the Holy Ghost, three Persons and that only Lord, be all honour and glory now and for ever. Amen.

^f See Ainsworth on Deut. ii. 4. and Exod. vi. 3.

A TABLE of Things or Matters illustrated in this Commentary.

A. Ægypt and Edom in the prophets sometime taken to denote in general any enemies of God's Church Pag. 355 B. Blood and fire, what meant by them 308 Blood sometime taken to denote any heinous sins 360 C. Calling on the name of the Lord, what it implies 312 The Lord's calling, what it implies 315 Chastisements of love, what 279 Corn wine and oil the chief support of mens life 231 D. Day of the Lord, what it signifies 239, 257, 310 Darknes and light, what meant by them 257 Dreams appropriated to old men, Visions to young 304 F. Famines sometimes mentioned in Scripture only for the illustrating some other thing that was then done 217 Fire used to denote any destructive thing 253 All Flesh, what it signifies 302 G. Græcians called Javanim from Javan 329 Gog and Magog, who meant by them 310 Gird yourselves, what it implies 258 God's being in the midst of any people, what it denotes 299 H. Holiness in the abstract when spoken of any thing denotes the highest degree of holiness 348 I. Jehovah, the signification of that name 252 Joel, the time of his living and prophecying uncertain 213 Israel, a general name for God's people. 322, 347 Judgment often deferred till the iniquities of a people be full 339	L. Land mourneth, how to be understood 229 Locusts, several sorts 215 Whether to be understood literally or not 216 Their spittle poison 233 Locusts called God's army by Mahomet 297 N. Near at hand may be said in respect of God of things which to us seem afar off 339 P. Passions and affections, how attributed to God 286 Pouring out of the spirit, what it denotes 306 Præter tense in prophecies often us'd in the signification of the future 218, 273 R. Rain, former and latter 293 Rending the heart, what 276 Repent, how spoken of God ibid. S. Selling, what it implies 330 Shedding innocent blood a great crime 360 T. Temple, its description 283 What wanting under the second which the first had 279 Threshing instruments of what sorts used in the East 342 Trumpets, several occasions of using them among the Jews 256 V. Valley of Jehoshaphat 319 Its several names 333 Valley of Shittim 352 Valley of Decision, why so called 341 Voice of God 345 Z. Zion and Jerusalem sometime used to denote in general God's Church 313 Sometime heaven 345
--	---

BS
1150 P63
v.1

Pococke, Edward Theological works

PLEASE DO NOT REMOVE CARDS OR SLIPS FROM THIS POCKET

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO LIBRARY

